THE Rev. William Greenhill, the learned and pious author of the following Exposition, was born in the year 1581, of humble parents residing in Oxfordshire. As early as the age of thirteen he entered a student of Magdalen College, Oxford, in the condition of Servitor, and when he had completed his twenty-first year, took his degree of Master of Arts. In 1643 he acted as one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and about the same time was made afternoon lecturer at Stepney church. Mr. Jeremiah Burroughs preached there in the morning at seven o'clock, and Mr. Greenhill in the afternoon at three, and were hence styled "the Morning Star" and "the Evening Star" of Stepney. He was chosen to be chaplain to the dukes of York and Gloucester, and the Lady Henrietta Maria, and in the year 1656 had the living of Stepney presented to him. Calamy says, "He was a worthy man, and much valued for his great learning and unwearied labours." Howe styles him "that eminent servant of God, Mr. Greenhill, whose praise is still in the churches."

His Exposition of the Prophecy of Ezekiel was delivered in Lectures in the city of London, which were attended by many of the chief personages of his day, and have been long and deservedly valued. They were originally printed a volume at a time, as the lectures on a few chapters were concluded, till five small quarto volumes completed the Exposition. Happy that biblical student thought himself who could obtain a perfect copy, although it has been sold at the enormous price of from seven to ten pounds. The last volume is rarely to be obtained; and is supposed to have been destroyed in the calamitous fire of London.

No pains or expense have been spared to render this edition complete. It could hardly be expected that in a work of this magnitude no errors should inadvertently have been overlooked, but, from the most careful examination, it is confidently expected they will scarcely be found. Believing that the reader of Greenhill would not thank any editor who might attempt to beautify his style, the reviser has been anxious that he might appear again in his own garb of 1650, and not in the more polite dress of 1837. His style is abrupt, not always chaste, often imperfect, and full of singularities; yet searching, bold, striking, and effective. An attempt to improve it would most likely enfeeble it, and shear it of its point and power.

Like most writers of his day, he introduces Latin quotations very frequently in the margin, the substance of which generally appears in the exposition. As they encumber the page, and seldom illustrate the text, many of them have been omitted; but whenever they throw any fresh light on the scripture, not to be found in the Exposition, they have been either introduced into the body of the work, or retained as notes. He also frequently inserts a Hebrew, Greek, or Latin word not answering any critical purpose, nor even by way of illustration, but, apparently, because the original of a casual English word occurred to him while writing: in these cases it has been left out; but when such a word was essential to the elucidation of a passage, it has been invariably preserved.

The only alterations in this edition are, the occasional substitution of a more common for an obsolete word—the rectifying of numerous errors of the pen or press—and the omission of some coarse and indelicate expressions, not at all connected with the explication of the prophecy. The reviser has not felt himself at liberty to alter a single sentiment of Greenhill, or to soften any of his statements, for which no editor is accountable. Various remarks occur on the discipline and government of churches, and other matters, peculiar to the times, which may not agree with the sentiments of some readers; but the omission of them would have been unwarrantable, and any attempt to alter them to the taste of the reviser, criminal. Indeed no omissions or alterations have extended to a single word, but such as were essential more clearly to understand the author, and to render his general design more apparent.

As a practical expositor of Ezekiel, whose prophecy contains many things "hard to be understood," Greenhill will ever rank deservedly high. He fully explains the meaning of the prophet, and then applies the truth to the consciences of his auditory by many most pertinent and heart-searching observations. It is impossible that a prayerful mind can read this exposition, without growing "in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

The reviser trusts that the future readers of Greenhill will reap the fruits of much anxiety and care, to prepare for them an edition of this valuable work, in which the sentiments of the author should be faithfully retained, and the peculiar spirit of his style be uniformly manifest; while the translation of the Greek and Latin words and phrases—the beautiful typography—the condensation of five volumes into one of moderate size—one complete index and table of texts, instead of one to each volume, and the correctness, portability, and cheapness of this edition, he hopes will be considered real improvements to the Exposition. And he earnestly prays that by its more general circulation among theological students and private christians, the knowledge of salvation through Christ may be advanced, and the holiness of the christian character be promoted.

J. SHERMAN.

TO

AND MOST HOPEFUL LADY,

THE PRINCESS ELIZABETH,

HER HIGHNESS

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HIGHNESS,

SOLOMON, the wisest of princes, counsels us to remember our Creator in the days of our youth. It is a great virtue to be mindful of God timely. Timothy from a child knew the holy Scriptures. Josiah, that good prince, while he was yet young, or tender, (as the Hebrew bears it,) began to seek after the Lord; he did that which was right in his sight, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3; he walked in the ways of David, he turned not aside to the right hand or left, 2 Kings xxii. 2. The Lord takes special notice when young ones are mindful of him. The children's crying "Hosanna" is recorded in the gospel, Matt. xxi. 15; children walking in the truth, is observed by John, 2 Epist. 4; and the Lord minded the good that was found in the child of Jeroboam, 1 Kings xiv. 13. Doubtless God's eye is upon your Highness, for that good which is found in you in these your tender years, and is well pleased that your sweetness of nature and choiceness of wit are joined with desire to know him, with love to his worship, affection to the godly, and delight in such sentences as these are, viz.

Deus meus et omnia.

La mia Grandezza dal Eccelso.

All which, with these precious speeches of yours, "I had rather be a beggar here than not go to heaven," and, "How shall I be sure to go to heaven?" are acceptable to the Highest, and make strong impressions upon us inferiors. Your desire to know the original tongues, that you may understand the Scripture the better; your resolution to write them out with your own princely hand, and to come to the perfect knowledge of them, breed in us hopes that you will exceed all of your sex, and be without equal in Europe; as Drusius said of his son, who at five years learned Hebrew, and at twelve wrote it extempore, both in prose and verse. Encouraging instances your own sex will afford. Eustochium profited so much in the Latin, Hebrew, and Greek, that in her time she was called the wonder of the world. Istrina, queen of the Scythians, so excelled in Greek, that she taught her sons the Greek tongue. Zenobia, queen of the Palmyrenians, was skilled in the Latin, Egyptian, and Greek tongues; she read the Roman story in Greek, abridged the Alexandrian and all the oriental histories. Politian hath an epistle to Cassandra, a Venetian maid, whom he calls the glory of Italy. Her delight was not in wool, but books; not in the spindle or needle, but in the pen; not in paint, but in ink: she wrote epistles and orations to admiration; she excelled in logic and philosophy, and had such perfections, as caused the learned to admire, if not adore her. Queen Elizabeth was so learned, that she read every author in the original, and answered ambassadors of most nations in their own language: she went twice to Oxford, and once to Cambridge, purposely to hear the learned academical disputations, where herself made Latin orations: she translated Sallust, and wrote a century or sentences: she set apart some hours daily to read, or hear others read to her: she so excelled in learning and wisdom, that her teachers rather learned of her than brought learning to her. Your Highness seems to aim at all the excellences in the prementioned; for your writing out the Lord's Prayer in Greek, some texts of Scripture in Hebrew, your endeavour after the exact knowledge of those holy tongues, with other languages and learned accomplishments, your diligent hearing of the word, careful noting of sermons, understanding answers at the catechising, and frequent questioning about holy things, do promise great matters from you. If the harvest be answerable to the sowing, your Highness will be the wonder of the learned, and glory of the godly. It is my unhappiness that I cannot be sufficiently adjutant to such princely beginnings; yet because this following treatise is an exposition of Scripture, I take the boldness to present it to your Highness, and shall continue to pray to him who is All, and able to give all, that he would preserve your royal person, bless your hopeful endeavours, fill you with all divine perfections, make you a chief praise in Israel, and fit you for an eternal weight of glory.

Your Highness's most humble servant,

WILLIAM GREENHILL.

TO ALL WELL-WILLERS OF TRUTH;

ESPECIALLY TO THE AUTHORS AND FAUORS OF THE EXPOSITORY LECTURES IN THIS CITY.

IN most arts and sciences are difficulties; in divinity are depths. Plato, Aristotle, Euclid, have their nodos, and the Scriptures have their ὑποσηματα. In them are dark sayings, Psal. lxxviii. 2; riddles, Ezek. xvii. 2; parables, Matt. xiii. 35; wonders, Psal. cxix. 18; great things, Hos. viii. 12; things hard to be uttered, Heb. v. 11; hard to be understood, 2 Pet. iii. 16; mysteries, Matt. iii. 11; hidden and manifold wisdom, 1 Cor. ii. 7; Eph. iii. 10; the deep things of God, 1 Cor. ii. 10. Much is in it that God hath intermixed the Holy Scriptures with some difficulties. Hereby we are led up to conceive there are infinite depths in God, which eternity must take us up to study. They convince us of our incapacity of high things, John xvi. 12; they prevent our undervaluing of divine truth. Flesh and blood is very apt, upon reading, and apprehension of easiness, to lay aside choice works; God hath therefore hid some truths under the rocks, laid them deep, that so there might be digging and searching, as for treasures, Prov. ii. 4. Difficulties quicken and whet endeavours. Sloth is a great gulf which hinders men from coming at the truth; and it made the Father fear* lest thereby the Lord's book should not only be shut, but also sealed up. Ingenuous spirits, when they hear of hard things, stir lively; and what they get by sorest labour, is most precious. The rocky and knotty things in the prophets and apostles suffice to exercise the greatest abilities and graces which are seated in human nature; † they keep men's thoughts from swelling into a conceit of omniscieney; they make us long to be where we shall know as we are known, 1 Cor. xiii. 12; and, in the mean time, to pray with David, "Open thou our eyes, that we may see the wonders of thy law." Hard things drove David to the Lord; he knew that without God he could not understand the things of God, ‡ whose glory it is both to conceal and reveal a thing, Prov. xxv. 2; Matt. xvi. 17. Many have sued to God for further discovery of his mind, and have attempted to help us in Scripture difficulties; but all dark things are not yet cleared, nor all depths yet sounded. To this day a veil is upon the heart of the Jews in reading the Old Testament, 2 Cor. iii. 14, 15; and surely, the veil is not fully removed from the hearts of us christians. We have seen very dimly into sundry things, not only of Paul, Peter, and John, but of Moses and the prophets, especially of this prophet Ezekiel; who hath, therefore, been passed over, both by writers and readers, as dark, difficult, and less useful. Robert Stephen § mentions one, and that a Sar-bonist, who had lived above fifty years, and knew not what the New Testament meant : and have not sundry persons among us lived their fifty years, and not known what Ezekiel meant ? hath he not been a book clasped and sealed unto them ? If this hieroglyphical prophet have been a wonder to all for his visions, yet he hath been known to few, by reason of the abstruseness of his visions, which have kept off great rabbies from employing their talents to open them. If weakness and error be found in these poor labours of mine, I entreat you to remember, I have been among prophetic deeps and difficulties, which may plead for him who, knowing his own insufficiencies, came invita Minerva to this task. If any light appear for the better understanding of these enigmatical things, I must say with Daniel, there is a God in heaven which revealeth mysteries, to him be all the glory, Dan. ii. 28.

My prayers shall be to him who enlighteneth every man which cometh into the world, that he would anoint your eyes with eye-salve, whereby you may daily see more into the great and glorious truths of God, and those things which may strongly make for your eternal peace and comfort. So prayeth

Your friend and servant in the Lord,

TO ALL LOVERS OF DIVINE TRUTHS ; ESPECIALLY THE UNDERTAKERS FOR THE EXPOSITORY LECTURES IN THE CITY OF LONDON.

THE infinite and only wise God hath annexed to the ministry conversion, Acts xxvi. 18 ; regeneration, 1 Cor. iv. 15 ; the addition of sinners to the church and to himself, Acts ii. 41, 47 ; xi. 24 ; faith, Rom. x. 14 ; 1 Cor. iii. 5 ; the perfecting of the saints, and edification of the body of Christ, Eph. iv. 12 ; collation of the Spirit, Gal. iii. 2 ; Acts x. 44 ; yea, salvation, Acts xi. 14 ; 1 Cor. i. 21 ; 1 Tim. iv. 16. Now, notwithstanding the ministry be the great medium and appointment of God to effect and accomplish such needful and glorious things, yet some there be that thrust hard at it, and endeavour to throw it down. But were it removed, and the pernicious desires of men fulfilled herein, a sadder judgment could not befall the nation. Solomon, the firstborn of Wisdom, saith, "Where there is no vision the people perish," Prov. xxix. 18. Where the word of God is not expounded, preached, and applied to the several conditions of the people, there they perish. Feribatur populus, saith Montanus, they will be idle, keep holiday, cease from doing the work of the Lord, and do the works of the flesh and darkness. Piscator reads it, Nudatur populus, The people is made naked : they are like men without clothing, without armour, exposed to wind and weather, to spiritual storms and temptations, having nothing to defend themselves. The Vulgate is, dissipabitur populus ; lay aside preaching and expounding the Scriptures, the people will be scattered, run into errors, wander up and down as sheep without a shepherd. Pagnine hath it, Rebellis erit, The people will be rebellious, they will not be kept in order, obedience, and subjection to authority ; for where means of knowledge are wanting, there must be ignorance, and ignorance is the mother of rebellion.

When queen Elizabeth, whose memory is precious, was instigated, by some ill-affected to the ministry, to abridge the number of preachers, Edmund Grindal, archbishop of Canterbury, was much troubled at it, and wrote her a learned and serious letter about it ; out of which, having the manuscript by me, I have thought fit to transcribe and commend unto you what follows :

"I cannot marvel enough how this strange opinion should once enter into your mind, that it should be good for the church to have few preachers ? Alas ! Madam, is the Scripture more plain in any one thing, than that the gospel of Christ should be plentifully produced ? and that plenty of labourers should be sent into the Lord's harvest, which being great and large, standeth in need of not a few but many workmen ? There were appointed to the building of Solomon's material temple a hundred and fifteen thousand artificers and labourers, besides three hundred and thirty overseers, and shall we think that a few preachers may suffice to build and edify the spiritual temple of Christ, which is the church. Christ, when he sendeth forth his apostles, saith unto them, 'Go ye, preach the gospel to every creature.' But all God's creatures cannot be instructed in the gospel, unless all possible means be used to have a multitude of preachers and teachers to preach unto them. 'Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly,' saith Paul, Col. iii. 16. And to Timothy, 2 Epist. iv. 2, 'Preach the word, be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort,' which thing cannot be done without often and much preaching. To this agreeth the practice of Christ's apostles, Acts xiv. 23, 'And when they had ordained them elders in every church.' Paul likewise to Titus, chap. i. 5, writeth, 'For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city;' and afterward describeth how the presbytery should be qualified; not such as we are compelled to admit, by mere necessity, unless we should leave a great number of churches utterly desolate, but such indeed as were able to exhort, 'by sound doctrine convincing the gainsayers.' And in this place I beseech your Majesty to note one thing necessary to be noted, which is this; if the Holy Ghost prescribe expressly that preachers should be placed in every city, how can it well be thought that two or three preachers may suffice for a shire? Public and continual preaching of God's word is the ordinary means and instrument of the salvation of mankind. St. Paul calls it, The ministry of reconciliation of man unto God. By the preaching of God's word, the glory of God is enlarged, faith nourished, and charity increased; by it ignorance is instructed, the negligent exhorted and incited, the stubborn rebuked, the weak comforted, and to all those that sin of malicious wickedness, the wrath of God is threatened. By preaching also, due obedience to christian princes and magistrates is planted in the hearts of subjects; for obedience proceedeth of conscience, conscience is grounded upon the word of God, and the word of God worketh this effect by preaching. so as generally where preaching is neglected, obedience faileth. No prince ever had more lively experience hereof than your Majesty hath had in your time, and may have daily. If your Majesty come to the city of London never so often, what great gratulation, what joy, what concourse of people is there to be seen, yea, what acclamations and prayers to God for your long life, and other manifest significations of inward and unfeigned love, joined with most humble and hearty obedience, are there to be heard? Whereof cometh this, Madam, but of the continual preaching of God's word in the city, whereby that people hath been plenteously instructed in their duty towards God, and towards your Majesty? On the contrary, what bred the rebellion in the north? Was it not papistry, and the ignorance of God's holy word through want of preaching? And in the time of that rebellion, were not all men of all estates that made profession of the gospel, most ready to offer their lives for your defence? inso-much that one poor parish in Yorkshire, which by continual preaching had been better instructed than the rest, Halifax I mean, was ready to bring three or four thousand able men into the field, to serve you against the said rebels. How can your Majesty have a more lively trial and experience of the contrary effects of much preaching, and little or no preaching? the one working most unnatural disobedience and rebellion, the other most faithful obedience."

By this part of the letter you see how firm the archbishop was for preaching, and that he hath fully confirmed that sense of the words, Where there is no vision or preaching, the people will rebel; and if he would not yield to the abridging of preachers, why should any desire the abolishing of them, and so make way for the people to be idle, naked, scattered, rebellions, yea, for their perishing? It was one of the saddest times that ever Israel had, when Israel was without a teaching priest, 2 Chron. xv. 3; then they had no peace within nor without, but great vexations were upon all the inhabitants of the countries, even all the ten tribes. This being without a teaching priest was such an affliction, as that the Lord promised his people afterwards, that what affliction soever befell them, this should not; Isa. xxx. 20, "Though the Lord give you the bread of adversity, and water of affliction, yet shall not thy teachers be removed into a corner any more, but thine eyes shall see thy teachers." This is a gracious promise for the continuance of the ministry. They had the law, and should have teachers to instruct them therein; we have the gospel, and teachers to instruct us therein. The church and ministry may be hid, Rev. xii. 6, but not extinct. Christ is a King, the government is upon his shoulder, he has a Kingdom, and it knows no end, Isa. ix. 6, 7; Luke i. 32, 33; his throne is for ever, Heb. i. 8. He, therefore, hath promised to be with his church, and the ministry thereof, unto the end of the world, ἕως τῆς συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος, Matt. xxviii. 20; not, to the end of that age, but of the world; for so the word αἰῶν signifies: Matt. xiii. 39, 40, "The harvest is the end of the world;—and so shall it be in the end of the world;" ὁ δὲ θερισμὸς συντέλεια τοῦ αἰῶνος ἔσται. —οὕτως ἔσται ἐν τῇ συντελείᾳ τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου. Christ's kingdom, and officers of it, were not only for the apostolical and primitive times, but for all times and ages, Eph. iii. 21; iv. 11, 12; Rev. vii. 14, 15; xi. 1? otherwise what hope were there for Jews or gentiles? If one should leave the Jewish synagogue, and the other heathenism, whither should they come, if Christ have no true church, no visible kingdom? Herein himself hath satisfied us: John x. 16, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." The fold was the church, the sheep to be brought in, the gentiles, who were not brought in in Christ's days, nor all in the apostles' days, or primitive times. Some are yet to be brought in; and therefore there is yet a fold, and ministers to cause them to hear the voice of Christ, that they may come into this fold: for whom he predestinates he calls, Rom. viii. 30; and his calling is not immediate, but by the ministry of the word. And though the ministry now be not infallible, as the apostles were, but fallible, yet their fallibility doth not make void their calling, nor cause the churches to be reputed false, as not having the word of God taught in them infallibly; for those holy men who were prophets and apostles you may find sometimes failing. Nathan failed, when he bid David go and build the house of the Lord, 2 Sam. vii. 3. David was out, when he said he was cut off from before the Lord's eyes, Psal. xxxi. 22; and when he said, all men were liars, Psal. cxvi. 11. Jeremiah spake like a man, when he said, "I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name;" and especially when he cursed the day of his nativity, and the man who brought tidings thereof, chap. xx. 9, 14—16. Jonah spake from himself, not from God, when he said, "Take my life from me; for it is better for me to die than to live;" and, "I do well to be angry even unto death," Jonah iv. 3, 9. And Paul professes he had no commandment of the Lord concerning virgins, but gave his judgment as one that had "obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful," 1 Cor. vii. 25. Now, though these men had such failings, spake from their own spirits, yet were neither the churches falsified hereby, nor their callings frustrated. That which was needful to be the rule and standard, was given out by an infallible Spirit. The Spirit of truth took of Christ's, showed it to them, and led them into all truth. And while the ministers now do bring that truth unto you, they are infallible. If in their constructions, interpretations, and expositions of the same, they vary, or be out, you ought to "try the spirits," 1 John iv. 1; and to "hold fast what is good," 1 Thess. v. 21; not despising prophesyings, lest you quench the Spirit. It is ill when any destroy commands of God to maintain their opinions. Some would have the word only read, and that there should be no preaching or expounding of it. It was not the eunuch's reading, but Philip's preaching, that wrought faith in him, Acts viii. The spices of the Scripture send forth the strongest and sweetest smells when they are bruised and broken; the fire of the sanctuary yields most heat and light when stirred up and blown. It is neither fleshly, devilish, nor treason to the Father, to make constructions upon the prophets and apostles, and expound their meaning. If so, then Ezra and others, who read the law and gave the sense of it, Neh. viii. 8, sinned, were fleshly, devilish, and traitors to the Father: then Paul gave ill counsel to Timothy, to divide the word of truth aright, 2 Tim. ii. 15. How children should have their milk, young men their bread, old men their wine, and that only by reading, I see not. If that could be, surely Christ needed not have appointed a wise and faithful servant "over his household, to give them meat in due season," Matt. xxiv. 45. If we may not expound the word because we are fallible, then why should any translate the word out of the original tongue into others, seeing they are fallible, and may, yea have, mistaken therein, as well as others in expounding and preaching: and because it is so, some little regard the Scriptures, expecting evangelium Spiritus Sancti et tertium Testamentum, the gospel of the Holy Spirit and a third Testament.* The Jews look for Messias, the papists look for Enoch and Elias, but without warrant; and so do these men for another gospel, Gal. i. 8, 9, and extraordinary men, who may raise up churches, and declare what is truth. I beseech you, be content with, and thankful for, those precious, glorious truths the Lord hath given you in the law and gospel, studying to know them more fully; and endeavour to yield unto the Author of them the obedience of faith; acknowledging it an unspeakable gift, that you have them, with preachers and expositors amongst you, to further you in the knowledge and practice of them. If this ensuing work shall contribute aught that way, I shall be abundantly satisfied therein. In hopes whereof, I commend both it and you to the blessing of the Lord, subscribing myself,

Yours in this work of the Lord to love and serve,

TO THE UNDERTAKERS FOR AND HEARERS OF THE EXPOSITORY LECTURES IN THE CITY OF LONDON,

AND ALL WHO DESIRE UNDERSTANDING IN THE WORD OF GOD.

WHEN I was expounding the 17th and 19th chapters of this Prophecy of Ezekiel, and saw an end put to kingly government in Judah, (for after Zedekiah there was “no strong rod to be a sceptre to rule,”) my thoughts ran much upon that ancient prophecy, Gen. xlix. 10, “The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come.” Concerning which, though somewhat were then said, yet I shall now endeavour to satisfy both you and myself more fully. The words seem to imply a presence of the sceptre in the hand of Judah when they were given forth; because a thing cannot be said to depart from any who hath it not; but it was long after ere the tribe of Judah had any sceptre. Jacob’s meaning was, that the sceptre should come in time to that tribe, and when it came, it should not depart; for Jacob prophesies of things to come. They were at that time in Egypt, few, poor, and low; and when they were increased, they had no sceptre amongst them, they were under the Egyptian sceptre, and had Egyptian task-masters over them. After the Lord had brought them out of Egypt by a strong hand, there was a sceptre and lawgiver amongst them; but it was Moses, who was of the tribe of Levi, Exod. ii. 1, 2, 10, and after him Joshua, who was of the tribe of Ephraim, Numb. xiii. 8, 16. All that Judah had was a little priority in pitching his standard and camp first, Numb. ii. 3; in sending the first prince to offer at the dedication of the tabernacle, Numb. vii. 12; in marching first from Sinai to Paran, Numb. x. 14; in having the first lot when the land of Canaan was divided, Josh. xv.; and in going up first to fight against the Canaanites, Judg. i. 2. And when account was taken of the genealogies, Judah carried the pre-eminence, being first numbered, 1 Chron. ii. 3. Afterwards in the days of the judges, who bare the sceptre three hundred and thirty-nine, or three hundred and sixty-two, or three hundred and seventy years, as the accounts of chronologers are, or about four hundred and fifty, as the apostles’ account is, Acts xiii. 20, there were but two of the tribe of Judah; Othniel, Judg. iii. 9, who was of that tribe, as appears, Josh. xv. 17, 20; 1 Chron. iv. 1, 13; and Ibsan, who was of Bethlehem, Judg. xii. 8. The following judges were of other tribes. And when it came to kingly power, the first set up was Saul, who was a Benjamite, 1 Sam. ix. 1, 2. The next was David, of Jesse, the Bethlehemitite, 1 Sam. xvi. 1. It was now between six and seven hundred years from the time of Jacob’s giving out this prophecy, all which time it lay as dead and destitute of regal power; which now being settled in this tribe, continued but to the captivity of Zedekiah, four hundred and sixty-eight, as some do chronologize, four hundred and seventy-three years, as others. The first king the Jews had God gave them in his wrath, 1 Sam. viii.; and the last he took away in his fury. Judah, that had been his pleasant plant, “was plucked up in fury,” Ezek. xix. 12, and all the branches of that vine plucked off, and not one left to hold the sceptre, Jer. xxii. 30. Therefore some Jews and others, deriving the word Shiloh from Shalach, render the words, until he who is to be sent shall come; and so interpret this prophecy of Nebuchadnezzar, who was sent of God to destroy Judea, and so the sceptre departed from Judah. But the next words in the prophecy confute this interpretation, “and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.” Shiloh was he that the nations should desire, and unto whom the people should be gathered, which never was verified in Nebuchadnezzar. The Chaldee paraphrase hath it, donec veniat Christus, till Christ come: and the Targum hath it, until the time wherein Messiah the King shall come. Rabbi Moses Gerundensis saith, donec veniat filius ejus qui est Messias, till his son come who is the Messiah.

If we take the word “sceptre” for kingly power, which it certainly notes, as Psal. xlv. 6; Zeeb. x. 11, it may be granted that now the sceptre departed from Judah; for it is said, Ezek. xxi. 27, “It shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him;” and that was Christ: from the putting down of Zedekiah and the death of his sons, none had right to kingly power till Christ came. Now the crown was laid aside, and laid up for his head alone, and no others. But if we take shebet, or sheret, for a tribe, as it is Josh. iii. 12; vii. 14; Psal. cxxii. 4; Jacob’s sense in the prophecy is, that the tribe of Judah should not cease, however it fared with other tribes, till Shiloh or Christ came. Ten of the other tribes were carried away captive by Sennacherib, and never returned more; but as for that of Judah, though it were carried into Babylon, yet it was preserved there, and returned again to its own land, with few of any other tribe. It was that tribe chiefly, which made up the estate and church, and continued till Christ's coming.

This sense is true, but reaches not fully the scope of Jacob in this prophecy, which is not simply to show the duration of the tribes, but the peculiar benedictions they should have; and Judah's was, the sceptre, which doth not only note royal power, but any rule, dominion, or authority, as Isa. xiv. 5; Ezek. xix. 11. And so that tribe should have power, more or less, till Shiloh came; if not kings, yet lawgivers; if not supreme, yet subordinate power. Upon the captivity of the ten tribes, kingly power was only and eminently in it for one hundred and thirty years and upwards; and after Zedekiah's downfall, although it lost royal dignity, which was for a lamentation to the prophet, Ezek. xix. 14, yet it had other sceptrical power in it. Manasseh Ben Israel saith, that in Babylon it had its heads and rulers always of the seed of David.

When they returned from Babylon, Zerubbabel was governor of Judah, Hag. i. 1; et ab illo usque ad Machabæos nunquam defuerunt duces de tribu Judæ, quanquam regio diademate propter persas nunquam uterentur: from him to the days of the Maccabees, or Asmoneans, they had rulers and governors of that tribe, which was two hundred and seventy years, as Paræus observes; but Rivet makes the time shorter, affirming that the government was pænes sacerdotes levitici generis.

Suarez, tom. 1. disput. 1. contra Judæos. Paræus in Geu. Rivet, ibid.

When Alexander the Great came into Judea, which he reckons to be but fifty-three years from the time of Zerubbabel, (chronologers make it much more,) at that time Josephus informs us, Jaddus was high priest, who being then the principal ruler, came out to meet Alexander, conducting him into the city and temple. Now the high priests were not of the tribe of Judah, Heb. vii. 13, 14, but of Levi; and so were the Asmoneans, or Maccabees, 1 Macc. ii. 1, 4; 1 Chron. xxiv. 7, among whom continued the chief government till Herod's days, divers of them assuming kingly power to themselves, as Aristobulus, Alexander, Hyrcanus, and Antigonus.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 8.

Montague observes, that after the captivity they were under the Persians, Alexander, the Macedonian princes of the Lagidan and Seleucidan lines, till the Maccabees freed them for a time; and last of all they were under the Romans: yet during these troublesome times, they were governed by their own laws and country customs. They had their ethnarchs, toparchs, high priests, rulers, princes, and sometimes kings of their own; Jews and Israelites, though not of David, nor of Judah. To help in this strait, it is affirmed that the Asmoneans were by the mother's side of Judah, and so therein the dignity of the tribe was preserved; but it doth not appear by Scriptures, that the females were of that tribe, neither were they to marry out of their tribes, especially women inheritresses to their parents, they were tied to marry in their own tribe, ne confunderentur hæreditates. And ordinary women might not bear rule among the Jews, though Deborah a prophetess once did; besides, the mother's line amongst them was not reckoned; and the Talmud saith, he is the end of the family, who hath no masculine issue. We cannot then make it out this way, that the sceptre departed not from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, till Shiloh came.

Rivet in Geu.

Some therefore, which is the better way, refer it to the sanhedrim, which was quasi supremus senatus, as the highest judicatory and royal council. This sanhedrim remained in the captivity, and continued to the days of Christ; and was either taken from them by Herod, or at least the power of judging and sentencing to death was taken out of it by him. Therefore said the Jews, John xviii. 31, "It is not lawful for us to put any man to death." In former times they might, but now they were deprived of that power. The difficulty here is to make it out, that those who made up the sanhedrim were of the tribe of Judah. It is not necessary that all should be of it; if the major part were, that sufficeth to pre-eminence the tribe.

At first the men of the sanhedrim were chosen out of all the tribes; but when ten tribes fell off, it could not be, they being under Jeroboam and other kings who were against Judah; and much less could it be, when those ten tribes were carried away, and returned no more. The Babylonish captivity therefore being ended when the commonwealth of the Jews was restored, and consisted most of the tribe of Judah, it is more than probable, that the sanhedrim was most of that tribe, which in Scripture account was but one before; for the Lord told Solomon he would give one tribe to his son, 1 Kings xi. 13; and chap. xii. 20, "There was none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah only;" and 2 Kings xvii. 18, "The Lord was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight; there was none left but the tribe of Judah only." Benjamin did follow Rehoboam; but there is little or no mention made of it, quia non fuit integra sicut tribus Judæ, it was not entire as the tribe of Judah, whose dignity and excellency was such as made that inconsiderable. The Levites also, say the Annotations upon I Kings xi. were no distinct tribe; when they were cast out by Jeroboam, they left their suburbs and possessions, and came to Judah and Jerusalem, 2 Chron. xi. 13, 14. When therefore the return came from captivity, it was Judah the Lord looked chiefly upon; the rest were either reduced to that tribe, or as inconsiderable then as before the captivity. Judah made up the bulk and body of their commonwealth, and the governing power, if not altogether, yet most needs be mostly in it. Manasseh Ben Israel saith, that in the times of the Asmoneans, Princeps Jehudæ erat caput senatus Israelitici nuncupati sanhedrin, A prince of Judah was chief in the great council called the sanhedrim, which continued till Herod's days; and such was the power of it, that Herod himself was called before it, for which, when he obtained the kingdom, he put them all to death, except one Sameas, as Josephus reports in his 14th book of the Antiquities of the Jews, chap. 17. In this sense not only were their rulers and governors of the Jewish nation till Christ came, as some do carry it, but even of the tribe of Judah; for now in Herod's days did Shiloh come, Christ was born, Matt. ii. 1. The sceptre was departing when Pompey brought Judea under the Romans, and the power of it more weakened when it was made a province afterward; but it fully departed not, till Titus overthrew the city, and ruined the whole commonwealth of the Jews; before which time Christ was to come and enter into his kingdom, taking the crown to himself, being his right, (which he did, and changed it into a spiritual kingdom, so raising up the tabernacle of David which was fallen,) and then shortly after was the tribe of Judah and Jewish state utterly ruined.

In this prophecy you see the faithfulness of the Lord, making good his truths notwithstanding all dark and contradictory appearances; his power also, in raising up kingdoms and pulling them down again, in changing forms of government at his pleasure, and bringing them to nothing. You may also see how blind the Jews are, who have many shifts to put off this prophecy from Christ; or being convinced that it is a clear prophecy of the Messiah, affirm it is not yet fulfilled, saying, there are rulers of the tribe of Judah to this day about Babylon, and that a prince was seen at Bagdad, riding in a chariot, where were a multitude of Jews crying, Facite locum filio Davidis, Make way for the son of David. It is true, Manasseh Ben Israel. rael. tom. 1. Disp. 1 there are Jews in the world, but they have no sceptre, no kingdom; there is no mention or vestigium of any such thing in the world, saith Suarez. Suppose it were so, that in Asia the greater, or beyond the mountains of Cordilliere in America, they had a kingdom and sceptre, yet this was nothing to Jacob's prophecy, which speaks of Canaan, where Judah should have rule and power till Shiloh came. Let those therefore who have seen this prophecy fulfilled, felt the power and enjoyed the blessings of the Messiah, pray that the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil spread over all nations, may be destroyed; that so Jews and gentiles may behold him who is "the desire of nations," that unto him may be the gathering of the people, and that all saints, especially themselves, may be enabled, through his grace, to improve all mercies, and the ensuing truths, to his glory, which is the earnest desire of him who is

TO THOSE IN THE FAMOUS CITY OF LONDON,

WHO ARE THE UNDERTAKERS, PROMOTERS, AND MAINTAINERS OF THE EXPOSITORY LECTURES THEREIN, AND TO ALL OTHERS WHO LOVE TRUTH.

WE read in holy writ of many cities, which for their structures, situations, fortifications, trading, accommodations, and epithets, were famous; as, populous No, Nahum iii. 8; Nineveh the great, Jonah i. 2; Tarsus in Cilicia, Acts xxi. 39; golden Babylon, Isa. xiv. 4; renowned Tyrus, Ezek. xxvi. 17; righteous and faithful Jerusalem, Isa. i. 26, which exceeded them all; for as Canaan was the glory of all lands, flowing with milk and honey, so Jerusalem had its milk and honey, and was the glory of all cities. There was the Lord's presence, his worship, his oracles, his ordinances, and his prophets, which made it the glory of the world, and "perfection of beauty." Had other cities strong towers? Jerusalem had them, and the temple also. Had they gods of gold, silver, stones, and sticks in them? Jerusalem had Jehovah the true and living God in her. Had they wise counsellors in them? Jerusalem had the sanhedrim. Had they human laws which were good? Jerusalem had divine laws, such as no city or people ever had, Dent. iv. 8. Had they temporal excellencies and privileges? Jerusalem had spiritual. Had they the glory of the world, art, and nature? Jerusalem had the glory of heaven; there God shined, Psal. l. 2. But what now is become of these cities, and Jerusalem itself? are they not all laid waste, made heaps, dead and buried in the womb of the earth? Cities have their periods as well as men. Babylon had a time to be born, Gen. xi. 4, and a time to die, Isa. xiv. 4. Nineveh had her day to get up, Gen. x. 11, and her day to fall, Nahum iii. 7. Tyrus had her day of rising, and her day of ruining, and she is descended into the pit with others, Ezek. xxvi. 18, 20. Jerusalem had her day for building, and her day for burning, Jer. lii. 12, 13. This is matter of lamentation, that such cities, especially Jerusalem, should have such an end. The cause of such dismal ends, upon search, we shall find to be SIN, which is of so malignant a nature, that it destroys nations, and pulls down the strongest cities. Cruelty, falsehood, and robbery, with many other, were the sins which laid Nineveh waste, Nahum iii. Pride, fulness of bread, abundance of idleness, with neglect of the poor, were the sins which made the Lord take Sodom away, Ezek. vi. 49, 50. Pride, violence, unmercifulness, vain confidence, and treachery, were the sins which rent Babylon in pieces, Isa. xlvii.; Jer. l. What sins destroyed Ammon, Moab, Edom, Philistia, with their cities, and what sunk Tyrus into the sea, Ezekiel tells you, chap. xxv. and xxvi. A large catalogue of those sins which kindled the fire in Jerusalem, and turned her into ashes, you have in the 22d of Ezekiel, and other chapters; most of which I fear are to be found in this city. Are there not in her those who set light by father and mother? are there not those who vex the fatherless and widow? are there not those who despise the holy things of God, and profane his sabbaths? are there not those who take usury and increase, are greedy of gain, and live by dishonest gain? Ezek. xxii. 12, 13; are there not those who devise mischief and give wicked counsel? are there not those who carry tales to shed blood? are there not those who exercise robbery, vex the poor, the needy, and oppress the stranger? are not her professors as dross, even the dross of silver? May not the Lord say of this city as he did of Jerusalem, Thou hast "been to me a provocation of mine anger and of my fury from the day that they built thee even unto this day, that I should remove thee from before my face," Jer. xxxii. 31: thou art the city I have been purging, but art not purged; "thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee," Ezek. xxiv. 13. Surely London deserves not better at the hands of the Lord than other cities did, especially Jerusalem; and having her sins, may fear her end. Be instructed therefore, O London, lest the Lord's soul depart from thee, and thou be made desolate; for the Lord hath a day to reckon with sinful lands and cities. Isa. xvii. 4, "In that day the glory of Jacob shall be made thin, and the fatness of his flesh shall wax lean." The princes, counsellors, soldiers, prophets, priests, with their cities, the rarities and riches of them, were the glory and fatness of Jacob; these God had a day to take away, and so made Jacob thin and lean. God had a day for Tyre, and interrupted her great merchandizing for seventy years, by laying her in the deep, Isa. xxiii. 15. If it be demanded, How came Tyrus, so strong and stately, so fat and full, to so deplorable an end? the Spirit of God tells you, when it saith, "Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters," Ezek. xxvii. 26, that is, the princes and rulers, by their pride, policy, and profaneness, caused such storms as sunk the ship. Tyrus had as much to secure her as any city in the world; she was built upon a rock, her borders were in the midst of the seas, she had walls, and an army to watch them; she had towers, and Gammadims to keep them; she wanted not for ships, pilots, mariners, for soldiers, shields, and helmets; she had counsellors, merchants, and plenty of all things, so that she seemed invincible; but all these did not preserve her station, or make her impregnable; for though she endured a siege of thirteen years by Nebuchadrezzar and his forces, yet at last she fell into the midst of the sea in the day of her ruin, Ezek. xxvii. 27. Jerusalem was so well fortified by nature and art, being compassed about with mountains, Psal. cxxxv. 2, having walls, bulwarks, and towers, Psal. xlviii. 12, 13, that it was thought incredible, and impossible, for an enemy to have entered her gates, Lam. iv. 12; but sin being found in her, and God against her, nothing secured her. She was oft warned by the prophets, and judiciary providences of God, to repent and reform, Isa. xxxvii.; Amos iv. She was as a pot over the fire, when besieged by Sennacherib, when famine and plague devoured her inhabitants, but her scum went not out, and that was her ruin. Let none think the poor to be the scum of the city; the Lord made the poor as well as the rich, Prov. xxii. 2, and despises not the work of his own hands. It is the sin of rich and poor, it is their wickedness, which is the scum.

Great cities have much sin in them, and so much scum; unsound opinions, counsels, fashions, and practices. Thus was it with Jerusalem, and her scum boiled in, she was the worse for corrections and judgments, Isa. i. 5, her scum caused the cracking and bursting of the pot. These things the book of God holds forth for our instruction, "upon whom the ends of the world are come." Let our great city and citizens look to it, there is scum in the city, and not a little: is it gone out, or boiled in? Was not the sword lately at your gates? was there not yesterday great sickliness within your walls? is not trading diminished? have there not been strange murders amongst you? have not many sad fires been kindled, broke out, and consumed your habitations? was there not a plot (which hath cost some their lives) to fire your city? God hath been warning you by these judiciary dispensations, and are you bettered by them? have all you have seen, feared, or felt, caused your scum to depart from you? If so, it is well; well will it be with you, well with your city, and well with your undertakings, and well with your posterity; but if it be boiled in, and you are the worse for all the boiling judgments and providences you have been in, and under, know that some dreadful calamity, if not destruction itself, hastens, and will certainly take hold of you and your city, without speedy repentance. Hitherto you have had sparing mercy and gentle corrections; if these lead not to repentance, severity abides for you, and God will say, From the first to the last I have been provoked by this city, "I will break this people and this city," Jer. xix. 11. How sad would it be, should the Lord lay your city waste! It is not the strong structures, great treasures, military or naval forces, wise counsels, which can protect you, if scum be found amongst you. If you are careful that the filth of the streets be carried out, will you not much more see that the filth of your hearts and houses be purged out? Will not London be made clean? when shall it once be? let this be the time; lest the plague, which hath been much feared, enter your borders, and cause sad cries in your streets and families. Now "wash you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings, and learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, and plead for the widow;" now let holiness of life, execution of justice, speaking truth, doing righteousness, showing mercy, and promoting the good of one another in love, take place; and they will not only secure you and the city, but make you and it glorious, and perfect in beauty, so that the Lord will take pleasure therein, and say of it and you, This is "the city of righteousness, the faithful city," and her citizens are like herself, righteous and faithful. Now her brass is become gold, her iron silver, her officers peace, and her exactors righteousness; therefore now her walls shall be salvation, and her gates praise; now shall she be my habitation, and her people my glory, and I will be to them a defence for evermore. That this may be the portion of this city, and yourselves, and that a blessing may go with this work, is the hearty prayer of him who is

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER,

AND ESPECIALLY TO THOSE WHO COUNTENANCED THE EXPOSITORY WORK.

THIS is the fifth and last part upon Ezekiel; which was finished in the latter end of the year 1654, and hath been latent full seven years, like Josiah in the temple; but now, through the instigation of learned and godly ministers, some others, and considerations of mine own, cometh to public view. Ezekiel prophesied unto the Jews, who were then the only people God had in the world, and honoured with singular titles: "sons of the living God," Hos. i. 10, his "firstborn," Exod. iv. 22, his "inheritance," Isa. xix. 25, his "peculiar treasure," Psal. cxxxv. 4, his "pleasant portion," Jer. xii. 10, "a noble vine," chap. ii. 21, "the holy flock," Ezek. xxxvi. 38, "a chosen generation," Isa. xli. 8, 9; 1 Pet. ii. 9, the Lord's "glory," Psal. lxxviii. 61, "the dearly beloved of his soul," Jer. xii. 7; and endued with great privileges, Rom. ix. 4, 5; yet were they not exempted from afflictive and severe sufferings; they were "a reproach unto the heathen, a mocking to all countries, and much vexed," Ezek. xxii. 4, 5; the pestilence, sword, and famine consumed them, so that the "pitiful women" did eat their "own children," Lam. iv. 10, and plucked off their own breasts, Ezek. xxiii. 34; the "priests and elders gave up the ghost, while they sought for meat to relieve their souls," Lam. i. 19; those brought up in scarlet embraced dunghills, chap. iv. 5; the women were ravished in Zion, the maids in the cities of Judah, and princes were hanged up by their hands, chap. v. 11, 12; they could not walk safely in the streets, chap. iv. 18; their necks were under persecution, chap. v. 5; lions, Tiglath-pileser and Shalmaneser, took away the ten tribes, and Nebuchadnezzar broke the bones of Judah and Benjamin, Jer. l. 17; he burned the temple and city, he ruined church and state, and carried the Jews into captivity, where they suffered unspeakable misery. The prophet tells us, that their punishment was greater than the Sodomites', Lam. iv. 6. That which chiefly provoked God to deal thus severely with them, as Ezekiel and others testify, was their leaving his pure worship, ordinances, and institutions, falling to false ways of worship, and compliance with the nations. They had "the image of jealousy," Ezek. viii. 3, the altar of Damaseus, 2 Kings xvi. "the statutes of Omri," Mic. vi. 16, "high places," 2 Chron. x. 33, traditions and statutes of their fathers, Ezek. xx. 18; Jer. ix. 14, customs of the nations; they set their posts with God's posts; worshipped with their faces toward the east, Ezek. viii. 16; they would be as the heathens, Ezek. xx. 32, and walk after their own imaginations, Jer. xviii. 12, whereas they should have walked in God's laws and statutes, Ezek. xx. 19. When therefore the house of Israel degenerated into dross, God gathered them into the furnace, and poured out his fury upon them, Ezek. xxii. 19—22. Apostatizing from the pure worship of God, to the superstitious rites and ceremonies of men, provokes bitterly. It is a reproach to God, his worship, truth, and ordinances; it is a violation of former promises; it is high ingratitude and rebellion against God; it is a great scandal to all the godly, especially the weak; it encourages, justifies, and hardens the wicked; it ruins souls, gratifies Satan; it exposeth men to visible and unavoidable judgments. When the Jews purposed to leave the Lord's tents, and fall to Babylonish temples, then did he swear, that he would rule over them with fury, Ezek. xx. 32, 33. This should caution us to keep distance from inward approbation of, and outward compliance with, either Jewish ceremonies or Romish rites: the first are abrogated by the Lord, and it may be Jericho work to raise them up again; the other are the mark of the beast, and it is not safe to bear that mark, Rev. xiv. 9, 10; xvi. 2, God is a jealous God, and would not have his people to symbolize with idolatrous or superstitious practices; he forbid his people to take, or desire in their hearts, the silver and gold which was upon idols, Deut. vii. 25, they might not touch with their hearts or hands any thing which belonged to them; they might not do as other nations, Lev. xviii. 3, nor inquire after their gods, and mode of worship, Deut. xii. 30. They might not be like the nations in apparel and hair, saith Maymonie, much more not in the service and worship of God: we should not be as other nations, but keep God's ordinances, and walk therein, Lev. xvii. 4. Symbolizing with idolatrous worship, persons, or things, God allows not. In Babylon they might not touch any unclean thing, Isa. lii. 11; and shall we in Zion, where all is to be pure according to the mind of the Holy One of Zion? This made that great apostle Paul say, "Touch not the unclean thing," 2 Cor. vi. 17; (whatsoever is from man in the worship of God hath imperfection, like the man whence it comes, and is an unclean thing;) and if not touching do cause suffering, casting out or off, God will receive, be a Father, and recompense sufferings. God would not have his people touch or countenance any corruption in worship. When the Damascene altar was in the temple, and God's altar removed out of its place, 2 Kings xvi. 14, our Saviour, and those with him, did not appear at that altar, lest they should seem to countenance it, but at the brazen altar, Ezek. ix. 2, though deserted and despised. As Christ will own nothing but what is appointed of the Lord; so those who are with him will not own the superstitious appointments of men, but cleave to the institutions of God, though out of place, and despised. The papists say of the protestants, that in matters of religion, in praying, reading their books, hearing their sermons, presence at their service, partaking of their sacraments, and all other communicating with them in spiritual things, is a great, damnable sin. If they hold it so sinful to communicate with us in the institutions of Christ, shall we symbolize with them in the superstitions of antichrist. Judicious Calvin saith it is unlawful for believers to manifest by any rite that they symbolize with superstitious ones. Mr. Paget tells us, that temples wherein idols and idolatrous service are still retained, and daily practised, cannot lawfully be frequented, nor walked in, because of the woe, incurred by reason of scandal, Matt. xviii. 7. Marens bishop of Arethusa, having pulled down an idolatrous temple, at the command of Constantine, and being put upon it by Julian either to build it up again, or pay for building of it, he denied both: a small sum was demanded; his answer was, It is as great wickedness to give a halfpenny towards such a work, as to give the whole: he suffered great tortures, rather than he would contribute one halfpenny to promote idolatry. And the forenamed Paget holds it to be the duty of a christian man rather to die than give any thing for the furtherance of idolatry, though it were but a halfpenny. Tertullian defends and commends the christian soldiers that would not wear a crown of laurel, like the heathens: and Rhemanus, in his argument, before that book of Tertullian, saith, it concerned the christians to take heed of complying with their rites. Another of the fathers saith, it were better to be starved to death than to eat things offered to idols. Those who take part in the ceremonies of idolaters offer to devils, and join themselves to the service of idols, 1 Cor. x. 20.

Reader, it is dangerous to symbolize with the superstitious rites and inventions of men. Do not judaize, do not gentilize, do not romanize, but see you christianize. Nothing in worship pleaseth God but what is his own; what man brings is spurious, pollutes his ordinances, and frustrates his commands, Matt. xv. 6. That which comes from God, is set up by him, carries to him, is pure, and approved of by him. False worship, and mixtures with the pure ordinances of God, are as smoke to his eyes, vinegar to his teeth, an abomination to his Spirit; and when they come into his sanctuary, he goeth out of it and far from it, Ezek. viii. 6. God had chosen Zion to dwell in, Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14, there was the glory; but when the people grew profane, the princes and priests corrupted his worship, then the glorious Lord, and glory of the Lord, left them, Ezek. ix. 3; xi. 23. God's worship is his name; and that is so dear unto him, that he will not endure any human mixtures therewith, but show vehement indignation against them; and had rather men's souls and bodies should perish, than his name be polluted. "Go ye, serve every man his idols; but pollute ye my holy name no more," &c. Ezek. xx. 39.

Keep off therefore from false worship, and mixtures of men; you are not to come there, you are not to hear those who teach such things, but to decline them as serpents in the way, and as poison in your meats; you are to feed on nothing but "the sincere milk of the word," and to worship God only with word service, Rom. xii. 1, such as is appointed and ordered by the word, not contrary to or beside it. The jealousy of the Lord about matters of his worship appeared eminently in Ezekiel's temple, (which represented the church under the gospel,) where nothing was to be of the priests' devising: but the rule was, "They shall keep my laws and my statutes in all mine assemblies; and they shall hallow my sabbaths," Ezek. xlv. 24. The assemblies are the Lord's; in them must be, not men's, but his laws and statutes; otherwise his assemblies are robbed and wronged, his sabbaths polluted and profaned. Some say the church follows the government: the false church may, but the true church follows Christ; his sheep hear his voice, and not strangers. They say, Christ we know, and Paul we know, but who are you? They will not comply with false ways and mixtures, but stand for pure worship and pure ordinances, saying,*

Let heaven and earth be confounded, yet the sincere worship of God, and his holy truth, in which eternal life is laid up for us, deservedly ought to be and shall be more dear unto us than a hundred worlds. Happy are the souls who are so resolved! they will buy the truth, whatever it cost them, and it will be no simony: they shall find in God's pure ways, where nothing of man is, God's gracious presence, large discoveries of himself, transformation into his image, intimate communion with him, sensation of his goodness, strong consolations, and increasements with the increases of God, which will make up all losses and sufferings, and fit men for the new heavens, new earth, wherein shall dwell righteousness; which the Lord hasten, and for which let us believingly and patiently wait, giving diligence that we may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless.

Reader, if thou hast found any benefit by the four former parts upon Ezekiel, or shall gain any by this, give God all the glory, who hath led me through the difficulties and depths of this prophet; and vouchsafe him an interest in thy prayers, who hath spent his strength for thee; and be at some pains to read what he hath taken much and long pains to write. The faithful God, who makes good his promises, put his Spirit into thee, and cause thee to walk in his statutes, to keep his judgments, and do them. So prayeth,

He that affectionately desireth the spiritual and eternal good of souls,

THE INTRODUCTION TO THE WORK.

ALL Scripture being the breath of God's Spirit, 2 Pet. i. 21 ; 2 Tim. iii. 16 ; none can be judge or expounder of it but the same Spirit. Men are only indices veritatis, they cannot bring a sense, but show you what is the sense of Scripture. Those who are called to be expositors, must not fetch senses ab extra, but take what is in the bowels of the text, and hold forth unto others ; a work which requires ability, wisdom, diligence, and faithfulness ; ability to inquire into the originals ; wisdom to compare Scriptures, consider circumstances, and to discern the verity, spirituality, and propriety of texts and phrases ; diligence to dig and search after truth, which lieth deep, and hid ; faithfulness to give out truths, being found, with their own lustre, not human tincture. Whosoever doth thus, shall purchase favour in heaven and esteem on earth. Expository work is ancient and honourable : ancient as Nehemiah's time ; chap. viii. 8, the Hebraicus. Levites gave the sense of the law, they expounded it. In those days the Jews had their perushim, interpreters, which was above five hundred years before Christ. What ways they interpreted Scripture, you may read in Shindl. Pentagl. p. 1491 ; and in Weems's Christian Synagogue, book ii. chap. 1. p. 221. It is also honourable : for the Lord Christ was an expositor : Mark iv. 34, " He expounded all things ;" Luke xxiv. 27, he interpreted ; and ver. 32, " he opened the Scriptures." Paul also was an expositor : Acts xxviii. 23, " He expounded." * This work being so ancient and honourable, let it find the more acceptance with you.

Some would have expositors only give the literal sense, without observation or application of any thing. If all people could prophesy, were skilful in Scriptures, as Ezra, mighty, as Apollos, I could like it ; but because many truths lie so deep, and so closely couched, as all cannot easily discern or extract them, it is necessary to give the sense, and draw forth points observable, yet with a brevis perspicuity and a perspicuous brevity. The literal sense may be strong meat for some, when observations may be milk for others. That course shall I take, and so I come to the title.

AN EXPOSITION

UPON

THE BOOK OF EZEKIEL.

THE ANTIQUITY, SCOPE AND OCCASION OF WRITING, NATURE, BENEFIT AND PARTS OF THIS PROPHECY HANDLED IN THE TITLE.

FEW of the other sacred books have this title in the original prefixed. The word סֵפֶר sephar, a book, signifieth any writing, be it great or small, short or long. It hath this name in the Hebrew language. In Jer. iii. 8, a bill of divorce is mentioned; the word in the original is sephar, a book of divorce. It was the use of the Jews to call any writing, though it had but a few lines in it, sephar, a book. And so a catalogue that had not many names in it, is called a book, Matt. i. 1, "The book," or the catalogue, "of the generation of Jesus Christ."

This book of Ezekiel is large, having eight and forty chapters in it, and may rather be called a volume, than sephar, a book, a bill, a catalogue. Some books in the Scripture that are far less than this of Ezekiel have that title. Esther, which is not long, hath this title, Megillath Esther, the volume of Esther, or the book of Esther, so it is in your Bible. The word cometh from גָּלַל galal, which signifieth to roll or fold up; for the use of the Jews was to fold up their writings, as being the best way to preserve them from dust and other dangers. These two words are sometimes found both together, as in this prophet, chap. ii. 9. There was sent unto the prophet a hand, and in it there was megillath sephar, a roll of a book.

The Jews had many megillaths, many such volumes or rolls, especially five, which they did use at several times.

There was the megillath of the Canticles, which they read at the feast of the passover, because it contained much of the love of God to the church, and in the passover they apprehended much of God's love towards them.

2. Then they had the megillath of Ruth, which was read at the feast of Pentecost, because it contained the genealogy and original of David their king, who was so beloved and dear unto them.

3. They had the megillath of Ecclesiastes, and that they read at the feast of tabernacles, in memory of God's protection of them forty years in the wilderness, because that volume contained many acts of God's providence, which watcheth over his people continually.

4. The fourth was the megillath of Esther, which was read in the month of Adar, because that discovered the plot of Haman, and the goodness of God that did deliver them from that imminent danger.

5. The last megillath was the book of the Lamentations, and this contained, as the sum, so the bewailing of the Babylonish captivity, which was grievous unto them. This book they read in the fifth month, which was answerable to the latter end of July.

These were all little books, little volumes. Ezekiel is rather a megillath, and Ezekiel must be our volume, a book written in the Babylonish captivity, some five hundred and fourscore years before Christ; so that it is above two thousand two hundred years since this book was written. From hence you may observe:

First, The wisdom of God in causing this and other books to be written. A book is a writing, the original word signifieth to write. Here is the wisdom and goodness of God, that the prophecies of Ezekiel and other prophets should be written. God will have his church furnished with and regulated by written truths, not unwritten traditions. The Jews had their Cabala, which they say were full of secret mysteries. The papists have their traditions; they call them unwritten verities, and we call them unwritten vanities. We have a sure word of prophecy to stick unto, and they uncertain fancies, which corrupt the worship of God, and endanger immortal souls. Bellarmine hath a whole book De Verbo Dei non scripto, of the word of God unwritten; such words of God we acknowledge not. It was the wisdom of God that the prophets should write, and that their writings should be extant. When the lawyer asked Christ what he should do to inherit eternal life, Christ doth not send him to unwritten traditions, or to Jewish Cabalas, but he sends him to a known and written law; "What is written in the law? how readest thou?" Luke x. 26. So we must look to what is written, and how we may read, not what they tell us was revealed to such a saint, and hath continued to so many generations, and is the truth of God, these are delusions. The writings of the prophets and apostles are sufficient for us, and we acknowledge the infinite goodness of God, in that these should be written for us to have resort unto. If this and other prophets' and apostles' works had not been written, there would have been great inconveniences, some things would have been forgotten; some neglected, many things corrupted, and all things in time questioned, and so the whole truth would have been without authority in the hearts of people.

Secondly, See here the providence of God likewise, in preserving this book of Ezekiel, which was written in Babylon, for there was the prophet, and there he had his visions. For a book to be preserved in Babylon, is a wonder. The law was lost in Sion, in Manasses' days, and found again in Josiah's time: if the law may be lost in Sion, much more may a prophecy be lost in Babylon; and if not lost in Babylon, yet it might have been left in Babylon; if not left there, it might have miscarried in their return; if not then, yet when Titus and Vespasian took and sacked Jerusalem, it might there have perished, and been utterly extinguished, and we never have heard of this prophecy of Ezekiel. But here is the hand of God manifested in it, that though this prophecy was revealed to Ezekiel in Babylon, and run through so many hazards, yet it should be preserved to this very day.

Again, See where is the true antiquity. This book was written five hundred and fourscore years before Christ, two thousand two hundred years ago; and is not this book now very ancient? Other prophets, and the whole Scripture, are the true antiquity. Papists, and many amongst us, stand upon antiquity; and what is their antiquity? The fathers, or some heathen writers, are their antiquity. But what is the true antiquity but the word of God? That is prima veritas, and pura veritas, the first truth, and the pure truth; that is the fountain, all other are but muddy channels. When any points are in controversy they fly to fathers and to antiquity, and what is found there they take for truth: but this is to desert God, and run to man. "My people have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water," Jer. ii. 13. I am the fountain, saith God, my Scriptures are the fountain of living waters, yet they run to their own pits and cisterns that hold no water. Some moth-eaten and old writings, some ancient copies that have lain hid some hundreds of years from the world, are brought forth, and obtruded upon people for truths, and they must be truths. But for your direction know, that if they be not in the King's records, whatever writings they be, never regard them; and if you will search, never search into inferior courts, search not books that are on this side the King's court, that are made of late; but go to the King of heaven's records, have recourse to his court, look into the law of God; "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them," Isa. viii. 20. Throw them by; that truth which is found in any writings, and not to be drawn out of God's book, is not from antiquity. These are the true records, here is the true antiquity. And so much for this word book, "The Book of the prophet Ezekiel."

אֲבִיבִיּוֹס אֲבִיבִיּוֹס Ezekiel, that is the name of our prophet. Among the Jews there were no surnames, but every man had only one name, as Samuel, David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, &c. This name Ezekiel doth signify, the strength of God, or, one strengthened by God. He had a great work to do, he needed great strength for that work. He was to deal with wicked princes, and wretched people, such as were exceeding opposite, desperately wicked, impudent, hardhearted, rebellious. Therefore, chap. iii. 8, 9, "Behold," saith God, "I have made thy face strong against their faces, and thy forehead strong against their foreheads," &c. The Hebrew words here for strong, are חֲזָקִים chazakim, and חֲזָק chazak, I have made thy faces chazakim, strong, I have given thee many faces, and I have given thee many strengths; strong both in the singular and plural number, all the strengths that is fit for a prophet that had such a great task to undertake and go about. He was to reprove them for their sins, to threaten God's judgments, to vindicate God's justice in bringing them into captivity, himself was to endure much hardship, and many conflicts, for which ordinary strength would not suffice: therefore he is fitly called Ezekiel, the strength of God, or a man strengthened of God.

Or thus: Ezekiel doth signify one girt of God; for chazak is to gird or bind, and Ezekiel is one whom God hath girt and bound up for some employment: answerable to that expression of Paul, "Behold," saith he, δέδεμένος τῷ πνεύματι "I go bound in the Spirit to Jerusalem," Acts xx. 22, so you read it; but it may be, bound to the Spirit; the Spirit of God goes before me; and I being bound to the guidance of the Spirit, do follow the same whithersoever it leads me. So here, our prophet was girt up of God from the world, bound in or to the Spirit, and so followed that, which way soever it led him.

Touching this name of Ezekiel, you may observe a note or two.

First, See the wisdom of God in giving names suitable to the events that do follow and fall out afterward. Ezekiel was to deal with a stubborn people, a rebellious house, that did oppose Heaven, that did stand it out against God to the uttermost. There was need therefore of a strong prophet to subdue their rebellious spirits. If an ordinary man had come, he would soon have been discouraged, his spirit would have sunk and fallen within him: therefore here the Lord ordereth it so, that a name shall be given unto him which shall be suitable to the event; he shall be a man of God, he shall be strong, strengthened, girt up of God, to deal with a proud, rebellious, obstinate people.

You may find in Scripture divers names that have been imposed through the wisdom and guidance of God upon parties before their birth, and the event hath answered afterward very fully: as Gen. xvii. "Thou shalt call his name Isaac." Isaac signifieth laughter, and Isaac proved matter of laughter to his father and mother, all their days. He was a dutiful son, you never read that Isaac fell into such sins as some other of the patriarchs and prophets fell into. He was a child of laughter to them. So I Chron. xxii. 9, "His name shall be Solomon, for I will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days;" and the event was answerable to his name. So Josiah, I Kings xiii. 2, it signifies the fire of the Lord; and Josiah was the fire of God indeed to make a reformation, to pull down Jeroboam's altar, and to offer upon it the priests of the high places that had burnt incense upon it, to burn men's bones thereon, to throw out idolatry, and to destroy the high places. So the name of our blessed Saviour which was imposed before his birth, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus. They shall call his name Emanuel," he shall save his people, he shall be God with us, and it was so, Luke i. 13, "Call his name John." John noteth gracious, and he was gracious in the eyes of his very enemies, he had favour in the eyes of Herod, favour in the eyes of the people. God's wisdom is seen in ordering of names beforehand, suitably to events that follow afterward.

2. This should direct parents to impose encouraging names upon their children. What encouragement was it to Ezekiel to think of his name, the strength of God, a man girt up of God for some great design and employment! Names at first were imposed for distinction sake, and not only so, but to show the hopes and desires of parents touching their children for the time to come. Good names were prognostical; parents expected, and children were encouraged much by them. Leah nameth her son Judah, which is praise, that she might praise God for him, and he might do things worthy of praise all his days, and the tribe of Judah did worthily in Israel.

Thus much from the name of Ezekiel.

The Book of the prophet Ezekiel.

This word prophet is not in the Hebrew: The book Ezekiel, or the book of Ezekiel: but it is in the body of the prophecy, chap. ii. 5, "They shall know that there hath been a prophet among them."

Προφήτης.

Prophet is from the greek word, and it signifies one that foretells things to come. The Hebrew word נביא נביא Nabi of Naba, which signifies to foreknow, foretell, or discover things. Some derive it from a root, which signifieth to bud, to bring forth: for as a tree draws sap from the earth, sends forth that sap into leaves and fruit, and becomes profitable and serviceable unto man; so doth the prophet, he draws sap from the root, which is God, from him he hath many hidden, deep, and divine truths, which he reveals and sends forth for the delight and benefit of others.

Prophets were of two sorts, distinguished by the temples; some were prophetae priores, and others prophetae posteriores. The former prophets were those of the first temple, the latter prophets were those of the latter temple, and they were Haggai, Zechariah, Nehemiah, Ezra, and Malachi. These prophets continued but forty years after the second temple was built, and then did prophecy depart from Israel, which was one of the saddest blows that ever Israel had. All the rest were prophets of the first temple, and among them was our prophet Ezekiel and Daniel, though they were in the captivity; for the first temple was not yet destroyed, and they had lived at Jerusalem among the prophets: and the prophets of the former temple, it is observed, had the largest visions, and the fullest discoveries of the mind of God; more was discovered in the first temple than in the second, till Christ's coming; for the second temple had prophets but forty years after it was built, and the first temple had prophets for four hundred and thirty years.

The prophets (to speak for the honour of this our prophet) were all honourable men, men of great esteem and worth; they were men of God, as it is said, 1 Kings xvii. 24, "I know thou art a man of God," Ish Elohim, a man of Gods, a man of God the Father, a man of God the Son, a man of God the Holy Ghost. He had to do with all, a man of God's counsel, a man of God's protection, a man of God's countenancing, a man of God that stood for God, a man of God that would plead the cause of God in the corruptest times, against the desperatest enemies. A prophet was a man of God.

That they were very honourable, you shall find by that passage, 1 Sam. x. 11, "Is Saul also among the prophets?" It is a proverbial speech, and noteth a thing that is very rare and unusual. What! is Saul, that was a man of mean condition, Saul, that was erewhile seeking his father's asses, is Saul now come to so high and honourable a condition, as to be among the prophets? This was matter of wonder. The prophets were so honourable, and in so high an esteem, that it was counted a strange thing for any to come to that dignity and preferment, that were not of the prophetic race, the tribe of Levi, or such as were in order to those holy functions.

They were likewise men privileged. Psa. ev. 15, "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm." Anointed is the same with prophet, as expositors observe, though it is carried otherwise, in the general apprehension of men, for kings, but anointed, here, is the same with prophet. They were anointed, when the Holy Ghost was given unto them, and they were called unto their office; this was their anointing of God, and they must not be touched nor harmed. Gen. xx. 7, saith God to Abimelech, "Give the man his wife, for he is a prophet," he is an honourable man, he is a man of high account in mine eyes. Princes must not wrong a prophet. God spake to a prince, "Give him his wife, for he is a prophet." The greatest person in the world should not dare to touch a prophet, that is, a man so honourable, a man of God, and so gifted, and sent of him to such great employments.

Further, a prophet was called in Scripture a seer. 1 Sam. ix. 9, "Let us go to the seer; for he is now called a Prophet that was beforetime called a Seer." that is, from the Hebrew word to see, and not barely to see, but to see exactly, curiously, thoroughly into things. The prophets saw through the clouds, they saw into the heavens, they saw into the very counsel of God. Isa. xxx. 10, "Which say to the seers, See not," you see too much: the meaning is, you see too accurately; why do you see so, and tell us such things? So Abraham, he was a prophet, you heard before, he was likewise a seer. John viii. 56, "Abraham rejoiced to see my day:" he saw it distinctly, he saw it so as it affected him, "he saw it and was glad."

There is, besides this word, another name in the Hebrew, which the prophets had, and that was חֹזֵה chozeh. Isa. xxx. 10, "That say to the prophets, Prophecy not;" the Hebrew is tu chozim, to those that foresee, and foretell things. You have a conjuncture of these three in one verse, 1 Chron. xxix. 29, "They are written in the book of Samuel, haroch, the seer, and in the book of Nathan, hamnabi, the prophet, and in the book of Gad, hachozeh, the seer." The word cometh of chazah, to contemplate, to see; from which root comes our English word to gaze; and so it is interpreted, Isa. xvii. 13, "star-gazers:" this only by the way.

Our prophet had the honour to be a seer as well as a prophet, therefore, ver. 1, it is said וראית נראית "I saw visions," I had the honour to see visions, and visions of a God.

These titles of seer and prophet, as they set out the dignity, so likewise they point out the duty of the person. As they were seers, they were oculi ecclesiae, the eyes of the church, to see good coming, or evil, that they might encourage them upon the one, and draw them to repentance upon the other. As they were prophets, they were os Domini, the mouth of the Lord, to speak to the people whatsoever the Lord himself did make known to them.

All this then doth but serve to breed in you an honourable esteem of this our prophet; he is a man of God, he is a man honourable among the rest of the prophets: he is a seer; he is the eye of the church; he is the mouth of God.

Having thus opened unto you the title, I shall now show to you:

- I. The scope and occasion of this prophecy.
- II. The nature and condition of it.

III. The seasonableness of this prophecy for this time.

IV. What benefit you are like to have by this prophet; and then divide the prophecy in general, and fall into the chapter.

I. For the scope and occasion of this prophecy. In general, it is to show the certainty of Jerusalem's destruction, and the seventy years' captivity, which were now in question; and so to confirm the prophecy of Jeremiah, being of the same argument.

Jeremiah having prophesied of the captivity of Jerusalem for seventy years, the utter ruin of the city and temple; many, both in Jerusalem and Babylon, (the captivity being begun, for now Ezekiel and divers were in Babylon,) murmured and complained of Jeremiah, that he was a false prophet; that he had not the Spirit of God; that he had misled the people: that he had brought them into bondage by his fair words, put them upon yielding unto the king of Babylon, and betrayed them. You shall find false prophets bestirred themselves, and opposed his prophecy both in Zion and in Babylon, as Jer. xxviii. 1—4. Hananiah being at Jerusalem, when Jeremiah was in the house of the Lord, in the presence of the priests and of all the people, saith he, "Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon. Within two full years will I bring again into this place all the vessels of the Lord's house, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place, and carried them to Babylon: and I will bring again to this place Jeremiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, with all the captives of Judah that went into Babylon." Here is a false prophet contradicts all that Jeremiah had spoken, touching the seventy years' captivity.

The false prophets likewise in Babylon were at work, and strengthened the hands of the false prophets at Jerusalem by their doctrine. Jer. xxix. 8, 9, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: Let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed. For they prophesy falsely unto you in my name: I have not sent them, saith the Lord." And in ver. 24—28 of the same chapter, you shall find, that Shemaiah the Nehelamite sent letters from Babylon to all the priests, and to all the people that were at Jerusalem, accusing Jeremiah for a madman, for making himself a prophet, for sending letters to them in Babylon, for lengthening out the captivity to seventy years, for encouraging them to build houses, to plant gardens, to eat the fruit of them; he would have Jeremiah imprisoned and set in the stocks.

Thus Jeremiah was accused, cried down at home and abroad, his prophesy was slighted, scorned by many, and most were troubled, at what Jeremiah had prophesied. This made such work, both at Jerusalem and at Babylon, that the people of God were much despondent, and their enemies mightily insulting. Now hereupon the Lord stirreth up Ezekiel, poureth out his Spirit upon him, calleth him forth to prophesy, setteth him a work to justify Jeremiah, and to ratify what he had foretold concerning the Babylonish captivity, threatening ruin to the city and temple, to kingdom and king, to their nobles, priests, and all the people.

Hereupon (saith Josephus) the prophecy of Ezekiel, as soon as ever it was written, (I conceive he meaneth not the whole prophecy, but some part of it,) was sent to Jerusalem, but little fruit came of it; for Zedekiah being then king, and having seen it, he would neither believe Jeremiah nor Ezekiel, but presently concludes, that both were liars and false prophets: and that upon this ground, Jeremiah had said, chap. xxi. 7, that Zedekiah should be carried captive into Babylon; and Ezekiel denied that he should see Babylon, chap. xii. 13. Hereupon, saith Zedekiah, they were both false, here is a contradiction, the one saith, I shall be carried into Babylon, the other saith, I shall not see Babylon. But God quickly made this good, for shortly after, Nebuchadnezzar came, besieged Jerusalem, took Zedekiah captive, put out both his eyes, bound him with fetters of brass, carried him to Babylon, which he never saw, 2 Kings xxv. 7.

From hence, by the way, you may observe; 1. Upon what slight and weak grounds princes and people will cast off prophecies and truths of God, even upon mistakes and misapprehensions. Zedekiah could not apprehend what truths there were in these two prophecies: had he compared one thing with another, he might easily have seen truth; but small matters will make princes and people turn off the truths of God, especially when they are not suitable to their own spirits; and in these days people can without much ado turn off any truths ministers bring, if they be not suitable to their apprehensions and fancies.

2. That God will make good the word of his ministers and prophets, though they seem contradictory to men's fancies and sense. Jeremiah saith, that Zedekiah shall go into Babylon, and Ezekiel saith, he shall not see Babylon. God makes it good notwithstanding the prophecy is thrown away. The word of God shall take hold upon princes, nobles, people, and slay them, if they have despised and stood out against it.

But from this general scope of Ezekiel's prophecy, that he is sent to strengthen and justify Jeremiah, take this observation, (1.) That it is good for ministers to strengthen the doctrine, works, hands, and hearts one of another. A prophet is questioned, trod under foot, his prophecy thrown out as false; an Ezekiel is stirred up to justify a Jeremiah. When ministers justify one another, the work goes on with more strength; when there is a double witness to a truth, it will seal it more strongly to the heart. God gave four evangelists; one had been a great mercy; but that things might be ratified in your hearts, sealed up in your consciences, you have four evangelists, each one strengtheneth the doctrine and things of another: so the consent of minister and prophets is a great matter to ratify truths in the hearts and consciences of people, and to establish the church. It is good therefore for an Ezekiel to strengthen a Jeremiah.

(2.) More specially the scope of the prophet is, to comfort the captives that were then in Babylon; for they began now to be troubled that they had hearkened to Jeremiah, yielded to the king of Babylon, because Jeremiah had prophesied that Jerusalem should be destroyed, the temple burnt, and that all should be laid waste; whereas Jerusalem stood still, and now five years were gone, and nothing done unto the city or temple (for it was in the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity that Ezekiel began his prophecy). They now began to be discouraged that they had left their habitations, that they had hearkened to Jeremiah so far, as to come to Babylon. They were likewise disheartened in Babylon, they met with much hardship there, being put upon building, planting, sowing, and other difficulties; yea, the Babylonians themselves scoffed at them, and said, Sing us one of your songs of Zion. This made them to droop, and to wish, O that we were at Jerusalem again, that we had never hearkened to Jeremiah. The Jews also at Jerusalem reproached them, and they said they were men of cowardly and base spirits, discouraged with the words of a timorous and lying prophet, one Jeremiah, and thereupon yielding themselves into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, they wretchedly betrayed the city, religion, and their country. These things went to the very bowels and reins of the godly, and did greatly disturb them. Hereupon the Lord, to support their spirits, to comfort them in these their distresses, and to be an Ezekiel, even the strength of God, unto them, stirreth up Ezekiel, sets him on work.

Lastly, The scope of the prophet is the same with the rest of the prophets, viz. to lead unto Christ, as you may see by reading Luke xxiv. 44; Acts iii. 18, 21, 24. They spake of Christ, and led to him; but it is more especially aimed at by this our prophet, who begins with the law executed, a captivity, but ends with a temple, and restoration by Christ, thereby leading the people that were captives in Babylon to Christ the King of Jerusalem. In Eph. i. 10, you have this expression, "That he might gather together in one, all things in Christ." The word notes, to sum up, or to make a brief collection of the heads of all that was spoken before; implying, that much hath been said of Christ by others, and that the chief heads of all should be summed up, brought together, and be found in Christ. Much was spoken by David of Christ, much by Isaiah, much by Jeremiah, Zechariah, Ezekiel: now the sum of all that is in them, and in the rest, shall be gathered together as in one head, you shall meet it all in Jesus Christ. He is the Magazine and Treasury of all their strength and wealth, the chief things that ever have been spoken by the prophets formerly, are all centred in him. He is the Alpha and Omega, the Alpha of Genesis, "The seed of the woman shall break the serpent's head;" and the Omega of the Revelation, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all." So that all between Genesis and the Revelation, leads either directly or collaterally unto Jesus Christ. I Pet. i. 10, "The prophets prophesied of grace that should come unto you, searching when, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow." See here, they showed you the grace that should come, the Spirit testified in them of the sufferings of Christ, and of the glory that should follow. They were seers, and they saw Christ, and the glory of Christ, and they lead the people up to Christ.

Thus have you the scope and occasion of our prophet's prophesying and writing; it was to convince them of the heavy captivity of seventy years, to strengthen Jeremiah's prophecy, to encourage the church of God in Babylon, and to lead them unto Christ.

II. In the next place we are to show you the nature and condition of this prophecy, which is full of majesty, obscurity, and difficulty. Nazianzen saith,

That Ezekiel is the chiefest of all the rest; for matter of admiration and acuteness he is the greatest of all the prophets, and the deepest: which made Jerome say, there was in this prophecy of Ezekiel a sea of scriptures, he is so deep; a labyrinth of the mysteries of God, he is so dark, so difficult; if he do but equalize other prophets in dignity and worth, yet he exceeds them in difficulty and darkness. It must be said of this prophet, as of Paul's epistles, 2 Pet. iii. "There are some things in them hard to be understood;" and so there are many things in this prophet which are hard to be understood. There are some strange words in him, such as are no where else in Scripture to be found. He hath dark visions in him, such as will exercise the greatest abilities in the world to find out the aim of God, and those truths that are wrapped up in them; he hath uncertain chronologies and chorographies, mystical parables, foreign histories, and many transcendent matters, which may awaken your attention, and do call for the uttermost of man's industry in the opening.

Hence it was counted rashness for any one to read this prophet till he was thirty years of age. And Jerome tells us, that it was prohibited among the Jews, that any should read the beginning of Genesis, the book of Canticles, the beginning or ending of this prophet, till he were thirty years of age. The rabbins think it not lawful to interpret this prophet, but only by touching some general things in it; particular things might not be descended into. One saith, Ezekiel is Jeremiah veiled, a hand shut up, and you know not what is in it; like a book sealed up, and none can open it, or knows what is written within. These expressions have been used to set forth the darkness and difficulty of our prophet.

And I will appeal unto you all, this day, that if that question were put to you, when you shall read this prophet, which Philip once put to the church, Acts viii. 30, 31, "Understand you what you read?" might you not all answer without blushing, How shall we understand without a guide? And who is sufficient to guide your understandings through this difficult and dark prophecy? For my own part I durst not have ventured to launch into this deep, unless I had been requested unto it: and being called unto it, I desire to go out in the strength of the Lord, and to be as a star in his hand, guided by his Spirit, to lead you through the difficulties of this heroglyphical prophet.

III. But you will say, If this prophet be so difficult and dark, surely he is not seasonable, nor suitable to these times; some other scripture might have had the pre-eminence.

For this, take two or three answers: First, I find that many interpreters have fallen upon this prophet, in troublesome and tumultuous times. Gregory the Great wrote and preached upon this prophet, when the barbarians were almost at the gates of Rome, and when the sword was devouring multitudes. Jerome likewise studied and wrote upon this prophet, what time Alaricus king of the Goths took Rome and wasted all, and filled the christian world with tears and blood. Calvin, that great light of Europe, spent his last breath upon this prophet, and in times that were not very peaceable, but stirring and troublesome. Lavater's lectures upon this prophet were together with the commotions in France; and he professeth, that he did the more willingly give up himself to the study of this prophet, that so he might free his spirit from the sad thoughts of the public and private mischiefs which were in his days, and acknowledgeth this was a remedy to him against many evils.

Secondly, I answer, that compare our times a little with the times and state of the jews, and we shall see some seasonableness in handling this prophet at this time.

1. The sins the prophet cries out of amongst them, are rife amongst us. The sins then were idolatry, superstition, oppression, corruption in the worship of God, luxury, uncleanness, profaneness, scorning at goodness, hiding their eyes from the Lord's sabbaths, and the like. Now I ask, are not all these sins alive and too lusty in our kingdom at this time, and in this city wherein we live?

2. There was then a malignant party which was active and at work, and did oppose and hinder the reformation (what lay in them) which was on foot by Jeremiah, by Ezekiel, by the three children, by Baneh, by the Rechabites. All these and many others opposed the corruptions of the times, and laboured to have a reformation in the worship of God, to bring the people back again from their corrupt ways to the Lord; but there was a great opposition by the malignant party, and the chief opposers then, were the priests, and the false prophets, who poisoned the judgments of the people, who suggested false things unto them, who fed them with vain hopes, with corrupt opinions, and deceivable doctrines. The chief of the priests were chiefest in malignancy and opposition: this you shall see, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14—16. "All the chief of the priests and the people transgressed very much, they polluted the house of the Lord, they mocked the messengers of God, despised his words, and misused his prophets;" this was the practice of those times. Was there ever any great disorder, corruption in the church, or any sedition, or treason almost in the state, but some of the chief of the priests have had their hands in it? When the calf was set up in Moses's days, Aaron the priest had his head and hand in it. When David was dying, Adonijah makes the sedition and stir in the kingdom, but Abiathar the priest had a great hand in it. Both in the state and in the church you may well observe, that the chief of the priests have had their hands in the evil, in the trouble. And have not we now a malignant party that oppose the reformation intended and begun? Do they not set themselves with all their might against the Jeremiahs, Daniels, Ezekiels, and Rechabites of the land, that will not defile themselves? There is such a party, you all know, that do oppose godliness, that despise the prophets, scorn the saints, make sad the hearts of the righteous, and strengthen the hands of wickedness; therefore this prophecy may be seasonable enough in regard of that malignant party that doth oppose too openly.

3. They had lost their country, their choicest comforts; they were in captivity and constant jeopardy of their lives; if they provoked the Babylonians, they were ready to fall upon them, and root them out presently. And those at Jerusalem were in danger every day to have their liberties, estates, consciences, religion, and lives, taken from them. And are not we like unto them? and are not we, even in a land of liberty, in a state of captivity? Do not our estates, our liberties, our consciences, our religion, our lives, and all lie at the stake? We are even in Babylon in the midst of Sion; we are in a sad and heavy condition; therefore this prophecy may be seasonable now, considering our estate is so like to theirs.

4. The times then were such, that they loathed manna, ordinary and plain truths would not go down. Unless truths were new and transcendent, they were weary of them, and slighted them. Jeremiah was too plain a prophet for them, too low; and God gives them Ezekiel, a dark and hard prophet. And is it not so in these days? We have been fed with manna so long, that we loathe manna, as a wormy thing. If we have not something new, unheard of, transcendent, we are weary, we think it not worth our going out of doors. If so, then here is a prophet that may be suitable to these times, and your desires. God gave them this prophet in a time of affliction; and there was something in it; for afflictions open men's understandings, and enlarge their capacities. When people are under pressures, then their understandings are quickest, then they are most apprehensive: therefore God gave them such a prophet as might suit with their condition, in exercising their parts and graces to the full, when at the best. Now is a time of affliction; if your spirits be awakened, and the bent of them be after high and hard things, lo, here are difficulties and transcendencies for you; here are high things to draw up your thoughts, to exercise your spirits, be they never so choice and apprehensive.

One thing more for the seasonableness of this prophet. It is said heaven was open, and Ezekiel saw visions of God. If ever God hath opened heaven since Christ, now he hath done it in these sad times. God hath now caused, and is causing you every day, to see visions out of the prophets, and out of the gospel. These expository lectures are openings of heaven, and let out clear and choice light unto you from heaven; therefore seeing heaven is opened, let visions of God be counted seasonable, and become acceptable unto you.

IV. But if this prophet be so dark and difficult, what is the benefit and fruit we shall have by him?

This is the next head we are to come unto, and the benefits of this prophet are these.

1. The darker the prophet is, the more of God you may look for from him. God dwelleth in darkness, as well as in light. Psal. xviii. 11, "He made darkness his secret place." And Exod. Tenebræ sunt latibulum Dei. xix. 9, "God came to Moses in a thick cloud," and there Moses had the most of God. Here God is coming to you in a dark prophet, and questionless you shall find much of God in him. Here you shall see much of God's mercy in upholding and comforting the spirits of his people, and providing for them in a strange land; here you shall see much of God's justice in punishing sinners for their sins and iniquities; here you shall see much of God's truth in fulfilling of prophecies; here you shall find much of God's power in subverting of kings and kingdoms; here you shall find much of his manifold wisdom in these dark visions; here you shall find more of God than you expect.

2. This prophecy is an exact history of the time of the Jews being in captivity. In it you have many passages of Nebuchadnezzar's reign and government, of his acts abroad and at home, and of God's dealing with his people in the time of this their seventy years' captivity. Were not Daniel and Ezekiel extant, we should have such a great loss as the world could not tell how to repair it; the acts of God's dealing with his church and people in that seventy years, would be swallowed up in a chaos of darkness.

3. You shall see for what sins God subverteth and overthroweth kingdoms and states. In this prophet you shall find that the Lord doth ruin glorious churches, great cities, mighty kingdoms, men of great renown, families and posterities, and the particular sins for which he doth it; namely, for false worship, idolatry, injustice, uncleanness, profaning of his sabbaths, contempt of his word, abuse of his prophets, and sins of that nature. So that as it is, Prov. xxi. 30, "There is no wisdom, no counsel, nor understanding against the Lord." God will overthrow even kings, with their counsels and kingdoms, with their nobility and gentry, with their magistrates and people. God will overthrow them when he once sets upon such a work, such a design: there is no standing out against him.

4. You shall see here also the different carriage between the godly and the wicked, in times of judgment. When judgments are abroad in the world, the inhabitants of the earth should learn righteousness; but wicked men, they grow more active against God, more impudent, more desperate and hard-hearted. They combine and plot together to root out the righteous: this you shall see in this prophecy. And for the godly, you shall find that when judgments are near and upon them, they are mourning in secret, they get together, they that fear God speak often one to another; they fast, they pray, they redeem the time, they work out their salvation with fear and trembling, they give God no rest, they will be at it at midnight: in a word, you shall find the carriage of the godly to be exceeding contrary to the carriage of the wicked.

5. Here you shall find God's new covenant, wherein you shall see the riches of free grace, God doing all, both making the covenant and performing it, both commanding and giving what he doth command unto your souls.

6. You shall find that this prophet is an evangelical prophet, for he points at Christ; he will show you where he is, he will lead you to the temple, where you shall see Christ with his line in his hand, and measuring out a temple for the times of the gospel, measuring of his worship, his worshippers, and all that doth concern the new Jerusalem. Much of Christ will be found at least in the conclusion of this prophet.

7. You shall have a lively representation of the uncertainty of all things, and of all conditions in this world. In Lam. iv. 12, it is said, that the kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed that the adversary and the enemy should have entered into the gates of Jerusalem. None thought, none of the kings of the earth, none of the kings of Israel, believed that ever Jerusalem, which was so fortified by mountains round about, should be taken by the enemy. But you shall see in this prophet, that even Jerusalem, the city of God, the temple, that was the glory of the world, and Sion, the perfection of beauty, are all laid waste. Neither prince, priest, prophet, nobles, nor any are spared, but all are destroyed, all are carried into captivity, all are brought under; the sons, the precious sons of Sion are carried away into Babylon. So that there is no place, no condition, no prerogative that can privilege any from the hand of God where once sin is come to a perfection. "Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people," Prov. xiv. 34. Let them be Jews or gentiles, let them be kings, priests, or prophets, when sin is grown to a height, then the wrath of God comes to a perfection; and God will lay a Sion waste, God will raze a temple, God will carry a Jehoiakim, a Zedekiah, prince and prophet, priest and people into captivity. Is Sion gone? is the temple razed? is Jerusalem laid in the dust? What confidence then can any kingdom, can any city have? Let not England, let not London be secure. Fear and tremble. Repent of sin. Take heed of provoking God. Look beyond the kingdoms of the earth. Look up to heaven, and make sure of that kingdom which cannot be shaken, which cannot be taken from you. Thus you have some of the benefits that are to come by this prophet.

We are now to fall upon the general division of the prophecy.

In this prophet you have,

- I. The preface; wherein is contained God's appearing to Ezekiel, his calling of him and strengthening of him in his office; and these are laid down in the three first chapters.
 - II. You have the prophecy itself; wherein you have these four things.
 1. The destruction of the Jews by the Babylonish captivity, with the causes thereof, viz. their sins. This is laid down in the next 21 chapters.
 2. Threatening of judgment and destruction to several nations that had insulted over the people of God, being carried away captive, and the hand of God being upon them; these were the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Edomites, the Philistines, the Assyrians, and Babylonians: and this he doth from the 25th to the 33rd chapter.
 3. Sharp reproving of the Jews for their iniquity, for their hard-heartedness, for their not improving the hand of God upon them. And exhorting them to repentance, he tells them of freedom, some mercy and deliverance; and after that again of affliction and trouble that shall befall them: and this he doth from the 33rd to the 39th chapter.
 4. A typical prophecy concerning Christ, and spiritual freedom through him; laid down in the vision of the new temple, and of the new Jerusalem, from the 39th chapter to the end; wherein there will be many glorious things made known in due time.
- Thus have you the general division of the prophecy.

CHAPTER I.

In this Chapter you have .

- I. Ezekiel's first vision, from the fourth verse to the end of the chapter.
- II. In the three first verses you have :
 1. The time, what year, what month, what day this vision was, ver. 1, 2.
 2. The place, 1. General, the land of the Chaldeans; 2. Particular, by the river of Chebar, ver. 3.
 3. Together with this, you have the occasion; his being there among the captives.
- III. The subject of this vision, Ezekiel; described,
 1. From his office; a priest.
 2. From his parentage; the son of Buzi.
- IV. The Author of this vision, God. "I saw visions of God;" such visions as came from God.

Ver. 1—3. Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God. In the fifth day of the month, which was the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity, the word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi, in the land of the Chaldeans by the river Chebar; and the hand of the Lord was there upon him.

"Now;" the word in the original is, And; "And it came to pass." It seems a strange beginning of a book; especially when it refers to nothing said or wrote before. There are many of the books of sacred writ begin in this manner; as Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Joshua, Ruth, Samuel, Kings, and divers others. In historical books, it may note the series, and connect things antecedent with things consequent; but in prophetic books, it cannot note or make a connexion with things foregoing. Jonah begins his prophecy so; and what was the antecedent to make up the connexion? Here is the query, and difficulty, why the prophet should begin his book in this manner, "And it came to pass."

Some satisfy the doubt thus, they make it an idiom or propriety of the Hebrew tongue, to begin books with this particle, and, or now; and so they make nothing of it. But surely this is not all; there is something wrapped up in this now, or and, which may be of instruction and use to us.

"Now," or, "and it came to pass." The prophet doubtless was meditating upon the condition he was in; meditating upon the condition he had been in. Time was that we were at Jerusalem, that we went with joy to the temple, to the solemn assemblies; that we heard the voice of God, that we saw his glory, his beauty, his power, and his strength there. Time was that we had communion with the saints; that we sung songs of Sion together with cheerfulness and with joy. We had precious ordinances, honourable sabbaths, sacrifices that did cheer our hearts, and seal up pardon of our sins to us, and intimate the good will of God in Christ to our souls; we sat under our vines and under our fig-trees, and were in safety. But now, now we eat the bread of mourners, we drink our own tears. Now we are deprived of all ordinances, stript of all our comforts; we are sold into the hands of enemies, we are become captives to a heathen prince; our bondage is grievous, and must continue seventy years. It is the fruit of our sin. God is righteous in all his judgments, and if we willingly accept the punishment of our iniquity, he will in wrath remember mercy, regard us in our low estate; he will sweeten and sanctify our captivity to us.

Such thoughts as these were in the breast of the prophet. And I incline the rather to think so, because it was upon the sabbath day (as I shall show you afterwards when I come to open some things that follow) when he was meditating in this manner. Also you shall find in Scripture relatives used without antecedents; as Psal. lxxxvii. 1, "His foundation is in the holy mountains." Here is a relative without any antecedent, yet the antecedent is supposed, and easily found out. His foundation. Whose foundation? The foundation of the temple, the foundation of the city, is in the holy mountains. The Scripture doth sometimes lay down things relatively and conjunctively, when the antecedent may be supposed and found out with a little inquiry. So here, And it was thus and thus with the prophet, he was meditating; there was the word in his bosom, and the particle and connects that with this word of God revealed to him, and expressed by him.

Hence then take this note: That the hearts of the servants of God are exercised with thoughts of God's dealings with the church and themselves. Their thoughts are better exercised than the world thinks. Ezekiel here had his thoughts busied about his former and present condition, his heart was exercised that way. "I have other meat to eat," saith Christ, "than ye know of;" so the saints, they have other meat, other thoughts to feed upon, than the world takes notice of. It is oft unknown how their thoughts are exercised. Eli thought Hannah mad when he saw her lips go; but her heart was better employed than he fancied. Many think God's people melancholy, and not worthy of their company, they are but heavy pieces, when their hearts are in heaven, and they are at solid and serious converse with God. You have an expression to this purpose in Cant. i. 1, "Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth." The spouse had not spoke of her Beloved before. It is a strange speech to begin thus; "Let him kiss me with," &c. Who should kiss her; here is no mention of Christ, no mention of God, no mention of any before, but on a sudden, "Let him kiss me with," &c. Though Christ had not been mentioned by her lips, yet Christ was deep in her thoughts, and in her desires, she had meditated on Christ before, and so breaks out into this speech, "Let him kiss me with," &c. And Ezekiel having his heart meditating, and taken up with the thoughts of his former and present condition, of the church in general, of God's wrath to them, and God's mercy in the midst of his wrath, breaks out, "And," or "now," in the thirtieth year it was so and so.

This then instructs us what is the practice of the choice worthies of God; their hearts are meditating and taken up with divers things that the world is not aware of. It is good for us to be in meditation this way. Isaac went out to meditate in the evening, and while he was meditating cometh Rebekah, the desire of his soul: and the prophet being in that posture, hath visions of God to cheer his soul, and the souls of his people. If you would be meditating, you may see heaven opened, and God coming down into your bosoms.

“In the thirtieth year.” This time doth trouble interpreters very much; it is not said in the thirtieth year of what, or of whom, but barely in the thirtieth year. Here is an uncertain chronology, which makes a difficulty in the prophet.

1. “In the thirtieth year.” Not the thirtieth year from the jubilee, as some make it, for the fifth year of Jehoiachin’s captivity corresponds not with the thirtieth from the jubilee; for as Junius and some others (that take pains in searching out the truth herein) observe, that falls in but with the ninth year from the jubilee; therefore we let that pass.

2. “In the thirtieth year.” Some make this to be the thirtieth year of his age; the prophet was thirty years old, and then he began to prophesy. But this is not the practice of the penmen of Scripture, to compute the prophecies from their own age and birth. And there is good reason for it, because prophecies, and things that concern the good of the church so nearly and so much, receive witness and strength from the time wherein they are extant; and those times must not be particular times, times of particular men that are not known, but the times must be such as are known to the world, that all may be convinced the thing was done at such a time. Now the birth of one that afterward was to be a prophet, is not like to be a time so noted in the world, that the world then should take notice that Ezekiel was born, and did begin the computation of his prophecy from thence. It is not like therefore that this should be the meaning of the thirtieth year. If so, he would have said, In the thirtieth year of my life.

3. “In the thirtieth year.” That is, in the thirtieth year since the law was found in Josiah’s days, and since that great passover which was kept by him. In 2 Kings xxii. there is mention of finding the book of the law; and in chap. xxiii. of the great passover, and this was in the eighteenth year of Josiah’s reign, ver. 33.

Now if we compute the time from the eighteenth year of Josiah, it doth amount even to the thirtieth year, in which our prophet had his vision, and began his prophecy. For Josiah reigned thirteen years after this, (as you may observe in the story,) “he reigned thirty and one years” in all, 2 Kings xxii. 1; and then Jehoaiah his son reigned three months, chap. xxiii. 31; then Jehoiakim reigned eleven years, ver. 36; and Jehoiachin his son reigned three months before he was carried captive into Babylon, chap. xxiv. and five years of his captivity was past when Ezekiel began his prophecy. So then take the thirteen years of Josiah, and the eleven years of Jehoiakim, there are twenty-four; then add the five years of Jehoiachin’s captivity, which make twenty-nine, and then take three months that Jehoaiah reigned, and the three months that Jehoiachin reigned before he was carried captive, they make up twenty-nine years and six months: therefore saith he in the thirtieth year; it was the thirtieth year current, and so expositors do for the generality put it.

And whereas some would have it to be the thirtieth year of the Chaldean account; it being, according to them, thirty years from the beginning of that monarchy from Nebuchadonosor, (as some call him,) who was the father of this Nebuchadnezzar the Great, that carried away Jehoiachin into captivity. If it were the thirtieth year of that monarchy, it falls in with the thirty years since the eighteenth of Josiah, wherein the law was found, and the passover kept, so that these two may stand together, and there need be no jarring between interpreters for this time.

“In the fourth month.” It was not the month Tebet or Thebeth, (as some will have it,) which answers to that we call January; but the month Tamuz, or Tammuz, that which answereth to part of June and part of July; (about the time we are now in); for the Jews were to reckon their months from April, as Exod. xii. 2, “This shall be the beginning of months, it shall be the first month of the year to you;” that month was Abib, Nisan, or Nissan, and answereth to part of March, and part of April; now from thence this is the fourth month, and falleth in with the latter end of June and beginning of July.

“In the fifth day of the month.” This I find some do make to be the sabbath day, and it is very probable that it should be so; for, chap. iii. 16, he saith, that at the “end of seven days the word of the Lord came unto him again.” Hence they collect, that it is not likely that God would step over the sabbath day, and give Ezekiel visions upon another day, and not upon that; for if Ezekiel had had his visions upon another day, the people should have been destitute of all the benefit. They were so employed in their works of building and planting, and other accommodations for a captivity, that they had no leisure to resort unto Ezekiel upon a week day; therefore they strongly conclude, that it was upon a sabbath day, in the latter end of the week. From hence

Obs. 1. That that time is not considerable wherein the law of God is out of date; the time was reckoned here from the eighteenth year of Josiah, wherein the law was found. It was lost in Manasseh’s and Amos’s days, till the eighteenth year of Josiah, when being found, it was brought forth for the comfort and instruction of the people, for the worship and honour of God; and from that punctum the Spirit of God reckons the time, and begins the account. When God’s law is out of the way, and his worship down, that is no considerable time at all in the eye of God. Parties that are in the dark, or dead, we do not reckon of their time. One converted in his old age said, I have been long in the world, I have lived but a little time, meaning, since he was converted, the time before was incomputable. The widow that liveth in pleasure, the apostle saith, “is dead while she lives,” 1 Tim. v. 6. And the world is dead that hath not the law, the place is dead that hath not the ordinances of God. So long they have been, but they have not lived, they have not measured time; and therefore the Spirit of God fixeth the account at the finding of the law.

Obs. 2. The things here not being specified, but left undetermined, that God would have us observe the remarkable passages in churches and states when they fall out, not one or two, but many, or all the chief. As the eighteenth year of Josiah, when the law was found, when that great passover was kept, when he and the people of God entered into a solemn covenant with God, when the great reformation was made among them, such great acts were taken notice of; as also the changes in Babylon, when the Chaldean monarchy began, when Nebuchadnezzar was put into the throne, and his head lifted up above others. God would have us take notice of the chief acts of his mercy and providence at chief times; Hos. xiv. 8, "Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols?" There will be a great alteration; then it will be a remarkable time; said God, "I have heard him, and observed him;" and then followeth, "Whoso is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them?"

Now is a time of memorable emergencies, and they should be considered; the famous things of 1640 and 1641 ought to be had in everlasting remembrance: a triennial parliament, resurrection of religion, law and gospel were found again; reformation begun, protestation and covenants taken, the kingdoms united here, and foreign ones shaken in pieces.

Obs. 3. This makes for the truth and strength of our prophet's visions and prophecy; for when exact particular times and places are set down, that things were done in such a year of such a king, such a month, such a day of the month, it adds weight to an ordinary history; and when the Spirit of God shall so punctually determine the time to a year, a month, a day, it is a strong seal to the truth of the visions and prophecy.

Obs. 4. See here, (from "the fifth day,") that God hath a special care of his sabbaths, and of the spiritual good of his servants. Of his sabbaths, that they shall not lie in the dark, when they are in Babylon; God will open heaven and appear to a prophet, and give him visions, upon a sabbath day. God will do it too upon a sabbath day, that so the people, which were in a sad condition, that laboured now in brick and clay again, that were building, planting, taken up with secular affairs, might have a seasonable opportunity for the good of their souls. The sabbath was made for man, for the good of man, and they found it so. Though they be in Babylon, they shall have a prophet, they shall have visions, and visions upon a sabbath day, when they have liberty and opportunity to come to the prophet to be instructed in these visions, without prejudice to their callings.

"As I was among the captives by the river Chebar." Here is the place mentioned where the prophet was, and the occasion of his being in it.

"Among the captives." The original is, In the midst of the captivity; the abstract being put for the concrete, captivity for captives; and this is ordinary in the Scripture; as circumcision for circumcised, Phil. iii. 3; election for elected, Rom. xi. 7, "the election hath obtained," that is, the elected; and here, in the midst of the captivity, is, in the midst of the captives.

"In the midst," is not to be taken geometrically and strictly, as if he were exactly in the midst of them proportionally every way considered; but, in the midst is to be understood, "among the captives;" they were captives, and so was he: as Josh. vii. 13, "There is an accursed thing in the midst of you," that is, amongst you.

"By the river Chebar." This is the particular place. The notes upon your quarto Bible, say that this river Chebar was part of Euphrates. Rabbins and others say it is Euphrates itself. But if it were Euphrates, why should the Spirit of God change that name which was known, and take a name which was unknown. Surely the Spirit of God would have said Euphrates, and not Chebar. If it be a part or channel of Euphrates, why kept it not one of those names that is mentioned, Gen. ii. Gihon, Pison, Hiddekel? Gihon it cannot be, for that river runneth toward Ethiopia. Hiddekel it is most likely to be, which lieth in those parts; but that river kept its name, and was not changed, as appeareth, Dan. x. 4, where it is said, "He was by the river Hiddekel." If Pison, some reason must be given of deserting that name, and imposing one new and unheard of. Interpreters therefore conceive this Chebar to be a river of itself, rising from the mountain Masius, (running through Mesopotamia,) and emptying itself into Euphrates, at a place where is a town called Chebar, whence the denomination probably may come; but rather, it is called Chebar, because of the plenty of waters that are in it, and for the plenty of grass that is upon the banks thereof.

Near this river had the Jews their habitation, and they were placed together. Chap. iii. 15, "I came to them of the captivity, that dwelt by the river Chebar." Here they were placed, because the Jews were odious to the Babylonians, as of old they were to the Egyptians, and dwelt distinct from them. In Salmanassars' time, when the ten tribes were carried into Assyria, they were put in Halah, and Habor, by the river of Gozan, 2 Kings xviii. The rabbins call this river Sabbath, the sabbatical river, because it flowed not, but desisted from its ordinary course, upon the sabbath day; and Josephus saith, that it was certain this river did constantly forsake its course upon the sabbath day; God thereby miraculously intimated to them, that he would have them keep a sabbath, though in a strange land. These captives were fixed by Gozan, or by Chebar, which is the particular place; the next is the general place, the land of the Chaldeans.

Chaldea was the country of Abraham, he went from Ur of the Chaldeans, Gen. xi. 31; and Stephen calls it Mesopotamia, Acts vii. 2; "Abraham was in Mesopotamia before he dwelt in Charran." It lay on the north of Chaldea, between Euphrates and Tygris. In ver. 4, it is said, "Abraham came out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran." Chaldea and Mesopotamia were promiscuously taken, sometimes being near together, and sometimes distinctly. The chief city in Chaldea was Babylon, now called Bagdat, from Baga, which in Arabic signifieth a garden, because it stood in a pleasant place, and had many gardens in it. It was built by Nimrod, that mighty hunter, the first king that ever the world had. When the tower in it was built up nine thousand one hundred threescore and four paces from the ground, which is above nine of our miles, then it pleased God from heaven to confound their language, and of one made threescore and twelve; hence was it called Babel, Quia ibi 52
Quæ excussit. Gen. xi. 9, because God there confounded the language of all the earth, and their work together.

This country was called the land of Nimrod, Mic. v. 6; and the land of Shinar, Gen. x. 10, which signify shaking, because it shook their language, and scattered the people that inhabited it out of the land. It is branded by Zechariah for the dwelling-place of wickedness, Zech. v. 11. Out of this land of Chaldea, it is conceived by some, came the three wise men, who offered the gifts to Christ; for the Chaldeans were the chiefest astrologers and exactest astronomers that were in the world, as you observe, Dan. ii.

These Chaldeans were a martial people, very cruel. Jer. vi. 22, 23, "A people cometh Jer. i. 41, 42. from the north country, and a great nation. They shall lay hold on bow and spear; they are cruel, and have no mercy; their voice roareth like the sea," &c. They were polluted with abominable idolatries, superstitions, sorceries, enchantments, and all manner of profeness. Into this land, and among this people, did God bring the Jews, who had been so dear to him.

Babylon was the seat of the chiefest and greatest monarch of the earth. Thither came a continual conflux of people from all parts of the world, to whose scorns and wrongs the Jews were daily exposed. They said, These are the holy people, these are they come out of the holy land, come and sing us one of the songs of Zion; and so profane was Belsazzar, as that he took the holy vessels to quaff and carouse in. Into this land were they brought, and the godly were constrained to hear and see the blasphemies and abominations that were amongst them, and to bear the scorns and frowns of all comers.

“Thus have I opened to you the particular place, “by the river Chebar,” and the general place, “the land of Chaldea.”

Let us see now what observations will arise from hence.

Obs. 1. That God is not tied to places. Let the place be never so holy, let it be the holy land, the holy city, the holy temple, God is not tied unto either of them, but hath his liberty to work and manifest himself where he pleaseth, even in Babylon. The rabbins have a rule goeth for truth amongst them, and is firmly believed, that the Holy Ghost never spake unto the prophets out of the holy land; and therefore they say, Jonas fled to Tarsish from the face of the Lord, to avoid the inspiration of the Almighty. But here we see in Chaldea, by the river Chebar, is Ezekiel inspired; here heaven is opened unto him; here he seeth visions of God; here the word of the Lord cometh expressly unto him; and here the Spirit of God doth work mightily in him. One shift they have for this; they say Ezekiel was a prophet before he was carried out of the land of Canaan, before he came into Chaldea. But we have no proof in Jeremiah nor Ezekiel, nor in any other part of Scripture, that Ezekiel was a prophet, and moved to prophesy before he came into Chaldea: and therefore it is said, ver. 3, “That the hand of the Lord was upon me there,” there first, in that polluted land; I never had the Spirit of the Lord before I came into Chaldea. When the inhabitants of Jerusalem had polluted the holy city, profaned the holy temple, and defiled the holy land with their idolatries, and other wickednesses, then God departs, pitcheth his tabernacle elsewhere, and poureth out his Spirit in Babylon. God is not tied to places, he can in a dungeon, in a prison, in a Babylon, let down his Spirit into the heart of any servant of his, and raise him to a prophetical height.

Obs. 2. That no place is so wicked, but God can raise up instruments to do him and the church service there. Babylon was a seat or land of wickedness, a sink of all sin, “the mother of har-lots and abominations of the earth.”

Rev. xvii. 5. Yet here, even out of hell itself, doth God raise up a prophet for his people. It was said by Nathanael, John i. 46, “Can any good come out of Nazareth?” Much more may it be said, Can any good come out of Babylon? Can any good come out of Rome? What was answered there? “Come and see.” So here, Come and see a prophet in Babylon, come and see the Spirit of God poured out upon Ezekiel, even there. And to this may the first word of the prophecy have some respect; as if the prophet had said, They have had prophets in Jerusalem a long time, but no prophets elsewhere: behold, now also is a prophet in Babylon. God can raise up to himself saints in Nero's court; he can raise up instruments ordinary and extraordinary to do him service, in Babylon, in Rome, in Egypt, in most profane and vile places, that are overspread with all idolatries and abominations whatsoever.

Obs. 3. See here a door open for the enlargement of the church, a type of God's goodness toward the gentiles. The church had been shut up for 850 years in Judea, (for so long it was from Joshua's entering into Canaan to the captivity,) but now he openeth a door for the gentiles; here is a prophet, a church in Babylon; here is a way made for the bringing in of the gentiles, and enlarging the borders of Zion. God will not only have mercy upon Jews, but upon the Babylonians.

Obs. 4. That the godly are wrapped up in the same calamity with the wicked. Ezekiel is among the captives, and many others with him. They lost their country, friends, estates, liberties, ordinances. They were in great misery, brought very low, under a heathen king, amongst enemies, exposed to the scorns and wrongs of all; and Ezekiel, Daniel, the three children, Mordecai, and many others, were all in the same condition. The children of God are subject to the same outward public or private calamities that the wicked are. All things come alike unto all; if you look upon the outward face of things, there is no exception. Good Josiah was slain in the battle as well as wicked Ahab. Naboth was stoned as well as Achan. If David, a man after God's own heart, prosper in the wars, so doth Nebuchadnezzar, a heathen, a tyrant. Sicknesses, diseases, deaths, of what kind soever, are common to good as well as to bad. The sword, plague, famine, hath seized upon the carcases of the godly as well as the wicked. If wicked women die in childbirth, so doth good Rachel. There is no condition but may befall the children of God; 1 Pet. v. 10, “The same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren, that are in the world;” and no temptation hath taken hold of you, but such as is common to the nature of man. Whatsoever affliction then you have, whether public or private, this may be some solace, it is no other than what befell Ezekiel, Daniel, and hath befallen the godly in all generations.

Obs. 5. That the godly are mingled in this world with the wicked and profane. Men of great worth, great grace, rare excellences, are not so privileged as to be exempted from the society of the wicked and ungodly. Here is Ezekiel amongst the Chaldeans: Joseph was amongst the Egyptians; and Job saith of himself, chap. xxx. 29, that he was a brother to dragons, and a companion to owls; and David cries out, Psa. exx. 5. “Woe is me that I sojourn in Mesech, and that I dwell in the tents of Kedar;” that is, with a barbarous and profane people, that were like to the posterity of Mesech and Kedar. The church of Smyrna, Rev. ii. 9, was pestered with the synagogue of Satan; and Pergamus, ver. 13, had her dwelling where Satan's seat was. In that city, if you observe the 14th and 15th verses, you shall find there was much idolatry and persecution; for there were those that held the doctrine of Balaam, “who taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication; and there Antipas my faithful martyr was slain.” Where there is idolatry, there will be persecution and uncleanness; and where these be, is the seat of Satan. And the church of Pergamus was seated even where Satan had his seat and throne; therefore it is no strange thing for the people of God to dwell amongst the wicked. In Canticles the church of Christ is said to be a lily among thorns ; a lily, and none growing near but thorns, that scratch, prick, and tear the church. Micah vii. 4. "The best of them is a brier, the most upright is sharper than a thorn-hedge;" the best of the wicked are briars and thorns one time or other. It is the lot of the godly to be among the Chaldeans while they live here in the world.

Obs. 6. See here, that God hath a special care of his church and people, when they are in the lowest and worst condition. What now is Jerusalem become? where is the glory of all the world? Now they are carried into captivity; now they are in a strange land, under a strange king and government; now they are deprived of all their sacrifices, and services of that nature; now they are imprisoned; now they are in danger of their liberties and lives every day. Yet, as the psalmist saith, "Thou rememberest us in our low estate;" in this low estate, when they are at the river Chebar, in the land of the Chaldeans, doth God remember them, and sends an Ezekiel to them; and unto him, even in Chaldea, in Babylon, were the heavens opened, and he saw visions of God. Where there are the greatest enemies, God will show himself a friend; where the church is exceedingly straitened, God will give enlargement. Now his people are in Babylon, in captivity, he sends a prophet to them, Ezekiel, the strength of God; such a prophet as shall be strong to keep them off from idolatry, though they were amongst idolaters; strong to comfort their hearts against all the strong discouragements they had; strong to lead them toward God and heaven, though they had false prophets to lead them down to hell; strong to oppose the false prophets, to reprove them stoutly, to encourage the people faithfully, and to make known the mind of God unto them without flattery. They shall have a prophet, though they be in Babylon. This should stay up the spirits of the godly, if they should be driven into wildernesses, God will provide Ezekiels for them.

Obs. 7. That we are to take heed of judging the condition of men by their outward afflictions. When great calamities come, people ordinarily grow great censurers, and condemn those parties that are under them to be the greatest sinners of all others. Take heed of this. If you will draw such conclusions as these. The hand of God is upon such; in such a place there is the plague, there is the sword cutting them off, there they are carried out of their country into captivity, there they are imprisoned, there they are held in great bondage; surely these are none of God's people, these are naught, vile persons, reprobates: if you will judge thus, you will condemn the generation of the righteous; for Ezekiel, Daniel, Mordecai, the three children, and many others very godly, were in the captivity, as well as those that were very wicked. Such conclusions must not be drawn from the sufferings of the saints. You know the prophets and apostles met with very hard measure; while they were in the world they were whipped, stocked, imprisoned, stoned, sawn asunder, tempted, tormented, slain with the sword, and evil entreated every where; and if you should measure their condition by their afflictions, condemnation must be their portion, and they must be in the catalogue of delinquents. Have not some in our days been flayed, roasted alive, cut in pieces, thrown into the river? have not their houses, and many in them, been burnt together in Ireland? Have there not been cruel and desperate things done? Ireland now is full of blood, skulls, and graves; shall we say they are the greatest sinners that have suffered such great things? When Pilate

to make of judgments upon others, not to censure them, but to repent ourselves; "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Think not that they are greater sinners than others; think not now that the Jews in Babylon are greater sinners than all others; think not those in Ireland are greater sinners than yourselves. If he be a wicked man that meets with great afflictions, then Christ must be the wickedest man that ever was; for he was vir doloris, a man of sorrows, and had the greatest affliction that ever befell any. As it was no argument for Zedekiah's goodness, who at this time was in Jerusalem, that he drank wine in bowls, and had a great deal of felicity; so it was no argument for Ezekiel's guiltiness and sinfulness, that he was in a strange land, in Chaldea, among the captives, by the river Chebar. Paul, when he was at the bar with iron fetters about his heels, was a better man than Agrippa with his crown on his head, and his sceptre in his hand, and sitting in judgment to condemn him. Daniel in his captivity is said to be "a man of desires," Dan. ix. a man that God took great delight in; when Jeconiah a king, and dwelling at Jerusalem, "is a despised, broken idol, a vessel in which there is no pleasure," Jer. xxii. 28. Those that are in great affliction may be greatly beloved, when those who are in great prosperity may be greatly hated.

Obs. 8. That the wicked fare the better for the godly. There were many godly now in captivity, as well as there were many wicked ones; and because of the godly that were there, God poureth out the Spirit of prophecy upon Ezekiel, and by that means the very wicked come to have the benefit of this prophecy, and partake of his visions. Many wicked ones have a share in the public duties of God's worship, when the godly meet together in those exercises. Ezekiel, in chap. xxxiii. 32, is said to be unto them "as a sweet song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument;" he was a sweet song to sweeten their bitter captivity. Joseph being in Potiphar's house bringeth a blessing; and Jacob in Laban's family increaseth the stock of his Master; and Joseph in Egypt saveth the Egyptians, and almost the whole world. Godly men and women are great advantages to the wicked, however they hunch and punch at them. Were the godly once out of the world, God would soon put fire to the four quarters thereof, and the wicked should presently feel it.

"Which was the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity." Touching Jehoiachin, there are many things remarkable as,

1. In 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, it is said, that "he was eight years old when he began to reign;" and in 2 Kings xxiv. 8, it is said, "he was eighteen years old when he began to reign." Here seems to be a great difference in the Scripture, hardly to be reconciled, and it hath puzzled many.

This difference is thus reconciled: the Kings of Judah, when they were in imminent danger, did use to declare their sons to be their successors; and so Jehoiakim, the father of this Jehoiachin, being beset by Nebuchadnezzar about the second or third year of his reign, did declare his son Jehoiachin to be his successor. Now in the book of Chronicles he speaks of the time from the first declaration, which was about the eighth year of Jehoiachin's age; and the book of the Kings mentions the time when he came to reign alone, and reckons from thence: for Jehoiakim reigned divers years after his son was declared to be king, and reigned with his father. So that the one book speaks of the time he reigned with his father, the other of the time that he reigned alone in the throne.

2. It is remarkable touching Jehoiachin, that he had other names; as 1 Chron. iii. 16, he is called Jeconiah, and Jer. xxii. 24, in disgrace, Coniah. He was a wicked king, and God cut off the first part of his name, a sad presage that ere long he would cut him off. Evil kings who have had God's name joined with theirs, when they have rent themselves from God's commands and worship, he hath cut off his name from theirs, and taken mercy and peace from them. This you shall see in Eliakim; he was a wicked king, and in 1 Chron. iii. 15, he is called Joakim: El, that signifieth God, and was joined to his name, is taken away. God would not suffer his name to be joined with the name of so wicked a king any longer. So here in Jeconiah, Jah, which is one of the names of God, is taken away, and in hatred and contempt he is called Coniah: God was taken from his name, and departed from him too.

When God will honour a man, he adds letters of his own name to theirs. As Abram afterward was called Abraham, a letter out of God's name was put into his. And so Jacob, his name was changed to Israel, a prince of God, or one that prevails like a prince with God, Gen. xxxii. 28.

When God changeth names in mercy, and makes an addition of letters of his own name unto men's, it is an argument of God's great love, of great esteem and great honour to the party; but it is an argument of disgrace, when God either brands them, or detracts from their names. Thus God branded Jeroboam, "Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that made Israel to sin," and "Judas the traitor." And sometimes he detracts from their names, as here Jeconiah is called Coniah; the beginning and glory of his name is taken away; and he was (as Coniah signifieth) prepared of God, prepared of God for vengeance, prepared of God for a captivity, for base services; prepared of God to be a broken idol, to be cast out and despised, as it is in that 22nd of Jeremiah.

3. This Jehoiachin was written childless: Jer. xxii. 30, "Write this man childless." A heavy doom, to write a man childless, especially a noble, a royal family, when children are much desired by all, most by princes, that so the crown may not be alienated. Jeconiah is not written childless in regard he had not any child; for, ver. 28, it is said, "Wherefore have they cast out him and his seed?" He had seed, and yet was written childless. How is that? He was as one that had no seed; he was deprived of the benefit and comfort of his seed; in effect, he was a childless man, because his children were carried into captivity, and none of them did inherit the kingdom and succeed him in the throne; for it is said, ver. 30, "No man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah;" they died in captivity, and none of them did sway the sceptre of that kingdom.

But there is some objection lying against this; for in 1 Chron. iii. 17, Salathiel is said to be his son, and his son begotten in captivity, Matt. i. 12. If Salathiel be his son, and his son begotten in captivity, how then is this true that he was written childless?

You must know (for answer) that this in 1 Chron. and Matt. i. is spoken after the legal account; for Jeconiah, or Jehoiachin, having been thirty-seven years in captivity, (as you shall read afterward,) he had seen the death of his sons and daughters, his uncles and kindred, so that he had none left of his own loins, or any that were very near unto him, to declare to be his successor, and to inherit the crown; therefore having neither son, brother, uncle, nor kindred that were near unto him, he was as a man childless every way. Now Salathiel being his nearest kinsman alive, he declareth him to be heir to the crown, and to succeed him in the royal dignity, according to the order set down by God in case of the want of issue, Numb. xxvii. 8, 9, &c. And now this kinsman, in the legal sense, is said to be the son of Jehoiachin, that is, the successor of Jehoiachin; not that he was his natural son, come out of his loins; for, Luke iii. 27, Salathiel was the son of Neri, according to the natural line. Be it then according to the legal account, that Jehoiachin was his father, yet still it holds good, Jehoiachin was a man childless.

4. In this king was ended the glory and royal dignity of the house of David. It is true that Zedekiah reigned some years after him, but Zedekiah died before Jehoiachin: and in the genealogy of Christ, Jehoiachin is mentioned, not Zedekiah, neither is there mention of any more kings of Judah after him: he was the period of the book of the Kings, and he finished the line of the house of David. None out of his loins, nor out of any other loins, did sit upon the throne till Christ came. As for Zerubbabel, who was thought to be king, and to sit upon the throne after the captivity, it will appear he was no king; for the learned observe that he was rather a captain, duke or leader of the people, and was stirred up of God to further and finish the work of the temple, after which (the rabbins say) Zerubbabel returned into Babylon, and there died.

But if that be not sufficient to clear that he was no king, you may observe in Zech. vi. 11, that when two crowns were made, neither of them was set upon the head of Zerubbabel, but both were set upon the head of Joshua, the son of Josedech the high priest: showing that all the power was invested in the high priest, and translated from regal to pontifical. So that Jehoiachin was an unprosperous man, to lay the glory of the house of David, and of his own, in the dust. And hence that name is conceived likewise to be given him, Jer. xxii. 11. The name of Shallum, which cometh of a word that signifies to perfect, finish, or put an end to a thing, because he finished the kingly government of the house of David. And although some put this name upon Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, making him that Shallum, yet others understand it of Jehoiachin, and it is most probable to be him, because (saith the text) he went forth out of his place, and was not to return thither any more; and so did none but Jehoiachin, who voluntarily yielded himself to Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxiv. 12. He was that Shallum that put an end to all the kings of Judah, and laid the royal glory in the dust, and turned the government to the priesthood, where it continued till Christ came and sat upon the throne himself.

5. His captivity was long and sore, thirty-seven years was he a prisoner in Babyloa, as appears 2 Kings xxv. 27. Others had there more liberty, they were not imprisoned, they had the benefit of the prophets, and the advantage of all the ordinances which were amongst them. Those they had to sweeten their captivity, with many outward comforts; whereas Jehoiachin lay in prison, and was deprived of them; his crown, throne, sceptre, kingdom, country, all were gone, and he is a captive imprisoned. A king, and a king of Judah, one that had lived so high, and been in such glory and great pomp, for him to lie in a prison, and in a prison in Babyloa, not a few, but twenty, almost forty years;

church of Christ is said to be a lily among thorns; a lily, and none growing near but thorns, that scratch, prick, and tear the church. Micah vii. 4. "The best of them is a brier, the most upright is sharper than a thorn-hedge;" the best of the wicked are briars and thorns one time or other. It is the lot of the godly to be among the Chaldeans while they live here in the world.

Obs. 6. See here, that God hath a special care of his church and people, when they are in the lowest and worst condition. What now is Jerusalem become? where is the glory of all the world? Now they are carried into captivity; now they are in a strange land, under a strange king and government; now they are deprived of all their sacrifices, and services of that nature; now they are imprisoned; now they are in danger of their liberties and lives every day. A heavy doom, to write a man childless, especially a noble, a royal family, when children are much desired by all, most by princes, that so the crown may not be alienated. Jeconiah is not written childless in regard he had not any child; for, ver. 28, it is said, "Wherefore have they cast out him and his seed?" He had seed, and yet was written childless. How is that? He was as one that had no seed; he was deprived of the benefit and comfort of his seed; in effect, he was a childless man, because his children were carried into captivity, and none of them did inherit the kingdom and succeed him in the throne; for it is said, ver. 30, "No man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah;" they died in captivity, and none of them did sway the sceptre of that kingdom.

But there is some objection lying against this; for in 1 Chron. iii. 17, Salathiel is said to be his son, and his son begotten in captivity, Matt. i. 12. If Salathiel be his son, and his son begotten in captivity, how then is this true that he was written childless?

You must know (for answer) that this in 1 Chron. and Matt. i. is spoken after the legal account; for Jeconiah, or Jehoiachin, having been thirty-seven years in captivity, (as you shall read afterward,) he had seen the death of his sons and daughters, his uncles and kindred, so that he had none left of his own loins, or any that were very near unto him, to declare to be his successor, and to inherit the crown; therefore having neither son, brother, uncle, nor kindred that were near unto him, he was as a man childless every way. Now Salathiel being his nearest kinsman alive, he declareth him to be heir to the crown, and to succeed him in the royal dignity, according to the order set down by God in case of the want of issue, Numb. xxvii. 8, 9, &c. And now this kinsman, in the legal sense, is said to be the son of Jehoiachin, that is, the successor of Jehoiachin; not that he was his natural son, come out of his loins; for, Luke iii. 27, Salathiel was the son of Neri, according to the natural line. Be it then according to the legal account, that Jehoiachin was his father, yet still it holds good, Jehoiachin was a man childless.

4. In this king was ended the glory and royal dignity of the house of David. It is true that Zedekiah reigned some years after him, but Zedekiah died before Jehoiachin: and in the genealogy of Christ, Jehoiachin is mentioned, not Zedekiah, neither is there mention of any more kings of Judah after him: he was the period of the book of the Kings, and he finished the line of the house of David. None out of his loins, nor out of any other loins, did sit upon the throne till Christ came. As for Zerubbabel, who was thought to be king, and to sit upon the throne after the captivity, it will appear he was no king; for the learned observe that he was rather a captain, duke or leader of the people, and was stirred up of God to further and finish the work of the temple, after which (the rabbins say) Zerubbabel returned into Babylon, and there died.

But if that be not sufficient to clear that he was no king, you may observe in Zech. vi. 11, that when two crowns were made, neither of them was set upon the head of Zerubbabel, but both were set upon the head of Joshua, the son of Josedech the high priest; showing that all the power was invested in the high priest, and translated from regal to pontifical. So that Jehoiachin was an unprosperous man, to lay the glory of the house of David, and of his own, in the dust. And hence that name is conceived likewise to be given him, Jer. xxii. 11. The name of Shallum, which cometh of a word that signifies to perfect, finish, or put an end שׁלם

to a thing, because he finished the kingly government of the house of David. And although some put this name upon Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, making him that Shallum, yet others understand it of Jehoiachin, and it is most probable to be him, because (saith the text) he went forth out of his place, and was not to return thither any more; and so did none but Jehoiachin, who voluntarily yielded himself to Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxiv. 12. He was that Shallum that put an end to all the kings of Judah, and laid the royal glory in the dust, and turned the government to the priesthood, where it continued till Christ came and sat upon the throne himself.

5. His captivity was long and sore, thirty-seven years was he a prisoner in Babylon, as appears 2 Kings xxv. 27. Others had there more liberty, they were not imprisoned, they had the benefit of the prophets, and the advantage of all the ordinances which were amongst them. Those they had to sweeten their captivity, with many outward comforts; whereas Jehoiachin lay in prison, and was deprived of them; his crown, throne, sceptre, kingdom, country, all were gone, and he is a captive imprisoned. A king, and a king of Judah, one that had lived so high, and been in such glory and great power, for him to lie in a prison, and in a prison in Babylon, not a few, but twenty, almost forty years; this is a thing observable in this king, and sets forth the constancy of his misery. He was one of Josiah's posterity, and it is observed that the posterity of Josiah, who were kings of Judah, in twenty-three years were carried four times into captivity, whereas Josiah himself enjoyed thirty-one years in peace. And it appears thus: Jehoahaz, his son, reigned three months, and then was carried away by Pharaoh-nechoh king of Egypt, 2 Kings xxiii. 34; after him Eliakim or Jehoiakim, another son of Josiah, being made king, was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxiv. 1, twice, (as some observe,) and carried to Babylon; and then, if it were so, they were five times in captivity; but, howsoever, sure we are that in the eleventh year of his reign, Nebuchadnezzar came up against Jerusalem, and took Jehoiakim, "and bound him in fetters to carry him to Babylon," 2 Chron. xxxvi. 5, 6. After him Jehoiachin, of whom we are speaking, is set up, and reigneth three months and ten days, who being young and fearful, yieldeth himself to Nebuchadnezzar that besieged Jerusalem, and was carried away, together with many thousand others, into Babylon, 2 Kings xxiv. 10—12. After him Zedekiah his uncle, who reigned eleven years, and having broken his promise, violated his oath, and denying tribute to Nebuchadnezzar, is taken, his sons slain before his eyes, himself carried away to Babylon, and there he dieth, 2 Kings xxv. 7, &c.; and all this was within twenty-three years; for this Zedekiah reigned eleven years, and Eliakim or Jehoiakim eleven more, and the other two, three months apiece. From all this

Obs. 1. The different proceeding of God with kings that are good, and kings that are evil. Good kings, as David, Hezekiah, Jehoshaphat, Josiah, how precious are their names! how sweet are they! like an ointment poured out. How do they keep up the glory of their houses! They are not written childless, they are not written men that shall not prosper. God doth not brand them with any note of infamy, nor detract from their names. They are not carried into captivity. But for kings that are wicked, how doth the Lord proceed in his anger against them, and make their names to rot! See it in Ahaz, 2 Chron. xxviii. 22. God sets an emphasis, a star upon him, brands him with a note of disgrace for all men to observe that read his story; "This is that king Ahaz." What king was he? Even that king that in the "time of his distress did trespass yet more against the Lord;" that king that ruined himself and all Israel with him; that king that shook the foundation of church and state; "This is that king Ahaz." So Jeroboam is branded; he is seldom or never mentioned but this is added to his name, "he made Israel to sin." So Eliakim, a wicked king, had part of his name taken away; and here this Jehoiachin is called Jeconiah and Coniah, a broken idol, a vessel in which there is no pleasure, a man that must be written childless, a man that must be carried into captivity, and be imprisoned thirty-seven years. Good kings are the glory of the world, the glory of that state where they live; but these evil kings in Judah and Israel, their memory stinks, their names rot, their posterity is cut off, their houses fall to the dust, and they have a foundation of wrath for their issue, if they have any. Four times within the compass of twenty-three years, were they carried into captivity. God proceedeth against wicked kings to the third and fourth generation, for their idolatry and oppression, for the evils they countenance and maintain in their kingdoms, and in his worship.

Obs. 2. That afflictions are invalid to subdue cor-ruptions. Five years they had been now in captivity, and yet their corruptions were not mortified; all the hard things they had met withal, had not made them yield and stoop to God. Jeremias had been God's hammer to batter them in Jerusalem, in Sion, and God had exercised them five years with his wrath in Babylon, and yet their iron, adamantine hearts were not broken; but Ezekiel must be stirred up now in the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, a prophet that must be the strength of God to break them, that must lay on load and not spare. You see then that afflictions of themselves do not kill corruptions, they do not break the principle of stubbornness and strength of rebellion that is in the hearts of men and women. Nay, sometimes it proveth so, that afflictions make us the worse, 2 Chron. xxviii. 22; like waters, being restrained they swell higher, and threaten heaven itself; so corruptions, being restrained, they swell and threaten the ruin of states, families, of souls and bodies to all eternity. Isa. i. 5, "Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more." Let God come with a plague to a city, with a sword to a sinful nation; let God come with any judgment; the judgments themselves will never do us good, unless there be something added to the judgments, unless they be sanctified to us: our proud, stubborn hearts, our vile natures, will stand it out against God, even when the sword is in his hand.

"Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi." We are now to come to the subject of the vision, set down in the first verse indefinitely, "I," in the third specially, "Ezekiel," described from his office, "a priest," and from his parentage, "the son of Buzi." Josephus and some others, conceive the time of Ezekiel's transmigration to be in Jehoiakim's days, but others make it to be in the days of Jehoiachin the son of Jehoiakim, when he and so many thousands were carried away by Nebuchadnezzar into Babylon, 2 Kings xxiv. 10—12. Then was Daniel, Mordecai, the three children likewise, and Ezekiel, carried into captivity, as sundry affirm. And that he was then carried into captivity, is evident from the text itself; for in the 40th chapter of this prophecy, ver. 1, it is said, "In the twenty-fifth year of our captivity:" he joineth himself, and doth not say, their, but, our captivity, and therefore was then brought into Babylon, when Jeconiah was, and from that time began the captivity, and the reckoning of the seventy years. Now he began to prophesy in the fifth year of the captivity, thirty-four years after Jeremias, who began in the thirteenth year of Josiah, Jer. i. 2, and had prophesied long, but done little good amongst them, they were so obstinate in his days. God stirreth up Ezekiel, and sets him to work, and he prophesieth twenty-two years, as we may gather out of his own prophecy, chap. xxix. 17, "In the twenty-seventh year the word of the Lord came unto me." It was five years before he began to prophesy, and twenty-two years after we hear of his prophesying. He might prophesy longer, but we find it not recorded in holy writ.

If it be demanded, What became of this prophet Ezekiel? Antiquity tells us that his end was very lamentable, and yet like a prophet's; for usually the prophets came to untimely deaths. Adrichomius saith, he was torn in pieces with horses. Athanasius tells us, he was killed for the people's Lib. de Incarn. Verbi. sake. Epiphanius relates that he was slain by the ruler of the people for reproving his idolatry. Chrysostome, in his 46th Homily upon Matt. xxiii. and those words, "O Jerusalem, thou that slayest the prophets," &c. saith thus, "O Jerusalem, I have sent to thee Isaiah the prophet, and thou hast sawn him asunder; I have sent thee Jeremiah, and thou hast stoned him to death; I have sent to thee Ezekiel, and by dragging him amongst the stones, thou hast dashed out his brains." All agree in this, that Ezekiel came to an untimely and bloody end, and so did most of the prophets and apostles. Whatever men's ends were in killing the prophets, God had other ends; that by their blood and death, the doctrine they delivered, being sealed, might pass the better; that none should look for great matters here in this world when such great worthies were so ill entreated; that men might be stirred up by their example, to stand for the truth unto the death; that it might be a demonstration of the judgment to come, seeing they were used so hardly here. Surely it follows then that there is a time wherein God will call over things again, and recompense the sufferings of his prophets, and be avenged on those that had done them such wrong. God had such ends as these. Hence, Obs. 1. The wisdom of God, that touching the lives and deaths of the prophets and apostles, speaks little. There is not much said in the Scripture touching them; and why? Lest we should attribute too much to them, and too little to God. We are apt to look at the pen, rather than at him that made the pen, puts in the ink, and writes with it. We look at the instrument, and neglect the principal agent. Since the lives and deaths of martyrs and holy men came into request, God hath lost too much of the honour that hath been due unto him; creatures have had it.

Obs. 2. See here the ingratitude of the people, that do not only kick, but kill their prophets, not only mock, but murder their prophets. Isaiah is sawn asunder, Jeremiah stoned, Ezekiel's brains are dashed out. Oh the ingratitude of the sons of men, that do thus requite God for the prophets he sends to them, that break the earthen vessels for bringing them heavenly treasures in them!

"Ezekiel the priest." He was both of the prophetic and priestly dignity, which was not common, very few of the prophets had this honour.

קָרָן keran. The Hebrew word is, a Sacrificer; the Greek signifieth as much: one that meddleth with holy things, that offereth sacrifice for sin. Priests were of high account, both among the Jews and gentiles. Among the Jews, great was the honour the high priest had; and the inferior priests had their honour likewise; none might take this honour to himself, but he that was called of God, as was Aaron, Heb. v. 4. They had the charge and command of the sanctuary, and of all things that did appertain to the house of God. The Jews and their rabbins tell us, that there were twenty-four several sorts of gifts appointed of God for the priests, all which are set down in their law expressly, and are mentioned by Mr. Ainsworth, upon Numb. xviii. xix. Among the heathens also they were very honourable; Potipherah was a priest of On; the Chaldee saith, prince of On, because though a priest, yet he had princely dignity.

The priesthood, you know, was entailed upon the tribe of Levi, and it is very observable what was the occasion of it, Exod. xxxii. When the people had sinned in idolatry, and grew seditious and tumultuous, Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, "Who is on the Lord's side? Let him come unto me." Whereupon all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him, with their swords by their sides, and presently executed the commands and counsel of Moses, and slew every man his brother, companion, neighbour, ver. 27. They were one of the least, if not the very least: tribe of all the twelve; yet were they not fearful, or backward unto this work, but ventured themselves among the people, showing great faith and zeal to vindicate religion and the glory of God. This fact and forwardness of theirs was so well taken of God, that it brought a choice blessing upon them and theirs, God fully rewarded them for it: for whereas a curse was threatened against Levi, Gen. xlix. 7, "I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel;" yet this curse was turned into a blessing, and they are exalted to be near the Lord in the holy things of the temple that did appertain to his worship and service. For after they had finished that execution upon the people, the text saith, ver. 29, that Moses said to them, "Consecrate yourselves to-day to the Lord, because every man hath been against his son, and against his brother, that the Lord may bestow upon you a blessing this day;" and thereupon they were taken into the place of the first-born, (that did all before,) and had the priesthood settled upon their tribe, together with a choice blessing, which is recorded, Dent. xxxiii. 8—11. "And of Levi he said, Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one.—Bless, Lord, his substance, and accept the work of his hands: smite through the loins of them that rise against him, and of them that hate him, that they rise not again." Here was the occasion of Levi's being taken into the priesthood, and to serve with God, and to serve for ever.

From hence take this note, which is very considerable: That it is good to appear in the cause of God, and to be forward to vindicate his honour and glory, to stand for him and his people. It is good to vindicate God when he suffereth in his worship, in his servants, in his cause any way. The tribe of Levi was forward to vindicate God, and God rewarded them, they had a blessing that day. So Phinehas was zealous for God; Numb. xxv. 11—13, "Phinehas," saith God, "hath turned away my wrath from the children of Israel, while he was zealous for my sake among them.—Wherefore say, Behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace: and he shall have it, and his seed after him, even the covenant of an everlasting priesthood; because he was zealous for his God." If we shall appear in God's cause, and venture ourselves in his quarrel, we shall never lose by it. Peter was a man forward, he put forth himself for Christ, he would be first speaking: when Christ had said, "Whom do you say that I am?" saith he, "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God." And presently Christ fastened a blessing upon him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-Jonas, flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee. Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church." Men that go upon good grounds, and will lift up God's sabbaths, worship, honour, out of the dust, though they do hazard lives, estates, or limbs, God will remember it, and they shall be recompensed. You shall find in Judges v. 18, that "Zebulun and Naphtali were a people that jeoparded their lives unto death in the high places of the field." They went forth, and stood for God and his people against Jabin and Sisera that came against Israel, and threatened ruin: and, in Matt. iv. 13—15, when Christ cometh, he preacheth the gospel first to them; God remembereth their kindness, and rewardeth it, though it were long before. So you may lay the foundation of a mercy for your posterities a hundred years hence. This should put us on to appear in the cause of God, whensoever we see idolaters, and the enemies of God, lift up their heads, and strike at truths, and God in his ordinances and servants. Put forth yourselves, God will remember you, though you jeopard your very lives.

“The son of Buzi.” Ezekiel was neither the servant nor the son of Jeremiah, as some have fancied, but “the son of Buzi.” This Buzi was a prophet, if the rule of Jerom and the rabbins be true. Jerom Filius prophetae saith, when a prophet nameth his parentage in the beginning of his prophecy, it is to affirm that he was the son of a prophet; and so say the rabbins likewise, That man was a prophet, whom the Scriptures set down to be the father of a prophet. Then Buzi here, who was the father of Ezekiel a prophet, by these rules was a prophet himself. But this is the voice of men, not of Heaven.

His name signifieth contempt, disgrace, a man contemned, scorned, despised in the times and places where he liveth. You may hence Obs. 1. That the prophets and ministers of God have always been subject to derision and scorn. Isa. viii. 18, “I and my children are for signs and wonders in Israel.” If the vine do bear such ill fruit, what then doth the thorn bear! If there be mocking and scorning of the prophets in Israel, what reproaches, what taunts and bitter sarcasms will there be then in Babylon! 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, “They mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets;” they counted them teachers of lies, false prophets, sceditious, factious, such as delivered strange doctrines, plotted treasons, &c.; nothing was too vile, too bad to lay upon the prophets and the sons of the prophets. Zedekiah smote good Micaiah on the cheek, and saith he, “Which way went the Spirit of the Lord from me to speak unto thee?” 1 Kings xxii. 24. Thou fool, thou silly man, thou madman, thou false fellow, thou deceiver of the king and people, “which way went the Spirit of God from me to thee?” and so smites him on the cheek. Now to smite on the Signum maxime ignominie. cheek was a proverbial speech among the Hebrews, and it was a sign of the greatest disgrace that could be done to any. This was the condition of the prophets, while they were here in the world; and also of the apostles, “We are made as the filth of the world, and off-scouring of all things to this day,” 1 Cor. iv. 13. Paul, a great scholar, full of the Holy Ghost, called by an extraordinary way, yet he saith of himself, and the rest of the apostles, that they were counted as the off-scouring of all things; men get up all every ωσπερ αβριπιστα. where, on every side, so the word carries it. The men of the world were like unto a man that raked every where to get a basket of filth, dirt, and dung to throw in some one’s face; so they serape in the doctrines, lives, and passages of the servants of God, catch at all advantages, seek every where to pick up something, that they may have wherewithal to upbraid, reproach and revile them; and we are made as the very filth and dung upon the face of the earth. Was not Huss, that worthy of God, so counted? When the prelate (who had the power of ordering things) had put a paper crown on his head with three ugly-shaped devils upon it, and this title over their heads, Heresiarcha, here is the diabolical heretic, that great heretic that hath three devils in him; and when they sent him away to the stake with this farewell, Go thy ways, we commit thy soul to the devil; was not here a man made the filth of the world? Even such mockings, such dealings, such doings must the servants of God look for while they are here. They are the sons of Buzi, they are Buzies indeed, men of contempt and scorn among wicked and vile men.

Obs. 2. That whom the world contemneth, God will honour. Here is a Buzi, a man of contempt in the world, but God giveth him a son, and a son who is a prophet, and a son whose name is recorded in Scripture, together with his own, all honourable things. Hannah was scorned, reproached by Peninnah, but God giveth her a Samuel, and honoureth her with the motherhood of such a son. Joseph was thrown out by his brethren, cast into the pit, sold to Potiphar, put into prison, but God did lift him up in Egypt, and set him almost in the throne, made him the next man to the king himself. Christ was the stone disallowed and rejected by the builders, even the master-builders, the great ones, the rabbies, the pharisees; but God makes him the chief corner stone, God sets him up on high. This is for the comfort of those that are godly and thrown out by the world; God will take them up and put honour upon them in a way they know not of.

From the subject we come to the things which fell out, with the author of them, and they are these:

1. Heaven is opened.

2. Visions are presented.

3. They are seen of Ezekiel.

4. The author of them is specified, “Visions of God.”

“The heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God.” The word opening, among the Jews, denotes sometimes not the reality, but the effect of a thing. Gen. iii. 7, “Their eyes were opened;” they were not shut before, but now they saw that which they saw not before, and so their eyes are said to be opened. In the gospel, Christ is said to open the eyes of the blind, the ears and mouth of the deaf and dumb; not that their mouths were absolutely shut, or their ears absolutely stopped, or their eyes so closed that they could not stir their eye-lids; but Christ opened them so, as he made them to see, hear, and speak, to do that which they could not do before; so that in regard of the effect they are said to be opened. Sometimes again it denoteth the truth of a thing; and so Stephen saw heaven opened, and Christ standing at the right hand of God; and Peter saw heaven opened, and a sheet coming down to him.

The question is, whether of these ways it is to be taken here? Origen saith, That the heavens were open to the eyes of his body, there was a division of the heavens, and so in a literal sense he saw the visions, and the things presented to him; but Jerom saith, The heavens Non divisione firmamenti, sed hinc creduis. were opened, not by the rending of the firmament, but by the faith of the believer. You may take it in the literal sense, and according to the truth of the thing. The inconvenience objected against it is not considerable: for it is said, if the heavens were literally opened, how could Ezekiel see so far, as to see things in heaven? the strength of his eyes could not reach it; for if the sun, and fixed stars which are far above the sun, are greater bodies than the earth, and seem so little unto us, how little would any thing in heaven seem to the eye, when it is exceedingly beyond both these?

Answe. The heavens being opened, it doth not follow that Ezekiel must see the visions in heaven; the things he saw might be nearer than the stars or sun. The dove came down and lighted upon Christ, and the sheet was let down from heaven unto Peter; and so the visions might be nearer unto Ezekiel than the highest heavens. “The heavens were opened, and he saw visions of God;” it is not said that he saw visions in heaven. And grant it to be heaven, Stephen saw Christ there, and so might Ezekiel see the object of his vision there: yet neither did Stephen by his natural strength see Christ, nor Ezekiel these visions, but he that opened heaven did open their eyes, strengthened them to see at such a distance. Or, secondly, you may take it effectively, that it was done to the eye of faith; as if heaven had been opened. A thing is said to be opened when that is removed which hinders coming at the thing shut up. "The seven seals were loosed," Rev. v. then was the book opened. When the shutters of the window are turned aside, that the eye can come at the light, then the window is open, the impediments are taken away. And heaven is open, when all lets being set aside, God causeth the eyes of his to see divine visions, or reveals divine mysteries unto them, as if heaven were open; and this is the way most peculiar to the servants of God. "Hereafter," saith Christ, "you shall see heaven opened, and the angels ascending and descending upon the Son of man." The angels are not corporeal, they cleave not the heavens asunder in their descent or ascent, that is not the meaning; but the spirit of the text is this, the impediments should be taken away from their minds, they should be so enlightened with the glory of the gospel, they should see, as it were, even angels come down and minister unto Christ: they should, as the expression is, 2 Cor. iii. 18, "with open face behold as in a glass the glory of God." see heaven opened in Christ, and the angels descending upon the Son of man. And so did Ezekiel see heaven opened.

Obs. 1. The key of heaven is in the hand of God; he openeth heaven at his pleasure, and letteth out and in what parties and things he pleaseth. Angels, visions, and other things he lets out; he openeth heaven, and letteth in your prayers, your tears, your souls at his season. The key of the grave, the key of the womb, the key of the clouds, the key of hell is in the hand of God, and he turns them at his pleasure; but above all, the key of heaven is in the hand of God. He is Lord Chamberlain, there is none goeth out, nor comes in, till God himself turns the key. If you would have mercies, you must look up to God for them, and desire him to turn the key. Rev. iii. 7, he is said to "have the key of David, he opens and none can shut, he shuts and none can open." A key denotes power, and the key of David, chief power in the house, in the kingdom: where that key is, there is the greatest power. God hath that key in his hand, the key of David, all power to open and shut heaven when he will; he can open your hearts at his pleasure, he can open texts at his pleasure, he can open dark things unto you; therefore seeing all power is in the hand of God, look up to him for mercies, and desire him to turn the key for your good and his glory.

Obs. 2. That God doth great things for those that are truly godly, that are true believers. Heaven is opened for them, and only for them.

We do not read in the book of God, that heaven was ever opened for any wicked man: wickedness shutteth up heaven; godliness hath the privilege; to the godly heaven is opened. To Christ it was opened, Matt. iii. 16. To Stephen, Acts vii. 56. To Peter it was opened, Acts x. 11. To John it was opened, Rev. iv. 1; xix. 11. And it is opened to Ezekiel here in the text: "I saw heaven opened." It is shut against others; wicked men shall never see it open in mercy: the judgment at last shall not be in heaven, but in the air, or on the earth. It is the privilege of believers to have choice mercies.

Great things God will do for them, that the world shall have no share in. It was the godly that saw Christ after the resurrection, and not any wicked man. It was for believers that Christ prayed, and not for the world, John xvii. It is for the heirs of salvation that the angels are sent forth to be ministering spirits unto, Heb. i. And it is for the faithful the heavens are opened, that they may see what the glory of their Father's house is, into what a family they shall ere long be received. This sets out the excellency of faith unto us; for as it is a hand to receive Christ and his benefits, a mouth to eat his flesh, and drink his blood; so it is an eye to see into heaven, and the eye for which heaven is opened.

"I saw visions of God." God hath manifested himself unto his prophets several ways.

1. By speaking immediately unto them without interposition of any medium, even mouth to mouth, and face to face. So he spake to Adam in paradise; to Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 11, "The Lord spake to Moses face to face, as a man speaks to his friend." This manner of God's manifesting himself was peculiar to Moses above any, or all the prophets besides, as you may read, Deut. xxxiv. 10.

2. God manifested himself to his people by dreams, which was in the night season: there was some representation of something unto them when they were asleep. Thus God manifested himself to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 12. And Jacob saith, Gen. xxxi. 11, that "the Angel of God spake unto him in a dream."

3. God hath manifested himself to his people by visions; Psa. lxxxix. 19, "Thou spakest in vision to thy holy one." And Gen. xv. 1, "The word of the Lord came unto Abraham in a vision." These three you have together in two verses, Numb. xii. and part of the 8th, "If there be a prophet among you, I the Lord will make myself known to him in a vision, and speak to him in a dream; and to Moses will I speak mouth to mouth." Here in the text it is by way of vision that God speaks or appears unto Ezekiel; "I saw visions of God."

In a vision there are these things:

1. There is some species or similitude represented to the sight, whether it be to the eye of the body externally, or to the eye of the mind internally, always something is represented to the eye.

2. A vision of something that is future, whether at some little distance, or very remote. Hence it is that vision is put for prophecy, Isa. i. 1.

3. In a vision there is always such an irradiation of the mind, such divine, satisfying, overpowering, strong light, that the party who hath the vision is put out of all doubt and dispute concerning the truth of the thing he hath seen, or is represented.

4. There is in a vision a strong impulse upon the spirit of the party to do that which is the mind of God concerning that vision. Moller, Psa. lxxxix. 30.

5. It is when they are awake. God speaks to men by dreams in the dark when they are asleep, but usually visions are when men are awake.

All these are found here in the prophet Ezekiel's vision:

1. There are representations of divers things to him: he was an hieroglyphical prophet, he had more things presented unto him of that nature than any prophet besides: all that followeth here in this chapter are representations of things to Ezekiel in this vision.

2. It is of things to come: for this prophecy being either of the ruin of Jerusalem, or of the state of the church, still it was of that which was not present but future.

3. The prophet he had strong enlightenings, he had such irradiations of his mind that he was satisfied touching the thing, therefore he saith, "The word of the Lord came expressly unto him," the hand of the Lord came upon him in a great deal of strength.

4. He had a mighty impulse; though he was backward, unwilling to go on in the work of God, yet the Spirit came upon him with power, and put him on.

And lastly, it was when he was awake, walking up and down by the river Chebar, there he had these visions.

Thus much for the nature of a vision. Now these visions were visions of God; "I saw visions of God." Not that he saw God oft, and so every sight of God made a new vision, (for no man can see God and live,) but visions revealed to him by God, which did in some measure set out the glory and majesty of God; and so they are called visions of God.

Or visions of God by way of opposition and exclusion, thus; "I saw visions of God," I had divine visions, not Satanical delusions, (for Satan hath his prophets, and they have their visions whereby they delude the world,) not dreams and conceits of mine own; no angel, no devil, no dream, no fancy of mine presented them unto me, but they were prophetic visions, such as God himself hath presented.

Or visions of God, lastly, in regard of the eminency of them. "I saw visions of God," that is, choice, rare, difficult, transcendent visions. Things that excel, in Scripture phrase, usually are said to be things of God; as, the mountains of God, the cedars of God, the city of God; as you may read, Psa. xxxvi. 6; lxxx. 10; Jonah iii. 3.

1. Observe here the certainty of the things contained in this prophet. He doth not say, I heard, but, "I saw visions of God." The sense of sight is the most certain, most active, most discerning, most evidential of all the senses. Therefore, I John i. 1, 3, "That which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon,—we declare unto you." There was certainty in that which they saw. One eyewitness is more than ten hearsays, than ten ear-witnesses. Thales being asked the question, How much truth should differ from a lie? Quantum oculis ab auribus. answered, As much as the eyes differ from the ears; intimating, that what you hear may be false, but what you see, that is certain. The prophet here saw "visions of God," to show the certainty of these visions, and so of the whole Scriptures, which are "visions of God."

Obs. 2. See here the dignity of these visions; they are "visions of God," such as are great, glorious, transcendent things. Men's words, works, things are mean, poor, and worthless; but the things, the "visions of God," are so high, so excellent, that few can reach them, they are beyond the apprehensions of ordinary men: yea, the prophets themselves did not see all that was in those visions God did vouchsafe unto them. This shows, the things of God have transcendency in them, are of great authority, and challenge answerable esteem. These are "visions of God," and must, with all Scripture, be valued accordingly. Hence the ancients have called the Scriptures, an epistle of God sent from heaven to the sons of men. Therefore in them is nothing impertinent, or empty, but all in them is glorious, full of sense, mysteries, and spirit. This strengthens the authority of Scripture, that our faith may not stagger at all, but be confident, and build upon them, as visions and truths of God.

Obs. 3. See here, that when God beginneth once to let out mercy to his servants, he stints not presently, but proceeds; I saw not one vision, but "I saw visions of God," he had many choice ones. It was kindness that Ezekiel had such a name, The strength of God; it was kindness that the Lord would open heaven to him; it had been great kindness if he had seen but one vision; but for Ezekiel to have heaven opened, and to see visions of God, many visions, one after another, this sheweth the great kindness of God. When Rachel had her first son, she called his name Joseph, which signifieth adding, or increase: for she said, "The Lord shall add to me another son," Gen. xxx. 24; now God hath begun to show kindness, he shall not only give me this, but he shall give me another son also. When the Lord hath bestowed one mercy on you, you may name it Joseph, increase, addition, for God will bestow another upon you. Abraham had many mercies from God, one after another; and Moses, a multitude of mercies; he converseth with God face to face, he heareth God speak, he hath God's presence to go along with him; yea, he seeth all God's goodness and glory to pass before him. When mercies come forth, God will not presently shut the door of mercy again. Heaven is opened, visions are presented one after another. Psa. xxxv. 10, "Continue thy loving-kindness;" the Hebrew is, draw forth, or draw out thy loving-kindness; a metaphor either taken from vessels of wine, which being set abroach once, yield not only one cup, but many cups; so when God setteth abroach the wine of his mercy, he will not fill your cup once, but twice and seven times: or, taken from a mother, who hath her breasts full of milk, draws them out for her child, not once, but often; the child shall have the breast many times in the day, and many times in the night; so when God beginneth to show mercy to you, he will draw out his breasts of consolation, and will bestow mercy after mercy upon you: or, from a line which is extended; for so God being in a way of mercy, will extend the line of mercy, and measure out mercy after mercy for you. Is not heaven opened? Do you not see visions of God this day? How often is heaven opened in this city in a week! How many visions have you from the prophets! What manifestations of truths are there! what discoveries of the mind and will of God to your souls are there in these days! "I saw visions of God," saith Ezekiel, and so may you.

"The word of the Lord came expressly." The Hebrew is emphatical, הוֹרֵהוּ עָלַי Essendo factum, omnino factum factum est. the word of the Lord by being, hath been, or, hath altogether been, had much being in me. Besides the visions I saw, there was a real communication of truths to my understanding; evident and express commands from God came unto me, and it came so, as it had entrance and abiding in me: Accurate factum est, there was an accurate and real work of it upon me, and in me. Prov. iii. 21, "Keep sound wisdom;" the word for sound wisdom in the original is, that which is essence or being; intimating, הוֹרֵהוּ that all other things are nothing; and "the Word of God," that only hath substance and being in it, making substantial where it comes. And so here, it gave being, and was an ingrafted word in the soul and heart of the prophet; so that the meaning is, the word came with that evidence and clearness unto me, that I could not withstand it, it had such entity and substance in it, that it made me of a common man a prophet.

"And the hand of the Lord was there upon me." The hand of the Lord is taken in two senses, especially in Scripture:

1. For judgment, or punishment; so you have it, Acts xiii. 11. Speaking of Elymas the sorcerer, saith Paul, "The hand of the Lord shall be upon thee, and thou shalt be blind;" God's hand was upon Elymas, and he was stricken blind for perverting the deputy. In this sense it is not taken here.

2. The hand of the Lord is taken for prophecy. When the Lord doth come upon the sons of men, and stirs up their spirits to prophesy, that is the hand of the Lord.

But yet this is not all: it denoteth the virtue and power of the Spirit of God which came upon the prophet, not shaking, disturbing, and throwing of him down, as some rabbies conceive, but changing, comforting, elevating, and exciting the spirit of the prophet to see divine mysteries; and denotes also, that efficacy and power which set on the word upon the heart and conscience of the prophet; that power which subdued all opposition and carnal reasonings, and removed all impediments, whatsoever stuck upon the heart of the prophet, and hindered him in that work which God would have him to undertake. It is this hand of the Lord that makes the word mighty, spiritual, lively, according to that in Heb. iv. 12. The prophet felt the intrinsic virtue of this hand, the Spirit of God in his own heart; it was a quick and lively word unto him. This intrinsic virtue of the Spirit, if it reached not the prophet's hearers, yet it abode in the prophecy, and it remains an efficacious prophecy to this day. It is worth inquisition, what the virtue of the Spirit is, expressed here by the hand of God.

There are three things in it: the hand is,

1. Symbolum roboris.

2. Index veritatis.

3. Instrumentum operationis.

1. The hand is symbolum roboris, the type or emblem of strength; therefore of a strong man we say, he is a man of his hands, that is the symbol of his strength. So the Spirit of God is a Spirit of strength: the hand of God notes the strength of God, and the Holy Ghost is the power and strength of God; Luke i. 35, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee:" and, "Greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world." The Spirit of God that is in the hearts of his children, he is of more strength than Beelzebub, the prince of devils, and god of this world.

2. The hand is index veritatis, the discoverer of truth. The hand or finger doth show a thing. If you would have a man go this way or that way, you show him or point him with the finger, you direct him with your hand. Solomon, Prov. vi. 13, speaking of the wicked man, saith, "He teacheth with his fingers;" that is, he shows others by his hand to do wickedly. The Spirit of God is index veritatis, this hand of God doth show you the truth: John xvi. 13, 14, "He shall show you," saith Christ, "things to come, he shall take of mine, and show it unto you." It is the Spirit of Christ, this hand of God, that showeth you all things. You will never know truths till this hand point to them, and teach you. You may have notions in your head, and guessings in your spirits and bosoms, but the reality and certainty of things will never be attained to, till the Spirit of God acquaint you with them.

3. The hand is instrumentum operationis, the instrument of action. Men do all by the hand, therefore it is called the organ of organs by the philosopher. So it is the Spirit of God that doth all: Zech. iv. 6, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit:" I will do all by that, saith God. It is the Spirit of God that doth convince: it is the Spirit that converts; it is the Spirit that dictates to and inspires godly men; it is the Spirit that sanctifies; it is the Spirit that leads into truth, that comforts; the Spirit is the great agent, the hand of God by which God doth all his works. It was the Spirit that moved upon the face of the waters at first; the Spirit of God was the agent in the work of creation, and the great agent in the work of redemption and salvation.

These phrases being thus opened, observe hence:

1. That the prophet received what he delivered to them from God; "The hand of the Lord was there upon me; and the word of the Lord came expressly." The prophets must deliver to the people what they receive from God, and not what they bring of themselves. They must not bring their own visions, their own conceits, what seemeth good in their own eyes; but they must bring the word of the Lord to the people. They must not speak according to the humours of the people, as they move them, as they would have them, but they must speak as the Spirit of God moves them, as God will have them. 2 Pet. i. 21, "The holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." And Paul saith, 1 Cor. xi. 23, "What I have received of the Lord, that I deliver unto you;" he would not deliver any thing he had from the world, or from himself, but, "what I received from the Lord, that I deliver unto you." Ministers are God's seedsmen, and they must have their seed from God, else they will sow tares.

Obs. 2. It is of much concernment for ministers to see they have a good and clear call to their ministry. Ezekiel here stands much upon it; "I saw heaven opened, I saw visions of God, and the word of the Lord came expressly to me, and the hand of the Lord was there upon me." Here were strong evidences of his call to the work he was to go about. Ministers are to be the mouth of God to the people, and the mouth of the people to God: both are weighty businesses; they deal about the eternal truths of the eternal God, your immortal souls, and the everlasting condition of them. The glory of God is concredited in a great measure unto them: the great things of the kingdom of Christ are put into their hands, to dispense as God shall move, and give them opportunity. Had they not need therefore to see to it, that their call be right, and to make it out strongly and clearly, that God hath sent them? If they can clear it up that God hath sent them, they may expect his assistance, his blessing, his protection, and success in their labours. However things prove, this will be their comfort in the midst of opposition, reproach, persecution, hazard of liberty and lives; I was called of God, I am in his work, in his way, he brought me into his vineyard, he will stand by me, I will go on, let him do with me what he pleaseth. The clearness of a man's call will add much comfort to a man's spirit in a black day: it makes him conscientious, pitiful, and painful. A minister's call being evident, the people's consciences will be satisfied, will receive his doctrine; then will they look upon him as their pastor and teacher, reverence him for his work's sake, and are likely to receive much good by him. Whereas otherwise, if the calling of ministers reach no higher than a patron or prelate, there is seldom any good comes either to ministers or people. Therefore it concerns them to look narrowly to it, that their calling be of God, clear and strong to themselves, else they cannot make it out to others; neither shall find that comfort, nor do that good which otherwise they might.

Obs. 3. That in corrupt times, when religion, the church, and God's glory are greatly endangered, God then takes care to raise up some extraordinary servants to vindicate his truth, his people, his glory. All was brought now to a desolate condition; false prophets prevailed, religion suffered, God's honour was low; and now God takes Ezekiel, that was one of the ordinary priests before, and bestows a larger measure of his Spirit upon him, and raiseth him up to be a prophet, and sets him a work, to do great things in Babylon. Though now men be not called immediately by the voice of God and Christ, as of old, yet

By extraordinary instincts and motions of God's Spirit, they were heretofore, and are still put upon great services. Philip was a deacon by his ordinary calling, but by extraordinary instinct and hints of God's Spirit, he was raised up to be an evangelist, and to do greater service unto the church of God. So Luther, that was a friar at first, by extraordinary instinct of God's Spirit, was raised up to purge errors out of the church, and to glorify God, especially in clearing the doctrine of justification by free grace. So Zuinglius, Wickliffe, and others in our days. God hath not left himself without witness at this day, he hath stirred up the spirits of some to do him great and extraordinary services.

Obs. 4. That those ministers are fittest to speak to the people, that find the word of God to have being in them. "The word of the Lord came expressly to me;" the word of the Lord had being in him, was ingrafted in him. When the word is a word of being in our hearts, then it will be a word of power in your consciences. That which comes from our hearts, will reach to yours, and will be effectual in you; otherwise the word is but an empty sound, it cometh from the teeth outward, and reacheth but to your ears, and seldom goeth down into your souls.

Obs. 5. Take this note, That there are principles of opposition in the dearest servants of God to the work of his Spirit. It is said, "The hand of the Lord came upon me;" invaded me, so some render it. I stood out against God, I had my carnal reasonings, I had stubbornness and opposition in my will; I said there was a lion in the way, and I pleaded hard against this work and service. But the Spirit of God came upon me, came mightily upon me, came with a strong hand upon me, as he saith; came so upon me, that it subdued all my carnal reasonings, subdued the stubbornness of my will, removed all my shifts and pretences, and brought me off to go about the work of God. Is it not thus with most christians? when you would pray, when you would do good, is not evil present with you? But when the Spirit of God cometh upon you, it will overcome that indisposition, that sluggishness, that opposition; it will work down distempers, and frame you sweetly to go about the work of God, as it did Ezekiel.

Obs. 6. That the word and ordinances of it, that visions and revelations, do the heart of man real good, when divine virtue goes along with them, otherwise not. What if Ezekiel had seen never so many visions? what if God had spoken never so expressly unto him? unless the hand of God had been upon him too; unless the Spirit of God had improved those visions, and ingrafted those words in him, all had been as an empty sound, all had been as mere shadows and sights to him. But when the Spirit of God goes along, then there is efficacy and benefit in any ordinance. Take away the Spirit from the word and ordinances of God, and they will be but dry bones, without meat or marrow: take the gospel, which is called the ministration of the Spirit; if the Spirit be not in it, the choicest promises, the sweetest truths there, what are they? they are literæ damnatoriae, and leges mortis, they are letters and laws of death to the soul. When the hand of the Lord is upon an ordinance, and upon a man in that ordinance, then is there good gotten, and then doth the soul gain; 2 Cor. x. 4, "Our weapons are mighty through God."

Obs. 7. That all spiritual good received and done by the saints, is from the operation of God's Spirit, which therefore is called God's hand. Luke xi. 20, "If I by the finger or hand of God cast out devils;" this finger, Matt. xii. 28, is called the Spirit of God; "If I by the Spirit of God cast out devils." That which is called finger in one, is called the Spirit in the other. Now do men receive any good? have you faith? have you love, patience, meekness, understanding, zeal, godliness, any, all graces? It is this hand of God that hath wrought them. Do you any divine good unto others? It is this Spirit of God that works by you, and enableth you to do that good. Acts vi. 10, "They were not able to resist the wisdom and spirit by which he spake." Stephen spake by the Spirit of God. If you hear, if any good be done, or received, it is from the Spirit, which is the hand of God. Therefore you should know to whom to give the glory and honour of all your receipts, and of all your actions.

Obs. 8. Note here, That the messengers of God should come not only with the word of God, but also with the hand of God; they should bring his truths and his Spirit. The word of the Lord came expressly to Ezekiel, and the hand of the Lord was upon him. It is needful that ministers come not only with law and gospel, with the word of God, but that they come with the very hand, even the Spirit and power of God; for all the efficacy and good done, is by the Spirit. If a minister come and bring the letter only without the Spirit, what evidence will there be to his own soul, of the certainty of those things whereof he speaks? How will he be able to see into the spiritualness of them, to know that they are of God, and that they are to be commended to the people in the name of God, when he wants the Spirit of God to discern them himself? What prevalency can there be in the hearts of hearers, when the minister comes not with demonstration of the Spirit? What bottom is there for the faith of men, where there is the wisdom of words, without the power of the Spirit? The hearers get most good when God's letters come to them with his seal, evidencing they are his letters. Hence saith Paul, 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5, "My preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and of power, that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." Then doth the faith of hearers stand in the power of God, when the ministers come with evidence and demonstration of the Spirit of God.

Last of all, From these three verses generally considered, observe, That when God's servants are in deep afflictions, then are usually brought in the sweetest consolations. Here is Ezekiel taken out of his own country, deprived of his estate and friends, of the temple, of God's ordinances and solemn assemblies, and of all the sweet and good that Jerusalem afforded; he is brought into Babylon now, he is a captive there; he is solitary now by the river side; he was in a distressed and forlorn condition. What man here would be in Babylon now, and not think himself very miserable? When Ezekiel was in this condition, heaven is opened, visions are seen, God speaks expressly unto him, the hand of the Lord is there upon him. So that you may see, when we are in deep afflictions, many times God cometh in with his sweetest consolations. Gen. xv. 1, Abraham in the chapter before had gotten a victory, and rescued Lot his brother's son out of the hands of sundry kings; and being come home, he falleth into a shaking fit, and is filled with fear lest those kings should reinforce their strength, come upon him and his, and destroy all. While he is in this agony, God cometh to him; "Fear not, Abraham, I am thy shield and exceeding great reward." God came in his deep distress, and brought in a sweet refreshing to his soul. Elijah, that great prophet and worthy servant of God, after he made a sacrifice of Baal's priests, and Jezebel sought after him to slay him, and had vowed that he should die the death, if there were no more men in the world, he was forced to fly for his life, and he lieth into the wilderness, 1 Kings xix. And there was a great famine, neither bed nor bread he had there, and whither to go he knew not. He had many enemies, he hardly knew a godly man left, he was even weary of his life. Now he sitteth down under a juniper tree, and desireth that God would take away his life: "It is enough now, O Lord," saith he, "take away my life, for I am not better than my fathers;" I am even willing to die, the world is so wretched, and there is so much hatred of thee and thine. Ahab and Jezebel are against me, all the country and land cry out of me as the troubler of Israel, and to what purpose should I live any longer? While he is in this condition, God sendeth an angel unto him, and an angel with bread to feed him, and with glad tidings to comfort him. When John was banished by Domitian to Patmos, a place where the condemned parties belonging to the state of Rome, the most desperate and vile wretches, were sent, he had those revelations that were full of glory and excellency. The three children, when they were in the fiery furnace, the fire did them no hurt, but loose their bands and set them at liberty; and then one like the Son of God cometh and walketh amongst them, and comforteth them in those fiery flames. In deep distresses God doth often let out himself: he dwelleth in the darkness, and letteth out himself, and becometh light to those that are in darkness. You know that passage in the Book of Martyrs, of Glover and Austen. Mr. Glover was sad, and full of fears, some days before he was to suffer; his spirit was down, he quaked and trembled to think of the stake, and of that bitter cup he was to drink; he was afraid that he should deny his Saviour, and undo his soul. But the night before he was to suffer, he cried out unto Austen, "Oh Austen, he is come, he is come."

Mistress A. G. I knew a woman in travail, and in that travail whereof she died, who had been sometime in darkness, and having much sought God and waited for the revelation of his countenance, when she was almost spent in her travail and come near her end, upon a sudden she sprang up, and fixing her eyes toward heaven, said, "He is come, he is come; he hath kissed me with the kisses of his mouth; his love is better than wine. I will not exchange my condition with the greatest prince in the world. The Lord is infinitely good, he hath not deceived me; neither will he ever deceive any." She had these impressions upon her spirit, till the breath went out of her body. Thus God in great distresses, in deep afflictions, bringeth in seasonable and sweet consolations.

Ver. 4. And I looked, and, behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and out of the midst thereof as the colour of amber, out of the midst of the fire.

We are now come to the vision. Some make five visions in this chapter.

The first is a vision of a tempest, in this fourth verse.

The second is of the four living creatures, with their description, from this verse to the 15th.

The third is of the wheels, from the 15th verse to the 22nd.

The fourth is of the firmament, from the 22nd verse to the 26th.

The fifth is of a throne with one on it, from the 26th to the end.

Some others put them all together, and make them one vision; these being all parts of it.

Before I come to open this vision, or any parts thereof, it will be needful to show you the scope of this vision, which will help us in the understanding of the same.

The scope of this vision is to set forth the glory of God; and this appeareth from the last verse of the chapter, where it is said, "This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord." The Spirit interprets all to be a manifestation of the glory of God.

This glory of God is evidenced two ways:

1. By his powerful providence in the administration and ruling of all the creatures in the world. For all creatures are under the command of God, and he doth dispose of them for what services he pleaseth. And not only in the world, but specially in the church, is his active providence manifest, preserving and destroying, as seemeth best in his own eyes; so that nothing is done there rashly, or without his will; nothing otherwise, sooner or later, than he hath decreed. All creatures, actions, events, come under his will, rule, and power.

2. By a representation of Jesus Christ, the Judge and Governor of this world, who is the brightness of the glory of God, and the express image of his person; and this from the 22nd verse to the end of the chapter; as the other is from the 4th verse to the 22nd.

This glory of God is presented to Ezekiel in this vision, for these ends:

1. To breed in him a high reverence of divine majesty. The sight of great and glorious things do awaken our dull, heavy, sensual spirits: naturally we are indifferent to the things of God, and unless something transcendent and glorious be presented to us, like Gallio, we care little for other things. Therefore in Exod. xix. 16, when the people saw the lightning, and heard the thunder, when God came down upon the mount in that glorious manner, this awakened them, and bred an awful reverence in them of divine majesty; "All the people that were in the camp trembled."

2. To prepare and fit him for entertainment of what God should speak unto him. We are not always in a frame to hear God speak; there are great distempers in our spirits: you have all experience enough of the truth of this: therefore it is said, Psal. xli. 10, "Be still, and know that I am God." Be still, let not your spirit be in a rage, taken up with the world, the cares, fears, pleasures, and businesses of it; be not parleying with a lust, but be still, and know that I am God.

3. It is to encourage him to his work, and to frame his spirit to a ready execution thereof. Ezekiel was to enter upon a heavy task, he was to deal with the stubborn Jews, a rebellious people. He knew that Jeremiah had preached thirty-five years, and other prophets in times better than he was in, and little or no good had been done upon this hard-hearted people. Therefore lest Ezekiel should be discouraged, that his heart might not faint, but be quickened to the work, the Lord doth show him his glory in these hieroglyphics, his glory in these creatures, his glory in his Son; that so seeing the glory of God, he might be warmed, oiled, and encouraged to run about this work. For the sight of glory is potent with a gracious heart, to make it active for God. "We cannot," say Peter and John, in Acts iv. 20, "but speak the things which we have seen and heard." Now they had seen his "glory as the glory of the only begotten Son of God," John i. 14. They had been in the mount, seen Christ transfigured, and his face shine as the sun, Matt. xvii. 1, 2. And having seen his glory and heard his voice, this encouraged them, notwithstanding all difficulties, to be active for him. This was God's way to appear to his servants, to encourage them to the work he would set them about. God appeared to Moses in a burning bush, Exod. iii. To Joshua in a vision like a man with a sword in his hand, Josh. v. 13. To Elisha by horses and chariots of fire, 2 Kings vi. 17. Peter, being confirmed by a vision of a sheet let down from heaven, goes and preacheth to the Gentiles, Acts x. And Ezekiel here hath vision upon vision, that so being strongly confirmed, he might not fear the faces of Jews or Babylonians, but proceed with life and spirit about the work he was sent.

Note, The sight of God's glory is very efficacious upon the spirits of men. If God let out his glory, it will work strangely upon good and bad. When Christ said to those who came to apprehend him, "I am he," John xviii. 6, it is conceived that Christ let out some glimpse of his glory, which so astonished them, that presently they recoiled, and fell to the ground. Isaiah, when he saw the glory of the Lord, cried out, "Woe is me, I am undone, I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell among a people of unclean lips," Isa. vi. 5, 6. And then God manifesting his glory so far for his good, that his lips were touched by an angel; "Now, Lord," saith he, "here am I, send me;" I am ready to go, though it be on a message of death, though it be to root up nations and kingdoms. So it was with Job; "I have heard of thee," saith he, "by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee," that is, thy glory. "Wherefore I abhor myself in dust and ashes," Job xlii. 5, 6; I will speak no more against God, I will do whatsoever thou shalt command or expect at my hands. So Isa. xl. 5, 6, "The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together." And what then? "All flesh is as grass, and all the goodness thereof is as the flower of the field." There is no greater or more efficacious way, to take off your hearts from the creature, than to behold the glory of God. There was no man that ever saw the glory of God, but he looked upon the creature as nothing afterward.

"I looked, and, behold, a whirlwind came," &c. In this verse we have the first part of the vision, and it is of a tempest. A whirlwind is a sudden wind, which takes up what is obvious, and carrieth it in a circular motion, wheeling it about, and hurling it here and there. Theodoret calls

A Lapid. it the blast of a storm; the Septuagint, a wind which takes away trees, houses, lesser things, and disperseth them. Some have been eye-witnesses of whirlwinds in Italy, which have taken away stabula cum equis, stables with horses, carried them up into the air, and dashed them against the mountains; so mighty are these whirlwinds in some countries.

"Out of the north." The northern winds are very piercing; and if we respect the prophet in this whirlwind, it was to purge the air, that the visions might be clearer and more conspicuous to his eyes, and himself better disposed to the reception of them: for southern winds make the humours fluid, and the body heavy, they relax the sinews, and prejudice the motions of the man; but northern winds shut up the humours, consolidate the parts of the body, intend the spirits, make man more lively, fit to receive and do.

But there is something else in this north wind. Great difference there is among expositors concerning this vision, and no man almost knoweth where to fasten. What I conceive to be the truth you shall have.

By this whirlwind from the north, is meant Nebuchadnezzar, with his army that should come and besiege Jerusalem. Jer. i. 13, 14, this is set out under the representation of a seething pot; "I saw," saith he there, "a seething pot from the face of the north" (so the Hebrew is); and what is that? "Out of the north an evil shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land." The evil is, "The families of the kingdoms of the north shall come against Jerusalem," ver. 15. There is the evil; the Babylonians shall come to Jerusalem, and be a wind, a whirlwind, a tempest to it.

Nebuchadnezzar and his army are compared to a whirlwind, in the sudden rising, swift going, and terrible execution.

1. In the sudden rising. Winds (you know) rise suddenly. Acts ii. 2, "Suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind;" which showeth that winds do come unexpectedly. Jonah i. 4, No sooner was Jonah in the ship, but God sent out a great wind upon the sea. Such a wind should Nebuchadnezzar be, he should come suddenly upon them. Jer. vi. 26, "The spoiler shall come suddenly upon thee." Hab. ii. 7, "Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee? and awake that shall vex thee?" a metaphor taken from a dog, serpent, or wild beast: when a man passeth by the way, before ever he thinks of it, the dog, serpent, or wild beast starteth up, bites, or stings him. So should Nebuchadnezzar be, (for he speaks of him in that second of Habakkuk,) he should come suddenly and set upon Jerusalem, and overthrow it as a mighty storm and tempest doth a tree or house.

How could this be sudden, when the prophets had foretold them of it long before?

To this I answer, First, That because they did not believe what the prophets did foretell, touching Nebuchadnezzar and his destruction of Jerusalem, therefore it was sudden to them, though foretold. Lam. iv. 12, "The kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed that the adversary and the enemy should have entered in at the gates of Jerusalem." Neither king nor people would believe the prophets, they would not be persuaded that ever an enemy should enter within the gates of Jerusalem, and lay it waste.

Secondly, Though they were foretold, though they did believe it, yet because they were not prepared for it when it did come, therefore it was sudden unto them. Luke xxi. 34, "Take heed, lest by any means your hearts be overcome with surfeiting and drunkenness, and that day come upon you unawares." Though men believe that evil shall come, if they be taken unawares, unprepared, it is sudden to them. So these either not believing, or not being prepared though they did believe, the coming of Nebuchadnezzar was to them as a whirlwind, very sudden.

2. In its swift going. The wind is said to have wings, 2 Sam. xxii. 11, because of its swiftness and speedy motion; and ships that are driven by it, are said to be swift, Job ix. 26. And so it is said of the Chaldean horses, that they are swifter than leopards, Hab. i. 8. Leopards are very swift creatures, so swift, that Claudian fastens this epithet upon them, Pardi fulminei. Leopards are as swift as lightning and thunder; and therefore, Dan. vii. 6, Alexander is compared to a leopard, because of his speedy conquering the world. Celerity in matters of war is of great moment: and it would do well, that those that are now interested in it, would make more speed; for speed doth great things. Alexander being asked the question how he overcame the world in so little time, answered, By not delaying: every opportunity was taken. These Chaldeans and their horses were very swift, and they came with great speed upon Jerusalem, and therein resembled the wind.

3. In its terrible execution. A whirlwind, or any wind which bringeth a tempest, what dreadful work doth it make! Houses, mountains, trees, steeples, are shaken and torn in pieces. What can stand before a tempestuous wind? You may see the power thereof in 1 Kings xix. 11, "A great strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks." The strength of rocks and mountains was weakness to the strength of the winds. Those great vessels at sea, viz. ships, when a storm cometh, how are they battered and shaken, sunk and split against the rocks! There is terrible execution done by the winds at sea and land, when they are in their strength. So Nebuchadnezzar and his forces were very terrible: Hab. i. 6, and so on, we may see the terribleness of them; "I will raise up the Chaldeans, a bitter and hasty nation;" and ver. 7, "They are terrible and dreadful:" and ver. 9, "They shall come all for violence, their faces shall sup up as the east wind:" that wind was most vehement and scorching in Judea, and devoured all that was green. So did the Chaldeans devour and destroy all their pleasant things. "They shall gather the captives as sand:" the wind drives great heaps of sand together, raiseth a mountain presently; so should they gather the captives as heaps of sands. Then afterward, ver. 10, "They shall scoff at the kings, and the princes shall be a scorn unto them; they shall deride every strong hold, for they shall heap dust and take it." No person, no hold can stand before them. In these respects Nebuchadnezzar and his army are compared to a whirlwind, and a whirlwind out of the north.

"A great cloud." Clouds are moist vapours exhaled from the earth and sea by the sun, and condensed by the cold in the middle region, and carried by the winds up and down, this way and that way: they are the bottles of heaven, which God doth fill with wine or vinegar, with mercy or wrath. This cloud here likewise doth represent the same thing again unto us, Jer. iv. 13, Nebuchadnezzar and his army, chiefly, his army. In the prophets Ezekiel and Jeremiah oftentimes his army and himself are compared to a cloud, and that in three respects.

1. Clouds cover the face of heaven; many vapours gathered together rise up and darken the sun, and keep from us the comfortable aspect thereof. Ezek. xxxii. 7, "I will cover the sun with a cloud." The same word that is used for a cloud, doth signify Peditum equitumque nubes. likewise a multitude, a great company. Livy speaks of a cloud of horsemen and foot-men; and Epiphanius speaks of a cloud of flies; another of a cloud of locusts; and the apostle speaks of a cloud of witnesses, Heb. xii. 1: and here you have nubes militum, a cloud of soldiers, and this cloud doth cover the face of the earth; this army of Nebuchadnezzar doth cover the land. 2 Kings xxv. 1, it is said, that he and all his host came against Jerusalem; all the militia of 127 provinces: and Hab. i. 8, "Their horsemen shall spread themselves," they spread themselves through the country. Ezek. xxxviii. 9, "Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee." It is expressly meant of Nebuchadnezzar's army, which should be so great, as that it should cover the earth. The Talmud expounds those words, they shall be like a cloud to cover the earth, of Nebuchadnezzar's covering the land with his army.

2. A cloud is so swift, as that it is irresistible; it pours out the rain and none can let; it will keep its way, go on, or break itself into pieces. Isa. lx. 8, "Who are these that fly as a cloud?" clouds fly so swiftly, that there is no resisting of them. So this army of Nebuchadnezzar's went with that swiftness and irresistibility, that it was not in the power of any to withstand them, neither Joakim, nor Jehoiachin, neither Zedekiah, nor Pharaoh king of Egypt; four kings could not withstand this Nebuchadnezzar, and many other heathen kings that he had to deal with, none of them could resist him and his forces. He went on invincibly, strong holds were nothing to him, he made heaps of dust, and took them at his pleasure, Hab. i. 10.

3. Lastly, clouds are emblems of misery and afflictions. The Hebrew word for a cloud signifieth also calamity; for clouds are full of waters, hail, fire, lightning, and thunderbolts. They send down such things upon the sons of men, as fill all with darkness, fears, and troubles. It is natural for a cloud to be an emblem of misery, for clouds bring storms and tempests. The day of the Lord's wrath, in Scripture, is set out by clouds, frequently. Zeph. i. 15, "That day is a day of trouble and distress, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of elouds and thick darkness: so Joel. ii. 1, 2; Ezek xxx. 3; and xxxiv. 12. So this army of Nebuchadnezzar is fitly compared to a cloud, because of the misery and calamity which came along with it. Great miseries have gone along with all armies, but specially with this. Hab. i. 6, They were a hasty and a bitter nation, they rained down their wrath upon Jerusalem; they had instruments of death, they sent out their thunder and lightning, and burnt the house of God, the king's house, and every great man's house in Jerusalem, 2 Kings xxv. 9. A terrible storm was now upon Jerusalem, when they shot their arrows into the city, slew multitudes, burnt down all, and carried the people into captivity; what a storm was it! Lo here God stormed Jerusalem with Nebuchadnezzar's army; and what are armies but elouds of blood and fire, the great ordinance of God, out of which he shoots thunderbolts of death, Isa. xxviii. 2, and by which he storms the strongest towms?

1. Observe here, That winds, clouds, and all vapours, are subject to the power of God. He calls them forth at his pleasure, and carries them which way he pleaseth, to execute his will. He sent the whirlwind, and the great cloud; these lawless creatures, over which no king, no nation ever had command; (for who can command the winds or the elouds?) yet God hath absolute power over winds. Prov. xxx. 4, "He gathereth the wind in his fist," he can open it, and let out a wind where and when he will, to shake the foundations of the earth. He hath the waters in a garment, covered up in a eloud; he only can pour them out, and make great floods. He is the father of the great rain. Amos v. 8, "He calleth for the waters of the sea," that is, the vapours whereof the clouds and rain are made, "and poureth them out upon the face of the earth." It is God that lieth upon the wings of the wind, Psal. xviii. 11. It is God that rideth upon the clouds, and makes them his chariot, and walketh upon the wings of the wind, Psal. civ. 3. It is God that rideth upon the swift clouds, Isa. xix. 1. God hath the use of the winds as a fowl of his wings, and can flutter and make a great or small wind as he pleaseth. God hath the command of the clouds as a prince of his chariot, to drive it which way he pleaseth.

If you have a wind at sea or land to do you good, remember that it came out of God's hand; remember God rides upon that wind, and carried it that way you would have it. If the clouds, the bottles of heaven, be carried over your gardens, orchards, lands, habitations, cities, or countries, do water them and make them fruitful, remember that God rideth in those chariots, that he openeth those bottles of heaven, and lets down that which is sweet and comfortable to the sons of men. If they prove terrible unto you, if there be a storm and tempest, remember it is God that sends the storm and tempest. All is in his hand.

Obs. 2. That it is God's prerogative to impose higher significations upon things, than they have by nature. This whirlwind out of the north, this great cloud, naturally had no other signification than other clouds and winds. God lifts them up to a higher honour, and makes them to represent Nebuchadnezzar and his army, his own wrath and vengeance in that Nebuchadnezzar and in that army of his. It is God's privilege to put things into a higher condition than they have by nature. No man, no prince on earth could have put this signification upon that whirlwind. The rainbow was before the flood, but had not that honour to be a witness between God and man, that God would never drown the world any more, till God himself imposed it. The brazen serpent was no more than other brass, but by divine institution it was made a type of Christ. Where such institution is not, no creature can be translated to another or higher condition than that it was set in by the first creation, without sin. To make garments signify purity, crosses, Christ crucified, (besides the superstition and injury in thrusting them out of their rank,) it is a presumptuous stepping into the throne of God, and a bold usurpation of his prerogative; it belongeth unto him to impose significations of a higher nature upon the creature than ordinarily it hath.

Obs. 3. That the anger of God, which way soever venting itself, makes a storm and a terrible tempest. God was about to pour out his wrath by Nebuchadnezzar and his army; and this proved such a tempest as ruined Jerusalem: this verified Psal. xi. 6. "Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest: the portion of their cup." When God's wrath once breaks out, it will be terrible to all it falleth upon.

What therefore will wicked men do when God shall come out like a whirlwind, when God shall come out as a great cloud, thunder, lightning in the world, rain fire and brimstone and an horrible tempest? When God shall do this, what will become of them? Wicked men, in Ezek. xiii. 10, 11, are compared to a wall that is daubed up with untempered mortar. When God shall come with a tempest and shake that wall, can it stand? No; it is said it shall fall, a stormy wind shall rend it. The Jews daubed with untempered mortar, and when the storm came, they fell. Many christians daub up themselves with the untempered mortar of their own righteousness, of vain hopes, of doing this and that. But when this whirlwind blows, they will down. They are houses built upon the sand, and when the winds blow, the floods beat, and the rain falls, they will fall also, Matt. vii. 27, and fall from the hopes of heaven to the bottom of hell. Therefore look to your foundation, look that you be not built upon the sand, but upon a rock, and that you daub not with untempered mortar, for there is a tempest already begun.

Obs. 4. That God can bring adverse power from any quarter. He can raise wind and clouds from the north, from remote places, those we little think of. He can make use of a hasty, bitter, and merciless nation, and that suddenly, to awaken a secure people, to correct his own servants, and to plague his enemies. It is likely they had such thoughts at Jerusalem as these; Surely Babylon is a great way off, Nebuchadnezzar hath his hands full, none of the kings of the earth will or dare come near Jerusalem, Lam. iv. 12. We are in no such danger as these timorous prophets speak of. Why should we trouble ourselves with needless fears? we will on in our wonted ways. And are not such as these our thoughts? Do not we think that foreign enemies are so employed and taken up at home, that they have no leisure to come and trouble us? But God can from the north bring a tempest; God can from foreign nations bring in those that can pour out their wrath upon us, and make as grievous a storm as ever fell upon Jerusalem. We do not believe, and they did not believe. But what if God do not bring it from abroad, cannot he raise up a storm from within? Is there not already a wind out of the north, a whirlwind and a cloud raised? and how soon do any of us know but there may be blackness, darkness, and the day of the Lord round about us? we may be suddenly environed with winds and dreadful storms, such as our hearts never thought of, and our eyes never saw. Let us not be secure, a bloody tempest is amongst us already. The drunkard may be secure when he is at sea asleep upon the top of the mast, (though it may cost him his life for doing so,) but a sober man will look about him when he seeth the ship shaken, and heareth the winds blow, and perceives the waves rise; and if it be possible, save his own life, and the ship too. If you be sober men, look about you. Is not the storm begun? Do not the winds blow? Are not the clouds dark? Is not the day of the Lord upon us? If it be possible, save your own lives, and the ship that you are in, that now begins to shake, to sink. The heathen mariners had so much religion, that when there was a storm every one cried to his god; and so much charity, as not to suffer Jonah to lie asleep, but go to him and say, Awake, thou sleeper, what meanest thou? "arise, call upon thy God," that if it may be, he may save both thee and us. Be not you behind the heathen mariners, show so much religion and charity in you, as every one to go and call now upon his God. Cry to your God now, that he would still the winds; that he would rebuke the waves; that he would still this storm. Cry to God now with all your strength, and wrestle with him night and day, that he may show some mercy to his beloved, and not give her up to be a spoil to the hands of enemies. Awaken your Jonahs that are asleep in your houses. Call upon your husband, wife, friends, minister, all and every one, to put to their hearts and hands, to secure this ship that is almost now split and falling in pieces. Now take your censers, for wrath is gone out from the Lord; put fire and incense in them, that, if it be possible, you may stop the wrath. When the disciples were at sea, and a storm arose, Matt. viii. 24, Christ being with them asleep in the ship, they awoke him, saying, "Lord, save us, we perish." So do you. Christ seems to be asleep; awake him with your prayers, and say, Lord, save us; we are called by thy name, we are christians, save us, else we perish. Christ you see presently arose, rebuked the winds, and the sea, and there was a great calm. Be not secure now of all times, but think with yourselves what you would do if all the nations of the world were come against England, if all the counties in England were in an uproar, if this city were besieged and fire thrown into it to burn the houses. Think what you would do then, do it now, fit and prepare yourselves for the stroke of God in the storm and tempest, that however it go with your bodies, estates, liberties, or lives, yet it may go well with your immortal souls.

Obs. 5. That God disposes of winds and clouds for what services he pleases. A whirlwind is made Elijah's chariot to heaven, 2 Kings ii. 11. The Lord hath his way in the winds, Nahum i. 3. He answered Job out of the whirlwind, chap. 40. 6. By a wind he conveys the Holy Ghost to the apostles, Acts ii. 2. So for the clouds, God sets his bow in them to witness the security of the world from drowning, Gen. ix. He created a cloud upon the assembly, Isa. iv. 5. He went before the Israelites in a pillar of a cloud, Exod. xiii. And the glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud, Exod. xvi. 10. The temple was filled with a cloud, 2 Chron. v. 13. A cloud received Christ and carried him to heaven, Acts i. 9. When we behold the clouds, and hear the winds, we should be carried higher in our thoughts, than to look at them philosophically in a natural way; we should mind them theologically, as instruments of choice services of God, as instruments of his power, wisdom, and glory.

“And a fire infolding itself;” or, as the Hebrew word is, a fire that doth put forth itself, and receive itself into itself: like unto a wave of the sea, that riseth high, and falleth into itself again; or as in a house on fire, the fire breaks forth strongly, and the flame returns into itself presently. The Septuagint render it, bright shining fire, which comes out of a cloud, viz. lightning; and, however some think it not to be meant of the lightning, because lightning goeth straight forth, and never returneth, according to Matt. xxiv. 27, “The lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west;” and so doth not infold itself; yet we have Scripture to confute this conceit. Exod. ix. 24, there was fire mingled with the hail; the same word is in the original, fire that doth infold itself. And they that curiously observe the lightning, may find that it doth oftentimes return into itself, and pass (as it were) as a ball in the air, or as wound up into a globe. But this reacheth not the meaning yet in the text, “a fire infolding itself.” Sanctius thinks it rather a fiery globe which remained in the cloud, and like cabbage leaves grow up into themselves, and infolding, make a globe; so the flames of this fire turned into themselves and became a globe. And it is probable to be this, because it is said, there was a brightness round about it, the fiery globe within begat that circular brightness, which lightning, being transparent, could not do. And the rather it is thought to be this than lightning, because the colour is said to be as the colour of amber, whereas if it had been lightning, that is transient, and the colour hardly observable; therefore it should seem to be some fixed thing. I conceive it to be vapours in the clouds, kindling and burning into themselves, the flame turning inward, and making a globe; and thus I find it expounded, Ignis se accendens. Ständ.
a fire kindling itself: and so it is most natural to the cloud to have vapours in it, which fire and kindle themselves, and burn into the form of a globe. Now what is meant by this fire infolding itself, or this fiery globe, is very doubtful; they that come nearest to the truth, take it to be the wrath of Nebuchadnezzar, or rather the wrath of God in using Nebuchadnezzar to burn the city and temple. But with submission to the judgment of the learned and godly, I take the fire to be meant of sin: the sins of prince and people, priests and prophets, did kindle and involve them in the fire, their own sins took hold of and consumed them.

Prov. v. 28, “His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the cords of his own sin.” A man's sins will turn upon him, take hold of him and bind him; and so here Jerusalem's sins kindle upon herself, take hold of her and burn her. Sin, we find in Scripture, cometh up to the nature of fire; Prov. xvi. 27, “In the lips of the ungodly there is a burning fire.” And it is likened to fire, because of the destructive nature. Whatsoever fire takes hold of, it consumeth; and so doth sin: Job v. 2, “Wrath killeth the foolish man, and envy slayeth the silly one;” and Prov. i. 32, “The turning away of the simple shall slay them.” So then Jerusalem's sins, the sins of kings and nobles, the sins of prophet, priest, and people, are here to be understood by this fire infolding itself, which drew the wrath of God into Jerusalem, and so kindled, fired, and consumed them all.

From hence note, That the cause of the ruin of kingdoms, cities, princes, and people is in themselves, their own sins are the fire infolding. Hos. xiii. 9, “O Jerusalem, thou hast destroyed thyself;” thou art the cause of thine own spoil and captivity; thou hast set up the calves, worshipped them, and they bleat so against thee, that they have undone thee. Israel's sin was Israel's destruction; and so Jerusalem. It was not the whirlwind, nor the cloud, nor Nebuchadnezzar or his army, that could have made one breach upon Jerusalem, or led one soul into captivity, if there had not been sin amongst them. It was their own sin which kindled divine wrath, and brought in their destruction; otherwise they had been safe enough. Jerusalem might have stood to this day, and have been as great and glorions as ever. The principles of our ruin are in ourselves. Iron breeds the rust, garments the moths which devour them. The ill humours in a man's body fire and consume the house by a burning fever; children breed the worms which bring them to their graves; and states, the sins which bring them to their ends. Where sin is bred and countenanced, it proves consumptio totius. Families, cities, kingdoms go down where sin goes up. Let not kingdoms therefore blame God or others, but let them and all say, The root of the evil is in ourselves; we should never be laid waste, if we were true to God, faithful and close to the rule. If we did not sin, there would be no fire to consume us and ours.

“And a brightness was about it.” There being a globe of fire within, it sent forth beams which produced an answerable brightness; which brightness (the cloud being thick and dark of itself) was a window to let in the prophet's eye to see what was in the cloud.

By this brightness is shadowed out unto us, the terrible majesty and glory of the divine presence, putting itself forth in the punishment of sinners. As fire begets a splendour round about where it is; so do the judgments of God set out to the world his glory, justice, holiness, Psal. ix. 16. The glory of his judgment in punishing ill-doers, is a solid, constant, spreading glory; as that brightness was not flashy in the cloud, occasioned by the lightning, but fixed, certain, and on every side.

The note hence is, That execution of justice upon delinquents makes God and magistrates glorions. There was a bright splendour in the cloud, Exod. xv. 6, upon the destruction of Pharaoh and his army in the Red sea. It is said, “Thy right hand, O God, is become glorions in power; thy right hand, O God, hath dashed in pieces the enemy, and in the greatness of thine excellency thou hast overthrown them that rose up against thee.” This act of justice was a glorious and powerful work; so when God destroyed the Bethshemites, 1 Sam. vi. 20, "Who is able to stand before this holy God?" say they. The holiness of God's justice and power shine so clearly in the world, that they dazzle men's eyes and hearts, and make them tremble before God. When Phinehas executed justice, how honourable was he in the hearts of the godly! what a great and glorious reward did he get by it! Never was Solomon more honourable than when he executed justice between the two harlots, and called for the sword to decide the controversy. Our magistrates are clothed with scarlet, and they may think that makes them honourable, but their robes never bring true honour to them if justice be not done; one act of justice executed upon delinquents makes them more honourable than all the scarlet robes in the world. How glorious and dreadful was the parliament, when that great man fell in Israel! And if justice were executed upon delinquents, and they had their due, we should be glorious in power, dreadful to nations, terrible to our enemies; they would say, Who is able to stand before the God of this parliament? before the God of this kingdom?

"And out of the midst thereof as the colour of amber." That is, out of the midst of the fire, not out of the midst of the wind, or out of the midst of the cloud. The Hebrew word for amber, החשיל, is a word that is found no where else in all the Scripture but in this prophet, and but twice more, viz. at the 27th verse of this chapter, and at the 2nd verse of the 8th chapter. Rabbi Iarchi confesseth he knoweth not what the meaning of this word is; another rabbi saith it was the name of an angel, who instructed Ezekiel. The Septuagint, Jerom, and divers others, translate it, electrum, amber; and because here is mention of the colour of amber, we must inquire what amber this was. There be divers kinds of amber; one sort of amber is called succinum, which is the juice of certain trees, the gum of pine trees, which being hardened by the air, is yellow and bright; that which is white and dusky is bastard amber.

A second sort of amber is a liquid substance which flows from the sea rock, and about the sea shores, and being hardened by the air, winds, and water, floats up and down upon the sea, especially about Florida, and other Indian shores; and it is of a honeyish and waxy colour.

The third kind of amber is metallical, made of metals, and those more precious than gold, as Jerom; inferior to it, as Zanchius saith. This amber is compounded of gold and shining silver, is very precious, and of great use. But besides this, there is yet another metallical amber, called aurichalcum, the choicest and purest brass, and this is thought to be the chasnal or amber here mentioned, according to that, Rev. i. 15, "His feet were like to fine brass, as if it had burned in a fiery furnace." Brass doth most nearly resemble fire. The colour of amber here is a fiery colour; and surely this is near the truth. But yet it cometh not up fully to the nature of the word here; for I do not find amongst those that search into the nature of words, that this word chasnal is interpreted amber: as the learned observe, it signifies a coal that is fired most intensively; a coal that hath the utmost heat it is capable of, so hot, that presently it burneth any thing it toucheth: such coals are more red and lively than others, and it comes nearest to the nature of the word to render it, as the colour of a burning coal. Hence Junius and Tremelius render the word, color viridissimus, the most lively colour; for nothing hath a more lively colour than hot coals, or fine brass burning in the fire; either of which you may take, but I rather cleave to that of burning coals, which being in the midst of the fire, might so sparkle and shine, as to dazzle the eyes: and whether chasnal, in this place, were not more fitly rendered, as the colour of burning brass, or of a burning coal, than as the colour of amber, I leave to consideration.

Now what is meant by this amber or coal, there is great dispute. Some understand by it Christ, because he is more precious than amber, more lively than any burning coal whatsoever. But we must lay this sense aside, because there is a vision of Christ in the latter end of the chapter. The soundest expositors by chasnal lead us to some inferior to Christ, viz. the angels, who are called seraphim, animalea ignea, as Kimchi hath it, of שרף to burn, and seraphims are fiery burning creatures. Isa. vi. 2, "About it stood the seraphims;" that is, the fiery burning angels; answerable to the chasnal or burning coals here. So in Judg. xiii. 20, an angel went up to heaven in a flame of fire; that element was most suitable to a seraphical and angelical nature. 2 Kings vi. 17, there were horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha, and angels were in those chariots. They are likened to fire, because of their ardent and burning zeal to do the will of God, Psal. ciii. 20.

For the word colour, "the colour of amber," in the Hebrew it is, the eye of amber, the organ is put for the object: so you have it used, Numb. xi. 7, "The colour of it was as the colour of bdellium;" the Hebrew is, the eye of it was as the eye of bdellium.

Now having given you the meaning of chasnal, viz. that he saw angels of fiery colour, like to hot burning coals, so intense and zealous that they were ready to do and execute whatsoever God would have done; note hence:

I. That heavenly things are so transcendent, and we so weak, that we can comprehend or receive very little of them. They must be presented in things beneath their excellency, to make us capable of a little of them. God must manifest his mind here by winds, clouds, by brightness of a cloud, by a fire infolding, by burning coals, that so we may take up a little of the mind of God. John iii. 12, saith Christ to Nicodemus, "If I have spoken to thee of earthly things, and thou dost not understand them, how wilt thou understand if I speak unto thee of heavenly things?" Nicodemus, a doctor in Israel, did not apprehend the doctrine of regeneration, when expressed in his own dialect; had Christ spoken of the great things of the kingdom of heaven in their own nature, how could he or any of us have understood? Here we see darkly and as in a glass. God is pleased to go in the way of man with us, to condescend to our capacities, and to present heavenly things in hieroglyphics, winds, clouds, fire and coals, that so we may have a little apprehension of the nature of those things.

Obs. 2. That heavenly spirits are most pure and lively. So much the word chasnal leads us unto; it noteth coals that have no darkness, no smoke in them, that are altogether fiery, and so lively as that they cannot be more lively. Such is God; he is light, and no darkness; he is more lively than all the world beside. He is actus purissimus, all his actions exceed our apprehensions. Such are angels, they are pure and lively creatures. Heb. i. 7, angels are spirits for their purity, and flames of fire for their activity and zeal. Rev. xv. 6, the seven angels are clothed in pure and white linnen, and their breast girded with golden girdles: pure linen they have and golden girdles, no spot in the linen, no dross in the gold, to set out their purity; and girt they are, to show their readiness and zeal to do the will of God. They are as burning lively coals, that if God do but speak the word, they run, they fly. But of this more hereafter.

Ver. 5. Also out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures. And this was their appearance; they had the likeness of a man.

Now we come to that part of the vision which concerns the living creatures, from this 5th verse to the 15th; where God's glory and government of the world are set out from superior causes, viz. celestial things.

These four creatures are commended to us:

I. From their general nature, they are living creatures.

II. From their number, they are four.

III. From their form, they had the likeness of a man.

IV. From their several parts: as,

1. Their faces, and the number of them, ver. 6, 8, 10.

2. Their wings, the number, situation, and use of them, ver. 6, 8, 9, 11.

3. Their feet, set out by the figure and colour of them, ver. 7.

4. Their hands, set out by the figure and situation of them, ver. 8.

5. From their motion, which was forthright, ver. 9, 12. And this is illustrated from the quality of it; it was swift, ver. 14, they ran; it was as speedy as lightning: and from the cause of it, which was the Spirit, ver. 12, "whither the Spirit was to go."

6. From their colour, which was like burning coals and lamps, ver. 13.

What these living creatures are, is the great dispute among expositors. Some make them to be the four covenants of God: 1. That with Adam. 2. That with Noah. 3. That with Moses. 4. That with the apostles. Some make them to be all the creatures. Some, the four cardinal virtues, justice, wisdom, fortitude, temperance. Some, the four faculties in the soul; the rational, irascible, concupiscible, and conscience. Some, the four chief passions; joy, grief, hope, and fear. Some, the four monarchies; Assyrian, Persian, Grecian, and Roman. Some, the twelve tribes of Israel, in their stations, east, west, north, south, when in the wilderness. Some, the four elements, of which man's body doth consist. Some, the four evangelists, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John; and this being the opinion of Jerom and Gregory the great, prevailed much, but now is deserted. Others understand by these four creatures, those who are complete and more perfect in the church. Others expound them to be Christ; but Christ is brought in, in the latter end of the chapter, sitting upon the throne: these creatures are some distinct ones from him, and inferior to him. By them then we are to understand the angels, which have a great part under God in the government of the world. The word חַיִּים living creatures, doth not only signify a creature that is corporeal, living, and sensible; but it denotes any living being or substance, whether corporeal or spiritual: and so Tully calls intelligentias animales, living intelligences, in Quest. Acad. I. 4.

The best interpreters go this way, and understand by the living creatures, exercitus invisibiles, principalities and powers, and we need not fetch light from men, where the Scripture gives interpretation itself. Ezek. x. there you have frequent mention of cherubims, which were these living creatures; for ver. 8, it is said, "There appeared the form of a man's hand under their wings." They had the same faces, one excepted, and as many, ver. 14, and Ezekiel saith, ver. 15, "This is the living creature that I saw by the river of Chebar." And more plain yet in ver. 20, "This is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river Chebar, and I knew that they were the cherubims." Although he called it before the living creature, in the singular number, yet here he changeth the number, and saith, they were the cherubims. We may trust Ezekiel's judgment, he was guided by the Spirit, and his cherubims do hold forth the same parties to us, that Isaiah's seraphims did to him.

The word cherub notes generally any figure of man or beast, say the Hebrews, but especially the figure of a young man or a child, with wings stretched out, Exod. xxv. Such were the two cherubims before the ark. The Chaldeans call a little child, rabi or rabia; whence some derive the word cherubim, quasi cherabia, as a little child; others fetch it from caph, which notes likeness, and rob or rab, which words signify, as, in general, quality and quantity, so multitude and magnitude; so that cherubims etymologized are tanquam multi et magni, as it were many and great.

The word cherub notes not only angels, but angels as they appeared and were figured with any external form of man or beast, and such figures were hieroglyphical, as here in this vision. The prophet saw not these cherubims, or angels, or living creatures, but the likeness of them. For the nature of spirits is invisible; no soul, no angel, neither God himself, can be seen. How then is their likeness presented to the prophet? It is no bodily likeness, but a likeness in life, quality, and motion. But the text saith, "They had the likeness of a man," that is, not in his nature and essence, but in some qualities; they had the face, hands, thighs, and legs of a man, all which set out some choice qualities in the angels. They had also something of the beast and bird. And if they were in nature like the living creatures, angels were strange monsters, and not spirits in compound.

By their likeness unto man is laid before us the rationality, knowledge, and understanding of angels. They are not ignorant creatures, but ipsa intelligentia, the most understanding creatures in heaven or earth. 2 Sam. xiv. 20, the widow of Tekoah told David, he was wise according to the wisdom of an angel of God, to know all things that are in the earth; that is, he was very wise, as the angels are, to search out, understand, and discover things.

Therefore Jerom thinks they are called cherubims from their much knowledge. Cherubims, as it were, rabbies, doctors, teachers of others; and this office some angels have had. Dan. viii. 16, "Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision;" and chap. x. 14, "I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days." They have prophetic knowledge in them, and a treasury of things that are past and done long since. Rev. iv. 6, 8, there is mention of four beasts or living creatures, (the same with these in Ezekiel,) full of eyes before and behind, because they see and know what is past, and what is before them; their natural knowledge is great, being such excellent spirits. But besides that, they have much revealed to them concerning God, Christ, the church, and things contingent. Hence it is said, 1 Pet. i. 12, “Which things,” namely of Christ and the gospel, “the angels desire to look into.” The word denotes bowing down, to pry heedfully into a thing, John xx. 5. The cherubims were made looking down towards the mercy-seat, Exod. xxv. and here the angels look into the things of Christ, in whom are hid the treasures of wisdom; and so they grow in this knowledge daily, as also in experimental knowledge, arising from things done daily in the world and in the church. Angels love to be at the congregation, to meet the saints, and learn of and amongst them. They understand partly by their essences, and partly by species communicated to their understandings as to ours. Angels are good philosophers, they know the principles, causes, effects, life, motions, death of natural things, Rev. vii. 1, 2, and xvi. 5. They are great statisticians, and know the affairs of kingdoms: Dan. x. 13, saith Gabriel, “I remained with the kings of Persia;” he became a courtier, and acquainted himself with the affairs of Persia.

“Four living creatures.” These were four angels in particular; some conceive, Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel, which were chief over the rest of the whole host of angels. But that is not the sense, neither that God only uses four angels in his service; for many thousands are employed. Luke ii. 13, “There was a multitude of the heavenly host;” and 2 Kings vi. 17, there was an army with the prophet. But it relates to the object, viz. the world, which is distinguished into four parts, east, west, north, and south. The work of these angels laid in all those parts, and none of them were exempt from the presence, observation, and operation of the angels.

Obs. 1. That God employs not ignorant, silly ones in his service, but those that are intelligent, angels that are wise and very knowing. Such should the angels of the churches be; “The priest’s lips should keep knowledge,” Mal. ii. 7. And as God is termed, 1 Sam. ii. 3, “a God of knowledge;” so should he be a man of knowledges. The Pharisees were blind guides; and what a multitude of blind priests were there till within these few years in the christian world! and too many there are to this day that have their right eye darkened, Zech. xi. 17. But the man of God should have new and old in his treasury, and be thoroughly furnished unto every good word and work.

Obs. 2. That the angels are in all quarters of the world, taking notice of men’s words, works, and ways they go; I had almost said, of their very thoughts; and that they do, if discovered by some sign. Angels can be present at all times, know what devils or other men can know of us; any voice, any act they are privy to; yea, by outward expressions they may gather what is within; they, being spirits, can insinuate far into our hearts and natures, though not immediately know our thoughts. Therefore we should carry ourselves soberly, righteously, and holily, in this world, in regard of them. 1 Cor. xi. 10, the woman is “to have power on her head because of the angels;” she is to be covered, and to carry herself modestly, reverently, because of the angels. Psa. cxxxviii. 1, “Before the gods will I sing to thee;” the Vulgate hath, in conspectu angelorum, before the angels: their presence should awe men and women, and keep them from all dishonesty; evil words, acts, gestures, secret grudging, all discontents and distempers. For as they are rejoiced to discern a good frame of spirit in you, to see you keep that order God hath set in the church and state, to walk as christians to the honour of God; so they are grieved to see the contrary, and you must answer for your sins against these great officers in the great family of heaven and earth. A thing that is little thought about; but if it be a sin to despise and grieve a believer, a brother that is inferior to an angel, is it not much more sin to dishonour their presence, and grieve their persons? Smoke drives away bees, and an ill savour doves; so do ill passages drive away the Spirit and angels of God. Eccl. v. 6, the angel that is of God’s counsel, a witness of our ways, will not take it well; the angel may smite thee for neglect of duties, ill performances of them.

Obs. 3. That men should be ashamed to be ignorant, seeing angels are likened unto them for knowledge and understanding. Many men, yea, such as are called christians, are brutish in their knowledge, their souls serve only for salt to keep their bodies from putrefaction; Eph. ii. 12, “without God in the world;” that is, without the fear, authority, and sovereignty of God falling upon their hearts, and without the knowledge of God in their heads. And God may say of many christians, “My people is foolish, they have not known me; they are sottish children, they have none understanding: they are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge,” Jer. iv. 22. The apostle bids us in understanding to be men; shall we be babes only? Let us now be angels in understanding. David was wise as an angel; and the saints shall judge the angels, 1 Cor. vi. The evil angels, they are very subtle, they have their depths, methods, wiles; and how shall we do it, if we be ignorant? They come to the assemblies to get advantage to accuse us; let us get knowledge to condemn them.

Obs. 4. That God doth interest angels, and use their service in the government of the world; not only men, magistrates and ministers, but angels also. The Jews made Jerusalem the prison of God and angels; they thought that neither God nor his angels did appear or rule any where else. To take off this conceit, God appears to Ezekiel in Babylon after this manner, to convince him, that he and his angels do govern there, and in all quarters of the world, as well as at Sion. That God rules in the world is granted, but that angels should help to sway the sceptre is not so credible. A little therefore to clear it. 2 Cor. iv. 4, “In whom the god of this world hath blinded their minds.” Some understand it of the true God that created the world, but the best interpreters give us in Satan here, and make him the god of the world, and that by example, command, and suggestion; and Christ doth thrice call Satan the prince of the world, Job xii. 31; xiv. 30; xvi. 11; and Eph. ii. 2, “According to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh.” The devil hath great power in the air to raise winds, to cause storms, thunder, lightning, which is the power of the air: and the same power hath he in the spirits of the children of disobedience: and by that spirit, whereof he is lord, he can move them any way, as the winds and clouds, and carry them against Christ and his truths. Now hence I infer, that if Satan and ill angels be as gods, princes in this world, have power in the air and hearts of wicked men; then must it needs follow, that good angels are as gods, and princes, and have as much power in the world and hearts of good men as they; otherwise devils should gain by their fall more than ever they had by their standing; and it is not credible that wicked, damned spirits should have more honourable titles and larger power than the holy and glorious angels.

What are those services then good angels are employed in?

Ans. 1. To inform us of God's will, and God of our ways.

They acquaint us with God's mind. Angels told Abraham and Lot what God would do to Sodom, Gen. xviii. xix. An angel tells Elijah what to say to the messengers of the king of Samaria, 2 Kings i. 3. An angel tells the apostles, that Christ shall return in that manner they had seen him go up to heaven, Acts i. 11. Christ tells John, Rev. xxii. 16, that he had sent his angels to testify those things in the churches. The angel tells Daniel that he came forth to give him skill and understanding, chap. ix. 22. Matt. i. 20; ii. 13, an angel informs Joseph of the mind of God, touching Mary and Christ. So to inform God what is done here among men, the angels went up the ladder as well as came down. Zech. i. 11, the angel sent out by the Lord, certified the Angel Christ, that stood among the myrtle trees, that they had travelled up and down the world; "and behold," say they, "all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest." This God doth for honour and not necessity, he knoweth all things, but he will have them witnesses of his will.

2. In opposing the great enemies of Christ and his church, whereupon they intermeddle with kings and kingdoms, and the great affairs thereof. Dan. x. 20, "Knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee? now will I return to fight with the king of Persia: and when I am gone forth, lo, the prince of Grecia shall come." This angel Gabriel opposed the cruel edicts of Cambyses king of Persia, who laboured to keep the Jews in captivity longer, and to oppress them sorer than others had done; but Gabriel kept them from execution, and brought his kingdom to ruin by degrees. And therefore he saith, The prince of Grecia shall come: I will leave Persia, and go into Greece, and stir up Alexander to come into Persia, and spoil the king of his kingdom. When princes are stirred up by flatterers and profane wretches to oppress the godly, to hinder the work of the temple, then angels do fight against them. Elesbaan king of the Ethiopians being in arms against Dunaan a tyrant, his army was much oppressed with famine and the power of the tyrant; whereupon he cried to God for help, and presently heard, Gabriel, Gabriel, Gabriel. Thrice he heard that voice from heaven, intimating, that Gabriel would help him; whereupon he joined battle with the tyrant, overcame, killed most, and took the tyrant king of the Homerites, and bound him in chains.

At a great battle between Clotharius and Theodoricus was seen an angel with a drawn sword, and many were slain on both sides. Some understand these princes to be spirits; if good, there is no discord between them. Good angels are without sin, and so no opposition in their wills to God's, or one another. If of evil angels, it is that we aim at, the good angels oppose and contend against the evil with all their strength. Rev. xii. 7, "Michael and his angels fought against the dragon and his." There was a great battle in heaven, the devil and his angels were cast out, which is for the great comfort of Sion. Certainly devils and devilish men would overrun all, if there were not angels employed in the four quarters of the world, to keep the church and people of God. When Balaam and Balak would have cursed God's people, an angel cometh forth and fights against them, Numb. xxii. 22. This is one great office of the angels, to fight against princes, potentates, and men of the earth, that seek to oppress the people of God, and labour to hinder temple work, and the welfare of Sion.

3. To execute the judgments of God upon wicked men. The death of their first-born in Egypt (which was the chiefest of the plagues, and touched the nearest) was done by a destroying angel; who therefore is called Hammasechelit, Exod. xii. 23. The destroyer shall not come into their houses, but into the Egyptians' he did come; the singular number is put for the plural, a thing usual in Scripture; and so the sense is, that angels were the destroyers of the Egyptians. The psalmist, in Psa. lxxxviii. 49, saith, God did this work by sending evil angels among them; not that these angels were wicked spirits, as some have thought, but angels or messengers of evil, of death unto them. The Egyptian sorcerers used the help of wicked angels to oppose Moses and harden the Egyptians, and God used the help of good angels to punish evil-doers; they have been, and are employed in such service. The angels that came to Lot's house, smote the Sodomites with blindness, great and small, which were at Lot's door, Gen. xix. 11. They fetched fire from heaven, and destroyed the place, ver. 13. When seventy thousand died of the plague, 2 Sam. xxiv. 17, in David's days, it is made the work of an angel, ver. 17; he saw the angel that smote the people. It was an angel that slew 185,000 Assyrians, Isa. xxxvii. 36. It is their work to chase and persecute wicked men, Psa. xxxv. 5, 6. Often angels of God do suddenly destroy them: "And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him." Acts xii. 23. Lorinus thinks it was the devil did it; but it was some good angel, that being zealous for God, he did vindicate his glory, which was given to a mortal, sinful man. Angels cannot endure this dishonour. Josephus, in his 19th book, and 8th chapter, sets out this story fully, how he came in, in cloth of silver, was saluted as a God, saw an owl over his head, felt a pain in his bowels, and said, I whom ye all call a god, am commanded to leave my godship, and by death to confute your lie of my immortality. Neither belongeth it to angels only to punish the wicked, but to exercise chastisement upon the godly. An angel meets Moses in the inn, and would have slain him, Exod. iv. 24; so the Greek and the Chaldee read it; and that because he neglected the circumcision of Moses. An angel smote Zacharias with dumbness, because of his unbelief, Luke i. So an angel corrected David for his sin of numbering his people.

4. To defend the godly, to save and deliver them from harms. This is a constant office; they keep the saints from evil men, spirits, and things. Rev. vii. 1—3, four angels stood on the four corners of the earth, and held the four winds of the earth, that they should not blow on the sea, or any tree: and another angel cries to the four, "Hurt not the earth, sea, trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads." Psal. xxxiv. 7, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." Angels are like armies round about the general, and keep from danger. When Jacob was to meet with his brother Esau, (who came with a band of four hundred men against him,) the angels of God met him, (they are forward to this service). And when he saw them. What, said he, "this is God's host;" what need I fear my brother's host? and he called the place Mahanaim, or Machanaim, Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. It is in the dual number, and notes two hosts, two camps: if my brother have one band, I have two; if he have men, I have angels; if four hundred men, I have twice four hundred angels. When Elisha was in Dothan, the king of Syria sent a great host with horses and chariots, and they came by night, compassed the city about, and now Elisha is a lost man; and Gehazi cries out, "Alas, master! what shall we do? Fear not," saith he, "they that be with us are more than they that be with them." And when the young man's eyes were opened, he saw the mountain full of horses and chariots of fire, and that round about Elisha, 2 Kings vi. 14—17. Was there an army against Elisha? here is an army for him: were they many? here are more: were there chariots and horses? here are chariots and horses of fire. When Daniel was in the den of lions, he had no fire to scare them, no weapon or strength to kill them, but an angel is sent to shut their mouth: so that here is a wonder, a lamb amongst lions, and not rent in pieces. Where angels are the lambs' keepers, there the lions are toothless and mouthless. The angels have a special charge of the godly; Psal. xci. 11, "He shall give his angels charge over thee." The angels stand charged with the custody of the godly; and when a guard is set about a person of quality, who dares come near to hurt such a one? It is said in ver. 7, "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand: but it shall not come nigh thee." It is nigh, when at a man's side, at his right hand: but it shall not come nigh to hurt thee: and what is the reason? "For he shall give his angels charge," &c. They look well to their charge, they never slumber nor sleep. God's care of his church now, is greater than it was under the law, for the watch is double to what it was then, there are twelve angels at the gates of Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 12; whereas in Ezekiel ix. 2, there were but six. The church being now enlarged, the enemies are enraged, and the guarding angels increased. No sooner were the apostles imprisoned, but an angel brings them forth, Acts v. 18, 19. And what great things the angel did for Peter, Acts xii. is known to all: his deliverance was so great, that they could not believe he was come forth and knocked at the door, but that it was his angel, ver. 15; whence the opinion of tutelar angels hath received great strength. Some affirm from hence, that every man hath his particular angel to keep him, Dan. vi. 22, which seems rather a Platonical conceit, than a Scripture truth, for Isidorns and so the word is used in Scripture. Judg. ii. 1, "The angel of the Lord came up," or messenger, as it is in the margin; and Mal. iii. 1, "I will send my messenger," the Hebrew is, my angel. And surely this party that knocked at the door they supposed was Peter's messenger, not his angel: and if this be well rendered angel, why is not that so rendered, Luke vii. 24. The ἀγγελοι of John being departed: it is, the messenger, and so it were better here, his messenger, than, his angel; for shall we suppose the faithful so ignorant, as to think an angel could not come in without knocking, and having doors opened? Besides, the apparition of an angel would have affrighted them greatly. Not to stick at this,

although we find no warrant in the word for assignment of a particular angel to every man, yet we acknowledge many angels appointed to that work. Matt. xviii. 10, "Their angels" (not their angel) "behold the face of my Father."

5. To guide and lead the godly in good and safe ways. Gen. xxiv. 7, "He shall send his angels before thee, and thou shalt take a wife unto my son from thence." So ver. 40, "He will send his angel with thee, and prosper thy way." The business of marriage is so weighty and honourable, that angels' presence and assistance is in it: angels are present and preside over that work. Psal. xci. 11, 12, they are charged to keep thee in all thy ways, to bear thee up in their arms; that is, their strength shall be employed to uphold and lead thee in a good way. God begets children to himself by the word and Spirit, and puts them forth to angels to nurse, to guide, and lead; it is a metaphor taken from nurses, that bear their children upon their arms, and lift them over thresholds. Exod. xxxii. 24, "Behold," saith God to Moses, "my angel shall go before thee;" he was to go to Canaan, and an angel was to lead him that way. ^{Angeli reges, et Domini eorum sunt quos regunt.} Angels are well acquainted with the ways to heaven; if you will go that way, you are sure to meet with angels.

6. To comfort. Next to Christ and the Spirit, angels are the best comforters, because they stand nearest God always, before his face, and they are sent to comfort God's servants, when in straits, under pressures. Mary was a poor maid, of mean condition, and to her comes an angel. Luke i. 30, "Fear not, Mary; thou hast found favour with God." So Cornelius, "Thy prayers and alms are come up a memorial before God," Acts x. 4. When the ship was tossed, waves, winds, and darkness conspired their ruin, then saith Paul, An angel stood by me, and said, Fear not, Paul, God hath given thee thy life, and the lives of all with thee, wherefore be of good cheer, Acts xxvii. 23—25. He had drank a cup of angelical consolation, and knew well to comfort them with the same consolation. When Daniel fasted and prayed, and was much afflicted for his people, "O Daniel, a man greatly beloved, understand the words that I speak unto thee; for unto thee am I now sent.—Fear not, Daniel," Dan. x. 11, 12. Mary rises early, and meets with angels that comforted her, John xx. An angel appeared to Christ and strengthened him, Luke xxii. 43; the servant comforted the Master.

7. To look unto the souls of men, that they fall not into the hands of devils at their death; for if the devil durst contend with Michael for the body of Moses, much more for the souls of men. Luke xvi. 22. Lazarus's soul was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: men carry the body to the ground, but angels carry the soul to glory, they guard it through the clouds into the presence of the blessed God: before he had none but dogs to pity him, now he hath angels to attend him. The devil is mighty busy while we live, he goes about like a roaring lion, but at death then he is most busy, and presumes there is a tree cut down for his fire.

8. They are God's reapers at the end of the world. Matt. xxiv. 31, "He shall send his angels, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of the world to another;" they must blow that terrible trumpet, awaken the dead, and cite them to judgment; they must gather the ashes of saints together. Matt. xiii. 41, 42, "The Son of man shall send his angels, and they shall." &c. Basil, in his Homily of Forty Martyrs, tells of one that seeing them thrust in a winter's night into a cold lake, he saw angels descend, and putting crowns upon all their heads, but one.

9. To declare kingdoms, cities, people cursed. Judg. v. 23, Curse ye Meroz bitterly, said the angel A Lapid, in lo- of the Lord, because they came not out cum. to help, &c. Some think this angel was Michael, who was general in this war, but that is the opinion of men, not the warrant of Scripture.

10. The angels have work and power in the church of God. Rev. xv. 6, "Seven angels came out of the temple;" and chap. xiv. 15, 17, "Another angel came out of the temple." Angels being in the temple is often spoken of, and notes some power that they have in the assemblies under the gospel. Zech. iii. The stone with seven eyes, some make to be Christ with his angels that are employed for the government of the church throughout the world; and surely Michael and his angels do contend daily in the assemblies against the dragon and his. In the assemblies devils are present and active; Satan stood at Joshua's right hand to resist him, to hinder all the temple work. When we are near God, devils are near us, intending mischief: but angels are at hand, and hinder their designs; they observe us, and our carriages in the congregation. Eccl. v. 6, make not vows, and then slight them, there is an angel present; and it will not be enough to say it was an error, God will be angry, and an angel may smite thee for it: this is spoken of us, when we are in the house of God, there the angels keep special watch.

Josephus saith, that the voice of an angel was heard out of the temple, saying, Let us leave these seats; they had a place in the church as well as the others. And again, he saith, the angels were the keepers of the Jewish people, and that a little before the Romans' coming was heard a voice out of the temple, Let us go hence: and a heathen writer saith, that a voice greater than man's was heard, That the gods were departing.

Ver. 6. And every one had four faces, and every one had four wings.

Now we come to their several parts; and first of their faces, which are mentioned here in the 8th and 10th verses. Every one had four faces, and the likeness of their faces were:

- 1. The face of a man.
- 2. Of a lion.
- 3. Of an ox.
- 4. Of an eagle.

In some pictures you may see several faces, so drawn they are, that which way soever you look, a several face is presented; so here, before was the face of a man, behind of an eagle, on the right side of a lion, and on the left side of an ox: here is not a face but is compared to the face of some principal creature; man is the chief of all the rest; a lion is the king of wild beasts; the ox is the chief of tame ones; and the eagle, of birds.

The face of a man represents to us the understandings of angels, and that their administrations are with knowledge and equity; of this we have already spoken.

This face is put, first, to show the excellency of reason, which must have the introduction into and managing of all actions, else they are neither human nor angelical.

By this face also is noted their love to mankind.

Angels are of a loving nature, and most careful of men; therefore it is said, Heb. i. 14, They are ministering spirits sent out, &c.

The face of a lion signifies the strength of angels. A lion is a creature of great strength; Prov. xxx. 30, "The strongest among beasts, and turneth not away for any;" he never flies or fears: Arist. nunquam fugit aut metuit. Isa. xxxi. 4, If a multitude of shepherds be called forth, he will not be afraid of them, nor abase himself at their noise; and Judg. xiv. 18, "What is stronger than a lion?" said the interpreter of Samson's riddle; and we may say, Among all creatures, what is stronger than an angel? The Scripture calls the devil, the strong one, τὸν ἰσχυρόν. Matt. xii. 29, and so it calls the angel,

Rev. x. 1, "I saw a mighty angel;" and they are very mighty: an angel can hinder the blowing of the wind, Rev. vii. 1; stop the mouths of lions, Dan. vi. 22; break iron chains, open prison doors, and iron gates, Acts xii.; an angel can smite with blindness, Gen. xix. 11; 2 Kings vi. 18; both Sodomites and Syrians were so smitten. Angels work upon the fancy, Matt. ii. 13, 19, 20, suggest many things of great and good use to the mind: for if devils can take the word out of our minds, sow tares in the field, Luke viii. 12; Matt. xiii. 24, 25, put devilish thoughts into the heart, John xiii. 2, work powerfully in the heart of the disobedient, Eph. ii. 1, and trouble their spirits, 1 Sam. xvi. 15; I see not but good angels may do as much, being more potent than they. Rev. xii. Michael and his angels overcame the dragon and his; and Psal. ciii. 20, they excel in strength; they are called exercitus celestis, the heavenly host, Luke ii. 13; one can do more than a great army; one slew 185,000 in a night, 2 Kings xix. 35. They are bellatores fortissimi, and have appeared most valiant warriors. David saw an angel with a sword in his hand stretched over Jerusalem, 2 Chron. xxi. 16. Elisha saw them with horses and chariots of fire, 2 Kings vi. 17. As such, angels are God's militia; "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels," Psal. lxxviii. 17; they stand always before God, and can do whatever God wills and commands.

This consideration of the strength of angels should add to our comforts and God's praises. If a man be in danger, and have a strong convoy appointed by the king, he is secure, much comforted, and thankful too, that majesty hath appointed it, God hath given us the mighty angels, that are stronger than lions, to be our guard to convoy us through the wilderness of this world; let it multiply our comforts, and God's praises.

The next face is that of an ox; and it shows the willing obedience, faithfulness, patience, and usefulness of angels in their ministrations; for an ox accustomed to the yoke is very tractable, not stubborn, as untamed heifers are. Hos. x. 11, "Ephraim is as a heifer that is taught, and loves to tread out the corn;" a heifer taught, and delighting in her work, is willing to it; such are angels, Psal. ciii. 20. They hearken to the voice of his word, they look upon God as the great General, and if he give out the word, they give out their strength, and go about the work willingly. They are very attentive to his commands; if he says, Go smite Herod for his pride, Balaam for his covetousness, David for his vain-glory, Sennacherib for his blasphemy, and Sodom for its uncleanliness, presently they go.

2. Faithfulness. An ox doth faithful service; horses do oft deceive in their service, but an ox seldom, in ploughing or carrying of burdens. So angels are faithful in their ministrations, they fail not in the least particular: the angel would not let John worship him; and the angels would not suffer Lot to linger in Sodom.

3. Patience. An ox is a patient creature; what burden soever is laid upon him, or what work soever he is employed in, the ox is not impatient: so the angels, they are patient in their ministrations, though they meet with much opposition. The prince of Persia withstood Gabriel twenty-one days, Dan. x. 13. In the midst of oppositions and great services, they are without all impatience: though their work never end, Rev. iv. 8, yet they never complain.

4. Usefulness. Prov. xiv. 4, "Much increase is by the strength of the ox." No creature more useful to the support of a family than the ox; for of old, all the ploughing was by oxen. Elijah finds Elisha ploughing with twelve yoke of oxen, 1 Kings xix. 19. And Job had five hundred yoke of oxen; and it is said, they were ploughing, Job i. 3, 14; no mention of horses: and in some places of this kingdom they make greatest use of oxen. By their strength, kingdoms and families are maintained. Therefore, Moses, Deut. iii. 17, compares Joseph to the bullock or ox, because he sustained his father's family and Egypt with corn. Exod. xxii. 1, if an ox or sheep were stolen, and so killed, or sold, the thief was to restore five for the ox, four for the sheep; and the reason was, because of the usefulness of those creatures; they served for sacrifice to God, to plough the earth, to feed and clothe the family; in other things they were to restore only double. David makes it one part of the happiness of a commonwealth, that the oxen be strong to labour, Psal. cxliv. 14. Oxen are needful and useful creatures; and angels herein resemble oxen, they are ministering spirits, sent out for the service of God's family, they live not to themselves, but to the public. In the Revelation you may read what great services the angels are employed in; they sound the trumpets, and pour out the vials of God's wrath; they preserve the saints from the violence of devils and devilish men.

This instructs man to be like angels in these qualities; if God command, call for any duty, to be obedient, yielding, and to say, with Samuel, Here I am, speak, Lord, thy servant is willing to hear, ready to obey. And when we are in the service, let us be faithful, do it conscientiously; let us be patient, although we meet with delays, oppositions, reproaches, and loss; let us be serviceable and profitable to others. Angels have no benefit by their ministrations, God hath the glory, and man the good.

The last face is of an eagle, and in it, as in a glass, we may see the perspicaciousness, swiftness, and vivacity of the angels; for these three are in eagles observable.

1. They are quick-sighted; Job xxxix. 29, "Her eyes behold afar off," speaking of the eagle: from the top of the rocks, out of the clouds, they are said to behold fishes swimming in the seas, so strong is their sight, that they soar aloft, and can a long time behold the sun with open and stedfast eyes. Sealiger hath seen it in a tamed eagle. A man of acute parts, that can see quick and far into matters, we say he is eagle-eyed; the angels are not wanting in this particular, they are quick-sighted, 2 Sam. xiv. 20. And Rev. iv. 6, the four beasts there mentioned, being the same here in Ezekiel, are said to be "full of eyes before and behind;" and in the 8th verse, "full of eyes within;" they have much natural knowledge, much revealed knowledge, set out by their eyes within, and much experimental knowledge coming in by their observation and deep insight into things, noted by their eyes before and behind; they soar aloft, stand before God, behold the face of God always, Matt. xviii. 10.

2. Eagles are swift in their flight; 2 Sam. i. 23, "Swifter than eagles;" Lam. iv. 19. and Job ix. 26, "The eagle maketh haste to the prey." Pindar calls the eagle the queen of birds, for her swiftness, no fowl flies more swiftly than the eagle; hence, when things were to be done suddenly, the Scripture mentioneth the eagle; Hos. viii. 1, "He shall come as an eagle against the house of the Lord;" that is, Nebuchadnezzar shall come suddenly. Angels are no dull creatures; in a night the destroying angel slew all the first-born in Egypt; in a night, 185,000 in the camp of Semmatherib; and Dan. ix. 21, Gabriel came flying swiftly to Daniel; "and suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host," Luke ii. 13.

3. Eagles are fresh and lively always, age and sickness works not upon them as upon other birds; the eagle in her age is youthful; how then doth she die? Pliny tells us, that it is neither age nor sickness that kills the eagle, Nec annis debilitatur, nec morbis obnoxia est. but hunger; the upper bill groweth so over the under, that she cannot open her mouth to take in sustenance, and so dies. Psal. ciii. 5, "Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's;" the eagle is renewed by the oft change of her feathers. The cherubims before the mercy-seat (which represented the angels) were without beards, to show their vigour, vivacity, and eternity. Angels never grow old, they are always lusty and lively, their service doth not wear them out; it is man's sin that withers and consumes him more than his work. Adam should never have looked old, never have decayed, but retained an immortal vivacity, if he had not sinned. Angels are lively in their service, not dull.

Obs. 1. That angels are fit for public and great service; they have four faces, a man's, a lion's, an ox's, an eagle's, which tells us they have all that is requisite to great undertakings. They have wisdom to consult, to contrive and manage the affairs of the world prudentially; they have the strength of a lion to execute, they have the willingness and faithfulness of the ox to rejoice the heart of the commander, patience to undergo the difficulties of the work, and usefulness for the public. They are quick-sighted to discern and prevent the designs of enemies, and speedily to despatch much in a little time, and that with cheerfulness; this is meant by their four faces, which notes their perfection and fitness for service in all parts of the world; in regard of which, and the prophet to whom this vision was made, they are said to have one face before, another behind, and on each side one; and that God doth use their service in all creatures rational and irrational; they have the shapes of men, birds, and beasts.

Obs. 2. That suitable persons ought to be employed in public and great services. God employs angels in the government of the world, who are wise, trusty, strong, and speedy; and you know what men God calls for in the state and church. Exod. xviii. 21, "Provide thou out of the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness, and place such over them to be rulers of thousands, hundreds, fifties, tens;" he must search amongst all the people for such, far and near, and if in one tribe he cannot find them, he must in another. The time hath been, that seniority, money, favour, friendship, have carried the great places in this city; but you have smarted for it; instead of good angels you have had ill spirits. Now I hope you will not look who hath most money, or best friends to support him, but most wisdom in his head, and zeal in his heart, and God on his side. Now I trust you will learn of God, and employ such as have the faces of men, lions, oxen, and eagles, men full of wisdom, courage, trust, serviceableness to the public, and of great despatch; such should be in the city, and in the army. So for the church, you know what men God points you to, 1 Tim. iii. and 1 Pet. v. God's bishops must not lord it over God's heritage, and exercise dominion over it; God's officers must not be prelatical; it is the fleece, and not the flock, that such men look after, unless it be to scatter, to wound their conscience, and suck their blood: some of that seet, instead of preaching to save souls, have only plotted to ruin kingdoms.

Obs. 3. That angels being noble and glorious creatures, disclaim not to do service to them that are far beneath themselves. Man at first, when in his glory, was under the angels; but now, since he sinned, he is fallen lower, as low as hell. Man is now a miserable, mortal creature, he hath a vile body, a defiled conscience, and a polluted soul; yet angels, that are styled gods, Psal. viii. 5, so is the original, that are cherubims of glory, Heb. ix. 5, that are holy, Matt. xxv. 31, elect, 1 Tim. v. 21, that are of the privy council of heaven, and the life-guard of God himself, Matt. xviii. 10; even these blessed creatures are not ashamed to serve us; though we have the scent of the earth and hell about us, though we do oft grieve and offend them with our sinful carriages, and the great God their Lord and Master, yet they despise us not, but cheerfully minister unto us. Would any great prince attend a mean man full of sores and vermin? if so, it argues wonderful humility. It is more that angels do, in waiting upon us. It is monstrous pride then in men that have parts, place, honour, greatness, grace, whatever it be, not to stoop to those that are inferior: thou hast not more worth in thee any way than an angel hath; and angels condescend to serve us: therefore let us not mind high things, but condescend to men of low estate, and not be wise in our own conceit, Rom. xii. 16.

Obs. 4. That God desires speed in his service. Angels are swift as eagles, and despatch great things in a little time; they know a dull, lazy motion is not the motion Heaven approves; Zech. ii. 4, saith one angel to another, "Run, speak to this young man;" going is not sufficient, where running can be had: Festina lente, Hasten by slow degrees, is not a motto for heaven's gates. In the worst work that ever was in the world, Christ calls for speed, "That thou doest, do quickly," John xiii. 27, when Judas was about his treason. Speed and life in businesses is commendable and acceptable: Matt. v. 25, "Agree with thine adversary quickly." Darius would have his decree done speedily, Ezra vi. 12; and God would have his decrees and will fulfilled, done with speed. Zech. viii. 21, it is God's will now, that you should help him against the mighty. When the temple was to be built, the people came so fast, brought in so much, that they were bid to stay, and that work of theirs was pleasing to God and man. We have a Babel to pull down, as well as a temple to build; can you be employed better? Luke xvi. you are stewards, and may quickly be called to account, be speedy in what you do.

In the 11th verse you have one thing more touching their faces, and that is, their faces were stretched upwards; "Thus were their faces." It is in your books, as if it had reference only to the former verse, and not to what follows in the eleventh; but Montanus and others, that render the Hebrew exactly, read it thus, But their faces and their wings were stretched upwards: it is true, they have the faces of men and beasts, but they are stretched upward, they looked up to him that sat upon the throne, which was Christ. The cherubims' faces, Exod. xxv. 20, 21, were towards the mercy-seat, and that was above upon the ark; so that there and here, the cherubims, these angels, look upward.

Obs. 1. That all creatures depend upon Christ; these angels have the faces of men, lions, oxen, eagles, and look up to him. If there were nothing in it but this, that angels in their own nature look up, it might convince us, that all inferior creatures do depend upon him, as well as those noble ones; but when they come in with the faces of other creatures looking up, it is clear evidence, that all depend upon Christ. Col. i. 16, 17, "By him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones, or dominions, or principalties, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him,—and by him all things do consist." He holds all in his hand, heaven and earth, men and angels, they all consist and subsist in him. Heb. i. 3, "He upholds all things by the word of his power."

Obs. 2. That in all our ministrations, we are to have our instructions and directions from Christ. Angels look up to him; if he speak, they hear, they move and act; if not, they stir not. Moses and Aaron did nothing in the state or church, without direction from God. Princes must look into the law of God continually, Deut. xvii. that they may do things warrantably: the centurion's soldiers and servants did come, go, and do at his appointment, not their own; and angels run not of their own heads, they will hear a word of command, have a commission from Christ, before they go. It is not enough that we be knowing, full of courage, quick to despatch much; a commission, a warrant from God we must have, else all our doing is nothing: if we do the will of God without knowing we are warranted by God to do it, it is rather sin than service. Prov. iii. 5, 6, "Lean not to thine own understanding;" let it be never so great, acute, clear, it is not beyond angels'; they look up to God, and so must thou; "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." Christ is the great Counsellor, and we must not in one or two, or some great exigence of business consult with him; but in all our ways, whatever we attempt for ourselves, families, state, or church, we must consult with him that sits upon the throne, and he will direct our paths. Most miscarry in their ways, or make little progress, because they consult not at all, or very little, with Christ; whereas if men did consult with Christ, and do all upon his warrant, upon a divine ground, they should never miscarry in their ways, but proceed further in the paths of godliness in a few weeks, than they did before in many years. When David had consulted with God, he could say, God was at his right hand, so that he should not be moved, Psa. xvi.

Obs. 3. That the pleasure of Christ is worthy our waiting for. Angels look up and attend what he will say, and make known unto them; these holy, glorious, and mighty creatures think not much to wait upon Christ, and exercise their patience till he please to reveal his mind. Christ is a great King, the only Counsellor, and his counsel of infinite worth, and it is not state, but equity, that all creatures wait upon him. Angels do it, and shall we grudge at it? Psal. cxxiii. 1, 2, "Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the heavens. Behold, as the eyes of servants look to the hand of their master, and as the eyes of a maiden to the hands of her mistress, so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God." He interprets the meaning of looking up, which is waiting upon God, for manifestation of himself. Psal. v. 3, David would direct his prayer to God, and look up; not down to the world, down to corruption, but up to God, what he would speak. Psal. lxxxv. 8, "I will hear what God the Lord will speak." Let the resolution of the prophet be thine, "I will look unto the Lord; I will wait for the God of my salvation; my God will hear me," Mic. vii. 7.

Obs. 4. That Christ is an object of admiration and adoration. The looking upwards is signum admirationis et typus reverentiae, a token of admiration and an example of reverence. The cherubims looked towards the mercy-seat, admiring and adoring him who was figured by it; and we lift up our faces towards heaven, when we admire and adore God; you have the phrase in Job xxii. 26, "Thou shalt have thy delight in the Almighty, and lift up thy face unto God;" that is, admire and adore that God thou delightest in. Where is most delight, there is most admiration and adoration. Christ is the delight of angels; when he was incarnate, they bowed down to pry into that mystery; and now he is glorified, they look up to admire him. There is still matter of admiration in Christ, all in him is not yet discovered; 2 Thess. i. 10, Christ shall come to be admired in all them that believe. As it is in a country when it is discovered, still new and new things are met with, so in Christ. The vision of Christ is compared to river water, and that is always new and fresh; and to a tree of life, with twelve manner of fruits every month, Rev. xxii. 1, 2. The vision and fruition of God is new, savoury, and pleasant unto them every month, day, and hour; and this is to angels as well as to any other. Christ also shall be adored; Heb. i. 6, "Let all the angels of God adore him:" they do look up, acknowledge him God, and tender to him that glory the Father hath, even adoration. He that was despised, rejected of men, the stone disallowed of the master builders, that we hid our faces from, and esteemed not, is the object of angels' adoration.

Obs. 5. That the service of Jesus Christ is honourable service. Angels do stretch up their faces and wait for it; and it is the glory of the angels, that they are ministering spirits sent out by Christ. Heb. i. 14, is a comparison between the glory of Christ and angels; and their glory is, that they are his servants. We think the service of great persons is an honour to us. Who is greater than Christ? All power in heaven and earth is given unto him, Matt. xxviii. And he is more honourable than all princes; he is King of kings, and must be honoured as the Father, John v. The apostles counted it their great honour to be servants of Christ; Paul, James, Jude, Peter, begin their epistles with it; they set it in the front, as the most honourable title. This service is liberty, not bondage; his Spirit is a Spirit of liberty, his law is a law of liberty; and, Rom. viii. 2, "The law of the spirit of life in Christ, hath made me free from the law of sin and death;" he that is not the servant of Christ, is the slave of Satan. This service is spiritual, profitable, honourable. David had rather be a door-keeper in Christ's house, than dwell in the tents of wickedness, Psal. lxxxviii. Luther said, he had rather fall with Christ than stand with Cæsar. John xii. 26, "If any man will serve me, him will my Father honour." If we serve Christ, angels are our fellow-servants, Rev. xxii. 9.

Obs. 6. That holy creatures have heavenly minds. Angels look up, and that in their employments, their eyes are fixed above upon the Lord Christ; and it is certain where there is holiness, it carries upward; water will rise as high as the spring, and so doth the water of the Spirit. Paul's conversation was in heaven, Phil. iii. 20. Rev. x. 2, an angel hath sea and earth under his feet; and Rev. xii. 1, the church hath the moon under her feet, all ceremonial worship, all mutables in the world; and saith, Cant. vii. 10, "I am my beloved's, and his desire is towards me." The church finding Christ's affection towards her, cannot but look out, and look up. Most men look downwards, and are neither like angels nor men, more like swine, worms, moles. Many are loth to come near God, lest he should say, "Put off thy shoes from thy feet," put off thy earthliness: if we would have God look down from heaven, we must look up to heaven. David said, "When I awake I am still with thee," Psal. cxxxix. 18. He was with God when he lay down, and with him when he awoke and rose.

The next thing is their wings, mentioned in the 6th verse, "every one had four wings;" and ver. 8, "under their wings on their four sides;" and in ver. 8, "they four had their faces and their wings;" and in ver. 9, "their wings were joined one to another;" ver. 11, "their wings were stretched upward, two of every one were joined one to another, and two covered their bodies."

Angels are set forth to us in Scripture with wings; here with four; in Isa. vi. and Rev. iv. with six wings each of them: and they are said to be winged, for the agility of their natures, and swift motion in executing their office. Tertullian saith, Every spirit is winged, they fly in a moment into any part of the world, to execute the commands of God. Gabriel came flying to Daniel, chap. ix. 21, and that swiftly.

Their wings are four, but the seraphims, in Isa. vi. and the four beasts, in Rev. iv. are set out by six wings each of them. A question hereupon arises, Why, the visions being correspondent, the angels here are described only with four wings. Answer. That pair of wings which is wanting here did cover the face of Isaiah's seraphims, and John's four beasts; for they, standing before the throne and face of God, were not able to behold such majesty, brightness, and glory with open face, although they were most pure creatures. We cannot look upon the sun in its strength and glory, but we cover our eyes with our hand; so they their faces with their wings. Now here was something instead of these wings, and did the office of those wings, and that was the firmament: ver. 22, "The likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creatures;" and ver. 26, "Above the firmament was the throne." This firmament interposed between the lustre of divine glory and their eyes, as the wings did in the prophet's and apostle's vision, and therefore here was no need of that pair of wings; they were not before the throne, but sub expanso, under the firmament, and to do works beneath the world.

Obs. That the glory and majesty of God is such as no eye can fully behold; there wings, here the firmament, is interposed between God and angels. When God came down upon mount Sinai, and manifested his majesty and glory, what said the people? "Speak thou to us, and not the Lord, lest we die." They could not endure the shining of Moses's face, much less the lustre and majesty of the Lord's; something must intervene, else man dies for it.

Touching the wings of these angels, three things are laid down: 1. The conjunction of their wings; 2. The execution of them; 3. The use.

The conjunction is in the 9th verse, " Their wings were joined one to another;" and ver. 11, " Two wings of every one were joined one to another." The extremity of their wings, when stretched out and ready to fly, did touch one another; so as they seemed to have but one wing.

Obs. 1. That there is mutual love and much agreement between the angels. The connexion of their wings, notes the connexion of their hearts; and the Hebrew is, As sisters that love one another entirely, and work together most sweetly, so are the angels, they love and labour together most sweetly; there be no divisions or distractions among them; what business soever is appointed, they all agree in. We men can hardly agree in any one business; so many men, so many minds. Sallust told Tully, that his mind was very changeable concerning the commonwealth; and it is true of most of us, what we allow now in matters of the state or church, we condemn anon, and so are at agreement neither with others, nor with ourselves; but angelical concord parallels, yea exceeds our discord; angels are all love, peace, and unity.

Obs. 2. That there is a blessed harmony in the works of God done by angels; their wings go evenly, jointly, not one before another, above another, divided any way, but there is unity and uniformity in all their actions and operations. Could we behold the actions and works of angels, we should see such glory and beauty, as never was seen in the works of men. If we look upon a building that is uniform, and every part proportionable, we are much taken with it: a garden that is drawn out exactly, and every thing in it set in order; an army that keepeth rank and posture, and proceeds in all things according to rule, how beautiful and comely are they! All the actions of angels are such; one runneth not before another, one is not divided from another, one disallows not what another doth; but their harmony and correspondency is such, that if a man could see the same, he would be ravished with the works of angels. Jam. iii. 16, " Where envying and strife is, there is confusion;" but among angels there is no envy, no strife, so no confusion.

Obs. 3. That we should join our helps for furtherance of the works of God. Angels join their wings, and afford help to each other to do the will of God; devils and wicked men join together against God and his ways; Psal. ii. 2, " The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord, and against his Anointed," &c. And good men should join together, their heads, their purses, and abilities whatsoever, to further God's work. If angels appear and put forth their wings to do the will of their God, let us appear and put forth our hands to do the work of our God.

The second thing about their wings is, they were stretched upwards; not let down, drawn up, resting upon their bodies, but extended as ready for service as might be, ver. 11.

This notes unto us the readiness of angels to do the will of Christ; their faces look up, attend their commands, and their wings are stretched out to fly about them as soon as they are made known; as a hawk that is upon the wing, watches till the fowl rise, and then falls upon her, and flies after her immediately. Angels are upon the wing before the command goes out, and when it is out, God shall not need to use motives or arguments to put them on. The manifestation of his will, is the strongest motive unto them; and it should be so with us. We pray that God's will may be done on earth as it is done in heaven; the mere manifestation of God's will therefore should prevail with us, as with angels: but let God manifest his will, bring forth his strong arguments to move us, yet we have no wings, or if wings, not stretched forth, or if stretched forth, we rather flag than fly with them.

The third thing is the covering of the wings, ver. 11, two covered their bodies, their thighs, and feet, Isa. vi. 2; that is, their uncomely parts, which are in Scripture phrase called " the feet." One wing did cover the forepart of their body, another their hinder parts.

Obs. 1. In this covering of their bodies, God propounds them as a pattern of chastity and modesty unto us: those parts are hid, which might, uncovered, argue irreverence of God, or concupiscence in them, or be offensive unto men. God loves chaste spirits, and chaste behaviours: the angels are very chaste, and would not have any indecent thing objected to divine view, whose authority and majesty they adore. No impure thing must come into the sight of God, therefore God ordered, Exod. xx. 26, that there must be no steps to his altar, lest the nakedness of the priests were discovered in their going up, and so offence given to God and man; and further, he appointed linen breeches to cover the priest's nakedness, Exod. xxviii. 42.

Obs. 2. It notes out to us that angelical nature is a thing hidden, and too high for us, while we are in our houses of clay, their natures are beyond the reach of man's brain; and that we are so far from the knowledge of God's face, nature, and ability to behold them, that we cannot know and behold the lowest parts, the very feet of angels, they are veiled up from us, as too transcendent for our capacities. We know not the natures of any creatures here below, not of a flower, a fly; we describe things, but do not, cannot define them. I would see the proudest of you all define the nature of a straw, as one preached in Cambridge to all the scholars: if we know not the nature of these visibles, of bodies, then much less of angels; and if not of angels, least of all of God.

Obs. 3. That men are apt to idolize choice instruments employed in God's service, and therefore the angels are covered with wings to prevent it. Such is the beauty, wisdom, strength, use, and celerity of angels in God's service, that man is apt to deify them. John falls down to worship before the feet of an angel, Rev. xxii. 8. And when Paul and Barnabas had healed a cripple, the Lycaonians said, " The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men," and they would have sacrificed to them, Acts xiv. And should the angels appear to us in their natures, without being covered up, we should take them to be gods; but they will not have that honour, they will hide their beauty and excellency, and desire the glory only be given to God.

The next thing we are to come unto, is their feet, in the seventh verse.

Ver. 7. And their feet were straight feet; the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot: and they sparkled like the colour of burnished brass.

" Straight feet." They were feet of men, and by a synecdoche, feet are put for legs and thighs. The Septuagint read it, Their thighs were right or straight; and therefore could not be the thighs or feet of beasts, which in the hams are with compass and not straight: they were neither bending inward nor outward, but straight as pillars. This shows to us,

1. That the ways of angels are all straight and right. Feet in Scripture are put for ways; inward of the soul, outward of the whole man. Prov. iv. 26, "Ponder the path of thy feet;" Psal. cxix. 105, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet;" that is, all my actions; and Eccles. v. 1, "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God;" that is, thy thoughts, affections, will, reason, and all within. Take the feet of angels for their thoughts, desires, wills, reason, actions, they are all right; there is no act of theirs void of reason, as the acts of brutes are; none done by rash motion or sudden passion, as too many of men's are: they go not without warrant, and when they go, they go in the way appointed of God, never turn out, but are exact, keeping to his will.

2. They are firm, constant in their resolutions, and service for God: that is noted by feet in Scripture; for feet are the basis and foundation of things. Exod. xxx. 28, "The laver and his foot;" that is, his basis whereon he rested: men's feet or legs are the foundation whereon the body rests. In Eccl. xii. 3, they are called "the strong men;" and Cant. v. 15, Christ's legs are said to be as pillars of marble; and Scaliger saith, that men's firmness is in their feet, on which the burden of the whole body directly depends. Here then we have the firmness and constancy of angels to go on in God's work; no burden can make them bow, no act, no force can put them out of the way, no weariness can make them sit still: angels will meet and stop Balaam, and give him commands: the angels will have Lot out of Sodom.

"The sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot." As it were the sole of a round foot, so the Hebrew signifieth, both round, and a calf that is fat, and hath round feet, smooth, round, and movable to carry any way. The Septuagint hath it, winged feet. Mercury, the poet's god, was painted with shoes which had wings.

This sets out to us, both the swiftness of angels, of which before, and also their usefulness to move any way to do service in any part of the world; like a bowl, or globe, which is equally disposed for motion into any of the four quarters of the world;

so are the angels ready to move any way upon every occasion and hint from Heaven. Man cannot do so; one man is fit for one service, not for all; one is fit for counsel, another for war, a third for sea, a fourth for land, &c.

They sparkled like the colour of burnished brass." Steel or brass being polished or burnished, shines very beautiful, and sends out eye-dazzling beams, such as have much glory in them: and by this colour of their feet, we are led into these observations.

Obs. 1. That the angels are unpolluted in all their ministrations; they contract no filth, no soil to their feet. When they are in motion they are pure spirits, act purely, and abide most pure; their feet are like polished, not polluted, burnished, not blemished, brass; and so hold forth to us an example of purity in our ministrations, that we should be conversant in them so as to be unblemished. 1 Tim. ii. 8, "Lifting up holy hands," &c. 2 Pet. iii. 11, "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all manner of holy conversation?" here it is answered, Like angels.

Obs. 2. That the works of God by angels or men done rightly, with a straight foot, that is, done ac-ording to God's will, have much glory and efficacy in them; they shine like the polished brass, there is their glory; and sparkle, there is their efficacy. When the angel destroyed Sennacherib's host, what glory and efficacy was in that work! When the angel came to Manoah, and went up from him in a flame of fire, how glorious was this sight, how efficacious was the work in the heart of Manoah! John preached the truth with a right foot, and without delay, when called to it; "and he was a burning and a shining light," John v. 35. Herod found him so: Mark vi. 20, He "feared John, knowing he was a just and holy man;" the glory of his justice and holiness shined into his head, and the power of them affected his heart; he knew, he feared. Actions done according to God's will, hold forth much of God in them. 1 Cor. xiv. 24, if any unbeliever come in and hear them prophesy, that is, according to the mind of God, carry the action as becomes the church and the presence of God, he is convinced, and almost converted, and saith, God is in you of a truth: he sees so much glory, feels so much power, that he can contain no longer, &c. Isa. lii. 7, their feet are beautiful to your eyes, and their actions are efficacious in your hearts. God's will is the standard and measure of all actions, and when they are done according to it, they are very glorious and beautiful.

Obs. 3. That they are cheerful in the ways and works of God: they go not dully about their service, their feet do shine; they have more delight in doing one act of God's will, than we have in doing all the natural acts of our lives. You shall find them in a sweet posture and frame always; Rev. iv. 9, they give glory, honour, and thanks to God; and Rev. v. they are brought in singing, and singing a new song, which notes their cheerfulness, and earnestness in it: so in Luke ii. 13, 14, angels are the choristers of heaven, they make heaven heavenly.

The last part they are described by, is, their hands.

Ver. 8. They had the hands of a man under their wings.

Some would make sixteen hands to each living creature or face, but that is not likely; we find no number set down, and therefore will be content to leave that undisputed, whether two, four, eight, or sixteen: hands they had, and hands of a man; and that under their wings, on their four sides.

The hand notes action; Eccl. ix. 10, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might;" so Prov. iii. 27. The philosopher calls it, The instrument of instruments; and ^{ἑργων ὑπονομα} Arist. 3. de Anima saith, God hath given to man two special organs, to the body the hand, to the soul reason: and look, what use reason is to the soul, the hand is of the like use to the body; yea, soul, reason, body, are all beholden to the hand for the service that it doth; the great things in families, cities, kingdoms are done by the hand. Scaliger saith, ^{Scal. Exercit. 259.} Nature hath armed man with three things, reason, speech, hands. Reason is the hand of the understanding; speech the hand of reason; and hand the executrix of speech, that doth the commands; all things would be as dead, if the hand did not quicken them by the spirit and motion of art.

Obs. 1. That angels are fit for service; they have hands; and hands are not made in vain, they are for work: where there are no hands, no power, strength, or way to put forth that power, there is no fitness for service; but angels have power, and ways to execute that power; they have hands, not for ornament, but for action.

Obs. 2. That angels do their works rationally, they have the hands of a man. As men do manage the works of their hands judiciously and wisely, so do angels; there is nothing defective, superfluous, perverse, rash, indiscreet, or culpable in their ministrations, they know all circumstances, and miss not in any. How wisely did the angel manage the business with Mary! Luke i. 28; he salutes her, she fears; in the 30th verse he comforts her, and tells her, she should conceive, and have such a son as never woman had; and when she doubted of it, ver. 34, "How shall this be, seeing I know not man?" ver. 35, the angel tells her, "The Holy Ghost," &c. And further, see the wisdom of the angel; he tells her, ver. 36, that her cousin Elisabeth had conceived a son in her old age, and that was the sixth month with her, and however thou thinkest it impossible for thee that art young without man to conceive, and for her that is old with man to conceive, ver. 37, yet nothing is impossible with God.

Obs. 3. That knowledge must issue into actions. Angels are full of eyes, and full of hands too, their actions are answerable to their knowledge; Rev. iv. 8, "They are full of eyes within, and they rest not day and night;" if they have no service in the world beneath, they will be praising God above; they know much, and therefore act much. Knowledge without practice is little worth; if hid from others, it is as nothing, as not being, saith the poet. Unless knowledge be improved, it is of no account; the Egyptians painted a tongue, and a hand under it, to show that knowledge and speech is efficacious and good, when that which is known and said is done. What good doth the unpractical speech of golden-tongued men. Let men be Chrysolostoms, golden-headed and golden-mouthed, if they be not golden-handed too, it is nothing. God would not have us all eye, and rest in knowledge: John xiii. 17, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them;" and Rev. xxii. 14, "Blessed are they that do his commands, that they may have right to the tree of life." Happiness is entailed to doing, not knowing; and the angels seem to find greater happiness in doing God's commands abroad in the world, than standing always in his presence. Psal. ciii. 20, they hearken unto the voice of his word, if he bid them go they are gone, and account it their greatest honour to be doing; they have hands, and would not be idle. Knowledge without action, is a man without arms; it is wine shut up in the vessel, that doth good to none, and will corrupt at last, and mar the vessel; such knowledge will be like the poison that lies long in the body, and at last kills without remedy.

Obs. 4. That angels are great agents, and do much service. They have hands on their four sides, at least they had four hands, and they were able to do much and great service; some make more, and no hand of theirs is idle. One angel can do more than thousands of men, witness that great slaughter in a night, and other things formerly spoken of. Briareus, a great doer, is said to have a hundred hands.

Obs. 5. That God doth carry on his works here in the world by invisible virtue, by hands under wings, by ways and means not seen. There is vis plastica, forming power, in the womb, which shapes and perfects the birth, yet is not seen; and in the womb of the world, God hath the same, which forms and perfects his works, yet not seen: much is done by the power of angels, yet their power is not seen. Mighty things are done by God's Spirit in the ordinances, in the assembly, in our hearts, and yet God's Spirit is an invisible agent; the minister, the word, would not do it, unless some invisible virtue went along therewith. Zech. iv. 2, 3, though none were found to pour oil into the lamps, yet God had olive trees which were not thought of, nor seen. Zechariah saw not the candlestick, bowl, lamps, or two olive trees, till the angel awakened him, and made him see, that God had ways to communicate virtue unto the church he knew not of; and that though the church were poor, low, not able to make a considerable army to carry them to Jerusalem, and plant them there, yet he had his Spirit to work it out for them; and therefore saith, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit." 2 Thess. ii. 8, the Lord shall consume antichrist by the spirit of his mouth: and so the two witnesses, fire goes out of their mouths and devours their adversaries, Rev. xi. 5, in an invisible way, by a secret work. It was a hand under the wing that made peace betwixt Scotland and us, that gathered this parliament, that hath, and doth keep it; it is invisible virtue that hath made them unanimous and magnanimous; invisible virtue that upholds this kingdom, that restrains the remainder of wrath, that daunts the adversary; that hath shaken the prelacy, and brought forth the great things in our days; it is the hand under the wing that hath opened the hearts and purses of many to further the great service in hand.

Obs. 6. That we are to do God's works without noise or notice of ourselves. Angels, that are agents for God, have their hands under their wings; their actions are seen, but not their hands. In Judg. xiii. when Manoah catechised the angel, and asked him, "What is thy name?" ver. 17; the angel would not tell him, but said, "Why askest thou thus after my name, seeing it is secret?" ver. 18. And you shall not find the names of above two angels in Scripture, Gabriel and Michael. Angels are jealous of God's glory, and had rather conceal their hands and names, than God should lose the least degree of his glory; for Manoah would therefore have known his name, that he might have honoured the angel afterward: and we are very apt to look at the instrument, and neglect the principal. It is wisdom to muffle up ourselves, and to hold forth God as much as may be: Matt. v. 16, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works," &c.; he doth not say, that they may see you, but see your good works, and glorify your Father, not you. As fishers, they would have the bait seen, not themselves: they would catch the fish with their bait, not scare them with their sight. Matt. vi. 1, "Take heed you do not your alms before men, to be seen of them:" alms must be given, but we and our hands must be hid. Paul exhorts the Philippians to hold forth the word of life, Phil. ii. 16; not themselves, but the word of God, which is the word of life.

Obs. 7. That their operations and presence are together. They are not in heaven, and so work on earth, or in one part of the world and work in another; but their hands are under their wings; whither their wings do carry them, there they act, and not elsewhere. The angel came down to stir the water in the pool, John v. 4, and cure the party that stepped in first; they have not that power to work at any distance.

Obs. 8. That angelical virtue and nature is hid from us, it is too high for our capacity; their hands, their operative virtue, we cannot discover, or see into. A little of the angels is presented to us by their faces, wings, feet, hands, &c.; but the distinct knowledge of angels as angels is reserved till we are like the angels in heaven. Therefore we must not intrude into those things which we have not seen, vainly puffed up with our fleshly minds, but be content to be ignorant of their natures, and many of their actions and excellences, till we come to glory.

Now from their parts we come to their motions; and it is said,

Ver. 9. They turned not when they went; they went every one straight forward.

Ver. 12. And they went every one straight forward: whither the spirit was to go, they went; and they turned not when they went.

Ver. 14. And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.

“They turned not when they went.” Which way soever they moved, they turned neither face, wings, nor bodies, but went straight forward; there was no digression, regression, wandering, nor circulation, but their motion was straight, they moved in linea recta, in a straight line; they move, and move not impertinently, but directly. By this motion of angels, is set out God’s government in the world; they are his agents. Our prophet seems to cross himself. In ver. 14, it is said, “they ran and returned,” and ver. 17, “they returned not when they went;” here in this ver. 9, “they turned not when they went.” This knot must be loosed, or else our prophet will suffer.

The solution of this doubt is, that the angels being in their work appointed of God, went on without turning or looking back till they came to the issue and end of it, till they came to the place appointed, and then they returned unto God to give account of their service, and to receive new instructions. They went not back after the work was begun, but after it was ended: whatever difficulties interposed in the way, none of them could drive back, or divert the angels, till their work was done, and then they presently returned.

Obs. 1. That the works of God in ordering the things of the world are straight. Angels are as God’s hands, and in them is the agency of his work, and they go straight on, and there are no windings, no turnings in their operations: the works of God seem crooked to us, but there is nothing crooked in them. A carpenter that builds a house hath some pieces of timber long, some short, some bowing, some straight, of all which he builds a goodly house; but some rude, ignorant fellow understands not the reason of that diversity; and when the work is done there is nothing seen defective, but all is straight and perfect: so in the works of Providence and divine dispensations in the world, they seem crooked, (and therefore some have called providence crooked and winding,) but no such thing is in them. Psal. xviii. 30, “His ways are perfect.” Deut. xxxii. 4, “His work is perfect.” Examine the works of creation, providence, redemption, they are without obliquity, deformity, or defect; but men are not so: and the reason is given, “for all his ways are judgment,” that is, all his administrations, all his doings, are judicious, right, and equal.

Obs. 2. That angels persist in and carry on their work; they are constant and persevere, they turn not back, they give not over, but proceed to the end; they are not slothful, weary, unfaithful, but active, lively, holding on to the end. This may be useful to our thoughts. Angels go on, and are lively in their work; shall we be lazy? they persevere; shall we draw back, or turn aside? Lot’s wife looked back, and she was turned into a pillar of salt, Gen. xix. 26; she looked to the things behind, which was unwarrantable, and God did severely punish her; she had part of Sodom’s judgments, which were brimstone, salt, and burning, Deut. xxix. 23. And she was made a pillar of salt to season after-ages, with the fear not only of back-sliding, but also of back-looking. Josephus saith, he saw the pillar in his Antiq. l. 1. c. 12. days, which was near two thousand years after; but Borchardus, that lived some three hundred years since, saith, it was in his days. Adrichomius saith it is yet extant; and the Targum hath it, that it will endure to the day of judgment. Whether this material pillar be extant or not, is doubtful: Christ hath set up a spiritual pillar, that will endure to the end, to make us faithful to the end: “Remember Lot’s wife,” Luke xvii. 32. Look back, and die; go on in the ways and commandments of God, and live. It was the reproach of the Israelites, that they would have gone back to Egypt; and they died for it in the wilderness. Matt. x. “He that endures to the end shall be saved;” and Luke ix. 62, “No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of heaven.” A man ploughing, if he look back, endangers the oxen which plough, and must needs make crooked furrows, and mar all: so one that hath begun to plough in God’s field, if he look back, he is unfit for heaven. Exod. xvii. 12, “Moses’s hands were steady till the going down of the sun;” and so must ours, till the sun set, till our lives end. Gal. iv. 9, “How turn ye again to weak and beggarly elements?” Gal. v. 7, “Ye did run well.” It is dangerous when either of these come in against a people; but the godly have a promise, Jer. xxxii. 40, “I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me.”

Obs. 3. That they keep close to the work in hand, to what is enjoined, they לֹא יָסִיפוּ יֵצְאוּ They retched no compass. divert neither one way nor other; as they give not over, so they turn not aside upon any pretence whatsoever, but hasten to the execution of what is commanded. How un-angelical are we, that have such roving spirits in all our employments! Though we look not back, yet we look aside. God complains, “This people draw nigh with their lips, but their heart is far from me;” they are in my house, and in my work, but their hearts are in neither; they look towards me, as if they were my people, but their hearts look another way, as if they were worldlings, hypoerites; like watermen, they row one way, and look another. Ezek. xxxiii. 31, “With their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness:” we are too guilty of this evil, our hearts are seldom at home. What is said of the harlot’s feet, Prov. vii. 11, “They abide not in her house;” the same may be said of our hearts, they abide not in the house. When you walk abroad and keep the path, the spaniel that is with you ranges over much ground, and seldom is in the path; so it is with our hearts, we may be in the path of duties, but our hearts ranging over the world, heaven, and hell. Jam. v. 15, “Elias prayed earnestly;” in the original it is, he prayed in prayer, intimating, a man may be at prayer, in prayer, and yet be a prayerless man, not pray, and that because the heart is not in it: so in hearing, you may hear and not hear, &c. What is the reason Christ knocks at the door so oft, and is not let in? the heart is dead asleep, or abroad.

Obs. 4. That angels have the mark in their eye which they aim at. They went every one straight forward; the Hebrew is, Ad transitum, faciei suae aut tractum faciei suae obiectum. to the way or passage of his face, that path which was before his face; that is, they went thither where their eyes or faces were fixed; as they look not back nor aside, so they always look upon the mark, each goeth forward to that which is before him; this keeps them on to the work, and in the work, they have the mark in their eye: Prov. iv. 25, "Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eye-lids look straight before thee;" look to the charge appointed, to that which is right, to that which is set before thee of God, and this will quicken thy industry. Phil. iii. 13, 14, "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press towards the mark." Paul had not his eye upon what was done bygone, or on what was upon either side of him, but upon that which was before him, the mark: heaven, eternal life was the mark in his eye, and he pressed after them; he was

as intent upon them, and as pursuant of them, as he was in the work of persecuting the saints; he reached after them as the one thing necessary. We set not the mark before us; instead of heaven, Christ, eternal life, we have the world, our pleasures, and a multitude of things in our eyes, and so we are divided, and do

Obs. 5. That angels mind and pursue every one his own work, not the work of others. They went forward to the work, object, mark, set before their faces; he that had his work designed him in the east, minded not his work which lay in the west; each acted his own part, and fell not upon any thing that concerned another, although their employments lay the same way; what was before their faces, that they did, and nothing else. Devils compass the earth, and meddle with all men, and with all matters: it is not so with the good angels; they kept their station, and do keep order, they intermeddle not with ought that concerns them not. The apostle would have christians to be angelical: 1 Thess. iv. 11, "Study to do your own business," those things which concern our general and particular calling: if men will with their wit and curiosity run out of their bounds, they are extravagant and busy-bodies. Some think because they are neighbours, they may meddle in all contentions; because subjects, they may interpose in all state affairs; because christians, deal with others' sins: but this is to break the hedge, to break out of our own callings into others; and such, though they seem great doers, do nothing. 2 Thess. iii. 11, "There are some among you that walk disorderly, working not at all, they μὴ ἐργαζομένης, ἄλλα περιεργαζομένης.

are busy-bodies." What! busy and do nothing? Yes, because they do things impertinent unto them, unfruitful, unprofitable, out of place. When Peter meddled too far in John's matters; and said, "What shall this man do?" Christ takes him up sharply, "What is that to thee?" John xxi. 22. And some think this made Peter so sharp against that sin afterwards, and to look upon it as bad as theft and murder; 1 Pet. iv. 15, "Let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busy-body in other men's matters."

"They ran, and returned." Here is the quality of their motion; it was swift, they had wings to fly, and feet to run. Much hath been spoken of the angels' swiftness; I shall here therefore touch upon their return. When their work is done, they make no stay, they linger not at all, but return with all speed. When God sends them out, or calls them in, their motion is very speedy: it is set out here by a flash of lightning; that is the soonest into the world and out again of any sensible creature; in a moment it is in your houses; and out again, in a moment it shines from east to west, and is gone; it is very glorious and marvellously active. Angels are cherubins of glory,

Heb. ix. 5, and the most active of all God's works; and when their work is finished they retire immediately: as lightning, when it is come to its period, doth reciprocate and fall back into itself without delay; so do the angels return to him who sent them out, to know his further pleasure, and to do him more service.

Obs. 1. That angels in their services are glorious and terrible; they are like the lightning, which shines, dazzles, and doth dreadful things. Judg. xiii. 20, when Manoah and his wife saw the angel go up to heaven in a flame of fire, they fell down on their faces to the ground, and thought they should die, ver. 22. It was a received opinion among the Jews, that if they saw God or an angel, they should die upon it. Judg. vi. 22, 23, Gideon, a mighty man of valour, cries out, "Alas, O Lord God! because I have seen an angel of the Lord face to face. And the Lord said, Fear not: thou shalt not die." If they had a vision being awake, they apprehended death; but they never had experience of any that died upon any such occasion; this rose rather from the apprehension of glory and majesty in God and angels, and consciousness of their own weakness and guilt, as not able to abide the presence of those glorious creatures, that came immediately from the presence of the glorious God; and we find that some have been much affrighted, and almost struck dead, at the presence of the holy angels. Matt. xxviii. 2—4, an angel comes from heaven, whose countenance was like lightning, and his raiment as the sun, and for fear of him the keepers of the sepulchre did shake, and became like dead men; there was no spirit left in them, the glory of the angel did exanimate them. They are glorious and terrible in their ministrations; and so should the ministers of the gospel, the angels of the church, be. ^{Ερώτη σείο λόγος αστραπή δέ βίαια.} Nazianzen saith of Basil, His speech was like thunder, and his life lightning. Such were James and John, Boanerges, Sons of thunder, Mark iii. 17: they were terrible to sinners in their preaching, like thunder and lightning.

Obs. 2. That account is to be rendered to God of all our services. Whom God sets to work, he will reckon with. Angels return and become responsible to God their Lord and Master; those mighty and glorious creatures, when their work is finished, do willingly and cheerfully return, and give in their answer; God looks for it, and they delight to do it. And, account we must all give of our work in the world: Rom. xiv. 12, "Every one of us shall give account of himself unto God." God will say to us, Come, give account of your stewardships, Luke xvi. 2. Every one hath a talent, is a steward, hath some trust committed to him, and he must not think to run, and never return. Let men act how they will, return they shall, be they never so great, be they princes, magistrates, commanders, &c. Eccles. xii. "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or evil;" both the work and the workman must be questioned. Matt. xii. 36, "Of every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account in the day of judgment."

Obs. 3. That angels are lively and unweariable in their negotiations, they run and return as a flash of lightning; when they had done great service in the world, they were as lively at the end of it as at the beginning, they return back with as much life and speed as they went forth, and were ready for new employments; they returned, as to give account of what was done, so to receive new commands and work. This is a pattern for us all, that in the works of God, those employments he calls us to, we grow not weary. One sin fits for another, and men are unwearable in that trade; so one duty should fit for another, and we should never be tired in our spirits, though we be in our bodies. Gal. vi. 9, "Let us not be weary in well-doing." The wicked are

omni pacem magnum pondus habent recte ac-

weary of and in well-doing; What profit is it, say they, that we keep his commandments, and that we walk humbly before the Lord of hosts? Mal. iii. 14. "When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the sabbath, that we may set forth wheat?" Amos viii. 5. "He hath left off to be wise, and to do good," Psal. xxxvi. 3. They said, What a weariness is it! and snuffed at it, and brought that which was torn, lame, sick, Mal. i. 13. But the godly are never weary of God's work, though sometimes they are weary in it, through the strength of the flesh, weakness of grace, and other discouragements; but they, having tasted how gracious the Lord is, are not, will not, cannot be weary of his service; his commandments are not grievous to them.

Obs. 4. That they seek not themselves, but the honour and glory of their Master. They stay not when their work is done, upon pleasure, curiosity to see or know any thing, but immediately return, and are taken up wholly with the glorifying of God; they are attent, watching his commands, for they look up; they are intent upon his work, they turn not to either side, look not back, but go straight forward; they contend for his glory, they run, return, and give account, and would have new commissions, be at work again, and have God to be glorified to their utmost abilities. Isa. vi. 3, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory:" they see God so glorious, excellent, and holy in himself, so glorious in all his works, that they mind not themselves, but God, and make it their only and great design, to glorify God, Rev. iv. 8, 9. And this is our duty, and comfort if done. 1 Cor. x. 31, "Whether you eat or drink." &c. The glory of the infinite, holy, wise, and great God, should be precious to us; we should attend his commands, intend his work, contend against all lets, within or without, and promote his work and glory to our utmost. That work which is not referred to God's glory, but our gain, credit, or profit, is a dead work. The schoolmen call for a right intention in every work, as that which animates and enlivens the same; and though we cannot actually intend God's glory always in every thing, yet there should be a virtual intention of it. A bowl runs, an arrow flies, by virtue of that arm which first sent them forth; and all our actions should proceed in the strength of a primary intention of God's glory.

One thing yet remains touching the motion of angels, namely, the efficient cause of their motion; and it is the Spirit, set down in these words:

Ver. 12. Whither the spirit was to go, they went.

Some doubt there is, what is meant by the spirit here. Not the counsel or will of the angels; and so the sense to be, that they went which way they had a mind, whither their own wills and spirit carried them; and my reason is, because they are brought in here as servants and officers: and therefore not to be left to their own wills, but to be under command, and at the will of another; soldiers go not where they please, but where their general pleaseth. By spirit, we are to understand, neither the will of angels, nor winds, nor the soul of man. (for spirit in Scripture doth signify all these,) but the essential and eternal Spirit of God: and this is evident by the 20th verse, "Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went:" it is not said, whithersoever their spirit was to go, they went, but whithersoever the Spirit, that is, the Holy Ghost, co-essential and co-equal with the Father and the Son, whither that Spirit of wisdom and power led them, thither they went: when that Spirit bad them return, they returned; as that Spirit moved them, so they moved.

Object. The Spirit of God neither goes nor moves from place to place, being infinite; how then can this be meant of the Spirit?

Answer. This is spoken after the manner of men, in regard of the vision Ezekiel had, it seemed so to him: but the Spirit, being infinite, neither goes nor moves by real change of place or essence, but by declaration of its power and grace. When the Spirit, or God, doth that which is unusual, then they are said to come and be present. Again, the Spirit went in the angels, not simply in itself; there was in the angels imperium et impetus Spiritus, the imposition and impression of the Spirit, which carried them on.

Non mutatione loci, aut essentie, sed declaratione potentie et gratie.

Obs. 1. That angels, although exceeding wise, full of knowledge, active, and able to do great service, yet are not at their own disposal, they move not at their own pleasure, they went not where they listed. Let the abilities of the creature be never so excellent, they must be under the power of a superior, they must be ordered and directed by a higher cause. Angels themselves are not lords of themselves, they are not sui juris, at their own disposal; much less men, that are lower than angels. 1 Cor. vi. 19, men are bought, and they must be his servants, at his disposal, that hath bought them, and that is God; and therefore they must not abuse their bodies and souls to fornication, or any other sin, but glorify God with both.

Obs. 2. That it is the Spirit of God who is the great agent that sets angels to work; they perform nothing by their own virtue and strength, but at the command and impulse of the Spirit they act, they set out, proceed, finish, and return. As it is in a ship at sea, there are the winds without to drive it, and the pilot within to guide it to what place he pleaseth; so here is the command of the Spirit ab extra, externally, and the impetus intra, the inward influence, to carry out and order these. The great things angels have done, have been done by the Spirit of God: if they suggest good thoughts; if an angel strengthen Christ in his agony; if they reveal mysteries and things to come to Daniel and others; if they contend against princes, and agitate the great affairs of the kingdom: it is by virtue of the Spirit of God, that works efficaciously in them, and in good men, that are employed for the glory of God, and the public good of church or state. When choice garments were to be made for Aaron, Exod. xxviii. 3; xxxi. 3, cunning and carved work in gold, silver, and brass, was to be made for the tabernacle, it was the Spirit of God that enabled men for that service. When great things were to be done by the judges in Israel, it is said, The Spirit came upon them, and the Spirit moved them: Judg. iii. 10, the Spirit of the Lord came upon Othniel, and he judged Israel, and went out to war, and the Lord delivered the enemies into his hand, and his hand prevailed. So Jephthah, Judg. xi. 29, and Samson, chap. xiii. 25. The Spirit came upon them, and moved them, and they did great things; and this is set down to let us see, that it is the Spirit doth all in the magistracy, and in martial affairs, in city and camp; yea, and church too; Zech. iv. 6, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Oft mention is made of the Lord of hosts, and truths that concern the temple are sealed up with it in this prophet more than others; because there needed to such a work as building the temple, the power of a mighty God, so many, so mighty were the enemies; yet God would not do it by the might and power Zerubbabel had, but by his Spirit.

Obs. 3. That angels are led, and easily led by the Spirit. "They went;" it notes their tractableness; they went without dispute, without delay, immediately, cheerfully; and they went whither the Spirit was to go, that is, whither the Spirit would have them go. The Spirit is so infinitely wise, holy, and good, that even angels do freely and fully submit to the conduct of it; and therefore it is that they go straight forward, that there is no crookedness in their works; that they do such speedy and honourable service; and if such glorious, able, and perfect creatures be willingly led by the Spirit, shall we, that are base and beggarly, refuse the manuduction of the Spirit? If so, we forsake the choicest mercy: for, Rom. viii. 14, "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, are the sons of God," be they angels or men. It seems there are but few that are led by the Spirit of God, because he saith, "As many as are led," intimating all are not, few are. There are other spirits that lead men; there is a spirit of envy, Jam. iv. 5; of the world, 1 Cor. ii. 12; of whoredoms, Hos. iv. 12; of security, Isa. xxix. 10; a spirit of error, 1 John iv. 6; of antichrist, ver. 3: and by these most men are not only led, but driven, quenching, grieving, vexing, and resisting the good Spirit of God; more like devils than angels: but let us, when we have imperium, the government, or impetum motum, the suggested influence, or motum Spiritus, motion of the Spirit, let us say, whither the Spirit will have us go, we will go, what that will have us do, we will do. Offer up yourselves, freely and fully, to the conduct of the Spirit, and that will lead you into all truth, and into the land of uprightness. It is an argument you are of the world, if you receive not the Spirit of truth, and submit not to the guidance thereof, John xiv. 17.

Ver. 13. As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning.

The Hebrew word notes a torch or burning wood, where the fire and flame are more tenacious and strong; fire-brands, that are lively and flaming, heating and lightening.

In this verse is set out, not the figure and shape of the living creatures, that was done in the 10th verse, but the colour of their faces; which is described,

First, by similitudes.

1. They are likened to burning coals of fire.

2. To lamps.

Secondly, by the motion of it, "It went up and down among the living creatures."

Thirdly, by the operation and efficacy of it, "Lightning went forth of it."

For the better understanding of this dark verse, we must consider, that the Lord Jesus Christ, being exceedingly offended with the wickedness of the Jews, is presented in the vision to the prophet sitting as an angry Judge upon the throne, ready to take vengeance on them for their sins. They were idolatrour, oppressive, profane, ungrateful, slighting and persecuting the prophets; therefore Christ comes armed against them with zeal and fury, and suffer they must: hereupon the angels being inflamed with the zeal and indignation of their Lord and Master, are said to be like burning coals and lamps. When men have a holy anger against sin and sinners, and are zealous for God, how do their faces burn and glow, and their eyes sparkle! So was it here; the angels were affected much to see the Lord Christ so wronged by a company of sinful, wretched men; whereupon their colour became fiery, their faces burned with zeal, and their eyes sparkled, and they were ready to execute the sentence of the Judge upon this delinquent people.

"It went up and down among the living creatures." The fire and flame that stood not still, but was in perpetual motion, mithallecheheth, it made itself to walk of its own accord מהלכת and pleasure; it went up and down; it, that was fire, went up and down among those four formed creatures. Some make it the likeness and appearance itself that went up and down; but it is better to understand it of the fire, which is distinct from the likeness of the creatures, and it is the vigour of Christ's Spirit. Virtue came out from Christ, the King and Judge upon the throne, which was like fire and flame, to prepare, quicken, and actuate these spirits to a fuller execution of divine pleasure.

"It was light, and out of the fire went forth lightning." Here you have the operation of this fire. "It was light;" that is, it did enlighten the angels; they saw by this light what was to be done in this great design of Christ in saving the innocent and punishing the guilty. "Out of it went forth lightning;" that is, the effect of it was dreadful unto men, as lightning is: the judgments of Christ executed by angels in the world, work effectually for the benefit of the godly, and for the undoing of the wicked.

Obs. 1. That the Lord Christ doth use angels in the execution of his judgments upon sinners. An angel smote Herod, Sennacherib's host, Pharaoh's first-born, the Sodomites. Psal. xxxv. 5, 6, it is the angel of the Lord that chaseth and persecutes the wicked.

Obs. 2. That angels are zealous, forward, and effectual in executing judgments upon delinquents. They are burning coals; Heb. i. 7, they are called a "flame of fire." Fire is hot, and notes their zeal and forwardness; it is active and consuming, which notes their effectualness. Angels are like the fire that fell upon Eljah's sacrifice, which consumed the sacrifice, the wood, stones, dust, and licked up the water, 1 Kings xviii. 38. So effectual was that fire, that nothing could stand before it; and when the Lord Christ sends out angels, none can stand before them, they are so zealous of and effectual in the execution of his judgments. The wicked are but as the wood, stones, dust, and water; these flames of fire will consume them. This should quicken magistrates, and those that are armed with authority, to be zealous and forward in punishing malefactors, and executing judgment upon delinquents. Rom. xiii. 4, the sword is not given them in vain, they are revengers of God's quarrel, and it is angelical to execute wrath upon them that do evil. It was Saul's sin that he spared Agag, but Samuel's glory that he hewed him in pieces; he was zealous, forward, and effectual in it. So Asa, in removing his mother Maachah from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove, which he cut down, 2 Chron. xv. 16, and brake her idol in pieces, and burnt it. Those that are appointed of God to see justice done, if they do it not, become guilty themselves. Old Eli, a judge in Israel, because he was too partial towards his sons, God was angry, and his end was sad. Lewis XI. king of France, having pardoned a murderer twice, and suing again for his life, said, "What! dost thou ask pardon again? this is the third murder thou art guilty of." His fool standing by, said,

"The other two are thine, who didst pardon them, this is his first; had justice been executed then upon him, he would never have fallen into this." So another Lewis having pardoned a murderer, and afterward reading that in Psal. cvi. 3, "Blessed are they that keep judgment, and he that doth righteousness at all times;" presently recalled the Non minus cor- pardon, and said, "That prince which tam. Deo reus

est quam si ipse perpetrasset. doth not punish delinquents when he may, is no less guilty before the Lord, than if he himself had done the fact." Let those therefore that it concerns, be zealous of, ready to, and effectual in the execution of justice upon delinquents.

Obs. 3. That angels have new influence from Christ, suitable to the ministration they are to be employed in. Though angels be creatures of much knowledge, wisdom, strength, speed, and usefulness, yet when Christ is to employ them, they must have new virtue and influence. "It went up and down among the living creatures." Let them be as burning coals, they have need of more heat; let them be as lamps, they have need of more light; their services are great, and Christ contributes unto them continually: as they have new instructions, so new accessions and additions of virtue, which are needful to their callings and operations. If they have need of divine

larem vocations et effectiones eorum, sunt ne-

much more have we need of fresh supplies. John xv. 5. "Without me ye can do nothing:" he saith not, You may do something, or, You can do little, but plainly, "Without me ye can do nothing." It is the virtue and influence of Christ which enables angels and men to do the duties of their places and callings. Phil. iv. 13. "I can do all things through Christ that strengthens me:" when he that sits upon the throne sends out fire and flame, light and heat, to strengthen us, then can we do all things. 1 Cor. xii. 5, "There are differences of administrations, but the same Lord." It is the Lord Christ that points the administration of men and angels, that gives direction about them, with supplies of grace and strength, to exercise them. When we go about any employments of our general and particular callings, we should consider our own impotency, and look up to Christ, who hath all fulness, and is ready to send out virtue to supply all our wants: therefore Paul tells the Philippians, chap. iv. 19, "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

Obs. 4. That the divine virtue which comes from Christ, is an active thing, it went up and down, it rested not. Men have sought after the perpetual motion, and lo, here it is. This virtue acted continually in the angels; it went not by a transitive motion, from one angel to another, but the motion was immanent, continually acting in them; and therefore it is called fire, which is a living, active thing. The word of God was as fire. Jer. xx. 9, "His word was within mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay:" it overcame him, and quickened him up to his work when he thought to preach no more. Many a christian thinks to hear, pray, read, meditate, receive no more; but there is virtue gone out from Christ, that will walk up and down in them, and cause them to fall to it again. That virtue which comes forth from Christ, is no dull thing. 1 Cor. xv. 10, Paul had fire from Christ, and it set him a work; "I laboured more abundantly than they all." See how active he was, he exceeded all the rest of the apostles. And how came that about? what metal was he made off? He had fire from Christ; "It was not I, but the grace of God that was with me," that went up and down in him, and fired his affections and spirit. David, Psal. xxxix. thought to be silent, and not to speak any more before the wicked, even from good conference he refrained; but what was the issue? "My heart was hot within me;" the virtue and fire he had from Christ began to work; "while I was musing, the fire burned" and flamed out: "then I spake;" he could hold no longer. So Acts iv. 20, "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard."

Obs. 5. That actions done by divine virtue, afford light and lightning. The fire went up and down among the angels, put them upon execution of judgment; and from hence (these actions being so done) prove light and lightning to the world; they are seen, and seen far. They are light to the godly. When angels execute God's judgments upon sinners, the saints see much in it; they see matter of fear and praise: of fear, in that God's power, wrath, and hatred are manifested in them against sin and sinners; of praise, in that themselves are delivered, and justice is performed. Psal. lxxviii. 10, 11, "The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance; he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked." When the wicked are taken away by a divine stroke, by the hand of justice, and God hath the glory of his justice, the righteous rejoice at it: but is that all? no, "he washeth his feet in the blood of the wicked;" that is, by this judgment he fears and reforms. It is a metaphor taken from the practice of those parts, where they went barefoot, or with sandals, and so contracted much filth, and used to wash and cleanse their feet when they came in: so here, the godly, seeing the hand of God upon the wicked, fears, and judges himself for his sins, purges his conscience and affections, and stands now in awe of that God who hath stricken the wicked for those sins which he himself in part is guilty of. Waldus, a man of note in Lyons, seeing one struck dead in his presence, he washed his hands in his blood; for presently he gave alms to the poor, instructed his family in the true knowledge of God, and exhorted all that came unto him to repentance and holiness of life.

They are lightning to the wicked, that is, dreadful and confounding. In this work of executing judgment, as they are lamps to light the godly, so they are burning coals and lightning to destroy the wicked. How terrible was the destroying angel when the plague was in David's days! Rev. xvi. when the angels poured out their vials of wrath, how dreadful were they! Men blasphemed, and repented not, to give glory to God.

Vcr. 15. Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces.

We have done, through divine aid, two parts of the vision, and now are coming to the third, that of the wheels, which hath its darkness and difficulties; and here the glory of God in his providence is considerable from earthly things and second causes.

In the vision of the wheels, two things I shall present unto you.

First, the signification.

Secondly, the description of these wheels.

What these wheels may signify, there is great variety of opinions ; with all which I will not trouble you. Wheels, by a synecdoche, some think, is put for a chariot, in which God is presented to the prophet, guarded with angels on every side, who stand with great reverence and readiness to do his will : and by this chariot they understand the majesty, glory, providence, and kingdom of God, in which he rules all things at his pleasure, as a waggoner or pilot ; and by the wheels, the immensity, eternity, celerity, perspicacity, and efficacy of God in his operations. Some think by chariots is meant the church, and by the wheels, the apostles. These are thoughts of men ; we will therefore labour to give you the thoughts and intention of God's Spirit, so near as we can. By the wheels we are to understand this visible world, with all things in it, the kingdoms of the earth, and the church of God, and condition of all human things, which are all in motion and uncertain : and that this is the sense of the wheels may be gathered from the prophet in chap. x. 13, where it is said, " As for the wheels, it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel," O world. Their name is, The or this world : the word in the Hebrew is huggalgal, and not the same with the usual word for wheel ; and it is both substantively and distinctively used, and notes out this world in which we live, in which Ezekiel was ; it is not galgal, but haggalgal, which is demonstrative and distinguishing. Psal. lxxvii. 18, there is the same word, and it is not rendered, in the wheel, but in the heaven, or in the round, that is, the air ; and the Vulgate translates it, " The lightnings have shined in the world," and so the Septuagint. Seeing it is evident, that by the wheels is meant the world and things therein ; it is needful to examine the fitness of this comparison, and so to see the wisdom of God's Spirit in it.

Ipsis nomen vocatum est hic orbis, or, Ipsæ vocatæ sunt orbis. Jun.

Illuxerunt coruscationes orbis terræ, φωσὴ τῆς βροττικῆς σφæρας, τροχῶν, that is, τῆς σφæρας ; for the Greeks do absolutely take τροχῶν for the world. Hieron. in Jacob. 3. 6.

Orbe rotundato sidera quæque micant.

Obs. 1. The wheel or wheels are round ; such is the form of the world, it is called orbis, globus, an orb, a globe, from the roundness.

Obs. 2. A wheel is movable, and mutable, that part which is on high is presently at the bottom, and that which is at the bottom is quickly again at the top : and this informs us in the mobility and mutability of all human and mundane things, and is principally intended by this vision of the wheels : kingdoms, churches, families, voluntur, revolvuntur, are daily wheeled about, moved, changed, and never long permanent in any condition. The four great monarchies, the Babylonian, Persian, Grecian, Roman, how were they kicked like foot-balls, and tossed like tennis-balls from one to another, and at last devoured by each other ! After that great rent made in the house of David by Jeroboam, what changes, what wars and famines, were in the kingdoms of Judah and Israel, you find in the books of the Kings and Chronicles. You may see the relation of these wheels in one chapter. I Kings xvi. you will find, that in twelve or thirteen years of Asa's reign, king of Judah, there was the death of Baasha, Elah, Zimri, Tibni, Omri, that were wretched kings, and made fearful stirs and murders in Israel : and beside, wicked Ahab in that time began his reign, and troubled all Israel. The church, what a low ebb was it at in Elijah's days, when he complains, God's covenant is forsaken, his altars thrown down, his prophets slain, himself left alone, and his life also sought for ! I Kings xix. 14. The church now, when Ezekiel had this vision, was in captivity, without a temple, altar, sacrifice ; and the church is never long in any settled condition. Rev. viii. 1, " There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour." Under the ten fiery persecutions, the church had no rest, but in Constantine's times it had a little ; but presently the Arian heresy brake out, and did more mischief the church than all the persecutions before. The church is wheeled about from condition to condition ; sometimes it is in Egypt, sometimes in the wilderness, sometimes in Canaan, and sometimes in Babylon ; it is Noah's ark, that rides upon rough waters, and is not like to take harbour before Christ comes. So for families and persons, they are in a ^{Etas parentum} ^{propt. a. b. s. mox} ^{data prope} ^{nem vitiosorem.} ^{Horat. theatrop.} movable condition : Eccles. i. 4, " One generation passeth away, and another cometh ;" that goes, and a third hastens after them to the grave. I Cor. iv. 9, " We are made a spectacle to the world," a theatre ; that is, we come into the world, and act here a little while upon the stage of it, and presently we are gone ; kings, princes, and all conditions of men do so ; Noah and his generations are gone, David and his. If we come nearer ourselves, the Merovignian family was driven out by Pepin, son of Martel, and that family by Hugh Capet ; so that there have been three races of the royal line in France. The Plantagenets' race here is wholly gone, or lies in obscurity. Great is the uncertainty, motion, and mutation of the things in this world ; the wheels are up and down, and not consistent : Job is very rich and poor in one day ; Haman in great favour and under great displeasure in a wheel of time. There is a story very suitable to this vision of the wheels, and brought in by expositors to give light unto it, which I may not omit ; and it is of Sesostris a king of Egypt, who had a golden chariot, bedecked with many precious stones ; and when he rode in it, no meaner persons must draw it than four kings that he had conquered. One of the four cast his eye altogether upon the wheel, and being demanded the reason of it by Sesostris, said, I see in this wheel the mutability of all conditions ; that part of the wheel which is nearest heaven, is by and by upon the earth ; and the contrary, that which is upon the earth is presently again nearest heaven. This wrought so upon Sesostris, that he thought his condition might change, and therefore freed those kings from that servitude, and would not have his chariot drawn any more by them. Belisarius, general of Justinian's forces, overcame the Persians in the east, the Vandals in Africa, the Goths in Italy, and did extraordinary service, at last had his eyes put out, his whole estate taken away, and forced to beg of passengers without the gates of Rome : Da obolum Belisario, quem exultit virtus, cæcarit invidia. O give one farthing to Belisarius, whom his own virtue advanced, and others' envy hath blinded. Adonibezek, who sat upon the top of this wheel, was soon brought under : he had seventy kings with their thumbs and toes cut off, and put like dogs under his table to eat scraps ; and himself was made acquainted with that condition, Judg. i. 7. In the present affairs of Ireland, we may see the mystery of Ezekiel's wheel ; all things are running, moving, and working to a change. Jam. iii. 6, he calls it the ^{τὸν τροχὸν τῆς} ^{γενέσεως.} wheel of nature, or rather of this generation, showing, that the present generation is hastening out of the world.

Obs. 3. Wheels make in their motion a great noise and rattling. Joel ii. 5, " Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains ;" so the things in the world move not silently, but make a great stir and mighty noise. Rev. vi. 1, when the first seal was opened, and Christ rode abroad upon his white horse of the gospel, conquering the nations, there was as the noise of thunder, and stir and tumults were raised in kingdoms, and mighty oppositions were made in the world. When Christ shall judge the great whore, and avenge the blood of the saints, it will not be without noise: chap. xix. 6, "I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." There is the voice of the people like waters, a low and less noise; and there is the voice of parliament and armies, a greater, a thundering voice. The things now in motion in this kingdom and others, make a great thundering in the world; as in former days, between the houses of York and Lancaster were fought seventeen pitched fields, in which eight kings and princes perished, forty dukes, marquises, and earls, 200,000 of the people, besides barons and gentlemen; which things were not done without a great noise.

Obs. 4. Wheels are moved by some hand, and set on running, else they stir not: so this world is moved, acted, and governed by divine virtue. Things are carried in this world like wheels, up and down, backwards and forwards, as if all were left at six and seven, and hurried up and down by some blind chance or fortune; which we exclude, and only acknowledge all to be moved, ordered, and effected by Divine Providence. It is God that, by his providence and the ministry of his angels, sets all the wheels in the world in motion: a sparrow falls not to the ground, nor a hair off our heads, without his will.

Obs. 5. By the motion of the wheel many works are done. The potters of old made their vessels by the motion of the wheel, Jer. xviii. 3. By it the corn was ground, and justice was done: Prov. xxii. 26, "He bringeth the wheel over them;" that notes the punishment of evil doers: it is a metaphor from husbandmen, that, in hot countries, did by the help of a wheel break the ears of corn, Isa. xxviii. 28, and so get it out; and justice is the wheel that breaks men, and gets out the truth, and separates the chaff from the wheat. In some places a wheel hath been used to break the bones of sinners. Hence Tully saith, That an innocent life had nothing to do with the wheel. So that by the motion of the wheel much hath been done; and God, by the rotations and strange motions in the world, brings about great works. Dan. ix. 25, the walls of Jerusalem should be built in a troublous time. In the 8th, 9th, and 16th chapters of the Revelation, mention is made of trumpets and vials, which note great stir and changes in the world, and notable effects follow thereupon. We hope that the stir of our time are the preparation to the most glorious work of anti-christ's ruining, our reforming, Christ reigning, and the Jews' raising; old things are passing away, and all things are becoming new; old religion, viz. popery, old prelacy, old service and ceremonies, are going downwards, and they that led into captivity, are themselves a leading into captivity. Rev. xiii. 10.

Remark. The world and the things in it are not fit for us to fix our hearts upon. The world itself, and all in it, are of a wheeling nature, uncertain, movable, and running away: and the word גלגל a wheel, and the world, signifies also a mote, chaff, straw, any thing driven before the wind; and so it is used, Isa. xvii. 13, כנניל as a wheeling thing before the whirlwind; the margin renders it, as a thistle, or thorn; the one shows the vanity of the world, the other the vexation of it. Shall we let out our hearts to that which runs from us like a rolling thing, and if we overtake it, runs into us like a thorn? They that will be rich, catch the world, pierce themselves through with many sorrows, 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10, and break upon this wheel. Because it runs smoothly sometimes, men are taken with the motions of the world; but at length you shall find its motion rough, swift, ready to overthrow and break you all in pieces. They are broken in Ireland, and we are breaking here. Now let the apostle's counsel be acceptable: 1 Cor. vii. 29—31, "Brethren, the time is short: let them that have wives, be as if they had none; let them that weep, be as if they wept not; and them that rejoice, as if they rejoiced not; and them that buy, as if they possessed not; and them that use this ^{παρρησια} ^{πρωτευει} world, as not abusing it." And why ^{decept.} all this? "For the fashion," or show, "of this world passeth away." It acts otherwise than you expect; if you affect the world, wives, children, or any part of it, it will deceive you: you think to hold it, and it is but a shadow, no substance; and a shadow, a show, going away. Let us therefore not look at this wheel, but at him that moves the wheel; who is unchangeable, unmovable, of infinite being; in comparison of whom the world is a drop, a little dust. Let us with David say, "Whom have we in heaven but thee? and there is none in earth we desire in comparison of thee;" let us let go our hold of the world, draw in our affections from it, hopes after it, and look only after that city, Heb. xi. 10.

Having given you the signification of the wheels, the next thing premised, is the description of them. And now I come to the particular handling of the wheels, where we shall meet with difficulties and excellences.

Ver. 15, 16. Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces. The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto the colour of a beryl: and they four had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel.

In these verses they are described:

1. From their number, implied in the 15th, expressed in the 16th verse, "four."
2. The place where they were, and that is "the earth."
3. Their colour; they were "like a beryl."
4. Their likeness between themselves; "they four had one likeness."
5. Their form was, "as it were, a wheel in a wheel."

Touching the first, viz. the number of the wheels, they were four. Mention is made of one in the 15th verse, but it is one with four faces; not the faces of the four cherubims, but of four wheels; which wheels were so like, that they are said to be one wheel; he that saw one saw all. As in some picture of a prince, when we have seen the same in divers places, or oft in the same, we say, This is one and the same picture; so here, our prophet saith he saw all the wheels, but they were so like, that they might well be called one and the same; for the prophet mentions in the 16th verse, wheels, and four wheels, and one likeness of them. Here, by a figure called hypallage, we may make the sense more easy thus; there appeared one face in the four wheels, for, one wheel having four faces. In chap.

x. it is out of all dispute that there were four wheels. Ver. 9, "When I looked, behold the four wheels by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub."

These wheels being four, represent to us the four parts of the world, eastern, western, northern, southern; that in them are great stirs and changes.

The next thing in this verse, is the place; "I saw one wheel upon the earth." How could that be, when Ezekiel saw the vision in heaven?

Ans. This is a vision, and it appeared to him to be on the earth; not the true earth, but the earth in a vision: as in pictures, if a wheel, a chariot, a city, be drawn, and presented to the eye, they are presented as being upon the earth.

Obs. 1. That all inferior causes, wheels, instruments, agents whatsoever, are but as one wheel before the Lord. All things in the four quarters of the world were presented by God to the prophet as one wheel; to us they are many, mighty, divers, contrary, infinite, but unto God they are otherwise; all the armies, parliaments, kingdoms, crowns, agents in this world, are but one cause, one wheel, before the great God, they are a small thing to him. Isa. xl. 15—17, "Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance; behold, he taketh up the isles as a very little thing. Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, nor the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt-offering. All nations before him are as nothing; and they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity."

Obs. 2. That changes, stirs, and tumults, are here on the earth, not in heaven. The prophet saw the wheels on earth, not in heaven; there be no wheelings, no turnings, no troubles, no wars, no deaths, no diseases, no sins, no fears, no tears, no wicked men, no wicked thing, and so no changes. It is only the prerogative of Heaven, to say, "I am the Lord, I change not," Mal. iii. 6; the world cannot say it. Jan. i. 17, "With him is no variableness, or shadow of turning:" in God and heaven, there is nothing of the wheel, all is constant, immutable; but on earth it is contrary, the things under the sun are vanity, inconstancy, and change itself.

Obs. 3. That all the inferior agents and causes are at the disposal of the superior, of angels. They have a great interest in the government of the world; the wheel is by the living creatures, at their feet, to move and turn it which way they please; if they will bespeak wars in the north, or south, if they will have the world in an uproar, it is done. Angels are God's hands and deputies in the administration of all things here below: in the world God supports and subverts kingdoms by them. Dan. x. Gabriel tells Daniel, that he withstood the prince of Persia twenty-one days, and his counsellors that sought to oppress the people of God, and that he would go again and fight with him. Kingdoms, and the affairs of them, yea, the quarters of the world, under God, are ordered by angels; and while angelical and divine protection are over kingdoms, they prosper; but when God is provoked by the sins of a people, he leaves the wheels of that kingdom to men and devils, it runs to ruin. Then the princes and potentates are deluded with strong delusions, grow tyrannical, idolatrous, false, hostile, &c.; then the kingdom grows weak, without spirit, counsel, strength, success, and is infinitely entangled with difficulties, internal, and external; good counsels are slighted or opposed. opportunities of doing that kingdom good not discerned, dangers not foreseen, or put off without due consideration; blasphemers, traitors, oppressors, and enemies to public good, are set up; divisions, seditions, domestic wars, (if not foreign,) are made and maintained, and all things work strongly to ruin. It is observed by some, that there are more wars and desolations among christians than others; and the reason is given; their sins are greater than others, and provoke God to take away his own and angelical protection; they leave the wheels of kingdoms to men of corrupt minds, that move them wholly for private interests. This informs us of the honour and greatness of angels, that have the wheels of the world in their hands. We look upon them as great men, which have the command of some province or country; what then are angels, that have the rule of the whole world under God? Know, though their place be great, yet they are under command, and move not but as they are moved by the Spirit of God. Let us also take heed how we offend persons employed in such great services as they are.

Obs. 4. That there are turnings and wheelings in all estates and parts of the world. The four living creatures noted the four parts of the world, and their agencies in them and by them: now are presented the wheels; every living creature had a wheel by it: and this strongly implies that there are wheelings, turnings, and changes in all parts; yea, the very same that are in one part are at one time or other in another part. The wheels are alike. Are wars, plagues, famine in one country? they are, or will be, in another. Do men die here? so in all parts. Are men unfaithful now? so they were of old; in David's days he said, "Men of high degree are a lie, and men of low degree vanity," Psal. lxxii. 9. Are there unseasonable times here? such are abroad. Are things carried by violence, oppression, injustice here? so they are elsewhere. Are there designs, plots upon our kingdom and church? so there are upon others. Whatever befalls one state, befalls another, internally and externally. The wheels are the same, and move alike, though sometimes backward in one part of the world, and forward in another; there is no stability any where, but all things are changing. In vain then do men travel the world to find certainty and content in it; in vain do we go up and down, here and there, thinking to find settledness, and something satisfactory. The world is like itself every where; go east or west, and there is nothing but a wheel, and a wheel running. Solomon had tried all conditions; he had wealth, wisdom, and opportunities, for he saith, "Who shall come after the king?" intimating, that none can travel further than he did, to search and know the world and creatures, and all conditions: and what doth he conclude, but "Vanity of vanities?" that is, all is extreme and superlative vanity; and because men will not believe it, he doubles and trebles it, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity," Eccles. i. Take any place, or any thing in that place, it is vanity, empty, fruitless, inconstant; so far from satisfying, that it vexeth. Hence some have pictured Solomon upon a high hill, and all the world coming towards it, and climbing up, thinking to find happiness there; but he beats them down with a rod, saying, It is not here, it is not here. We must not look for stability, content, certainty, among the wheels, but above them: now it is not time to look about and abroad, but to look above the world and the wheels of it. Christ hath told us what is to be had in this world; and it is certain: "In the world," saith he, "you shall have tribulation." And do you not find it? surely now it is eminent and pungent. And he hath told us what is to be had in himself: "In me you shall have peace." If we have tribulation in the world, we may have peace in Christ.

Ver. 16. The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto the colour of a beryl: and they four had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel.

Here we have the colour, likeness, and form of the wheels to examine. First, their colour, (as for the work, that is, the matter whereof they were made, or the artificial form of them;) "Their colour and work was like the beryl:" the Hebrew is, as the eye, or colour, of הרשיש. The word Tarshish in Scripture sometimes notes a city, Jonah i. 3, sometimes a precious stone, Exod. xxviii. 20, it is the same word; and interpreters observe there is a sea also called Tarshish, Isa. ii. 16, and it is like to be that where the city Tarshish was; for Tarshish that Jonah fled to, was a sea town. When our prophet saith, "The colour was like the colour of Tarshish," he means not the city. The dispute is between the sea or a stone: some render it, as the colour or visions of the sea; others, as the colour of a precious stone: and then the query grows, what stone, whether of a chrysolite, a hyacinth, a crystal, or a beryl. That here is meant a stone, is determined by infallible testimony, even Scripture itself. Ezek. x. 9, "The appearance of the wheels was as the colour of a Tarshish stone;" and it is well rendered by our interpreters, a beryl stone; for neither the chrysolite nor hyacinth do discover a sea colour, the one being yellow, the other sky colour; and the scope of the wheels and description of them, is to possess us with the uncertainty and fluctuation of all things, which is lively set out by the sea: we are therefore to hold to the crystal or beryl. It is true, the crystal hath a watery colour, and its original from the water; yet it doth not so fully set out the sea colour as the beryl, which is a green stone, and they are counted best that have the sea-greens. The best rendering of this word Tarshish, is the sea beryl, because it hath altogether a sea colour, and reminds us of the sea, by whose floating condition the uncertainty of all things is laid before us.

Obs. 1. That the things here in this visible world are like unto the sea, uncertain and unstable as the waters of the sea; they are never quiet, but always rolling up and down from shore to shore, even in the greatest calm. These waters are in motion, and suddenly in a rage by virtue of the winds, which lift up the waves to heaven, and make all stormy and outrageous: there is no stability at all in these waters; and the world is as unstable as any sea, as Eurippus itself, that ebbs and flows seven times a day. All creatures are in motion, and tending to corruption; all conditions are full of changes and inconstancy. Who can tell how many inhabitants have been in some one street, in some one house, what wares have been brought in and sold out of some one shop? Men bless and curse, love and hate, in one day, in one hour: Amnon is sick for Tamar till his lust be satisfied, and then immediately hates her: Alasurus turns off Vashti, and entertains Esther: Reuben, Gen. xlix. 4, unstable as water: Pharaoh on the throne, anon in the bottom of the sea: Hezekiah healthy now, and hears by and by, "Set thy house in order, for thou shalt die:" Jerusalem besieged and freed in one night. In youth we are altogether for pleasure, in manhood for credit, in age for riches, as if thick clay must be our viaticum for heaven. We are fixed in nothing, and nothing is firm to us. What certainty is there in honours, riches, pleasures? What constancy in health, wealth, worship? What Seneeca said of a great city burnt, There is a day's difference between a great city and none; and the like may be said of most things and conditions.

Una dies interest inter maximum civitatem et nullam.

Obs. 2. Deceitful. The sea hath a pleasant colour to allure, it is greenish, which is most suitable unto the senses; and yet it deceives many, if not most: it fills with fears, it impoverisheth many, shipwrecks them, promiseth safety, and drowns thousands; oft it looks calm, and invites to come on, and being on, it becomes rough and ruinous. Hence the poet calls it, fallax profundum, the deceitful deep. A merchant carrying figs at sea, suffered shipwreck; and sitting by the sea-shore, beholding it pleasant and calm, said, Novi quid velis, ficus vis, You would have me again to venture through the deeps, but I will trust you no more: he spake wittily, and did wisely. We should prove as wise for this world. Trust it not, it is a deceitful thing; it promiseth content, but that cluster never grew on the world's thorns. The devil ever disquiets whom he possesses, and so doth the world: it promises pleasure, but pays with smart; Breve est quod delectat, æternum quod cruciat, An hour's pleasure and eternal torture. Dives' dainties now bite like a serpent, and sting like a cockatrice. The world promiseth much good, even to make them, its friends, happy; but it is otherwise. Achan's wedge of gold purchased the stones that beat out his brains; Judas's thirty pieces bought the halter that strangled him; Shechem's lust brought the sword upon himself and the city. It promises help in time of trouble; it rather sinks than helps; like a man in the sea with his pockets full of gold; it hastens his drowning, it helps him not to the shore. Prov. xi. 4, "Riches profit not." It tells us of continuance and abode with us; but here it gulls us greatly: the best thing the world hath, deals with us like false friends, they leave us in the lurch, and say, as the ten tribes to Rehoboam, "Look to thine house, David," 1 Kings xii. 16. Health saith, I must leave you, now look to yourselves. Riches take wings and fly away, eagles' wings, and fly with strength, Prov. xxiii. 5. Are not men's estates, liberties, honours, privileges now upon the wing? If Nebuchadnezzar be in the palace among his nobles, anon he is in the park among the beasts all night. As Jacob said of Laban, Gen. xxxi. 7, "Your father hath deceived me, and changed my wages ten times;" so may we say of the world, it hath, it will deceive us: we look for honour, it will change our wages, and give us disgrace; we look for riches, and it gives us poverty. Adonijah you may find in one day upon the throne and at the horns of the altar, 1 Kings i. 5, 50; he will be king, and have the lives of all in his hand, and before night he runs to secure his own life. It tells us of happiness, success, victory, life; but Zedekiah sees Jerusalem taken, his sons slain before his own face; then his eyes being put out, he is bound in fetters, and carried to Babylon. Good Josiah goes forth to battle, and he is slain: Ahab goes forth against the Assyrians, victory is promised him, but he is wounded, and dies of his wounds: Richard the third, after his cruelties, is slain in Bosworth field; and at the battle of Edge-hill, were not some taken, many wounded, and more slain? Joab pretended kindness to Amasa, but it proved cruelty; he kissed him, and killed him, 2 Sam. xx. Agag is hewn in pieces like an ox; Jezebel eaten by dogs, like a piece of carrion; Bajazet carried in an iron cage up and down the world by great Tamerlane. Trust it not, it is like Jael; she began with milk and butter, but ended with a nail and hammer. An emperor of Turkey married his daughter to a bashaw, and after one night's pleasure, sent for his head the next morning.

"They four had one likeness." All the wheels were equal, none higher than other, greater, lesser, but an even and suitable proportion between them all; no difference was to be seen at all.

1. This informs us that there is no stability in any part of the world, but changes every where, and such in other parts as they find with us. But of this before.

2. That God's administration of the world, and all the wheels of it, is equal and harmonious. This is set out to us by the likeness of the wheels: although in the world and things of it there be disparities, inconstances, strange motions, and mutations; yet the wisdom and providence of God moves and turns the wheels, so that there is an admirable equability and harmony in all things; and if our eyes were opened, we should see and say, that no wheel could be moved better. To us the wheels seem all out of course, and to run with crooked motions, and to be hurried contrary ways by men and devils; but all things are in their right course, and move that way God would have them; and whatever the appearance be, all things agree well among themselves. We oft condemn the sentence the judge hath given, and blame a man for going about when he may go a nearer way; but when the reasons are made known, then we are satisfied.

"Their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel in the midst of a wheel." Here you have the form of the wheels, a wheel in a wheel. This is hard to explain unto you. The words may be taken either transverse, or comprehensive.

1. Transverse. The wheels were crosswise, entangled in one another; as the lines or circles in a globe cut and cross one another, they were so entangled, they were in one another crosswise. And hereby is laid before us the several cross, entangled, and difficult motions of things in the world: all things do not go one way, nor evenly, in our sight and apprehension, but there are cross motions, great intricateness and knottiness in the affairs of the world.

2. Comprehensive. A wheel in a wheel; not the nave stock in the midst of the wheel, to which the spokes are fastened, for that hath not the form of a wheel: but there was one wheel in another; as the orbs of the heavens comprehend one another; as in some water-works, and watches, there be wheels one in another: and then the meaning is, that there is a secret hidden motion or wheel, that moves the wheels which way soever they run.

Obs. 1. That the motions of the world, and the kingdoms, are perplexed and cross motions, like a wheel in a wheel. Saul moved with all his strength to settle the kingdom upon his own son; but he met with a contrary motion. David is anointed to be king, and the men of war "came to David to Hebron, to turn the kingdom of Saul to him," 1 Chron. xii. 23. And so Adonijah said to Bathsheba, The kingdom that was mine is turned about and become my brother's, 1 Kings ii. 15; he met with a cross wheel, that carried the kingdom from him. How perplexed, and entangled, were the motions of the Jewish affairs, both in Babylon and at Jerusalem, when the prophet saw this vision! Nebuehad-nezzar's wheel was in theirs, and entangled them much in both places.

What cross motions were in France, when the king of Navarre, prince of Conde, the admiral, and all that were of the protestant religion, looked for peace, and met with a massacre! Are not there Romish, Spanish, French, and popish wheels moving in our kingdom, armies, and councils? Look at this instant upon the motions of this kingdom, in parliament, or out of it, and they are exceeding intricate. Never was skein of silk or thread so knotty or involved, as the affairs of the kingdom and world are; never bird so entangled in the lime-twigs or nets, as things are at this time.

Obs. 2. The motions to mutations and ruins are very swift. Things move faster then we conceive to their ends. The Jews hasted out of Egypt, and destruction hasted on the Egyptians. A wheel in a wheel, notes intention of motion. As Elias prayed in prayer, Jam. v. 17; that is, he was intense; so a wheel in a wheel, intimates intensesness of the motion. All things make speed to their own ruin.

Obs. 3. There is a secret motion which carries on the wheels, and moves them that way they go. There is a wheel in a wheel, and that sets the other moving; as a spring in a watch sets all the wheels going. Some latent engine stirs the wheels of the world. In some places you shall see the waters suddenly fly all about you: the cause of that motion is hidden. So in all the motions, turns, and stirs of the world, there is a secret wheel, Divine Providence, that sets on work and carries on. That was a great wheel and turn, when ten tribes at once fell from Rehoboam, and ran to Jeroboam. Politicians and statesmen could see sedition, rebellion, and treason in that motion; the outward wheel was obvious, but the wheel in the wheel was not seen by every eye: "Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of Solomon's hands, and give ten tribes to thee," 1 Kings xi. 31. If there be divisions, ruins, plunderings in a kingdom, there is a wheel in those wheels, a Providence that acts and orders. Job vi. 5, "Afflictions come not forth of the dust, nor trouble out of the ground;" they come out of the wheel: God turns that upon kingdoms and families; as Micah i. 12, "Evil came down from the Lord to the gates of Jerusalem;" God hath a wheel in all the wheeling businesses of the world. Anastasius the emperor being informed of a conspiracy against him and the state, commanded Justinian and Justinus, with many others, to be executed. By a voice in the night he was bid to spare Justinian and Justinus, for they were to do good service; and they both afterward were emperors: the motion of the wheel in the wheel saved their lives, and advanced them to honour. At the battle of Keinton was a wheel in a wheel: the wheel at first ran for the adverse party, but the wheel in the wheel turned it on our side. At Brainford there was a wheel in a wheel. When the enemies' plots have been their plagues, and their doings their undoings, the wheel in the wheel both moved and turned their own works upon them, Psal. ix. 16.

Obs. 4. The motions of Divine Providence in the things of the world, are beyond the reach of the wisest. Providence walks and works so darkly, deeply, changeably, wheels about, so that mortals cannot tell what conclusions to make. When the issues of things are extant, we can see what the antecedent motions carried in their womb, otherwise not, unless we have it by vision; as here Ezekiel had; or some extraordinary way. Providence hath such intricaecies, as puzzle the thoughts and hearts of the ablest and best. When the children of Israel were at the borders of Canaan, they were carried made, on account of the common goal, it subject at all, and so they give monarchs a broken right in some things, but detestable in other things, by their spiritual monarchy.

An internal mystery in an external appearance or dispensation; the spirit of life within keeps the wheels in motion.

The papists do erect regnum in regno, an ecclesiastical monarchy in the temporal, exempt from temporal jurisdiction, only subject ad pacem, for peace sake, or bonum com-back again to Ezion-gaber, Numb. xxxiii. Exod. xiii. 18, it is said, "God led them about through the way of the wilderness, by the Red sea:" and so Providence leads affairs about, they go backwards and forwards, so that we cannot make sense of God's motions in the world; as in characters, till a man learn, and be instructed in them, he can make no sense of them; and men now of rare abilities, cannot tell what sense to make of the motions of the wheels. Monsieur Chastileon, admiral of France, at the match of Charles IX. his sister with the king of Navarre, was invited with chief of the protestants by the king to celebrate the marriage at Paris, and to confirm peace: the protestants at Rochelle advised him not to go, but importunity of others prevailed with him, he went, and was massacred for it. Although he was of great wisdom, he could not discern what way the wheels would move. The wisest man is too weak to spell out the meaning of the wheels and mysteries of Providence. Once before he had refused to come to court at the king's sending, who sent Monsieur Du Tore his cousin to advertise him of important affairs he had to communicate: he suspecting, answered, The king means me no good; and tell him, there be no Count Egmonds in France: I will not suffer my head so easily to be cut off, as he did in Flanders. Roderick king of Spain, to insure himself against the children and friends of king Vitiza, whom he had deposed, dismounted all the strong-holds, and disarmed the people: this strengthened him against domestic enemies, not foreign attempts; for the Moors invading him, shortly after overthrew him, and finding little resistance, in seven or eight months conquered almost all Spain. The Britons, molested by the Picts and Scots, called in the Saxons, who for some time served them to purpose, but in the end conquered them and their country. These could not foresee what would be the issues of things. The motions of Providence are so secret and various, that it lies not within the compass of man's power to make certain conclusions therefrom.

Obs. 5. There is a connexion of causes and things together in the world. Hosea ii. 21, 22, "I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth; that shall hear the corn, wine, and oil: and they shall hear Jezreel:" as in architecture, there is a dependence and connexion.

Ver. 17. When they went, they went upon their four sides: and they turned not when they went: and so on to the end of the 21st verse.

In these verses we have two things:

1. We have the effect of the wheels, which is motion, laid down in ver. 17, 19, 20, 21. And,

II. The adjuncts of them, which are two, I. Height, 2. Eyes, in the 18th verse.

The commodiousness of their motion for all parts, and the form of it, are both in this 17th verse. The Hebrew is, In going, they went to their four sides, to the four parts which were next to their sides, or through the four parts; and so the sense is, they went to, into, or through the four parts of the world. If you read it according to our translation, upon them; the sense is, when the four living creatures moved, the wheels moved upon their sides. It is our phrase, when we ask one, which side went he of such a man? we answer, Upon, or on his right or left side: but the better sense to me is, they went according to their four sides. Look what side, what part of the world was appointed them, that the wheels went to, and moved in.

"And turned not." They came not back, but went forward: there might be variety of motions, but no back motions, no retrogradations; being once gone forth, they returned not.

The observation first is this: That in all parts, human things move to their appointed period, and there is no return of them being once there. Pharaoh and his host came to their period in the bottom of the sea, and never saw Egypt more. The patriarchs, prophets, apostles, martyrs, have taken up their lodgings in the dust, and return no more. What David said of the child, "I shall go to it, it shall not return to me," is a fit motto to all creatures; they must go to those who are gone before, not they return to these: cities, people, families, silver, gold, fine linen, they must see that corruption those saw in former days.

Obs. 2. That inferior causes move constantly in their motions, to do the will of God. The wheels turned not when they went, nothing could turn them back; nor the angels in their administrations, but they go on. We think it is the creature makes stops, lets, in the affairs of the world; but it is God's hand, his providence doth it; the wheels, all inferior causes, proceed in their motions, till God check them, and cause a stand: Isa. xliii. 13, "I will work, and who shall let it?"

Ver. 18—21. As for their rings, they were so high that they were dreadful; and their rings were full of eyes round about them four. And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them: and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up. Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.

In the 18th verse, we have the rings of the wheels described, from their height, and from their eyes. They were so high, they caused terror; so full of eyes, they caused wonder. The Hebrew reading is somewhat different, it runs thus, And the rings of them, both height to them, and fear to them, or by reason of them; that is, the wheels were so high, that they bred terror, Propter eas. struck fear into the prophet. The word rings in the Hebrew is, backs, their backs were high, dreadful; that is, their circumferences or rings were so, of such breadth and altitude, (for there is no difference between those in rings and circles,) that they caused fear to those who looked upon them.

Now what is meant by this height and greatness of the wheels, must be opened unto you; and it is this: the motions of second causes and changes of things here in this world, are so great, so incomprehensible by man, that they produce fears and terrors to the sons of men. Men are troubled that they cannot fathom the depths, and measure the height and breadth of the wheels. When men see times and seasons changed, kingdoms dashed in pieces, the godly brought into bondage, the wicked advanced, truth persecuted, errors in credit, justice trodden down, and all things moving by contrary motions, they stand amazed; and not able to reach the causes of things, to measure the wheels, and see into the exact motions of them, they become sensible of their own weakness, and say, O the height of the wheels! O the shallowness of our spirits!

Obs. 1. That the causes, and motions, and changes in the world, are unknown to the sons of men. The wheels are too high for them to measure: man is so

purblind, that the dim sight of his soul pierceeth not into the secrets and knowledge of causes; it only comes at the outside and extremities of things, the superficies of the wheel, but not the height and depth of it, not the true nature and causes of things; so that admiration, and opinion, not science, is begotten in man. This Agrippa knew, that wrote a book of the vanity of sciences; and Zanehez, that wrote a tractate, Quod nihil scitur; That nothing is certainly known: and Socrates was judged the most learned man, for that he said, This I know, that I know nothing: and above all these, the apostle saith, 1 Cor. viii. 2, "If any man think he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know;" and 1 Cor. xiii. 12, "We see through a glass darkly," things are a riddle to us, we know not what to make of them. Look into the world, and what can we make of it? The wheels in every quarter have such a height as none can reach; second causes move so suddenly, as none can spy them out. Cast your eye upon physical wheels, and they are too high for physicians to measure. What reason can they give of antipathies; or that some trees should have a venomous root on the one side, and a remedy on the other? They meet with diseases and difficulties that are ludibria medicorum, defiances of the skill of physicians, and must refer you to occult qualities. Cast your eye upon political wheels, and there you will find such heights and depths, as neither Athiophel can measure, nor Machiavel can sound. Look at theological wheels and motions, and there are such heights that none of the prophets nor apostles have been able to measure. I will give you an instance in two or three. Jer. xii. 1, 2,

"Righteous art thou, O Lord: yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments: Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherously?" Jeremiah, a great prophet, is puzzled at this height of the wheel: "Thou hast planted them, yea, they have taken root: they grow, yea, they bring forth fruit: thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins." Job is at a stand in this case, chap. xxi. 7, "Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power?" God puts Job to it in chap. xxxviii.—xli. So Asaph, Psal. lxxiii. and Habakkuk, chap. i. 3, were troubled at the prosperity of the wicked, and could not take the altitude of the wheels in their days; nature nor grace could do it. If Solomon knew not the way of an eagle in the air, of a serpent upon the rock, of a ship in the midst of the sea, of a man with a maid, Prov. xxx. 19; how shall we know the motions of the wheels in the world?

Obs. 2. That the consideration of the unsearchableness of God's ways should beget fear and trembling in us: the wheels had a height, and dreadfulness upon that height. When a man comes to the sea-shore, beholds the vastness and strange motion of it, and finds he is puzzled, fear creeps upon him from the apprehension of the greatness and majesty of God, who sits upon the floods, and commands the deeps: so here, when we think of the wheels, how high they are, that we cannot search out the cause of their motions, this way or that way, our souls should tremble at the majesty of that God which sets such mighty wheels at work. Psal. xxxvi. 6, "Thy judgments are a great deep." Men's sins are a great deep, and Satan's ways are called a depth; but God's judgments, his ways in the wheels, are the greatest deep of all, they are unsearchable.

That christian kingdoms are shaken in pieces with wars, when heathen kingdoms are spared; that there is such unequal dispensation of the means of grace in the world; that the greatest part are without the knowledge of God and Christ to this day; that many able men are laid by, or cast into corners, where are but handfuls of people, and great towns, where are multitudes, have no ministers, or such as preach holiness, and the power of godliness, out of their parishes; that people are most hardened under the most powerful means of grace; that there be such unequal distributions of riches, talents of nature and grace; that precious young ministers and others are taken away in a time of great need, when others that are vile and base are spared; that wicked pirates prosper at sea, when honest men are shipwrecked; that those who have little or no means thrive, that those have the best who are barren; God's working in sinful actions, his fitting vessels for destruction, his leaving his ancient people the Jews sixteen hundred years under a curse; O the depth! how unsearchable are his ways? Rom. xi. 33.

The next thing in the verse to be touched, is, the eyes in these rings.

"And the rings were full of eyes round about them four;" or, on every side to them four. Every wheel had eyes; they were stellatæ oculis, bedecked with eyes, as the heaven with stars: there were eyes within, and eyes without, and not a few, but many; every ring, every wheel, was full of eyes.

By eyes, we are to understand the active and infinite providence of God, which runs through all things. 2 Chron. xvi. 9, "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth;" that is, Divine Providence is active every where.

The Scripture, by eyes, referring to God, intends, first, his knowledge and notice of things; Prov. xv. 3, "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good." Secondly, his care; Psal. xxxiv. 15, "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous;" that is, he careth for them. Thirdly, his direction; Psal. xxxii. 8, "I will guide thee with mine eye." And these eyes show God's inspection, care, and ordering the wheels in all their motions, and that in all quarters. The rings were full of eyes, and whatever the thoughts of men were, they moved according to direction of Divine Providence.

Obs. 1. That however the wheels and motions of them be too high for men, and dreadful unto them, yet they are not so to God; he sees into all the wheels, they have eyes on every side; God knows them thoroughly, their essences, qualities, operations. We cannot pry into the state of kingdoms, councils, armies, cities: there are as secrets of states, so secrets of wheels in those states, which none know but God, and God knows them perfectly. Let wheels be never so great, terrible, move never such strange and cross ways; as kings, armies, parliaments, are great wheels, and have unknown motions; yet they are subject to the Lord's eyes, he sees into all their secrets, and sees more in their motions than they themselves.

Obs. 2. The motions of the wheels are considerable and judicious. They are not carried on blindly: however they seem to be carried, yet they are carried by reason and counsel: there are eyes in the wheels. When men do things rashly, injudiciously, we say, Have you no eyes in your heads? Here are eyes in the rings, and they move not casually. Those motions in the world that seem most confused, are composed and ordered motions. Are rich men made poor; honourable men base? are conquerors made captives? do servants ride, and princes go on foot? are the wicked oppressors in the seats of justice? are the godly beneath, and the vile above? are the counsels of Jesuits, foreigners, and desperate malignants, entertained, and others rejected? are there civil wars in a land, great plundering, spoiling of ministers, christians, parliament, men themselves? These things are not done without considerate and judicious motions of the wheels. Acts iv. 27, 28, when Herod, Pilate, gentiles, Jews, were gathered together against Christ, were not the motions then (though inhuman, bloody, and murderous) considerate and providential motions? The text saith, they did " whatsoever the hand and counsel of the Lord determined before to be done." it was no blind business; the wheels of it were full of eyes, and moved by the motions of Heaven. God's own eye, heart, and head were in it. And now, when the Herods, Pilates, and malignants of the world do stir against Christ and his members, the wheels move considerably.

Deorum crimen, Sylla tam felix, Sen.

Non exco impetu voluntur rotæ.

Obs. 3. The motions of the rings, wheels, and all second causes, are certain, arriving at the end appointed. They are full of eyes, which direct them to their journey's end, so that they miss not the mark they aim at. What if many second causes be ignorant, blind, know not their own motions; yet if they have guides infallible to lead them, it is sufficient to conduct them to the intended end. If a seeing dog can lead a blind beggar from place to place, direct his motion to the desired end; shall not the eye of Providence lead any, all second causes to their end? Providence is an unerring thing, and disappoints not God of his expectation. The pilot carries a great ship from harbour to harbour, over the seas, through the storms, and fulfils the mind of the master; and so Providence carries the great wheels up and down, to the very place appointed.

Obs. 4. The least motions of the wheels are not without Providence. Some think that the great things in kingdoms and the world are transacted by Providence; but for the less, they pass in a casual manner, Providence reaches them not; but the eyes were every where, the wheels were full of eyes; not a few eyes, here and there one, but in every part, that so man's mind might be freed from such sinister thoughts, as that there should be any motion of any wheel without the direction and influence of Providence. God hath made the least and greatest creatures, and he causeth the least and greatest motions.

Let us pitch our thoughts upon some lesser motion, the dispensation of a lot, the fall of a hair from the head, the preparations of the heart, the answer of the tongue, these are all of the Lord, and directed by Providence; the earth loseth not a pile of grass, the trees not a leaf, the water not a fish, the air not a bird, without an ordinance of Providence.

Obs. 5. Providence orders the motion of the rings and wheels in all parts, all the world over: not one, two, or three wheels had eyes, but all four had eyes round about them. God, by his divine providence, ordered things as well in Babylon as in Sion. Providence wrought in Egypt, and the Red sea. As there are wheels in all parts of the world, in all kingdoms of the earth; so there are eyes in all those wheels.

Obs. 6. The works of God in disposing and governing second causes, are admirable, glorious, and beautiful works. The wheels were full of eyes, fitly disposed, wisely carried on, certainly attaining their ends. Could we see the eyes in the wheels, we should never fault the works of God in the world, but stand and admire their glory and beauty. When the heavens are veiled with clouds, we have sour and discontented thoughts of the heavens themselves: but when the clouds are gone, that we can see the stars, those eyes of heaven, then we admire their beauty and glory: and certainly it is a most glorious sight to see the heavens full of stars in a clear night; and it is no less glorious to see the eyes in the wheels, and the choice acts of Providence in all their turnings and windings. Caussin saith, the world in all its parts is ruled like a paper with music lines, and if we could see those lines, they would be as glorious as lines of gold.

Obs. 7. The motions of the wheels are such as that they hold out a providence to all. There is something in the wheels that none can reach, and something that any may see; they are full of eyes, and the weakest may see one providence or other; if not all the eyes, yet some of them: there are mysteries in the wheels to exercise the greatest, and eyes to satisfy the weakest. As no man but sees the stars in the heaven at one time or other, so no man but may see the eyes in the wheels. That evil doth not overrun all, and the wicked devour the good, argues a Providence. In one of the Canary Islands, Johannes Metellus saith, there is a tree which drops water at every leaf, and sufficeth the inhabitants and their flocks, being a dry island without water. Mithridates, when in his cradle, had his clothes consumed with lightning, and his body not touched. A father and a son shipwrecked at sea, the son sailed to shore upon the back of his dead father. In these particulars and such like Providence doth eminently appear.

Ver. 19. And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them: and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up.

Ver. 21. When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them.

Here we have,

1. The motion of the wheels further commended unto us.

2. Their station.

3. The time of both.

The motion was forwards, upwards, and downwards; and for the time of their motion and station, it was when the creatures moved or stood: as the cherubims moved, so moved the wheels, forward, upward, downward; and when they stood still, the wheels stood. The kind and manner of their motions, with their rest, depending on the living creatures, they moved equally at their motion. What is meant by the lifting up of the wheels must be inquired. For angels to be lifted up is not strange, they are heavenly creatures, and heaven is their habitation; but for the wheels to be lifted up, that is very strange: we must search out the sense; for into heaven they were not lifted. Expositors leave us in the dark; all except one that I have met with pass over this difficulty: and what I find in that one is this: The lifting up of the angels and the wheels, refers to the Supreme Cause, and seems to tell us, that inferior and superior causes, wheels and angels, are under the regiment of the First Cause. And if we take the words actively, as Montanus doth render them, viz. the living creatures in lifting up themselves from the earth, the wheels lift up themselves also; and that is, they looked up to heaven for direction and assistance, which may well be called a lifting up themselves. Psal. xxv. 1, "Unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul;" that is, to thee do I look for counsel, comfort, and strength.

If we take the words passively, "when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up," then I will give you my thoughts what the sense may be: and it is this; the lifting up is not meant of lifting up to heaven, but to service. When God should more than in an ordinary way let out himself to the angels, give them new light, new strength, and so lift them up to great service, then the wheels also were lifted up proportionably to do their parts; and the words in the text invite me to conceive it to be the sense; because it is said, "the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels:" when God by his Spirit lifted up the angels to great employments, then the Spirit lifted up the wheels, the second causes, to more than ordinary service. And the word lifting up notes service, a higher degree of it than before. 2 Kings xix. 4, "Lift up thy prayer for the remnant that are left." Hezekiah sends to Isaiah when Rabshakeh blasphemed, and Jerusalem was besieged, and saith, Isaiah, thou art a prophet, and hast more than an ordinary measure of the Spirit: lift up thy prayer, let it be extraordinary, such as may lift up the spirits of all to join with thee, higher than ever; such as may lift up Jerusalem out of misery. So Jehoiachin, when he was set up upon the throne to govern and to do great service, it is said, his head was lifted up, Jer. hi.; and so in Psal. x. 12, the lifting up of God's hand notes doing of some great matter.

The next object of inquiry, is, the standing of the living creatures and the wheels; when the one stood, the other stood. Do the angels stand still at any time? they are active spirits, and always in motion. Two things this standing implies:

1. A cessation from any service in hand, at the will and pleasure of God, if he would call off the angels from their employments before they were finished. In this sense the angels are said to stand, and so the second causes they used, although they were both employed in some other service: or,

2. When they had perfected any work in hand, then they were said to stand, not idle, but in expectation of a new commission. Like as faithful servants, when their work is done, present themselves before their master, and demand his pleasure; so the angels, and second causes, hearken what God will say more, and what is the next word and work to be done; they wait upon God for new instructions.

Obs. 1. The motions of this inferior world, and the second causes in it, do depend upon higher causes, even heavenly motions, the ministry of angels. The observation is plain from the words, "When the living creatures went, the wheels went by them." If the angels move, the wheels move also. They are great things the angels have in their hands; the wheels of nature, of states and kingdoms, yea, of the church itself.

Obs. 2. Nothing in the world is casual. Many things seem so to us, but in reality are not so. All things here below move at the motions of others; and that which is ordered by the motion of angels, or God himself, cannot be casual. The wheels are moved by angels, and angels by God himself. God directs all; nothing happens wherein the hand of God or angels is not. Things are not accidental: if a thing could drop from the heavens, or be done on earth, without God and his angels, that were casual and accidental indeed. And because men see not the immediate or remote causes of things, who they be that move the wheels on earth, therefore they attribute effects, events, and accidental things to chance, to good or bad days and hours, which proclaims men's ignorance and forgetfulness of God. Isa. lxx. 11, "Those that forget God, prepare a table for that troop;" for fortune, some read it: but those who know God, acknowledge his eye and hand, seeing and ordering all.

Austin misses his way, and so escapes the danger of death that was intended. Another being in a despairing humour, seeks a knife, a halter, to undo himself, and finds a great treasure. A third hath his ring drop off his finger into the sea, and afterwards finds it in the bowels of a fish. God so directs all these accidental things, that there is nothing done but by a secret instinct and hint from himself; and in all such passages we should mind something of God.

Obs. 3. That nothing can hinder the motion of the wheels when angels and Providence would have them stir. When the living creatures moved, the wheels went presently. It is not in the power of second causes, of men or devils, to hinder the work of God in the hand of angels. The king of Persia may withstand Gabriel twenty-one days together, Dan. x. 13, but the wheels moved all the time; Gabriel prevailed, and God's work prospered in his hand. Wicked men make head against God, providence, and angels, and think to stop the wheels when they move not on their side; but all is in vain. If a man should catch hold of a chariot, running to stop or turn the course of it, were it not folly or madness in him? and because he would be the chariot's hinderance, that may prove his ruin: so here, men and devils do ruin themselves in opposing the wheels, which, notwithstanding all oppositions, proceed and keep their course. And let me tell you a riddle: God's words go on through the hearts, heads, and hands of his greatest enemies; Providence fetches them in, and makes them subservient to the work; they oil the wheels, although they know it not, and forward the work, though against their wills. God in this kind makes use of kine and cart, men and devils, yea, any creature, to carry his ark to its place.

Obs. 4. That God doth sometimes raise the spirit of the creature to more than an ordinary height, and enables it to unwonted service: "the living creatures and wheels were lifted up." So Moses, when called up to the mount, his spirit was raised much, else the service had been too hot and hard for him. Joshua was advanced when it was told him, that there should not any man stand before him all the days of his life, Josh. i. 5. Jeremiah tells the Jews, that the Chaldeans, whom they thought would depart, and not meddle with their city, he tells them, that though they had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans, and that there remained but wounded men, yet they should rise up every man in his tent, and burn the city with fire, Jer. xxxvii. 10. When men are wounded, thrust through, as כדקרים strength; how should they be able to do it? God would lift them up to that service: as David, when he grappled with the bear and lion, encountered with Goliath, had his spirit lifted up to a great height. Hence that in Zech. xii. 8, "He that is feeble among them at that day, shall be as David," that is, such a warrior as David, who, though a young stripling, slew a bear, a lion, and Goliath; "and the house of David shall be as God, and as the angel of the Lord." The godly, though weak, yet shall be lifted up to divine and angelical strength. This was made good in the time of the Maccabees; when the people of God were weak, Antiochus fierce and vile, then God raised up the spirit of Judas, Jonathan, and Simeon, to do extraordinary things. This was also made good in the time of the apostles. What great things did they do! and Paul saith, "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me." What bitter things did they and others suffer! and it was not common strength, but special influence: Phil. i. 29, "To you it is given, not only to believe, but also to suffer." Blandina's spirit was heightened above the malice and torments of men; for having animated her children to suffer, and sent them as conquerors to Christ their King, she comes forth to suffer before the tormentors cheerfully, as called to supper with Christ her Husband, as one comes to a marriage supper; and after stripes, tearing with wild beasts, burnings, putting into a net, and tossings by a bull, being without sense of torment by reason of her faith and conference she had with Christ, at last they killed her with the sword; and the enemies confessed, they never saw such a woman, suffering such things so courageously and constantly. As sometimes God suspends the ordinary operation of the creature; the lions' mouths are shut, they touch not Daniel; the fire burns not the three children; so, sometimes he lifts up and extends the operation and strength of the creature to an extraordinary height. The winds, what virtue doth God put into them! how doth he raise them! what terrible work do they make at sea and land; tear navies in pieces, sink them in the deeps, and toss ships out of the water upon the dry land! Ravens fed Elijah morning and evening, he goes in the strength of a cake and a cruse of water forty days, 1 Kings xix. God hath lifted up many in these days to do more then ordinary service. Ezra i. 5, God had raised their spirits to go up to build the house of the Lord; so Hag. i. 14.

Obs. 5. That God at his pleasure puts stands to the motions of the second causes; the angels stood, and the wheels stood, and this was the overruling hand of God, that can stop the course of nature, any wheels or agents whatsoever. Josh. x. 12, 13, God stayed the course of the sun and moon, and made them stand still the space of a whole day; and hereupon some gather, that the ebbings and flowings of all seas ceased. In Hezekiah's days the sun went backward ten degrees. God stopped the course of the waters, and made them as steady as walls and mountains, when the Israelites were to go through the Red sea; did not he take off the wheels of Pharaoh's chariot? God can put a stand to the greatest wheels. 1 Kings xii. 21, when an army of 180,000 chosen men was brought into the field, to fight and fetch back the kingdom that was wheeled over to Jeroboam, see what a stand God put to that army; ver. 24, "Ye shall not fight against your brethren: return every man to his habitation:" they did so, and presently that mighty army was disarmed. The buying in of impropriations, a work of great and good concernment, God put a stand to it. The undertaking for Ireland hath the wheel stopped, if not taken off. The motion of the wheels to the isle of Providence are stayed by the eye of Providence. Are there not stands in our consultations, and doth not God oft take wisdom from the wise, and understanding from the prudent? Are there not stands in our military affairs? the mighty men do not always find their arms. Hath not God oft put a stand to the enterprise of our adversaries? It is the Lord that hath hedged up their way with thorns, that they have not found their paths; and God hath hedged up our ways, that we have not found our paths to a full and thorough reformation. This great wheel hath great stops; the children are come to the birth, but there is no strength to bring forth: neither doth God's work cease, when he makes stops. A man who is printing a book, defers the edition, because he will make an addition; if it be delayed it is enlarged, and that is no loss. Stops of Providence in the wheels of the world are God's parentheses, and while they are writing, the work goes on.

Ver. 20. Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.

In this verse is laid before us the immediate cause of the wheels' motion; and that is the Spirit, which is the first and highest agent, and moves both superior and inferior causes. This Spirit is set out emphatically; "the spirit," or, that spirit; רוח not the spirit of the angels, but the eternal Spirit of God which was in the angels, or the living creatures: that Spirit was in the wheels; and with what motion it moved the living creatures, with the same it moved the wheels. This is the scope, to show that the four living creatures and four wheels were moved by the same Spirit of God.

Touching this Spirit, I spake in the 12th verse, where I also showed you how the Spirit is said to go, and move from place to place.

This answers a secret objection; How could the wheels move at the motion of the living creatures? they are dead and senseless things, without any motive virtue in them. And this objection is fully answered in these words, the spirit of life was in the wheels.

That which is rendered, "the spirit of the living creature," is in the Hebrew, spiritus vitalis, the spirit of life, the enlivening, quickening spirit, the lively, active spirit; or the spirit of the living creatures, רוח החיה Spiritus vitalis, or, spiritus animalis. and by a change of the singular number into the plural, the spirit of the living creatures; and so the sense runs, that spirit that was in them, the same was in the wheels.

Object. If the same Spirit be in the wheels, are not they also living creatures, having the same spirit and motion?

Answe. If I should say they were moved, as if they had the Spirit in them, this might help the difficulty, but doth not satisfy the text: which saith, the spirit was in the wheels. Therefore know, that as the living God is in every thing, moving and acting them according to their several natures, and yet doth not make all to be living creatures; so the Spirit of God was in these wheels, not animating, enlivening, but moving them to those services that were commanded and appointed.

Obs. 1. That second causes move not of themselves, neither superior, nor inferior. Not the wheels which are weaker here beneath, nor the angels which are stronger and above, they move not, but at the motion of the Spirit; whether that was to go, they went. Earth, water, winds, beasts, fowls, men, their counsels, wars, peace, trades, they all move ad motum Spiritus, according to the influence of the Spirit; it is the Spirit of God that moves all the wheels. All motions, all wheels, are subject to the Spirit, and regulated by it. When the devil accused, tempted, smote Job, he and all his motions were ordered by a higher power. So when the devils entered into the swine, they did what, and moved whither, the Spirit would have them to do, to go.

Obs. 2. No creatures, wheels, nor angels, no causes inferior or superior, can go elsewhere, or act otherwise, than the Spirit would have them. Whither the Spirit went, thither they went; they moved not before the Spirit moved them; and when they moved, they moved that way the Spirit moved. Devils and wicked men cannot be any where but where the Spirit would have them to be, nor do anything but what the Spirit would have done. Pilate, with the gentiles and people of Israel, were gathered together to do whatsoever the hand and counsel of God had determined before to be done, Acts iv. 27, 28. For the Spirit is the supreme, most potent, and efficacious agent, overruling all motions, so that no creature can move any other way than it doth. Prov. xxi. 1, "The heart of the king is in the hand of the Lord; he turneth it whithersoever he will." Kings cannot turn them whithersoever they will; ill counsellors cannot draw them which way they will; but they move which way the Spirit and providence of God will have them move. This turning or inclination, saith Luther, is that strong operation of God which the king cannot shun or change. If kings' hearts go after outlandish women, as Solomon's; if carried to ill counsellors, as Rehoboam's; if to idolatry, as Jeroboam's; if to root out the godly and godliness itself, as Ahab's; if to ruin their kingdom, as Ahaz's did; if to shed innocent blood, as Manasses' did; the hearts of kings are in the hands of the Lord, he turns them whithersoever he will: in all those motions he acts in just judgment, not changing their wills, but making use of them to bring about his own designs.

Obs. 3. The motions of the wheels are not unseasonable. When the living creatures went, then the wheels went: and what is the cause of their motion? the Spirit was in the wheels, and the Spirit was in the living creatures. If we condemn their motions and changes as untimely, we shall question and condemn the work and wisdom of the Spirit, which is infinitely wise and uncontrollable in all its operations. Men, even the best of them, are apt to fault the motions of the wheels, and to censure the acts of Providence as unseasonable. "The counsel is not good at this time that Ahithophel hath given," 2 Sam. xvii. 7. Did the Spirit then move that wheel seasonably? Yes; because the counsel, though not good for David, whose destruction it tended unto, yet it was good for the ruin of Ahithophel and Absalom, and that was the intent of the Spirit in moving that wheel: ver. 14, "The Lord had appointed to defeat the good counsel of Ahithophel, to the intent to bring evil upon Absalom," and Ahithophel too. What! civil wars in England, when Ireland lies a bleeding to death? when such a time to vindicate the Palatinate, and wrongs sustained at the hands of the emperor? when such a time to help the protestants in France? what! now to have king and parliament divided? now to be embroiled in a bloody civil war? is not this most unseasonable? Stay thy thoughts and censures, O vain man; the Spirit of God is a Spirit of wisdom, and knows when it is best to move the wheels. No musician tunes it better than the Spirit of God. Had these changes and motions been, and our enemies abroad at peace, they would have taken the advantage of our divisions and wars, and made a prey of us. Seeing therefore we must be let blood, or die, this great and wise Physician, the Spirit in the wheels, hath done it seasonably. Are great towns plundered, counties disturbed, families impoverished, or churches dissolved, the righteous smitten, the wicked spared, and kingdoms shaken into pieces? these motions, changes, are not unseasonable; they are all in their appointed time: this war is in its appointed time. Ezra iv. 17, there is mention of "Peace, and at such a time," the time is observed; so now, the war, and at such a time, such a time as is appointed, as the Spirit of God judges fittest. Eccles. iii. 8, there is "a time of war and a time of peace;" ver. 3, "a time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up." The Spirit knows and observes those times punctually, and moves not a wheel but in its due time, and so the motions of all are beautiful in God's eye, and should be free from man's blame. "Man knows not his time," Eccles. ix. 12. But it is not so with the Spirit; it knows times and seasons, and never misses to move the wheels in their due season. If the tree, Psal. i. bring forth her fruit in due season, and the Spirit moves the wheels in due season, none are too early, none too late.

Obs. 4. The consent which is between heaven and earth. The angels and wheels are from the Spirit of God which moves in them. When the living creatures went, the wheels went; when they stood, these stood; when they were lifted up, these were lifted up. And what is the ground of this harmony? The Spirit was in them, that acted them, and ordered their motions; having the same Spirit, they went the same way, and did the same work, without difference, without contentions. The Spirit of God is a Spirit of union; where that moves it moves not to discord, but to mind the same things, and to move the same ways. Numb. xi. 16, 17, when the same Spirit which was upon Moses, was put upon the seventy elders, then they judged as he judged, then they moved the same way, and did bear the burden of the people together with Moses; and, ver. 25, then they prophesied, and it being told Moses, that Eldad and Medad prophesied, he will make no breach upon it, but finding the same Spirit in them that was in himself, said, "Would God all the people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his spirit upon them," ver. 29: he knew the same Spirit would move them the same way that he went. So Elisha, when he had received the Spirit of God which Elijah had, he moved his way, carried on that work he did, 2 Kings ii. Wicked Balaam, when acted by God's Spirit, consents with the true prophets, and prophesieth the happiness of Israel; and cannot curse the people of God, though tempted and hired to it, Numb. xxiv.

Obs. 5. That the wheels readily do the will of God, and follow the Spirit; wherever it goes, thither their spirit was to go, the Spirit was in the motion. And therefore they are said to have eyes, and the Spirit in them, and to move at the motion of the Spirit. Wheels have roundness, and so readiness to move, but not God's way: full of eyes they are, and look at God's ends; but if they had not the Spirit in them, they would not move that way; or if they did, it would not be without dispute, sloth, murmuring: it is the Spirit makes them move the right way, and readily in that way. Where the Spirit is in any, there the motion is right and ready. Air, sea, land, have no vigour in them, but what the Spirit puts in, and they move as the Spirit will have them: Psal. cxlviii. 8, "Fire and hail, snow and vapour, stormy wind fulfilling his word," they all do the will of God, fulfil his word readily; they have the vigour of God's Spirit in them: Gen. i. 2, "The Spirit moved upon the face of the waters;" not an angel, not the wind, but the eternal Spirit of God; and so they move by virtue of the Spirit into their place. The Spirit createth, cherisheth, and sustains all things; and they are all obedient to the call of the Spirit, and tread in the paths of it, all creatures move after the Spirit: Psal. civ. 30, "Thou sendest forth thy spirit: they are created, and thou renewest the face of the earth." Herbs, plants, trees, beasts, fowls, all living creatures, are created and formed by the Spirit, and move according to those principles and instincts the Spirit puts into them; their motions and services are no other than what the Spirit leads them unto, and those motions they readily perform.

Obs. 6. The wheels and second causes do go on and move incessantly, and without weariness, in the way the Spirit puts them. They went whither the Spirit went: neither the Spirit nor the wheels do faint or fail in their motions.

Obs. 7. The Spirit of God is a living and lively Spirit. It is "the Spirit of the living God," 2 Cor. iii. 3; and the living God cannot have a dead and lifeless Spirit. It is a Spirit of life; Rom. viii. 2, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." The Spirit hath life in itself, it gives life to all; Job xxxiii. 4, "The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life." all life comes from this Fountain and Author of life. Eve was called the mother of all living, that is, of all men and women; but the Spirit is the Father of all living, men, women, and other creatures. It is the Spirit that maintains life, Acts xvii. 28. Job xxvii. 3, "All the while my breath is in me, and the Spirit is in my nostrils;" the Spirit of God is in that breath, and maintains life by it. The Spirit quickens and improves life, 2 Cor. iii. 6. The Spirit quickens, not only makes life, but makes lively: it is the Spirit that quickeneth, not only from death, but from deadness and dulness. Cant. iv. 16, "Awake, O north wind; and come, thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof might flow out;" the meaning is, Let the Spirit breathe in the ordinances, and quicken up the saints, and then they will be lively, active, and fragrant as spicery. The Spirit rested upon Christ, Isa. xi. and he was quick in understanding, and quick in operation; Acts x. 38, he was anointed with the Holy Ghost, and with power, and went about doing good. The Spirit made him lively: and so it is the work of the Spirit that makes the saints lively and active; it is the Spirit that leads unto life.

Obs. 8. It is the Spirit of God that worketh all in all things; the Spirit is in the wheels, and works in them and by them. We speak not now of the choice operations of the Spirit in the elect, but the common operations of the Spirit in all creatures. There are admirable qualities, instincts, and excellent operations in plants, birds, and beasts: whatever they are, it is the Spirit that wrought them there; the Spirit is in the wheels. The instincts in the bees and birds to build so curiously; in the locusts, to go out by bands; in the ants, to gather their meat in summer; in the conies, to make their houses in the rocks; in the spider, to weave so fine a web, is put in by the Spirit of God. 1 Sam. x. 6, "The Spirit of the Lord will come upon thee, and thou shalt prophesy, and be turned into another man;" that is, thou shalt have gifts fit for government; the Spirit will instruct and enable thee to rule this people.

The consideration of this point should be a stay to our spirits; which way soever the wheels move, the Spirit of God is in them. When we look abroad, behold the cross and confused motions of the world, our hearts repine, murmur, sink in us, shift, and we are ready to start aside out of our places to unwarrantable practices; but let us remember the Spirit of God is in the wheels, and stirs them at its own pleasure. If Shimei curse, David sees God in that motion, and saith, Let him alone, God hath bid him. So Job, when all was taken away by the Chaldeans and Sabeans, he was so far from impatience, that he falls to praising and blessing God. There is no just ground of impatience in the world; it is the Spirit in the wheels which moves them.

It should also help our faith, because in all the designs of men, the motions of the wheels, God hath his design going on: the Spirit is in the wheels, which is an invisible, but a strong agent, and doth invisible work, carry on the Lord's design, however the motions of the wheels seem to us; let the wheel be entangled, run, stand still, or move contrary ways, yet God's work goes on, and our faith should get up.

Ver. 22—25. And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as the colour of the terrible crystal, stretched forth over their heads above. And under the firmament were their wings straight, the one toward the other: every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies. And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host: when they stood, they let down their wings. And there was a voice from the firmament, that was over their heads when they stood, and had let down their wings.

In these verses we have the fourth vision, or fourth part of the general vision, which is concerning the firmament. This vision, as formerly hath been shown, holds forth unto us the glory of God: and of that glory which lies in his providence and government of the world, we have spoken in the precedent parts of this vision. There is yet more and higher glory to be spoken of, and that is, the glory of God in the person of Christ. This vision of the firmament is preparatory to the vision of Christ upon the throne. It is described,

1. From the place of it: it was "upon the heads of the living creature."

2. From the colour: it was like crystal, and "terrible crystal."

3. From the noise which came thence, ver. 25. In the 23rd and 24th verses, we have a renewed and intermixed description of the living creatures, from their wings, the situation, the number, the office, and noise of them.

To begin with the firmament. The קָוָה distendere, expandere. hebrew word is rachiah, from a word which signifies to draw out and make thin, as metals are, and wool, to stretch out, as curtains and tents are, Isa. xl. 22: whence heaven is called expansion, because it is stretched out over the whole earth. The Greeks call it σφαιρόωμα, because of the firmness and permanency: hereupon we call it the firmament, not from the hardness or solidity, as if it were like iron, or stone, but from the firmness of it, that it hath endured many thousand years, and is not melted by its motion, nor at all changed. It is taken sometimes for the air, sometimes for the clouds, and sometimes for heaven itself; and so we may take it here, even the starry firmament.

This firmament was over the heads of the living creatures, the wheels and angels were under it; and it was between the Lord Christ and these creatures, and did the office of that pair of wings which did cover the faces of the seraphims in Isa. vi. 2. Great was the glory of Christ, and through this veil of the firmament presented to them.

"The colour and likeness of it was as the terrible crystal." We must a little explain these words. It was the likeness of the firmament, not the firmament itself. The Hebrew words רמ thus, the ice, the terrible, or the terrible ice, קרה is ice, water hardened by cold, whence crystal hath its birth; for, though ice be not crystal, yet crystal is from ice. When ice is hardened into the nature of a stone, it becomes crystal: more degrees of coldness, hardness, and clearness, give ice the denomination of crystal; and the name crystal imports so much, that is, water by cold contracted into ice; and Pliny saith, the birth of it is from ice vehemently frozen: and so you see the original of crystal.

The epithet here added, "terrible," hath some difficulty in it. That heaven, a visional firmament, should be terrible, seems strange. Terribleness ariseth from newness, greatness, or the glory of a thing. Things new and strange do cause fear: as when the earth opened, and swallowed up Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, there was great fear, it was a terrible thing; and this is called a new thing, Numb. xvi. 30, "If the Lord make a new thing;" so when new sights are seen in the heavens, they cause astonishment to the beholders; as comets, the standing of the sun, and the like.

2. Things great are dreadful; great waters, great mountains, great armies. Dent. i. 19, he calls the wilderness a "great and terrible wilderness." Joel ii. 11, "The day of the Lord is great and terrible;" and so, "the Lord great and terrible," Nchem. iv. 14. From the greatness of it, therefore, might this crystal be terrible.

3. The glory of it, that might make it terrible: for glorious things are so. Lightning is glorious and dreadful. When God's glory appeared in the mount, it was terrible unto Moses, and made him to quake, Heb. xii. 21. At Paul's conversion there was a glorious light, which struck fear into all that were with him, Acts ix. And this crystalline firmament was full of glory. Crystal is a clear thing, receives the light, so as to affect the eyes much: in like manner this firmament had a great clearness and transparency, being the footstool of Christ sitting upon the throne. The Septuagint sometimes things;" great and glorious things, say they: so Isa. lxiv. 3, "Thou didst terrible things;" they render it, glorious things; for they are terrible. And here, from the gloriousness of this crystal or crystalline visional firmament, it may be called terrible; and this I conceive to be the true cause of its terribleness: it was so glorious, that none could behold it without being dazzled, astonished, and put into a trembling.

Obs. 1. That all creatures are under Christ, even angels themselves. They and the wheels are under the firmament where Christ is; he walks above; his feet are where creatures' heads are: all are subject to the power of Christ, and he sits above, and he rules them, and overrules their actions. Angels and all wheels stoop to him. The prophet saw the wheel on the earth, the angels under the firmament, but Christ was above. 1 Cor. xv. 27, "All things are put under him," all angels, all men, and all devils. "God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name," Phil. ii. 9.

Obs. 2. That heavenly things are pure and glorious, and hold forth the glory of God; they have the clearness, splendour, and lively colour of the crystal. The higher we ascend, the more purity, beauty, and glory. There is more in the air than in the earth and waters; more in the sun, more in the stars and firmament, than in the inferior things. God's glory is every where, the earth is full of it; if we look downwards we may see it, but if we look upwards we shall see more excellency and glory. How much glory is in the sun! who can tell how many wonderful things it hath in it? And so the firmament; Psal. xix. 1, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handywork." The outspread firmament, that is so vast, so transparent, so beset with stars, that darts down such sweet influences, it holds forth God's glory exceedingly; the glory of his wisdom, power, goodness; there is much of God's glory seen in it. The sky, or firmament, is compared to a looking-glass, Job xxxvii. 18; not because you may see several species of things, as we see several faces in the water, and birds in the air; but chiefly, because in it we see so much of the glory of God, even most of his attributes. We should be oft looking in this glass, and observe the glory of God.

Obs. 3. That the things above are dreadfully glorious, so glorious, that our weak eyes cannot behold them.

The glory of the firmament was as the terrible crystal, such as caused dread in a prophet. What eye can look upon the sun in its glory and strength? Could we see an angel in his glory, it would terribly affright us. When angels veiled up their glory in human shapes, it made great worthies of God to quake; as Gideon, Judg. vi. Manoah, chap. xiii. and others. Glorious objects work strongly upon our spirits, and quickly scatter them. And if the glory of creatures be such, what is the glory of God himself? 1 Tim. vi. 16, God "dwells in the light, which no man can approach unto;" it is such exceeding glorious light, that no created eye can endure it: that light or glory is God's habitation, and so glorious a one it is, that we cannot look upon it. Paul could not behold that glorious light which shined about him, Acts xxiii. 11. The earth, heavens, and world, which are God's out-house, we may behold; but his glory, which is himself, his inmost room, we may not, we cannot eye. This light is darkness unto us; there is so much brightness in it, that it will put out our eyes: and whether this glory be accessible by the saints or angels, may be disputable; because God is invisible, and his glory inaccessible; and besides, the angels, they had wings to cover their faces, Isa. vi. And here they are presented to Ezekiel under the firmament, with that upon their heads; which shows, that they, and all creatures, are distanced from God, and capable of seeing his glory only in that way he thinks good to propound it. That in Matt. xviii. 10, seems to speak the contrary, where it is said, "That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father." It is true, they are in the special presence of God, have sweet and satisfactory communion with God, stand ready to do his will; but God hath no face in heaven, and whether they see his essential glory, I leave to further inquiry.

Obs. 4. That all things here below are exposed to the eye and view of Christ. The firmament is so clear that Christ sees through it. It is the window of heaven, and through it he looks into the world. It is a molten looking-glass, Job xxxvii. 18; and as we may see God's attributes and glory in it, so Christ sees our shapes, thoughts, distempers, and motions. He saw Saul when he got the letters to Damascus, to persecute the saints; the Lord Christ saw him, and knew the bloodiness of his mind, and said unto him, "Saul, Saul," Acts ix. Many are atheistical, and say in their hearts, as he in Job xxii. 13, "How doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud?" They do evil in the dark, and say, "Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?" Isa. xxix. 15. There is one in the heavens that seeth through the clouds, and darkness itself, they are as the sun and firmament to him; darkness is no darkness, the firmament is as light itself: all things done in armies, councils, markets, shops, families, closets, beds, hearts, "are naked and open to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do," Heb. iv. 13.

I come now to ver. 23, where the glory of Christ is set out from his ministers, or officers; and they are the living creatures.

Ver. 23. And under the firmament were their wings straight, the one toward the other: every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies.

I have spoken before of the wings, yet somewhat I shall add. Four wings they had, and more we may not give them, though it may seem in this verse they had more: for it is said, "their wings were straight," that is, stretched out; and then, that they had two on this side, and two on that side; but the meaning is, when they did fly, those wings that did cover upward were stretched out, and the other did still cover their bodies or feet.

The scope of the verse is, to show that the ministry of the angels doth refer to and set out the glory of Christ; and that may be seen in the observations to be given.

Obs. 1. That where Christ is, there the angels are near unto him. He was above the firmament, and they just under it; the firmament was upon their heads; there was only a glorious transparent firmament between Christ and them: distanced from Christ they are, but not far.

Obs. 2. The angels, wise, strong, serviceable, swift, and glorious creatures, attend Christ's throne, and are subject unto him; they were under the firmament about his throne. Is it not for the honour and great glory of a king, to have nobles, potentates, and princes under him, attending in his court? It was much for Ahasuerus's glory and honour, when he had the nobles and princes of the provinces before him, and under him, Esth. i. 3. And so it is much for the honour of Christ, that he hath angels, which are greater than the kings of the earth, attending him.

Obs. 3. They are ready to exercise the will and pleasure of Christ. This further advances the honour of Christ: their wings were stretched out, and they willing to move in any service, if their Lord gave out the word. When the centurion's servants were so willing to go and come at his bidding, it made much for his honour, Matt. viii. 9. Ready, cheerly, active servants are an ease and honour to their masters: unreadiness and unwillingness in inferiors, do disparage authority, and stain the glory of it. Angels that serve at Christ's throne are never unready or unwilling for any service.

Obs. 4. They are unanimous in their ministrations. They fall not out by the way, their wings are straight the one towards the other; they carry on the work put into their hands with love, sweet agreement, peace, and content. At the birth of Christ they sung all one song, and sung without division, "Glory to God on high, on earth peace, good will towards men:" as they sung, so they act, there is no disagreement amongst them. "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" Angels do fly together, and act together; they are so agreed, that no devil, no creature can divide them; they have all but one mind, and serve the Lord Christ with one consent: and what honour is this to Christ, that hath so great, so many servants, and all minding the same thing!

Obs. 5. They reverence the greatness and majesty of Christ. Though they be high and glorious, yet they see so vast a distance between Christ and themselves, that they cover their faces, Isa. vi. and their bodies, here; they come not into his presence rudely, but with great respect and reverence. As God is to be had in reverence of all that are about him, Psal. lxxxix. 7, so Christ is revered by all the angels that are about him. Women are to be veiled in the assemblies, because of the angels, 1 Cor. xi. 10, to show their reverence and subjection to them being present; and angels are covered, to show their reverence and subjection unto Christ. It is an honour to the angels, that in reverence to them the women are to be veiled; and it is a great honour to Christ, that angels reverence and adore him.

Obs. 6. They are careful to prevent all offence in their ministrations, either of God or man, of Christ or any creature. They cover up their bodies, their feet, that nothing improper may be seen and give distaste; nothing excellent be seen, and draw to an overvaluing and idolizing of them; so wise and cautious they are. And this adds much to the glory of Christ, that his servants the angels never give advantage to men or devils to reproach their Lord and Master. Alas, how much doth Christ suffer by us, even by ministers and others, in their ministrations! Men see our weakness, our pride, our vain-glory, miscarriages many ways, and rejoice in our flesh, even when Christ is reproached. But angels pass through all their employments, so that they are blameless, and Christ made beautiful, whom they serve.

Obs. 7. That angels are furnished for their ministrations: they have wings to fly, and wings to cover their bodies; whatever may make them and their services acceptable, speedy, successful, they have it. And this is for the honour of Christ: those he employs in his work he enables and accommodates, they go not forth empty, unqualified: he sent apostles, and filled them with his Spirit; he gives gifts to men, and wings to angels.

Ver. 24. And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host: when they stood, they let down their wings.

Here is a further description of the angels, by their going, their noise, their standing, and letting down their wings. The principal is the noise of their wings; and that I shall make most inquiry into. A difficulty encounters us in the beginning of the verse, "when they went, I heard the noise of their wings;" rather when they did fly was the noise of their wings, than when they went. The original will help us something in this strait; it is otherwise there: thus the words are read, And I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty when they went; so that there the original brings it in, and so we may take it, thus;

The noise of their flying was as the noise of great waters, and the noise of their going as the voice of the Almighty; or, rather thus: by going we may understand their motion, the execution of their office; and that made a great noise, which is amplified and set out by divers similitudes.

The first similitude is of "great waters." Waters that run among the stony and rocky mountains, make a terrible noise, gulling into the earth, and threatening the foundations of the mountains: hence, Job xiv. 19, the waters are said to wear the stones; they eat into them, making concaves and chambers therein: and for their noise, in Psal. xvi. 3, there it is no gentle murmuring, but a roaring: the sea roars, so that it is heard in some places many miles.

The second similitude is, "as the voice of the Almighty," or, the voice of God. Some understand hereby, a great voice, because it is the usual dialect of the Hebrew tongue, to express great things, by saying, they are things of God: as, cedars of God, for tall and great ones, Psal. lxxx. 10, 11; rivers of God, for great rivers, and full of waters, Psal. lxxv. 9; mountains of God, for high ones, Psal. xxxvi. 6; so a trembling of God, I Sam. xiv. 15, for a very great trembling: and in like propriety of speech, "the voice of the Almighty," for a great voice. Some truth in this may be granted, but somewhat more than a great voice in general is to be looked at, it being a vision, and hieroglyphical things presented to the prophet therein: we must therefore refer it to that in Psal. xxix. Psal. xviii. 13. even the thunder, which is called the voice of the Lord: ver. 4, 5, "The voice of the Lord is powerful; the voice of the Lord is full of majesty: it breaks the cedars, yea, the cedars of Lebanon;" and so to that, Psal. xviii. 13.

The third similitude is, "the voice of speech." Some mystery lies in this, that their noise should be like an articulate voice, the speech of man. And two things may be intended in it; either the speech of man that is upon some terrible design, and so speaks grievous words, even words of death; and so it holds analogy with the other similitude of waters, and of thunder. Or else, by "voice of speech," the noise of their wings, the judgments they executed did speak and proclaim God's commands, his wrath, and the people's sins. If the judgments seemed terrible, as they were indeed; the cutting down of a kingdom, the ruin of the chiefest city and people in the world; the voice of speech was, God commands, God is angry; you are guilty, and we must proceed.

The fourth and last similitude is, "as the noise of an host." This is a dreadful noise; there is beating of drums, sound of trumpets, clattering of armour, jumping of chariots, rattling of wheels, neighing, stamping, prancing, and rushing of horses, the roaring of cannons, the clamours of men wounded, groans of men dying. "Carry me out of the host, for I am wounded," saith Ahab. O the doleful complaints that are there! such as would astonish a man of spirit to hear. The noise of the angels was such a noise.

Obs. 1. That the judgments of God executed upon kingdoms, cities, persons, are very dreadful: they are like roarings of the sea, when great storms are, and mighty navies are dashed in pieces, and sunk into the deeps; they are formidable as the noise of an army, marching or fighting. How dreadful were the plagues of Egypt! That in Exod. ix. 23, 24, when hail, thunder, and fire were mingled together, was very grievous, such as never was. The burning of Sodom was dreadful; yet Jerusalem's judgment was sorer, Lam. iv. 6. All their pleasant things were spoiled; women and maids ravished in the streets; their mighty men trodden under feet; young men and virgins crushed, trodden down as grapes in the wine-press; priests and elders died for famine; children swooned in the streets, poured out their souls in their mothers' bosoms for want of bread and water; pitiful women sold their children of a span long, and made meals of them; they were slain in the sanctuary, terrors were round about, and no way to escape left; if they looked for comfort, there was none to give it; princes were hanged up by the hands, those did wear scarlet, embraced dunghills; sabbaths, sanctuary, law, vision, all failed; prevailing fire was in their bones; death they longed for, and found it not; God was against them; their enemies prospered, and mocked at them and their sabbaths, Where is your God? what is become of all your worship, sacrifice, prayers, fastings? they clapped their hands, hissed, wagged their heads, and said of Jerusalem, Is this the perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole earth? this is the day that we looked for. These expressions you have in the book of Lamentations. David, a king, a prophet, a man of a warlike spirit, that feared not the bear, the lion, Goliath, saith, "My flesh trembleth for fear of thee; I am afraid of thy judgments," Psal. cxix. 120. When other things did not daunt him at all, God's judgments did; there was daunting terror in them; and no marvel, there is wrath in them; such rage, wrath, fury, as is in wild beasts: Hos. v. 14, "I will be unto Ephraim as a lion, and as a young lion to the house of Judah: I, even I, will tear and go away; I will take away, and none shall rescue." Such terror as is in an earthquake, that shakes the foundations of all, Isa. xxix. 6; such as in a strong wind, and an overflowing shower, Ezek. xiii. 13; such as in a flail that beats out the corn, and breaks the straw in pieces, Hab. iii. 12; such as in the sea or earth swallowing up, Psal. cxi. 9. What a dreadful cry, when Korah and his company sunk alive into the earth, when Pharaoh and his host were overwhelmed in the sea! Such terror is in God's judgments; yea, more dreadful yet, such as in thunder, lightning, and devouring fire, Isa. xxix. 6; yea, such as is in fire and brimstone, Psal. xi. 6. God is Baal-chemah, Nahum i. 2, A possessor of wrath; and in his judgments doth distribute terrors and sorrows: him therefore should the sons of men reverence.

Lord of wrath, so the original is, a

Obs. 2. God's judgments have the voice of speech in them, they speak unto sinners. Mic. vi. 9, "The Lord's voice crieth unto the city, and the man of wisdom shall see thy name: hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it." If the first voice be the cry of the prophets and ministers, the second is the cry of the judgments of God. The rod speaks aloud; it proclaims God's anger, wrath, fury, jealousy, revenge, his omniscience, holiness, justice, the terror of the Almighty; it proclaims our folly, shame and ingratitude, treachery and great guiltiness before God. It cries to us for repentance: when destruction lay at the gates of Nineveh, they understood the language thereof, and repented in dust and ashes, Jonah iii. It cries to us for righteousness: "When God's judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness," Isa. xxvi. 9. They cannot learn unless they be taught. And do they not teach, and teach many lessons to fear God, whom men have forgotten in their prosperity; to make restitution to men whom they have wronged in the day of their wills; to be charitable in censuring others, and rigid in censuring themselves?

Obs. 3. Angels are not only swift, but efficacious in their motions and administrations. The great waters, mighty thunders, and numerous armies make way before them, and nothing can withstand their force: and so it is with angels when they are upon service, none can stand before them; they destroy armies, shake kingdoms, move all the wheels in the quarters of the world, and their motions are not faint, but forcible.

Obs. 4. It is not every ear that hears the noise of angels' wings; though their noise be great, efficacious, like waters, thunder, the voice of speech, as an host, yet all hear them not. It is the prophet hears them, and such as have divine spirits. The operations of angels are unperceivable to most of the world. All eyes see not visions, neither do all ears hear the things that visions do speak: few are capable of divine mysteries; "To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom," Matt. xiii. 11. There be mysteries in the government of the world, as well as in the kingdom of heaven, and it is a special gift to be acquainted with them. God's secrets are made known to them that fear him, Psa. xxv. 14. Some choice, precious, excellent spirits, they hear, they see what others do not. Such as turn from iniquity, Dan. ix. 13; such as are wise, Hos. xiv. 9, they understand: such as are deeply interested in the truth and church's cause, as have suffered much, and have their dross purged out by the fire of afflictions; they hear, they see more and greater things than the men of the world. Nehemiah, Isaiah, Daniel, Ezekiel, John, that were men of great sufferings, they heard voices which others heard not. In the Revelation it is said oft, "He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear." Every man hath an outward ear, but not the inward, the ear of the heart, whereby to perceive the meaning of the Spirit. Men hear not the voice of the Spirit in the churches; they hear men, but not the Spirit, what that speaks in the ordinances; and as they hear it not in them, so they hear not the Spirit in the wheels, nor the voice of it in the great judgments of God.

Ver. 25. And there was a voice from the firmament that was over their heads, when they stood, and had let down their wings.

Here we have a description of the firmament, from the noise that came from it; and that is the cause of the angels making their appearance before the Lord; and the manner of their appearance is, they stood with their wings let down.

Whose voice this was comes now into question. It was not a voice of the firmament, but from above, מִמַּעַל דֵּבַר De. which is in the original, besides from super firmamenta, the firmament: so that it was not the noise or voice of the firmament, neither of any angel; for they are here present under the firmament; but it was the voice of Christ, of him that was above upon the throne; and it hath much in it.

1. It sets out the majesty and state of Christ, who, like a mighty emperor, sits upon his throne, and speaks unto his nobles and people at a distance.

2. His authority, calling in the angels, his great agents in the world, from their services, to appear before him. They upon this voice come from the quarters of the world, and stand about his throne, to give account of their administrations, to receive new instructions, and are sent out by him to great services.

3. To awaken, quicken, and prepare the prophet, who had hard things to meet with, harsh people to deal with; but when he saw angels come and go at the voice of Christ, it hushed all objections, and set his spirit to attend to the voice of Christ, to receive instructions from him, and to do his will. Thought he, shall those glorious angels, those great agents in the world, hearken to Christ, be informed by him, execute his will; and shall I, a poor captive, dispute the case with him? No, I will be like to these angels, hear, receive, and obey.

Of the standing of the angels I have spoken formerly in the 21st verse, to which I refer you.

The letting down their wings, notes their cessation from employment; as birds or fowls, when they fall upon their feet on trees or ground, let down their wings, and rest from flying.

Obs. 1. The voice of Christ is mighty and efficacious, a voice that shook the firmament, that commanded the angels; there is majesty, authority, efficacy in it. Rev. i. 15, it is said to be "as the sound of many waters," which notes the terribleness and efficaciousness of it, being strong, piercing, powerful as water, that breaks into the great ships, and eats into the hard rocks, and makes a dreadful noise. What an efficacy and majesty was in that voice of Christ, Acts ix. 4, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" it struck Saul (who was a stout and stiff Pharisee) to the ground; so that in Matt. xxii. 12, "Friend, how earnest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless." When Christ spake these few words, "I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground," John xviii. 6: three words overthrew a great multitude; and it is observable they went backward and fell. The majesty and power of Christ's speech was such, as if stricken with thunder and lightning in their faces, they fell backward. When he rebuked the winds and seas, those fierce and senseless creatures heard his voice and obeyed it. When he preached, his hearers said, he spake with authority, and not as the Scribes and Pharisees. There is a mighty operation in the voice of Christ; it enters into the heart of the wicked, into the graves, and makes the dead to hear. "Now is the hour," saith Christ, "that the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God," John v. 25: he means the dead in sins. Ver. 28, "The hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice." His voice was so powerful, it fetched Lazarus out of the earth, John xi. "There is power in the word of a king," Eccles. viii. 4. Christ is the greatest King, and in his word is the greatest power, power over the living and dead. Hence the word of Christ is compared to piercing and efficacious things; to "goads and nails fastened," Eccl. xii. 11; to "a hammer and fire," Jer. xxiii. 29; to "a burning fire," Jer. xx. 9; to "mighty weapons," 2 Cor. x. 4; to "arrows in the heart of kings," Psal. xlv. 5; to "a sword," Ephes. vi. 17; "a two-edged sword," Rev. i. 16; "sharper than a two-edged sword," Heb. iv. 12: it is also like to the voice of "a trumpet," Rev. i. 10, that awakened men at midnight, and summoned them to the battle.

Obs. 2. When we are out of business, in a quiet posture, then are we fittest to hear the voice of Christ. When they stood and had let down their wings, then was the voice from the firmament, then were they fit to hear magnalia Christi, the wonderful things of Christ, the oracles and commands of Christ. When our hands and hearts are filled, entangled with earthly employments, how unapt are we to spiritual things! and if our hearts be turbulent, stirred in passion, they are fitter to hear Satan's voice than Christ's. A sedate, quiet mind, free from passion, and all entanglements, is most capable of divine things. Eccl. ix. 17, the words of wise men are heard in quiet spirits, well-composed minds. When there are great winds and tempests, we hear not others speaking; when the wind blows in the soul, and there is a tempest, we cannot hear God speaking : Job iv. 16, " There was silence, and I heard a voice ;" then God spake when the silence was ; he delights in a calm and meek spirit, that is of great price with him, 1 Pet. iii. 4. When spirits are in such a frame, sequestered from the world, free from distempers, God loves to communicate himself to them. In the night oft God appeared unto our forefathers, because then they were in a manner out of the world, and had tranquillity in their bosoms. When John was in Patmos, he heard Christ's voice ; when Ezekiel was by the river side, he saw heaven opened, and heard a voice from above : that in Cant. ii. 12, " The voice of the turtle is heard in our land ;" it is observable, the turtle sings not in winter, when the winds and storms are, but when it is spring and summer, all quiet and serene, then her voice is heard : so Christ's voice is heard, when winter is over, when the tumults and stirs are laid.

Obs. 3. As his voice refers to Ezekiel, it affords this instruction ; that there must be a voice from above, before we are fit to hear or do any service for God. There are no preparations or qualifications in men by virtue of man ; Ezekiel himself is not fitted to preach the word unto this captive people, till he hear Christ's voice. Christ doth not only give the word to be preached, but prepares the organ to receive and communicate it. Preparatory works in man by man, are popish conceits : the chemists, by all their art and labour, cannot bring any material nearer gold than at the first ; it differs specifically from gold, and so it doth when they leave it. Counterfeit gold is no gold. It is not man that can prepare himself for God and his service. " The preparations of the heart and answer of the tongue are of the Lord," Prov. xvi. 1. And Paul saith, we are not sufficient of ourselves to think a good thought, 2 Cor. iii. 5. You may hear Paul telling of his preparatory works, 1 Tim. i. 13, " I was a blasphemer, a persecutor, and injurious !" what preparations were these to grace an apostleship ! Dead men have no preparation to life, or motion, and living men oftentimes are lifeless, unfit for divine mysteries and employments, till a voice from above prepare, quicken, and encourage them.

Ver. 26—28. And above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone : and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it. And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake.

In these words we have the last and best part of the vision, being of Christ in his throne. In the 26th verse we have the throne described :

1. From the situation of it ; it was " above the firmament."
2. From the colour or likeness of it ; it was " a sapphire stone."
3. From the party in it ; and that was one who had " the appearance of a man."

The word " throne" sometimes signifies kingdoms and dominions : Dan. vii. 9, " I beheld till the thrones were cast down ;" that is, the kingdoms of the earth were ruined. Sometimes it notes a choice seat, fit for kings and judges to sit in : 1 Kings x. 18—20, " The king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with the best gold ;" there were six steps and twelve lions ; and there was not the like in any kingdom. In this last sense we are here to take it, a seat for Christ to sit in : and so the temple or sanctuary is called the throne of God, Jer. xvii. 12, " A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary." A throne here holds out unto us sundry things :

1. Divine majesty and highness of Christ.
2. Kingly dignity.
3. Triumphant glory.

The next thing is the likeness ; " as the appearance of a sapphire stone." The glory of this throne was great : Solomon's was of ivory and gold, but Christ's is of sapphire. The Scripture mentions palaces, Psal. xlv. 8, towers, Cant. vii. 4, beds, Amos vi. 4, houses, chap. iii. 15, vessels, Rev. xviii. 12, and thrones of ivory, 2 Chron. ix. 17 ; but none of sapphires. The sapphire is a stone of admirable worth and splendour, the chiefest of pearls ; and Pererius saith, it was among the ancients always of great esteem : the empire and high priesthood were signified by it. Among the Egyptians, the chief priests, being judges, also wore a sapphire about their necks ; and at that time when cardinals are newly created, the pope sends to each of them a sapphire, which sets out dignity and greatness.

For the colour of the stone. Pliny saith, in his lib. 37. c. 9. that it is of an airy colour : he should have said, of a sky or blue colour ; for when the heavens are most clear, and have a transparent, pleasant blue, then the sapphire doth most resemble them ; very fair and beautiful. Jerom will have sapphire to be from saphar, pulcher, because these stones are very fair and delightful. Pliny, in the place before cited, saith, they do flame and sparkle with purple veins, much like the colour of brimstone when it is first fired ; there is a pleasant blue, with a little purple in it : and so oft it is in the heavens when they are clear. The sapphire, and heaven's clearness, are brought in together by Moses : Exod. xxiv. 10, " They saw the God of Israel ; and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in its clearness ;" the pavement was sapphire, and the colour of it, as the clearness of heaven. We must inquire what the sapphire represents unto us ; for surely there is something, yea, much in it. Should we tell you what virtue is taken to this stone by men of great note, it would take up much time. Avicen, Albertus, and Matthiols, affirm this stone to be good against melancholy, and the quartan ague. Galen and Dioscorides, that it helps against poisoning, ruptures, and ex-nerations. But I will pass by such things, and come to that which is nearer our purpose. The sapphire is an emblem,

 libertatis.*

1. Of liberty. So you shall find it to speak in Exod. xxiv. 10. The Israelites were come from their pavement of bricks to one of sapphire; now the God of Israel was exalting them to precious liberty from their vile bondage.

Puritatis et soliditatis.

2. Of purity and solidity. It hath the colour and clearness of heaven; it hath no impurity in it. Things impure are the ruin of themselves, and so are unsolid; but that which is pure is firm; as the firmament, it is pure and solid.
 Hence the sapphire is a foundation stone of the new and heavenly Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 19. . .

*Sublimitatis

 Sapphirum coe-

3. Of the incomprehensibility of divine mysteries. It hath a sky colour, the colour of the firmament itself: and that blueness we see in the heavens is intense light, and sets out the incom-prehensibility of God's ways.

4. Of chastity. It is an enemy to wanton lusts: hence, Cant. v. 14, Christ's belly is said to be overlaid with sapphires: and his throne being sapphirine, it tells us, that Christ expects chastity in the spiritual marriage between him and his church.

5. Of vigour and cheerfulness. Lam.
 iv. 7, "Their polishing was of sapphire;" Their faces were sapphirine, so the Chaldee reads it. Their countenances before were full of vigour, cheerful, like those which are well polished; but now, through famine, black they were, withered, and like a stick, without all cheerfulness.

Glorie.

6. Of glory. And here in this vision, Christ's glory is likened to sapphire; the glory of his throne was sapphirine.

From the likeness of the throne, we come to the party, whose the throne is, and that is, one who had "the appearance of a man." Who this is, must be cleared. It was not God the Father, or God the Holy Ghost; for the learned observe, that neither the Father nor the Holy Ghost have ever appeared in man's shape: but that will not hold; for the Ancient of days, God the Father, appeared to Daniel, chap. vii.
 9, in the form of a man. Expositors do mostly agree it was the Lord Christ: and of that judgment shall we be, not because they say so, this was a blind ground for a rational man to be led by, but because we find in Scripture, that Christ hath oft appeared in visions like unto man; Dan. vii. 13, "I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man."
 The Jews acknowledge this to be meant of Messiah.
 So in Rev. i. 13, one like the Son of man appeared in the midst of the seven candlesticks; and Rev.
 xiv. 14, "I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man."
 By these places we have good warrant to conceive, that it was Christ that did appear unto Ezekiel in this vision.

Quest. But seeing Christ was not yet incarnate, why is he here presented in the likeness of man?

Ans. 1. Because in his divine nature he is invisible, and being to manifest himself, he appeared in the form of man, as being most suitable to the nature of man.

2. It was a prefiguration of his incarnation, that in the fulness of time his divine nature should assume our flesh into the unity of his person.

3. That according to his human nature, he should sit upon the throne of God, and judge the sons of men: he was the great Agent of his Father.

Whether Christ in this vision sat or stood, is doubted, because it is said, "above upon it," neither standing nor sitting being expressed; but my inclinations are to conceive, that the Lord Christ sat, and stood not.

1. Because thrones are not for standing, but sitting; and we never find in Scripture, that any stood in thrones, but sat they have. Sitting in thrones is the usual phrase in Scripture: 1 Kings ii. 12, "Solomon sat upon the throne of David his father;" and in chap. xxii. 10, "The king of Israel and the king of Judah sat each on his throne;" and Isa. vi. 1, Isaiah "saw the Lord sitting upon a throne;" Rev.
 iv. 10, "The twenty-four elders fall down before him that sat on the throne."

2. Kings and judges here on earth do not use to stand, but sit, which doth more fully set out their state and majesty; and if kings on earth do so, how much more this King in heaven! Besides, standing is a servant's posture, Deut. xvii. 12, and chap. x. 8; but sitting is not, Luke xvii. 7, 8; that is the master's, the lord's posture.

Obs. 1. The wisdom of God's Spirit in laying down things to prevent the corruptions and mistakes of man. We are apt to think grossly of the divine nature, that God is visible, corporeal, contained in place, sitting as man; but see how the Spirit of God here speaks, and takes off from all such conceits. Here is mention of likeness, appearance of things, not that they were materially so; it is the likeness of a throne, the appearance of a sapphire, and upon the likeness of the throne was the appearance of a man, no true body. The anthropomorphites thought God to be like unto us, to have his throne in heaven, and sit in it; and so far did these men proceed in this opinion, of God's corporeity and circumscription, that they assembled into troops, and threatened to stone all who opposed it: so tenacious of and violent for errors are men, even the deluded sons of men.

Obs. 2. That man is not capable of immediate access to and converse with God. Here are many steps and degrees before the prophet comes to see Christ, and then it is not in his divine nature, but in the appearance of a man. Here are the living creatures in the way, a firmament over their heads, and then a throne, and that of sapphirine colour; and afterward a sight of Christ in the form of a man, and then converse.
 If the Lord should not condescend to our weakness, and mantle up his majesty, there could be no communion between him and us.

Obs. 3. That the Lord Christ, who appeared like man, hath kingly majesty. Here is a throne, and a throne set before him. Thrones represent royal majesty unto us, and this throne representeth Christ's:
 when on earth he was in the form of a servant, but in heaven he appeared to the prophet in the form of a king. Neither hath he a throne only, but whatever appertains to kings. Unction he had, and such as other kings had not; he was anointed with the Holy Ghost, and with power, Acts x. 38. Promulgation; Zech. ix. 9, "O daughter of Jerusalem, behold thy King cometh unto thee." A crown; Heb.
 ii. 9, "We see Jesus, crowned with glory and honour;" the Jews crowned him with thorns, the Lord with glory. A sceptre he hath also, and better than of gold; Heb. i. 8, "A sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." A royal guard of angels; they are under the firmament, stand ready at his footstool. He hath his agents and ambassadors in the kingdom of the world, to declare his pleasure, to transact his appointments; Eph. iv. 11, "Apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers;" these negotiate the great affairs of this King, they dispense the mysteries of this kingdom. He is not a titular king, but hath large dominions: Dan. vii. 14, "There was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; "and Psal. ii. 8, the heathen are his inheritance, and the ends of the earth his possession. He hath a legislative power, he makes and abrogates laws at his pleasure. He came of the princely tribe that made laws. Judah bare the sceptre, and gave the laws, and therefore by David is called the lawgiver, Psal. lx. 7; and Christ descending thence, and being typified by the king of Judah, he is the true Lawgiver; Jam. iv. 12, "There is one lawgiver," and therefore, Matt. xxviii. 20, "Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." He hath a pardoning and punishing power; he pardoned Mary Magdalene, and punished him that had not on his wedding garment.

Obs. 4. That Christ is not only King, but the chiefest of kings. His throne is not on earth, but in heaven; it is above the firmament; that was over angels' heads, and Christ's throne is above them both; so that all power in heaven and earth are under Christ; his throne is exalted above them all; Heb. i. 6, "Let all the angels of God worship him;" the greatest archangel must do it. Those thrones, for so they are termed, Col. i. 16, must stoop to this throne. Eph. i.

for it follows, he hath set him "far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and hath put all things under his feet." Even angels are under the firmament, where his feet stand; and all the princes of the earth are under him, Rev. i. 5, he is "the Prince of the kings of the earth." The inscription on his vesture and thigh is "King of kings, and Lord of lords." This title is not Xerxes's, Nebuchadnezzar's, nor Alexander's, but Christ's alone. The kings of the world, when they sit upon their thrones, have their firmament over their heads, some cloth of state, made of the richest stuff that the skill of men can reach unto, bedecked with diamonds and pearls that are most costly; but this over their throne intimates their subjection to some higher power. But it is not so with Christ; he is above the firmament; nothing is over his head; angels, kings, devils, are under his feet, and unto him must every knee bow.

Obs. 5. That the Lord Christ, who hath such a glorious throne, is exceedingly glorious himself. His throne is like sapphires, of a sapphirine colour, which is very beautiful; it is like the glory of the heavens. If an earthly throne be a throne of glory, as Hannah styles it, 1 Sam. ii. 8, what is this throne! a resemblance of the throne of his glory, which he speaks of in Matt. xix. 28, and chap. xxv. 31. The clothing of the king's daughter, Psal. xlv. 13, was wrought gold, a glorious outside; but there was more glory within, she was "all glorious within:" so if Christ's throne, the outside of it, be so glorious, what is he in the throne! all glorious, all glory. John i. 14, "We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten." If apostles saw glory in him, being on earth, in his low condition, what did our prophet see in him, being above the firmament, in his throne and glorious condition! The Scriptures set him out, not only to be glorious, but glory; Psal. xxiv. 8, "King of glory;" Jam. ii. 1, "Have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons." The word Lord in the second place is not in the original, but thus it stands there, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the glory;

so that Christ is glory, and the glory; the glory of heaven, the glory of the world, the glory of Sion, the glory of the soul. And not only is Christ glorious and glory, but he is "the brightness of glory," Heb. i. 3; that is, spotless, perfect, intense, exceeding glory. He is the brightness of the glory of the Father, or the Father's glory shines out most brightly and intensely in the Son. The Father's glory in the whole creation is but darkness to his glory in Christ; and therefore he is brightness of glory, and every thing that comes from Christ hath some beams of glory in it. His works are called glorious; Luke xiii. 17, they "rejoiced for all the glorious things done by him:" the liberty he purchased is glorious liberty, Rom. viii. 21; his church is glorious, Eph. v. 27; his gospel is glorious, 1 Tim. i. 11.

Obs. 6. That Christ's throne must not be of common stone, but precious ones, of sapphires. The pavement of God was of stones or bricks of sapphire, Exod. xxiv. 10; and Christ's throne must be of sapphires. The church is Christ's throne, visible and conspicuous as the heavens, Jer. iii. 17. Jerusalem is called "the throne of the Lord," and the churches under the gospel are the throne of Christ; he sits in the congregations, and bears rule in them: Rev. ii. 13, "I know where thou dwellest, where Satan's seat" or throne "is." There was a congregation of persecutors, idolaters, and unclean parties; for such sinners are mentioned in ver. 13, 14; and this company was the seat and throne of Satan. Many congregations are thrones of iniquity; and "shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee?" Psal. xciv. 20; but godly congregations are the seat and throne of Christ. Now as the conscience, which is the invisible seat of Christ, must be pure, 1 Tim. iii. 9, "Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience;" so must the visible seat of Christ be pure, the congregation where he will sit and reign. Therefore the promise is, Isa. liv. 11, 12, that the state of the church under the gospel shall be better than it was under the law. There all stones were laid in the building; but here should be a difference made; God will lay stones with fair colours, sapphires, agates, carbuncles, and precious stones. And that it is meant of gospel times and churches, the words following in the 13th verse show, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord," which Christ applies to these times, John vi. 45. So then the churches now are to be of sapphires, such as have a heavenly virtue and purity in them; not of sand-stones, toad-stones, or any highway-stones; they are fitter to make Satan a seat than Christ a throne. They are called "lively stones," 1 Pet. ii. 5; not dead stones, that have no true grace in them, but lively ones they must be, that make a house, a throne for Christ: stones, that it may be a solid building; lively, that it may be a useful, profitable building; and sapphire, that it may be a pure and glorious building.

Obs. 7. Judiciary power is put into the hand of Christ, not only as God, but as man. There was the appearance of a man above upon the throne; there sat the Son of man, and sitting upon the throne imports power, and power judicial. Therefore when Christ tells his disciples of sitting upon the twelve thrones, he tells them also of judging the twelve tribes of Israel, Matt. xix. 28. And that Christ had such power, and that as Son of man, appears, John v. 27, The Father hath given the Son "authority to execute judgment, because he is the Son of man;" ver. 22, "he hath committed all judgment to the Son," both judgment of actions, things, and persons. God "will judge the world in righteousness by that man he hath ordained." Acts xvii. 31: the last judgment shall be by Christ, even that great judgment. So particular judgments here: as now Christ sat in judgment upon Jerusalem, and sentenced them to death and captivity. And because judgment is opus potestatis, an act of power, therefore Christ himself tells us, that all power in heaven and earth is given unto him, Matt. xxviii. 18.

Obs. 8. The Lord Christ actually ruleth the world, and all things in it; he sits upon the throne, and exerciseth his power and authority. "Solomon sat upon the throne of David his father," 1 Kings ii. 12; that is, he ruled the kingdom, and all the affairs of it: so Christ sitting upon the throne, presents to us his active ruling. The prophet might see he held the globe of the world in his hand; that he raised tempests out of the north, sent abroad the four living creatures in the several parts of the world; that he orders the wheels, and causes them to stand or go at his pleasure. The Lord Christ is not out of office, or idle now in heaven, though he sits upon a throne of glory at his Father's right hand. He is not neglective of the world, he upholds it by his power, Heb. 1. 3. he sends out his angels to minister unto his, ver. 14: he still gives gifts to men, and provides for his church, Eph. iv., and makes the word the savour of life or death to men. He restrains the wrath of enemies, and hedges up their ways, he makes use of them as rods to drive his straggling sheep into the fold; he subdues hearts and spirits to himself, and protects them being subdued; he discovers and confounds the enemies' plots and persons.

Obs. 9. The Lord Christ doth govern all with great tranquillity and with great facility. He sits upon the throne, and doth all in a sedate temper: there is no passion or perturbation in him: he is a Lion for his power, and a Lamb for his meekness; he rules by counsel and wisdom in much quietness, he judgeth in righteousness, Acts xvii. 31, and what he doth is done without difficulty. Let him speak the word, and presently it is done. If he bids Nebuchadnezzar go and sack Jerusalem, and carry them away to Babylon, he goes, he accomplisheth his will fully.

Obs. 10. That Christ is ready ever to hear the causes and complaints of his church; he sits upon the throne. Other judges are of the bench and throne, and parties aggrieved may come unseasonably to them; but it is not so here: Christ sits upon the throne, and that constantly, to assure us, that he is always willing and ready to hear the motions his servants shall make, and to execute judgments upon their enemies: which is matter of great comfort to poor afflicted souls, that they may at any time find this Judge sitting, and open their grievances unto him, and have audience. Other judges are absent from their seats, or not at leisure; or stately, and will not give way to poor oppressed ones to ease themselves, and acquaint them with their suits: none of these things are to be feared here.

Obs. 11. Christ sitting on the throne shows to us, that Christ should accomplish the whole work of man's redemption, which the Father hath appointed him, and so sit down in glory upon the throne. He appeared as man in that nature, he did and suffered the will of God on earth, and in that nature he sat down at the right hand of God. Had not Christ been to fulfil all righteousness, he had not appeared as man sitting on the throne; and had he not done it, he should never have returned to heaven and sat down in glory. He hath satisfied the law, is freed from the guilt of our sins, and hath presently finished the work undertaken; and therefore told his Father, he had glorified him on earth, he had finished the work he had given him to do; and thereupon desired him to glorify him, and set him upon the throne, John xvii. 4, 5, which is done: and this may be of singular comfort against all our imperfections, corruptions, temptations, and death itself.

Ver. 27. And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about.

Here the man that sat upon the throne is described unto us: 1. In general. 2. More particularly.

1. In general; "I saw as the colour of amber."

2. Particularly, upwards and downwards. Upwards, "as the appearance of fire round about within it: from the appearance of his loins upward;" so that this fire was more latent. And then downwards the fire was more visible, and had brightness about it. Touching the word hushual, or chasmal, I have spoken largely in the 4th verse; and it signifies a coal intensely hot, and as it were, presently consuming whatever it touches: such coals are most fiery and lively; and they that render the word color vividissimus, a most lively colour, or as the colour of a burning coal, give the truest sense of the word. Before it referred to the angels, here to Christ. The word chasmal read backward, is lammashach, or lammashiach, which is interpreted, the Messiah; it is the Cabalist's observation, and the sum in general is this; "I saw as the colour of amber;" I saw Christ that sat upon the throne, all of an intense fiery colour, like the most hot burning coals. And so the Lord Christ is set forth, Rev. i. 14, 15, "His eyes were as a flame of fire, his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace;" so here, from head to feet, Christ is presented in a fiery colour. It is frequent in Scripture, when acts of power and judgment are to be executed against kingdoms or churches, to have Christ presented in a fiery way. So Rev. x. 1, the mighty Angel, Christ, is brought in there with his face shining as the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire; and presently there were great thunders, and dreadful things. So Rev. ii. 18, he is brought in with eyes like fire and feet like brass; and then tells Thyatira he hath a few things against her. So Rev. xix. 11—13, "In righteousness he doth judge and make war," and then his eyes were as a flame of fire, and his vesture dipt in blood. Thus is he described, when some great designs are afoot, as sentencing a church, warring against his enemies, &c.

The particular description is next, which falls into further inquiry. From his loins upward, was as the appearance of fire within it. There is a difference between the fire in the upward parts of Christ, and that in his lower; the one is external, the other internal. Within what? Within the colour of the amber; or, according to the word as we have interpreted it, within that fire of burning hot coals, there was as the appearance of fire in the conceave of it round about; so that there was a fire in a fire, a secret hidden fire burn- ing inwardly: this fire doth not put forth its virtue so apparently as the other did, but burnt inwardly, and reflected upon itself. What this fire was, is our work to open unto you. By fire within, Gregory, in his seventh Homily, understands Christ before his incarnation, he was ignis in Judea latens, a fire in Judea only; there only he shined, the gentiles knew him not; but after his incarnation he shined from his loins downward, and was made known unto all. But by it we understand the divine nature of Christ, which being full of perfection, too bright for human eyes, was more inward and remote from sense; and it is likened unto fire in regard of the lustre and efficacy of it, which none can endure. By the burning hot coals, we may understand the burning zeal of Christ to the glory of God in executing judgment upon the wicked; and at this time he sat in judgment upon Jerusalem.

“From his loins downward, there was as the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about it.” This fire and brightness was more apparent, visible, and enlightening than the other, and it represents to us the great glory and majesty of the Lord Christ, as it is exhibitiveto and comprehensive by creatures. It is the glory of human nature, which was the lower part of Christ, less glorious; the strength of the divine nature’s glory shining through it, and giving out itself in that way and degree as man is capable of. The sun in a cloud may be beheld by the weakest eye; in itself, not by the strongest. The glory of both Christ’s natures are shadowed out unto us in this verse.

“And it had brightness round about.” That fire produced a brightness, and a brightness on every side. It sets out the glory of Christ in execution of justice upon those that are delinquents; or the glory of his presence and actions: he dwells in light, and all his actions are lightsome.

Obs. 1. That the Lord Christ, as man, is very glorious; he was here in the appearance of man, and the prophet saw him, having the colour of chama, that is, like unto the most burning and hottest coal or coals; not those in common fires, but those that are in a furnace, which glow and shine most. In his transfiguration, which was a prelude to his glorious condition in heaven,

Christ’s face shined as the sun, Matt. xvii. 2. What a glorious creature is the sun! and Christ’s face as glorious as that is. In Dan. xii. 3, it is said, “The wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever;” but Christ as the sun, which is the great glory of the heavens: the godly may have firmament and star-brightness, but Christ sun-brightness; neither doth that reach the glory of Christ’s human nature, it goes beyond it. Acts xxvi. 13, when Christ appeared to Paul at his conversion, what saith he? “I saw a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me;” this was the light of the glory of Christ glorified, and it was beyond the brightness of the sun. The star that led the wise men to Christ, Ignatius thinks did exceed all the rest in light and brightness, that none ever was like it. Be it so, yet the glory of Christ’s human nature is far above it; no creature is so glorious, as fully to represent the glory of it. Therefore saith the apostle, Phil. iii. 21, “He shall change our vile bodies, and make them like,” not the stars or sun, that were too low, but like “his glorious body;” the original is, his body of glory; that is, his body which is exceeding glorious, above the glory of all creatures.

Obs. 2. That the Lord Christ sitting upon the throne in judgment, is very dreadful; he is ignis vividissimus, the brightest fire, as hot burning coals. The prophet Malachi tells you of his coming, and when he comes “who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner’s fire; and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, chap. iii. 2, 3. A refiner’s fire is the hottest, it melts, purges, consumes, and is terrible: such a fire is Christ in his judgments; Jerusalem could not stand before him, but he destroys them by the strength of Babylon, and afterward is terrible to Babylon itself: Jer. li. 25, “I am against thee, O destroying mountain,” speaking of Babylon, “which destroyest all the earth: I will stretch out my hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain.” This burning coal, Christ, will fire and burn down that great mountain; and what then? they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations, but thou shalt be desolate for ever. Severe was the spirit of Christ against Babylon in the letter, and as severe is he now against Babylon in the mystery: he shall “destroy them that destroy the earth.” Rev. xi. 18. He makes “Jerusalem a burdensome stone” to all that meddle with it, Zech. xii. 3. There is mention made in our prophet, chap. xxviii. 14, of stones of fire: Christ is the stone of fire that breaks and burns the kingdoms of the earth. Many kingdoms in Europe are on fire at this day, and almost broken in pieces, and burnt to ashes. We may see that Christ is terrible in his judgments; he is riding now upon his red horse, taking peace from the earth, dipping his garments in blood, and causing his great sword to eat flesh and drink blood: he is upon his black horse, bringing in famine and pestilence: the pale horse is saddled, and death is on the back of him, and intends to ride through our cities, countries, towns, families, and make a great slaughter, Rev. vi. and will yet be more terrible; ver. 17, “The great day of his wrath is at hand, and who shall be able to stand?” Neither kings, great men, captains, mighty ones, nor any other sort can do it. They will call on rocks and mountains to fall upon them, and hide them from the face of him that sits on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. His eyes sparkled with fire, his feet are like burning brass, and out of his mouth issue flames of fire. And to set out the dreadfulness of this Judge, Paul tells us, he shall come in flames of fire, 2 Thess. i. 8. And as his appearance, so his name will be dreadful, for he hath an unknown name belongs to him in his way of ruling and judgment, Rev. xix. 12; and this will be known when he sets up his kingdom among the Jews, saith Brightman.

Obs. 3. That he is zealous in sentencing and punishing malefactors. He is prunu summe ignita, a coal brightly burning; and not only so, but here is a fire within, zeal in his breast, a spirit of burning within. You may see the zeal of Christ in John ii. 14–17. The temple being a type of Christ, and by divine appointment set apart for worship, should not have been made a place for merchandise; but Christ coming and finding in the temple those that sold oxen, sheep, doves, and changers of money, sitting, made a scourge of small cords, and whipped them out of the temple like a company of rogues; drove out the sheep and oxen, poured out the changers’ money, overthrew the tables, bid them take away their doves, and not make his Father’s house a house of merchandise. They might have said, All these are brought for sacrificing, for public service and the worship of God; and what! dost thou pretend God’s glory, and take away his sacrifice? we will whip thee out of the temple, and use thee as an enemy to God and his worship. And it was a wonder they did not, Christ being a poor man, having no countenance from the rulers, and meddling with rude fellows, and dealing with them so sharply and shamefully as to whip them out; it was wonder they tore him not in pieces, or stoned him to death for it. Christ’s zeal was hot, and carried him on to punish and disgrace those delinquents, not fearing their rage or malice, so God's glory might be repaired. This zeal in Christ was so intense that it warmed the hearts of his disciples, who upon it remembered what was written of him, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." How zealous was Christ in his carriage towards the Asian churches! He tells Ephesus, that except she repent, recover her first love, and do her first works, he will come quickly, remove her candlestick out of its place, and unchurch her, Rev. ii. 5. To Pergamus also he saith, "Repent; for I come quickly, and will fight against thee with the sword of my mouth," ver. 16. So for Thyatira, wherein Jezebel lived and did much hurt, "Behold," saith Christ, "I will east her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds: and I will kill her children with death." &c. ver. 22, 23. So for Laodicea, how zealous is Christ against that zealous church! "I know thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, I will spue thee out of my mouth," chap. iii. 15, 16. His proceeding with the churches answers his appearance to John in the vision, which was with eyes as a flame of fire, and feet like burning brass, chap. i. 14, 15.

Obs. 4. That the divine nature of Christ is too glorious for man's eyes to behold; and therefore is presented here more remote and hidden from the prophet's sight. There was the appearance of fire in the colour of amber, or within the outward fire; this was glorious, that exceeding glorious, the fire in the fire: here is infinite glory shut up, obscured by that which is less glorious. You heard before of Christ's human nature, that it is very glorious; much more the divine that communicates the lustre and glory to the human: 2 Pet. i. 17, "A voice came from the excellent glory, glory that excelled all the glory of the creature, that excelled all the apprehensions of creatures; from the glory greatly becoming, or great becoming glory: it is glory that greatly becomes the great God. And such is the glory of the divine nature of Christ, it is excellent glory; and if it were let out a little, in the strength and fulness of it, we should be sunk by it: for glory is a weighty thing; the Hebrew word for glory signifies gravitas, pondus, onus, heaviness, weight, burden; intimating that glory, as it is a bright, so a heavy thing; brightness and weightiness are in it; 2 Cor. iv. 17, it is called a weight of glory, and the glory of Christ's divine nature would oppress us, if fully opened to our view. Moses made a request to God, which if he had granted, would have been his death: Exod. xxxiii. 18, "I beseech thee," saith he, "show me thy glory." God tells him in the 20th verse, "No man can see me and live," my glory will be a consuming fire unto thee; yet God is pleased to communicate the glory of his divine nature here to Moses in that way which might do him good, and not destroy him: he puts him into the cleft of a rock, and shows him his back parts, ver. 23, which was some glorious body, as Tostatus thinks; some human shape, as others conceive: and not unlikely to be Christ, as he appeared in his transfiguration, full of glory and majesty. Thus God condescended to Moses, and so here to the prophet; he sees the glory of the divine nature in the human, which in itself is not subject to man's sense, but through divine dispensation is made visible according to man's capacity. If we cannot behold the sun for its brightness, nor one creature behold another; without prejudice to itself; how can we behold the exceeding glory of the Creator, of the divine nature, without great danger, without death? The glory of such majesty would turn us into nothing.

Fulgor ille tantæ majestatis nos in nihilum redigeret.

Obs. 5. That Christ's actions, even judiciary ones, are glorious. There was brightness round about his presence, sitting in judgment; and his actual punishing of the Jews with war, famine, captivity, are all full of glory. This supreme Majesty executing judgment, fills all with brightness and glory. When the angel came with power to judge Babylon, Rev. xviii. 1, 2, it is said, "the earth was lightened with his glory." Acts of judgment and justice are glorious and shining. Ribera saith, this is meant of judgment upon Rome, which shall be evident to all, and fill the world with the glory of it, when it shall be fulfilled. God was glorious as well in destroying the Egyptians as in delivering the Israelites. There is so much beauty and brightness in works of justice and judgment, that they are called "the glory of the Lord," Numb. xiv. 21. The people, upon the ill report brought upon the land of Canaan, murmured, thought to make a captain, and go back to Egypt; whereupon God threatened to smite them with the pestilence, and to disinherit them. Moses interposes, intercedes for them. God answers him, and saith, At thy request I have pardoned them; "but as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." What is that?

Rev. xvi 11, the fire and brimstone they are tormented with, is, vincta Dei ex qua quasi sumus produnt Deulais et gloria, Alcazar.

The glory of his just judgments upon them in the wilderness. And shortly after, Corah and his confederates were swallowed alive by the earth; Zimri and Cosbi were run through for their wickedness; and in these and other particulars was the glory of the Lord seen evidently. Would magistrates, and those who have power in their hands, shine and be glorious? let them execute judgment, and see justice done. Solomon by that act of judgment between the two harlots, touching the dead and the living child, became renowned. What a glorious act was in it, when Darius set Daniel at liberty, and caused his accusers to be east into the den of lions! If men in place would punish delinquents, executing justice in the fear of God, without respect of persons, distemper of affections, or any sinister respects, they would be like angels, and enlighten the city and kingdom with glory: such a one is sol justitiæ, the sun of justice, and fills the world with the beams of righteousness; he is dextra Dei, the right hand of God, and relieves kingdoms, cities, families, with equity.

Ver. 28. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about.

Here is a description of that brightness or glory which compassed him that sat upon the throne. Himself was glorious, the brightness of glory, and he had circumferential brightness; and this resembled unto the bow in the cloud, that which we call the rainbow. First mention of it is in the 9th of Genesis, ver. 13, where God puts double honour upon it.

1. He owns it for his; "I do set my bow in the cloud:" and,

2. Makes it federal, a token of the covenant between him and the earth; and so by divine institution is exalted to a supernatural work, a sacramental sign.

I shall speak something of this bow philosophically, and something theologically.

1. Philosophically. The generation of it is in the womb of a cloud, and the cause natural, viz. the reverberation of the sun-beams in a moist cloud; for when there is a moist cloud opposite to the sun,

Oleaster, Osander. conceive: and not unlikely to be Christ, as he appeared in his transfiguration, full of glory and majesty. Thus God condescended to Moses, and so here to the prophet; he sees the glory of the divine nature in the human, which in itself is not subject to man's sense, but through divine dispensation is made visible according to man's capacity. If we cannot behold the sun for its brightness, nor one creature behold another; without prejudice to itself; how can we behold the exceeding glory of the fitly disposed to receive the sunbeams, and to reflect them, then is the rainbow's birth and appearance. The figure of it is a semicircle, sometimes less, but never greater. Sometimes there had been a rainbow in the night from the beams of the moon, which is weak, and like a white cloud.

In lib. 2 Ptin.

Mylichius observes, that from the sun hath sometimes been a white rainbow; but constantly the rainbow is of divers colours, especially blue, green, and red; all very glorious, and wonderful, drawing the eyes of the world to behold it; whereupon Plato thinks it is called the daughter of wonder, it is so admired.

Thaumantis filiam propter admirationem. In Theateto.

Exercitat. 80.

The natural signification of it is, rain, and moist weather. Scaliger saith, if it be in the morning, it betokens rain, if in the evening, fair weather; but we may find by observation, that evening rainbows in our horizons have been messengers of rain, as oft as morning ones. The Grecians call it Iris, which Eustathius saith is from εἶρος, nuntio, because it doth foretell rain. Some derive it from εἶρος, contention, because it presageth stormy and wet weather. Homer constantly calleth it ἄγγελος, and θεῶν ἄγγελος, a divine messenger, to tell the world there should be rain and storm. This is the observation of some learned, that if the colours of the bow appear thick, and end in blackness of a cloud, rain follows certainly; but if they grow clearer, and so vanish, a serene time follows.

Lib. 12. c. 22.

Besides this signification, Pliny attributes a special operation to it; where the horns of the bow do light, plants and herbs are made more fragrant and pleasant: and Scaliger is of the same opinion, who saith, the incubation of the rainbow upon plants, makes them more odoriferous: and Aristotle tells us, Hist. Animal. lib. 5. cap. 22, that it doth much conduce to the generation of honey-dew.

Iridis incubatio plantis sunt odoriferiores. Escret. 80.

Ad generationem manne et mellis acit.

2. For the theological consideration of this bow, it is to put us in mind of the great flood that drowned the world, and to assure us that God will never more do so. Gen. ix. 14, 15, "When I bring a cloud over the earth, and the bow shall be seen in the cloud, I will remember my covenant between me and you and every living creature; and the water shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh." When we see the bow therefore in the heavens, we should,

1. Be led to consideration of divine justice against the iniquities of the world, which he punished most severely, so as to destroy all flesh; and,

2. To mind the rich mercy of God to our forefathers and ourselves, to whom he hath bound himself by covenant, and the bow being the sign of it, that he will never destroy the world again in that kind: and whereas some make the red colour in the bow a sign of the world's destruction by fire at last, it hath foundation in man's brain, not in any institution of God.

Qui infra lumbos magnus apparuit Maldon. A Layid.

But I come to the words of our prophet. Here is "a bow in a cloud in the day of rain," &c. Some make the brightness here to be that which is downward from his loins, and to be like unto the bow in the cloud; and so they exclude all the parts from his loins upward, from having reference to this bow; understanding by his upper parts, the divine nature, by his lower, the human. And something there is in it, because the text saith, ver. 27, "I saw from the appearance of his loins downward, as the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about it." That fire had not the other; but it seems to me more suitable to the text and truth, that this brightness, being in circuit round about it, did compass, not the lower parts only, but the whole throne and person of Christ; and so we find in Rev. iv. 3, where Christ is upon the throne, that there is a rainbow round about it, and therefore conceive, that here also the rainbow was round about the throne.

We will not stand upon that longer, but come to see what the bow points at. And,

1. It is an emblem of glory. God's glory is much seen in the heavens always; but when the bow is set in the cloud, Habet accessionem aliquam non sperendam, ac si Deus adderet aliquid ad nudum culti aspectum, Cal. It has an addition which is not to be neglected, as if God would add somewhat to the bare appearance of the heavens. It is a glorious creature, and hath glorious colours in it; various, and yet beautiful; affecting the eye for the present, more than all the glory of the heavens besides; and I find among interpreters, that it signifies,

First, the glory and beauty of Divine Providence in its various proceedings with the wicked and the godly; it punisheth the one, it rewards the other; and when these are done, there is so much glory in it, that angels and men are affected with it.

Secondly, the glory which is conveyed and communicated to the creatures; for in the heavens the glory of God doth shine. You know the rainbow's original and being is from the beams of the sun, communicated, received, and reflected; and though it be glorious, yet it is a borrowed glory, and so informs us that the glory in all creatures is from another, from Christ; "By him kings reign, He gives gifts to the sons of men, He enlightens every man that comes into the world."

2. It is a token of mercy and favour. It is a bow without arrows. The back (saith Ramban) of it being towards the heavens, and ends downward, it is a sign of mercy; for when one shooteth arrows, he holds the back from him. And that it is a sign of grace and mercy, we will make out by Scripture unto you. That covenant made by Noah about the waters in Isa. liv. 8—10, is applied to the covenant of grace, stricken with man in Christ: "In a little wrath," saith God, "I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee. For this is as the waters of Noah unto me; for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth, so have I sworn I would not be wroth with thee. For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." Here you see the covenant of waters applied to the covenant of grace; and in the Revelation you shall see the same sign, even the rainbow applied for a sign of grace, Rev. iv. 3. There is Christ sitting upon the throne, and a rainbow round about it, which shows, that the throne of Christ is compassed about with mercy: and Rev. x. 1, "A rainbow was upon his head;" Christ is presented in visions, crowned with the rainbow, as a messenger of grace and peace; for he is the Prince of peace, Isa. ix. 6, and his crown is the rainbow, a certain emblem of peace, Gen. ix. 13, 14. The rainbow hath variety of colours, and all glorious, and so doth the more fitly resemble the mercies of Christ, which are various and glorious.

Symbolum clementie, gratie, et misericordie.

This brightness, then, in the figure of a rainbow, signifies grace and mercy, held out to those that were godly, or should repent of their wickedness. The brightness before noted the glory of his judiciary proceeding, and here being formed into a bow, it betokens mercy.

Obs. 1. That mercy and grace come to us through the human nature of Christ, from thence goeth out the brightness and the beams that make the bow. When the Word was made flesh, then went out glory, John i. 14, and grace, ver. 16; then was the most glorious rainbow that ever was or shall be in the world. He was not a sign of peace, but our peace; Eph. ii. 14, by his blood we are brought nigh, "for he is our peace."

Obs. 2. God hath his days of rain. When the flood was, then there was rain to purpose forty days together. If God hath rained bread, Exod. xvi. he hath rained wrath, Job xx. 23; snares, storms, fire, brimstone, Psal. xi. God rains blood upon kingdoms; Ezek. xxxviii. 22, "I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and his bands, and the many people with him, overflowing rain, great hailstones, fire and brimstone."

Obs. 3. That the Lord Christ in wrath remembers mercy, he mingles mercy with judgment. He sits as Judge upon the throne, he pronounces sentence against a sinful kingdom, executing the vengeance written against sinners; and yet here he is compassed with the rainbow; showing that he will not utterly destroy the Jews, a remnant should be spared. When the great deluge of water was drowning the world, yet Noah and his family were saved; there was mercy in the midst of judgment: and here is a Judge with a rainbow over his head, to assure the godly they should not perish in this flood of wrath, now pouring out upon the Jews. Jerom saith of the bow, it is a sign of mercy, and the covenant which God made with man, that when it appeared in the cloud, we might know we should not perish by a flood: and much more, when Christ sits in judgment with the rainbow about him, may the godly know, that they shall not perish by the wrath of God. If the glory of his majesty, stateliness of his throne, terror of his justice, and the greatness of his power, do at any time discourage us, we must look at the rainbow round about him, and remember his throne is compassed with mercy. It is said of the Jews, when they see the rainbow, they go forth, confess their sins, but will not look upon it. Confession of sins, or any duty whatsoever, will do us no good, unless we look upon the bow, the mercy of Christ. Now was a storm, and in it a rainbow, for the prophet and godly to look at. It is said in the text, "the bow in the cloud in the day of rain." Then it is a rainy day, when God rains snares, fire and brimstone, and horrible tempest, upon the wicked; even then the bow is in the cloud, and the righteous should look for it, and look to it; they should remember the covenant and mercy of it. Is it not a rainy and stormy time now? is not this great Prince angry with the kings and kingdoms of the earth? doth he not frown, chide, and smite, and that with deadly strokes in many places? Let us look at the rainbow now, and know, if there should come an overflowing scourge, a deluge of wrath upon the world, yet the Noahs shall be arked and safe, the righteous shall be hid, Christ will manifest mercy to them. Saith John, Rev. iv. 2, "I was in the spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven; and there was a rainbow round about the throne." No sooner was John in the Spirit, but he saw the throne and the rainbow. Let us now be in the Spirit, look with eyes of faith, and we shall see the throne, him that sits on it, and the bow round about him; and then, though kingdoms lie under the floods of errors, superstition, and ungodliness, though drowned in troubles and blood, yet we shall see God and Christ in a way of love and mercy towards us.

Obs. 4. That justice and mercy do compass the throne of Christ; there was brightness round about, and the bow was round about. Go to Christ's throne any way, there is nothing but justice for the sinner, unless penitent and believing, and if such, nothing but mercy.

Ver. 28. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake.

Here is the conclusion of the vision, and in it we have the scope of all that was presented to the prophet's view, and it is to manifest the infinite glory of God; and then follows a double effect:

First, upon the sight of it, he fell upon his face; and, Secondly, he hears a voice; and so a fit passage is made to that which follows.

The first thing is the manifestation of God's glory; and the glory of God is considerable,

1. In God himself, in the divine nature; and there it is infinitely glorious, exceeding glory.

2. In the creation, as it is expressed and opened in the volume of the creatures, there God's glory is greatly seen: Isa. vi. 3, "The earth is full of his glory;" the Hebrew is, the fulness of the earth is his glory: the world is glorious, and filled with God's glory; it is nothing Quid est mundus nisi Deus explicatus? else but God's glory interpreted and opened unto us in the creatures, and Divine Providence about them.

3. In divine dispensations towards his church and people. God's glory is in the firmament, in all the creatures, but more specially and fully in the church: Psal. xxix. 9, "In his temple doth every one speak of his glory;" there it is most visible, affecting, and provoking of every one to speak. In the world few take notice of it, but in the temple every one sees it, and speaks of it. The world is God opened, and so glorious; the church is Christ opened, and so very glorious. This made David long to be in the sanctuary, when he was in the wilderness; and why so? "To see thy power and thy glory;" Psal. lxxiii. 2. Could not David see them in the heavens, in the mountains, in the goodly cedars, and other works of God? Yes, but not as in the sanctuary; and therefore he saith, "To see thy power and glory, as I have seen thee in the sanctuary;" there I have seen thee otherwise than ever elsewhere; there he saw the King upon his throne and in his glory.

The glory of God in each of these, is held forth in this vision, in some measure. There was the Spirit in the wheels, a fire within, by which the glory of the divine nature appeared. There was a whirlwind, a cloud, fire, brightness, living creatures, and wheels moving several ways, which represent the glory of God in the world and government of it. There was a firmament and a throne, and one sitting upon it, surrounded with a rainbow; which sets out the glory of God in his several dispensations towards his church, both in his judgments, mercies, and government thereof.

A question is moved, whether our prophet saw the glory of God?

The answer is, It "was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord." He doth not say, he saw God in his essence: it is acknowledged by most, that we cannot see God's essence while we are pilgrims on earth, and absent in the flesh.

Augustine and Aquinas are of opinion, that Moses and Paul saw God in his essence: but they were men, and not without their errors; for had they seen God's essence, their faith had ceased, being swallowed up in vision.

In vid. I. b. de viden. Deum. Rom. 2. 140. 2. q. 174. 175.

The schoolmen would help it thus; the light of glory in them had not a permanent being, but was given them transitively. But this answer will not bear up the opinion; for faith and vision of glory cannot consist in a larger tract, or in the least instant of time: as in one man there cannot be a perfect and obscure light together; the full light of the sun, and least degree of darkness, cannot at once be in the eye. And further, if they saw the essence of God, they had not the act of faith, but evidence; for if a man had seen Rome, and after remembers it, he saith not he believes there is such a city, but he hath seen it: and so of God's essence. It must not be granted, that ever any saw God's essence; you have uncontrollable authority for it, John i. 18, "No man hath seen God at any time." Durand. saith, these words are to be understood exclusively,

1. Of corporeal vision; for with a bodily eye none ever did or shall see God.

2. Of intellectual, natural vision; because a natural understanding cannot attain unto the clear vision of God.

3. Of the vision of comprehension, from all created understandings. Though angels and saints in heaven see God, yet not comprehensively: and 1 Tim. vi. 16, "Whom no man hath seen, nor can see;" there is a denial both of the fact and the possibility. Austin himself confesseth, in

C. 16, 17, 18.

1. 2. de Trin., that the substance of God is not ullo modo corporaliter visibilem, not to be seen at all with the eyes of flesh. And the rule of the schoolmen touching visions and apparitions is infallible, that the nature of God is not seen with the eyes of the body, but only some corporeal thing is exhibited, which being visibly seen, or sensibly perceived, God is invisibly represented to the understanding.

At. Halens.

Bnt Moses saw God face to face, Exod. xxxiii. 11. So Jacob saw God face to face, Gen. xxxiii.

Ans. Those patriarchs and prophets that are said to see God, saw him in divers resemblances; and this is an unanswerable argument, that they never saw God's essence; for that is pure, unmixed, always alike, neither standing nor sitting, having no parts, no shape, or likeness to any thing. Therefore saith Athanasius, those fathers saw God in some creature, not in his own nature, for it is invisible.

Again, this phrase of seeing God face to face, in the Hebrew dialect, imports two things:

First, Familiarity.

Secondly, Perspicuity.

1. Familiarity. They had familiar converse with God: Deut. v. 4, "The Lord talked with you face to face;" you asked him questions, and he gave you answers: and it is evident that this is intended in the phrase, Exod. xxxiii. 11, "The Lord spake to Moses face to face, as a man speaks with his friend:" Moses questioned it with God, and God most friendly answered him. So in Numb. xii. 8, "Mouth to mouth will I speak with him;" it notes the familiarity of God with Moses.

2. Perspicuity. They saw God face to face; that is, comparatively. Others saw God in dreams and visions, which were most obscure, but these saw God more clearly, had more illustrious visions of God; they saw God's back parts, these saw God's face. And the phrase is used in the New Testament: 1 Cor. xiii. 12, "Then shall we see face to face;" that is, more fully and perfectly than here; but whether we shall see the divine essence in heaven, is questionable. Chrysostom, Hom. 14. on John, saith, that before the incarnation, the Son of God was angelis invisibilis, invisible to the angels; and if they in their glory saw not the divine nature of Christ, it is like we shall not. Whether Christ saw the Father or Holy Ghost with the eyes of his body, is questionable; if some doubt it, others deny it. Halensius grants, that the soul of Christ saw God perfectly from his conception; but he saith not, the eye of his body saw him. Aquinas saith, that glorified eyes shall see God in that manner, as now our eyes do see the life of man; life not seen with a bodily eye, as a thing visible by itself, but by the intervention of something else, and so accidentally become sensible; it is our understanding, not the eye, reacheth life: and so in God.

But, in 1 John iii. "We shall see him as he is."

Ans. He speaks of a new and unutterable way of seeing God. We shall see him as he is to be seen, mediate lumine glorie, the light of glory intervening. The beams of the sun so fill the eye, but we cannot behold the nature of it; and whether it be so in heaven, we shall not know till we come there. Let us get holiness, and then we shall see Him who will resolve this doubt.

Obs. 1. That all the glory which is seen of God in this life any ways, is but the appearance and likeness of the glory of God. There was much and great glory in this vision: there is more in the world, in the creatures, more in the church; and yet all this is only a shadow, and a small appearance of the glory of God. If we should see ten thousand torches lighted up in a dark night, they make a glorious light; yet they are nothing to the light of the sun: when that comes, torch-light, star-light, seem appearances of light, rather than light itself. So when the glory of God shall be revealed, it will darken all other glory: and there was not so great a difference between the light in Goshen, and darkness in Egypt, as there will be between the glory of God, and that glory which now appears in the world. The glory of God is neither expressible, nor comprehensible, by any, or all the creatures. The glory that Isaiah saw on earth, and that Ezekiel saw in the heavens, did not express the thousandth part of this glory; and neither heaven nor earth are able to comprehend the same.

Obs. 2. See the infinite goodness of the Lord, that will expose that to the eyes of his servants which is so dear unto him, his own glory. Precious things of princes and great ones, are not common for the view of all, but choice friends, favourites, shall see them. God hath nothing more precious than his glory; yet this shall his choice friends and favourites see; and, because they cannot see it in the perfection of it, God will draw a picture of it with his own hand, and hold forth to the eyes of his people here. Ezekiel had an appearance of the glory of the Lord; but it is the greater mercy, that God will put forth creating power in a vision, and present the likeness of his glory in variety of things, according to the capacity and for the advantage of his servants. So Moses saw the glory of the Lord in the mount; so Christ showed unto Peter, James, and John, his glory in his transfiguration, Matt. xvii. Isaiah, he had a glorious vision, chap. vi. and so glorious it was, that it is called the glory of the Lord; and this did the prophet Isaiah see in the likeness and appearance of it, not in its own nature, for no man yet ever could see the glory of God and live.

Jehovah: this name by the learned Jews is called,

1. Hashem, that name emphatically, as the chiefest of all the rest.

2. The name of four letters.

3. The great name.

4. The blessed name; for the high priest did pronounce it only once a year, and that in the temple, at the feast of propitiation, at the solemn blessing, Numb. vi. 24, 25.

5. The glorious name.

6. The name separate, shem Hammephorash; because separate from ambiguity, saith Maimonides, from our knowledge, saith the son of Maimonides.

7. The name appropriated to God, because it is most proper to him.

8. The name of remembering, because it brings to mind the being of God.

9. The name of essence or being, Shemhaetzem, a name of substance.

The Jews are exceedingly superstitious about this name, and say it must not be pronounced; they term it the inexpressible name; themselves never utter it, but Adonai, or Elohim, instead of it. They tell us, that the woman's son in Lev. xxiv. was accused of blasphemy, and stoned to death, because he pronounced this name Jehovah. And there is a relation of the priests of the sanctuary, that not knowing how to read this name, being written by Moses, they laughed, and were smitten to death of God for it. It is strange to think what miracles the Jews attribute to this name. Moses had it written in a rod or staff; Christ got it, and put it in his thigh; and so by virtue of it they both did all their miracles. They tell of one David a magician, that by virtue of this name went in one day a journey of ten days. But to leave rabbinical conceits; this name Jehovah imports essence, being, existence; and by it, the eternity, independency, efficacy, and truth of God are laid before us, together with his being: and here it is attributed to Christ, and tells us, that he hath his being of himself; he is complete in himself, and an infinite sea of being: eternal, Rev. i. 8; independent, Rev. i. 5; efficacious, giving being, life, and perfection to all creatures, Heb. i. 2, 3; Col. i. 16, 17; he is true, yea, truth; fulfilling the promises, 2 Cor. i. 20.

Obs. 1. Jesus Christ, who sat upon the throne here, is Jehovah, of the same essence with the Father and the Holy Ghost. He is not consimilar, but substantial with them; not like the Father, or like the Spirit, but the same: the one differs from the other personally, but not essentially.

1 John v. 7, "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one," one in essence, one in propriety, one Jehovah. The prophet speaking of Christ, tells us what his name shall be called, Jehovah-tsidkenu, "The Lord our righteousness," Jer. xxiii. 6; and in Mal. iii. 1, "Jehovah, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple:" by the name Jehovah, is meant Christ, who is God. And this is of great concernment; it is the foundation of our faith in Christ, of our worshipping of Christ, of our salvation by Christ, and of all good from Christ. If he were not Jehovah, the gospel would be a lie, our faith a fancy, our worship false, the church a fable, all men lost, and that for ever.

Obs. 2. Again, that the glory here represented in this vision, was not the glory of a creature, but of Jehovah; there was a man presented to his eye, but Jehovah to his faith. It was the appearance of the glory of the Lord; not only of Christ as man, but as God-man, and so the glory was glorious glory.

"And when I saw it, I fell upon my face." Here is the first effect of it; when he had this vision, beheld this glory, he was amazed, so smitten with the lustre of it, that he could stand no longer, but he falls down, and that upon his face. There is frequent mention in Scripture, that upon visions, and appearances of divine majesty, the servants of God have fallen down. Daniel, chap. viii. 17, he fell upon his face; and Saul, Acts ix. 4, he fell to the earth. Abraham, Gen. xvii. 3, he fell on his face when God appeared to him. The three disciples Christ took up into the mount, when they saw the glory, and heard the voice, they fell on their faces. There was a great difference between falling on the face, and falling on the back. To fall forward notes respect and humility: but to fall backward is a note of sin and guilt. Abraham fell twice upon his face; the prophets oft: the godly, when they are to deal with God, fall forward, the wicked backward. Except old Eli, we read not of any good man that fell backward: but all those that came to take Christ, John xviii. 6, "went backward, and fell to the ground:" so Isa. xxviii. 13, "Precept upon precept,—that they might go, and fall backward."

Cadere in faciem, observantia est, et humilitatem semper olet; sed retro cadere peccatum supponit, aut indicat. Jer.

There be divers reasons or grounds of men's falling upon their faces, in visions and apparitions of God.

1. The majesty of God that is present in these visions, and some way or other represented to those that have the visions: so Dan. x. 9.

2. The lustre of divine glory that accompanies the same: this made Paul and his company fall to the ground, Acts xxvi. 13, 14.

3. Some new and dreadful thing that appears in the vision, as here; creatures with four faces and four wings, wheels, rings full of eyes, and so high that they are dreadful.

4. Sense of their own frailty and weakness. Visions having divine majesty, glory, and some terribleness in them, have wrought strange effects upon infirm men; they have locked up their senses, and put them in a deep sleep, Dan. viii. 18; x. 9; made them sick and faint many days, chap. viii. 27; much grieved and troubled their spirits, chap. vii. 15; taken away their strength and comeliness, chap. x. 8; smitten dumb, ver. 15, breathless, ver. 17.

5. To testify two things: First, thankfulness for some mercy received or promised. Upon this ground Abraham fell on his face, Gen. xvii. 17; when God appeared to him, and told him that he would make a covenant with him, and multiply him exceedingly, he fell on his face, to manifest, as his humility, so especially the grateful frame of his spirit toward God for such a mercy. Second, reverence, worship, and respect unto divine Majesty. Falling upon the face notes so much in the language of Canaan: 2 Chron. xx. 18, "Jehoshaphat bowed his head with his face to the ground: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem fell before the Lord, and worshipped him." So bowing, in Psal. lxxii. 9, is to note reverence and worship, "They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him: and his enemies shall lick the dust:" they shall come in to Christ, and by bowing their faces to the ground, and licking the dust of his feet, shall testify their reverence and subjection unto him. So Isa. xlix. 23.

That which made our prophet fall down on his face here, was, fear and amazement at the apprehension of the majesty of Christ, the great glory that appeared, newness and dreadfulness of things in the vision.

Obs. 1. See what mischief sin hath done unto us; it hath disabled us from partaking of our greatest good. The sight of glory is the happiness of the creature. When Peter saw Christ's transfiguration but dimly, he said, O Master, it is good being here! but sin hath made us incapable of the sight of glory: Peter and the rest fell upon their faces, and could not behold it as otherwise they might.

Gregory in his 8th Homily saith, it is matter of great mourning, to consider we are fallen into such an estate, as that we cannot behold what would make us happy; we cannot endure that good, that glory, which God created us to behold; yea, such weakness hath sin brought us to, that we cannot bear the sight of the appearance of the likeness of glory. They are weak eyes that cannot endure the sunbeams, they more weak that cannot endure the light which is more remote from the brightness and glory of the sun; and so here, man cannot endure the glory of the Lord, nor the likeness of it, nor the appearance of the likeness.

Obs. 2. That the sight of glory is an humbling thing. When the prophet saw the appearance of the glory of the Lord, he falls upon his face; then he is conscious of his own weakness and worthlessness; then he trembles, and sees the great disproportion between majesty and nothingness. Isa. xl. 5, "The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it;" and then follows, "All flesh is grass." Glory will convince us that we are but grass. It is not hearing will do it, at least, not so effectually: seeing, and seeing of glory, doth humble mightily. Seeing of misery causeth grief, "Mine eye affecteth mine heart;" but seeing of glory causeth godly sorrow. Job xlii. 5, 6, "Now mine eye seeth thee, I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." When he saw the Lord and his glory, then he abhorred himself, his own righteousness, all his confidences, duties, and whatever the heart and wit of man catcheth hold of, and repented, and said, What am I unto God, the great, the glorious God! He is so infinitely glorious and distanced from me, that I am no better than dust and ashes, and worthy to be buried under them out of his sight. And so Isaiah, when he saw the glory of the Lord, then was he sensible of his own vileness, and cries out, "Woe is me! I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips;" though a prophet, yet a man of unclean lips; "for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." He had heard the seraphims cry, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory;" but this wrought not so powerfully as the sight of his glory: now he saw his sin, what a great and foul sinner he was, and therefore saith he, "Woe is me," &c.

Obs. 3. That those that are thoroughly humbled with the sense of their own vileness and weakness, are fittest to hear divine truths, and to receive divine mysteries. Ezekiel falls on his face, and then bears a voice; so was it with Daniel. Flesh and blood is apt to be lifted up, to trust in something of its own; men look at, and like their own parts, their graces; some confidence or other we are apt to catch hold of; but we must let all go, be low in our own eyes, if we will be fit auditors of Christ; we must fall down at the feet of his throne, if we will hear him speak from his throne. He giveth grace to the humble, they find the choicest favours at his hands, James iv. 6. Moses, a meek man, yea, the meekest of all living, and God showed himself the most to him, and so to him as not to others. Numb. xii. 8, he spake to him "mouth to mouth." Deut. xxxiv.

10, "There arose not a prophet since in Israel like to Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face." See Isa. lxvi. 2.

"And I heard a voice of one that spake." This is the second effect following his sight of the glory of God; he first falls upon his face, and then hears a voice. This was the voice of him that sat upon the throne, and was so glorious, that the prophet could not behold him. It was not the voice of the heavens, Psal. xix. 3, nor of the thunder, Psal. xxix. 3, but of Christ: and the voice of Christ is taken in the Scripture,

First, for an extraordinary voice, having extraordinary power with it: John v. 28, "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice;" that is, the power of his voice shall fetch them out of their graves.

Secondly, for the doctrine of Christ: John x. 27, "My sheep hear my voice," that is, my doctrine; they do not hear Christ immediately speaking, but they hear his gospel, his ministers opening it unto them.

Thirdly, for the speech of Christ, speaking unto others: Acts ix. 4, "He heard a voice, saying, Saul, Saul," &c.; such is the voice here, Christ speaking himself unto Ezekiel.

This vision and voice was,

First, to affect the prophet, that he might be humbled, awakened, quickened up, and prepared to the work the Lord Christ intended him.

Secondly, to confirm him,

1. In his call to his ministry. He was to be a prophet to this people in a strange land, and therefore hath an extraordinary call to it; Christ from heaven appears,

2. In the truth of his prophecy. He should utter nothing but what he had from Christ, the author of all truth; he would put words into his mouth.

3. In the whole race and work of his ministry, that he might not be discouraged; seeing that he had seen such a vision, heard such a voice.

Thirdly, to confirm the jews, and gentiles, all to whom this prophecy should come, of the majesty, reality, and truth of it.

Note, 1. God sets one sense to work after another: his eye was taken up before with the sight of great and glorious things; now his ears come to be exercised and filled with as choice truths as the eye had objects; and afterwards there is a roll for his taste and touching. God lets in mercy and goodness to us through every window and door.

2. That great fear doth astonish, and hinder judgment: he heard a voice, but knew not whose it was; fear doth disturb and surprise.

CHAPTER II.

Ver. 1. And he said unto me, Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee.

In the former chapter we met with great deeps and difficulties, mysteries of a high nature; and if any light have appeared in the opening of them, let him that sits upon the throne have the glory of it. By his assistance we have gone over sundry rocks, and through some depths; and we desire by the same assistance to proceed: and now we are come from the mountains to the plains, where we may walk with more safety.

The glory of the Lord being set out in his government of the world, in his dispensations towards his church, in the antecedent chapter; the scope of this chapter is, to corroborate Ezekiel smitten down with the sight of glory, and to show his call unto his prophetic office. The parts are, the confirming, sending, and instructing of the prophet.

1. His confirmation and comforting is laid down in the two first verses.

2. His sending in the three next to the sixth verse.

3. His instructing from the sixth to the ninth. After that, mention is made of a roll in the two last verses, and in the beginning of the next chapter, which is of much concernment, as in its place may appear.

The confirming of the prophet is,

1. By the word of God, in the first verse.

2. By his Spirit, in the second verse.

In the first verse are two things considerable:

1. The party speaking.

2. The matter spoken; where you have,

1. The appellation; "Son of man."

2. The command; "Stand upon thy feet."

3. The ground of it, which is a gracious promise; "And I will speak unto thee."

It is Christ who speaks, and unto Ezekiel, whom he calls "the son of man;" the original is, the son of Adam, that is, of earthly man: for, as the apostle saith, 1 Cor. xv. 47, "The first Adam was of the earth, earthy;" and Adam signifies earth, or red earth, whereof his body was made: and when we read in Scripture this phrase, it notes out to us,

1. Our base beginning, that we are of the earth. There is no man, be he never so excellent, high, wise, honourable, but he is the son of Adam, terra filius, a son of the earth: Psal. xlix. 2, "Both low and high," both the sons of Adam and the sons of Jacob, are so; they have all one father, and all one mother, and that is the earth.

2. Our frailty, that we are earthen vessels and soon broken in pieces. Psal. ix. 20, "Put them in fear, O Lord, that the nations may know themselves to be but men;" they think themselves gods, but show them thy power, thine iron rod and sceptre, bring a war, a plague, a famine amongst them, and then they will know that they are frail, weak men.

3. Our worthlessness and fitness to be rejected. Who amongst us regards a clod of earth, an earthen vessel? Silver or golden ones some prize, and prize too much, but earthly ones are contemptible. Nations are as the drops of the bucket, and small dust of the balance, Isa. xl. 1; and are not they contemptible things? This made David to wonder, and say, "Lord, what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! or the son of man," the son of earth, "that thou makest account of him!" Psal. cxliv. 3; "that thou visitest him!" Psal. viii. 4; and Job vii. 17. "What is man, that thou shouldst magnify him? and that thou shouldst set thine heart upon him?" These are high and great expressions to be bestowed upon so poor a thing as man is; to take knowledge of him; and such knowledge, as to make account of him, as to mind him, visit him, magnify him, to set the heart upon him; this is exceeding much from an infinite, great, and glorious God towards worthless men, and not credible, if the Spirit of God had not revealed it.

4. Our end, that we are earth; thence we came, and thither we must go; Gen. iii. 19, "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou must return."

This title of "Son of man" I do not find given to any but three, in the book of God: once to Daniel, chap. viii. 17, "Understand, O son of man;" forty times and upwards to Christ; and above eighty times to this our prophet; but with this difference, Ezekiel is called the "son of man" by another, Christ always calls himself so. Ezekiel is four times in this chapter so called, and it is given him,

1. To prevent pride, say some expositors. He had a glorious vision, was among angels, saw the Lord Christ, and was to enter upon the prophetic function; the least of which might stir corruption, and make pride blossom. When Paul had his rapture into the third heavens, and heard things unutterable, what saith he? 2 Cor. xii. 7, "Lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me," &c. Paul was in danger of being lifted up, but God preventeth it; and so here, Ezekiel is reminded of his mean original, his frailty, worthlessness, and end, that he might not be exalted with his vision or office. We are exceeding apt, upon the receipt of great mercies, to grow proud and confident, which are evil in any, but worst in a prophet; and therefore, to prevent these, he calls him "son of man."

2. To frame his spirit to a right estimate of himself, throughout the whole course of his office; that whatever good was done he should still remember he was the son of man, and it was God, not he, that did it. It is a hard thing to keep the heart in an humble frame and fitness, to give unto God the glory of what he doth by us. God helps our prophet by this title, which runs through the whole prophecy, and took such interest in his heart, that whatsoever was seen, heard, said, or done by him, the son of man, the glory of all was given to Christ, the Son of God. He could say, I am an earthen vessel; if there be heavenly treasure in it, he that sat upon the throne put it in: for mine own part, I am the son of man, like all the children of Adam; and if there be any difference, he made it, and if there be any glory, he shall have it. So Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 10, "I laboured more abundantly than they all;" that seems a derogating speech, but he corrects himself for it; "yet not I, but the grace of God that was with me."

3. To let Ezekiel and others see the rich bounty and goodness of God, in that he would take a son of man, who is earth, frail, and worthless, and exalt him to so high and honourable a condition; and specially at such a time as this was, when God was wroth with his inheritance, laid them waste, had brought them into Babylon, and was stripping them naked of all comforts, yet now to give them a prophet, to call out Ezekiel, this could not but put his spirit, and all their spirits, into admiration of God's goodness.

"Stand upon thy feet." Here is the command of Christ. Ezekiel, I see thou art a frail man, stricken with great fear, and canst not endure my glory and presence; stand up, this is not for thy hurt, but good; I appear not to confound thee, but to comfort thee, not to cast thee down, but to exalt thee.

Why doth the Lord command standing?

1. It is a fitter posture for hearing than lying on the ground was. Stand, that thou mayst recover thy spirits, and hear the better what I shall say unto thee. So the angel bid Daniel stand upright, Dan. x. 11. Oracles are for standers, not prostrate ones; therefore, when Balaam came with the oracles of God to Balak, he said, "Rise up, Balak, and hear," Numb. xxiii. 18; show thou reverence and respect to the word of God; for kings were wont to stand when messengers from God were brought unto them. So Eglon rose out of his seat when Ehud told him he had a message from God unto him, Judg. iii. 20. Eusebius tells us of Constantine the Great, that he did hear the word standing; and being requested to rest himself in his royal throne, which was set there for that purpose, he refused; and being pressed, after long time of hearing, to sit down, with a stern countenance he answered, "It were a great sin in me not to hear attentively when God is spoken of?"

Nihil supra naturæ humane vires sibi assumere.

Stantis est divinorum auditio, non resupini.

2. To show that all mundane things should be beneath us; when we deal with God, we must not lie down and embrace them, but stand up, and have them under our feet. Jerom saith, the saints stand and tread all down, but sinners they fall and embrace the earth and furniture of it. Rev. xii. 1, the church hath the moon under her feet: all sublunary things are under the saints' feet, not in their hearts, or over their heads.

3. That he might be in a posture for service; Ephes. vi. 14, "Stand, having your loins girt." Prostration on the earth is no posture for employment, but standing is; and the Lord Christ would not have his so affected with his greatness and glory, so reverential, as to be hindered or disabled from his service. Holy reverence doth not make idle or inept to service. Stand on thy feet, therefore, saith Christ, and be in a readiness to execute what I command.

The words being opened, now take the observations.

Obs. 1. That the Lord Christ is full of bowels and compassions. Ezekiel was fallen down upon his face; the glory of the vision, and greatness of him that sat upon the throne, had conquered, and felled this our prophet to the earth, and there he lay as a man wounded, and without strength; but Christ leaves him not in this condition, but speaks, and that kindly to him, "Son of man, stand upon thy feet;" he is affected with his infirmity, sensible of his fears and troubles. The man that fell among thieves going from Jerusalem to Jericho, being plundered and wounded, found no pity from the priest and Levite, but much from the good Samaritan; when he saw him, he had compassion on him, he went to him, bound up his wounds, put in oil and wine, set him upon his own beast, was content to go on foot by him, brought him to an inn, and took care of him, and paid for his cure, Luke x. 33—35. This Samaritan was Christ, who pitied Adam, and in him mankind, that went from Jerusalem, the state of perfection, to Jericho, a state of change. For, as Chemnitius observes, Jericho signifies the moon, and so a changeable condition; the priest and Levite notes the law, with all its additaments, they passed by, and never reached or healed the wounded soul of man; but Christ the Samaritan, with the grace of the gospel and blood of the covenant, with that oil and wine, cured man, brought him upon his own shoulders to the church, to Jerusalem again, and there took care for him. We have not a legal high priest which is without bowels, and can do little for us; but we have an evangelical High Priest, full of bowels and mercy, such a one as is touched with our infirmities, Heb. iv. 15: which should encourage us with boldness to come unto his throne, which is a throne of grace and compassion.

Obs. 2. That those who are humble, and smitten down with sense of their own vileness, weakness, or worthlessness, through the sight of glory and greatness, Christ quickly raises to comfort again. Our prophet was down in the end of the former chapter, and in the beginning of this he is up again. The humbling from the sight of God, his glory and greatness, is the most effectual humbling; and the most speedy, effectual, and sweetest comfort doth follow it. Job, after he had seen God, and humbled himself, thereupon his captivity is turned, his comforts multiplied, Job xlii. 5, 6, 10, 12. So Isaiah, being humbled upon the sight of glory, presently a seraphim comforts him, touches his lips with a coal from the altar, and saith, "Thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged." Daniel was humbled for his own sins, the sins of his forefathers, and the afflictions of the church, Dan. ix.; and the Lord sent Gabriel to comfort him, who told him he was a man greatly beloved, and that he came to give him skill and understanding, ver. 22, 23. God doth not humble and throw down his to leave them, but reaches out a hand to raise them.

Obs. 3. That man carries about him principles of humiliation; he is the son of man, the son of the earth. Isa. xxxi. 3, "The Egyptians are men, and not God," they are weak and worthless things; and so are not only Egyptians, but Israelites, all men; and so have no cause to be puffed up at all, but great cause to be humbled. Job called corruption his father, and the worm his mother, Job xvii. 14. You see what stoek and kindred Job came of, and we are all of the same house. Therefore afterward, in chap. xxv. 6, it is said, man, and the son of man, is a worm; and so David. "I am a worm, and no man," Psal. xxii. 6: he was a sorry, sinful, miserable man; he was Adam, an earthly man, but not Isa, a man of worth, strength; a worm, son of the earth, weak, contemptible. Coniah, Jer. xxii. 28, in the Vulgate is called, vas fictile, an earthen vessel, a broken idol, or a vessel in which is no pleasure; and then follows, "O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord." Princes, priests, and people, he calls them all earth, to mind them of their mean original, to bring down their spirits, to make them sensible of their weakness, and condition they were hastening unto. Isa. xl. 6, 7, "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field: the grass withereth, the flower fadeth: because the spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass."

Obs. 4. That the command of Christ is powerful. "Stand upon thy feet," saith he, and it proved efficacious; let Christ speak and the thing is done. "By him were all things made," John i. 3. He said, "Let there be light, and there was light;" he said, "Let there be an earth, and let it bring forth, and it was so;" he called forth things that were not, and gave them a being. Under the gospel, how powerful were his commands: he bade devils depart the possessed, and they did so; he bade the winds and waves be still, and they were so; he called Lazarus out of the grave, and he came forth presently. There is infinite power in Christ, and great, yea, oft exceeding great virtue goes forth with his commands: he said to the fishermen that were strangers to him, "Follow me, and they left all, and followed him."

Obs. 5. That the Lord loves to encourage man to his duty. He saith not here, "Stand upon thy feet" only, which might have sufficed; but he makes him a promise, "and I will speak with thee;" I that am upon the throne, compassed with glory, that have the rule of all the world in my hand, I will speak with thee. Here was singular encouragement to this duty, and so to other duties. It is man's duty to walk uprightly, and to encourage unto it, the word saith, "No good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly," Psal. lxxxiv. 11. It is our duty to believe, And did not Christ tell Martha, in a particular case, that if she would believe, she should see the glory of God? John xi. 40. And told he not another, that all things are possible to him that believeth? Mark ix. 23. So Christ is lifted up, "that whosoever believeth in him, shall not perish, but have everlasting life," John iii. 14, 15. So for prayer, it is our duty; but see what encouragement, "Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it," Psal. lxxxix. 10, and, "Whatsoever you shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you," John xvi. 23. To persevere and overcome is our duty; and see Rev. xxi. 7. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." To give alms is man's duty; as Luke vi. 38, "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom."

Obs. 6. That the word of Christ is a sweet comfort to a soul troubled. "Stand upon thy feet, and I will speak to thee;" thou art amazed, cast down, but my word will revive thee, put life and spirits into thee. What a comforting word is that of Christ's, Matt. xi. "Come unto me, ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will refresh you;" and John vi. 37, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." Christ had "the words of eternal life," ver. 68, and those must needs be sweet and acceptable to afflicted spirits; and these words he hath given us in the gospel, which is glad tidings, the savour of life, the power of God to salvation.

Ver. 2. And the spirit entered into me when he spake unto me, and set me upon my feet, that I heard him that spake unto me.

The prophet being confirmed by the word of Christ in the foregoing verse, here he is comforted and confirmed by the Spirit also. What is meant by the Spirit, must be opened. Some have conceived, that when our prophet fell upon his face at the sight of him and his glory that sat upon the throne, his spirit left him, and he lay for dead; and so here, by spirit, to be understood his soul, or spirit, returned, entered, revived him, and set him upon his feet; but this interpretation we cannot admit for three reasons.

1. We never read that any were stricken dead when God appeared unto them in visions; the utmost we find is that of Daniel, chap. x. ver. 17, "Neither was there breath left in me;" through fear, he was as a man out of breath, but not without a soul; he had a deadly fear, but was not dead.

2. The text itself confutes that opinion; for, in the last words of the former chapter, it is said, "I heard a voice of one that spake." If Ezekiel had been spiritless, soulless, when he fell upon his face, it had been impossible for him to have heard a voice.

3. Had it been the return of his own spirit, the words would not have been, he "set me upon my feet," but, I arose; we must therefore leave that interpretation.

2. By spirit, some understand an angel; and their reason for it is, because it is said, he "set me upon my feet;" the prophet being among angels, and they seeing him down, one lifted him up, and set him upon his feet; but this interpretation, although it be Piscator's, I cannot commend unto you; for,

First, how could any of these angels that had faces, bodies, wings, and feet, enter into the prophet? for here it is said, "The spirit entered into me."

Secondly, if it had been an angel, the words must have run thus, rather than as they do; one of the spirits, one of the angels, entered into me, and not, the spirit.

By spirit then understand, that spirit which was in the living creatures, and in the wheels, chap. i. 20, even the eternal Spirit of God; and of this judgment is Jerom, Gregory, Calvin, Junius, Maldonate, &c. If their testimonies suffice not, take the testimony of Scripture, chap. iii. 24, "Then the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, and said, Go, shut thyself within thy house," &c. Here the prophet, repeating the same words, showeth that it was the Spirit of God he spake of, and neither angel, nor his own spirit. The meaning is this; when Christ spake unto me, and I heard his voice, presently I felt divine virtue, the Spirit seized upon, entered into me, comforted and confirmed me, set me upon my feet, and fitted me to hear the voice of that glorious person that sat upon the throne.

Two things fall into consideration here, touching the Spirit:

The first is, the Spirit's entrance into him.

The second, the Spirit's setting him upon his feet.

1. It entered into him. There are phrases in Scripture concerning the Spirit, which import motion of it from place to place, but must not be so understood. 1. The sending of the Spirit, Gal. iv. 6. 2. The coming of the Spirit, John xv. 26. 3. The descending of the Spirit, John i. 32. 4. Receiving of it, John xx. 22. 5. The entering of the Spirit. These all seem to imply the moving of the Spirit from one place to another; but the Spirit of God is infinite in essence, filling heaven and earth, and changes not place. The thing aimed at in them is, 1. Operation. 2. Manifestation. 3. Impletion. When the Spirit works effectually in any, manifests itself by any, fills the heart of any with divine graces and influences; when it doth either of these, or all these, then it is sent, descended, come, received, entered. But for the phrase here, "The spirit entered into me," a like one is in Hab. iii. 16, "Rottenness entered into my bones;" that is, it came not ab extra, from without, but there was a disposition and principle in him before rottenness; but now it wrought, it manifested itself, and filled him with it. So here, the Spirit was in the prophet before, but now there was a more lively operation and manifestation of it. Yea, further, this entrance of the Spirit notes out his filling with the Spirit; it possessed him fully, there was abundance of the Spirit in him, to fit him for and confirm him in his prophetic function. The Spirit entered into him, took him up, and singled him out for divine service.

2. It set him upon his feet. Here the efficacious operation of the Spirit appears; that which nature could not do, the Spirit did; it chased away all dis-tempering fears, enabled him to stand up, to behold glory, to hear the King speak from his throne of glory, and to be ready to do his will, whatever he should say: this was a great work of the Spirit in our prophet.

Obs. 1. From the prophet's being down, and set up by the Spirit, that the Spirit is the chief comforter. The words of Christ, "Stand up, and I will speak unto thee," were good and comfortable words; but the Spirit wrought the solid and lively comfort, which scattered the clouds of fear, confirmed him, and set him up. To speak good words to one sick in prison, is a comfortable thing; but to heal the sick party, to bring out the prisoner, is real comfort. Thus did the Spirit; it healed the sick heart of the prophet, and freed him, being imprisoned with fears: the real and choice comfort is from the Spirit. Hence the Spirit is called the Comforter in John four times, John xiv. 16, 26; xv. 26; and xvi. 7; and not only the Comforter, but the Comforter that testifies of Christ, that teacheth all things, that abides with you for ever, as appears in the places before mentioned. Men comfort, the word comforts, and angels comfort; it was an angel comforted Christ in his agony

Luke xxii. 43; but none comfort like the Spirit. Ezekiel had the Spirit of God, the great and solid Comforter, to raise, confirm, and comfort him.

Obs. 2. That those the Lord Christ intends to set up for officers in his church, he gives his Spirit unto. The Spirit enters into Ezekiel before he is called; he is filled with the Spirit, the gifts and graces of it. When officers of an inferior nature were to be made in the apostles' days, even officers to serve tables, what men must be looked out? Men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom; they must be such as the Holy Ghost hath entered into and filled, else they were unfit for that service, Acts vi. 3. Much more then should they be filled with the Spirit, that are for the highest place in the church of God. Acts ix. 17, Saul was filled with the Holy Ghost: Acts xi. 24, it is said of Barnabas, he was full of the Holy Ghost: the Spirit entered into them and they preached; Acts xiii. 2, they must be separated for the work whereunto the Lord had called them, even for the chief places in the church of God. The offices in the church are for men that have the Spirit of Christ in them, in some fulness of it. Those places are not for others, such as are filled with wine, with the world, with a spirit of envy, error, contention, and antichristianism, but have not the Spirit of Christ in them: the false and lying prophets had no entrance of the Spirit into them, and therefore the Lord saith, he sent them not, Jer. xiv. 14. They flattered themselves they were called and sent of God, and had the Spirit, as Zedekiah said to Micaiah, "Which way went the Spirit from me to thee?" 1 Kings xxii. 24; but they neither had it, nor were sent of God, but ran, and were not sent, Jer. xxiii. 21. And unless men have the Spirit enter into them, they are neither fit for that function, nor satisfyingly know they are called to it. Many among us are called of men, that were never called of God.

Obs. 3. That man by his natural abilities cannot reach or receive the things of God. Ezekiel must have the Spirit enter into him, before he can hear or understand any thing to purpose. Reason and discourse is not more above the capacity of a beast, than the things of Christ and his Spirit are above the capacity of man: 1 Cor. ii. 14, "The natural man receives not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him." The preaching of the gospel and Christ crucified was a stumbling-block to the Jews, and foolishness to the Greeks. The Jews were skilled in the law, and the Greeks in philosophy; and neither of them entertain Christ or his gospel: their knowledge and abilities served them to take offence at Christ, and to condemn the gospel for foolishness. And it is all that natural abilities do, not only not reach the things of the Spirit, but they cannot do it: "neither can he know them," saith the text, "for they are spiritually discerned." Tell a natural man, that God hath begotten a Son, that God is man, that a virgin hath brought forth, that God hath purchased a church by his blood, that men are reconciled unto God, and justified by the death of Christ, they are riddles unto him; such truths are like a sealed book, the spirit and life of them he is incapable of: tell him that a man must deny himself, mourn for his sins, walk in the Spirit, believe in another for salvation, and these things are foolishness unto him.

Obs. 4. That the word without the Spirit is inefficacious. When he spake the Spirit entered: had not there been entrance of the Spirit, the word had not prevailed, the prophet had not been raised. The word is of little moment and power, unless the efficacy of the Spirit be in it; if it be not quickened by the Spirit, it is a dead letter. Many thousands hear the word, who are fallen by Adam's and their own sin, but they are not set upon their feet, as our prophet was; and the principal reason is, the Spirit enters not into them; it may stand and knock at the door, but hath not entrance; and therefore they are not lifted up out of their unbelief, and other corruptions; they are not removed from the wilderness to Canaan, from the state of nature to the state of grace. When therefore you find such expressions in Scripture, as that the word is incorruptible seed, 1 Pet. i. 23, a burning fire, Jer. xx. 9, the power of God to salvation, Rom. i. 16, the word of life, Phil. ii. 16; that it is quick, powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of the soul and spirit, &c., Heb. iv.; that it is converting the soul, Psal. xix. 7, the grace of God that brings salvation, Tit. ii. 11. These, and such like phrases you must understand, not exclusively, as if the word were and did so without the Spirit; but conjunctively, when the Spirit enters together with the word, then it is so: the efficacy is not in sonitu ipso, in the word itself, but proceeds ab arcano Spiritus instinctu, from the secret power of the Spirit, all the virtue and operation is in the power of the Spirit; neither is the word useless, it is the medium by which the Spirit works. God is the Father of lights, yet is not the sun useless, by it he enlightens us.

Obs. 5. That the word is the chariot of the Spirit. When he spake the Spirit entered into John vii. 37-39. me, together with the word of Christ Acts x. 41-46. went the Spirit; that is vehiculum Spiritus, the chariot of the Spirit. John xx. 22, Christ breathed upon them, and that breath conveyed the Holy Ghost unto the disciples. So it is the word that carries the Spirit to men; by the dispensation of the word, the Spirit is conveyed to our souls; hence the gospel is called the ministration of the Spirit, 2 Cor. iii. 8, and the ministers of the gospel, the ministers of the Spirit, ver. 6. The law, which was from mount Sinai, the apostle calls a dead, a killing letter; but the gospel, which came out of mount Zion, he calls the Spirit, or ministration of it: and therefore more fully in Gal. iii. 2, he saith, "Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" not by the works of the law, that was the ministration of death, but by the gospel, that was the ministration of the Spirit. So that the word of Christ transports the Spirit over to the hearts of those that believe; and if search should be made, whether the Spirit do always accompany the word of Christ, preached unto the sons of men, some inferior degrees and works of it may be allowed to go along with the word. Acts vii. 51, "Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost;" and Heb. vi. 4, they "were made partakers of the Holy Ghost." There was something of the Spirit in the word, when it was preached unto these two sorts of hearers; the one resisted the Spirit in the ordinance, the other received the common gifts of it. Some weak operations of the Spirit may be yielded always, to attend the word, but effectual and powerful do not. The beams of the sun are oblique and direct; where oblique, they produce weak effects, where direct, strong ones: and so the operations of the Spirit are oblique towards all reprobates, and the work is inefficacious on them, but direct upon the elect, and so strong and efficacious: 1 Thess. i. 5, "Our gospel came not to you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost;" chap. ii. 13, it wrought effectually in them.

Obs. 6. What God commands his people, he gives them strength to do it. "Stand upon thy feet," saith Christ, ver. 1, there is the command; and the Spirit entered, and set him upon his feet, there is the

spiritalem sen-sum non asse-

strength given to fulfil the command. Commands import power and free-will in us, say the adversaries of free grace; we say no, let them stand upon free-will and their own strength, we will stand to free grace. Ezekiel cannot stand upon his feet till the Spirit set him up, much less can he tread in the ways of holiness, and walk in them, being commanded: the word of Christ did it not, his own will did it not, natural reason and strength did it not, but the Spirit given did it. "Without me ye can do nothing."

John xv.; not much, not something, not a little, doth he say, but nothing. When Christ commands, therefore, he gives power to do. He bids Lazarus come forth of the grave; he had neither will nor power to do it, but Christ gave spirit and power to do it. When he bids sinners believe, repent, walk in the Spirit, &c. he gives power to do so; he doth it for them: Deut. x. 16, they are commanded to circumcise the fore-skin of their hearts, and, Deut. vi.

5, to love the Lord with all their hearts; these they could not do, but God promises to do them for them: Deut. xxx. 6, "The Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love him with all thine heart, and all thy soul." We are commanded to fear the Lord; Psal. xxii. 23, "Fear him, all the seed of Israel;" and Jer. xxxii. 40, "I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me." We are bid to make us new hearts, and new spirits, Ezek. xviii. 31; and, Isa. i. 16, to wash us, and make us clean: and see what sweet promises are made, Ezek. xxxvi. 25, 26, "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you:" yea, "I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments and do them," ver. 27. We are bid to believe and trust in God oft in Scripture; and, Eph. ii. 8, we find faith is the gift of God; and, Matt. xii. 21, "In his name shall the gentiles trust;" and, Phil. i. 29, "To you it is given to believe." Christ bid the apostles to go and preach the gospel to all nations, Matt. xxviii. 19. How could they, not knowing languages, do it? They might have said, it is an impossible thing: but, Acts ii. 4, they were filled with the Spirit, and every man heard them speak in his own language. When God commands, therefore, we must not look at abilities, as Arminians and papists do, nor disabilities, as sundry christians do, but look out some promises made of such things as are commanded; see free grace, and draw strength from thence, through the promise, to enable us to stand upon our feet, being down, to walk, being up, and to persevere in the walking.

Obs. 7. It is the Spirit of God that enables to discern the things of God, and assures our spirits of the truth and reality of them. The Spirit entered into the prophet, set him upon his feet, that he heard him that spake unto him; now, having the Spirit, he was fitted to hear Christ, enabled to judge of what he spake, to satisfy his soul concerning the truth, reality, and excellency of his doctrine. John x. 27, "My sheep hear my voice," and "a stranger will they not follow," ver. 5; they can distinguish between the voice of Christ, and all others; and how come they to do it? They are sheep; not goats, not wolves, not foxes. And how come they to be sheep? Christ pours out his Spirit upon them; that enters into them, and brings them into the fold, and enables them to hear and know the Shepherd's voice, and the Shepherd himself. "We have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God," 1 Cor. ii. 12. If the apostle had not had the Spirit, and the Spirit of God, he could not have apprehended the things of Christ and the gospel; they are such deep and spiritual things, that none but the Spirit of God can search out, or discover, being searched out. Into whom the Spirit enters, spiritualizing his heart and head, he is a man fit to trade with Christ, and to hear him speak; for, ver. 15, the spiritual man judgeth all things, he hath a principle within, to taste and discern the nature of them; he only hath a fitness, though not a fulness to judge; he hath a discerning faculty, and according to the measure of that he judgeth.

Ver. 3—5. And he said unto me, Son of man, I send thee to the children of Israel, to a rebellious nation that hath rebelled against me; they and their fathers have transgressed against me, even unto this very day. For they are impudent children and stiff-hearted. I do send thee unto them; and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God. And they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) yet shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.

Ezekiel being raised, comforted, and filled with the Spirit, fitted to hear the Lord Christ, and to do him service;

In these verses we have his call to his office, and the parties specified he is sent unto, and the reason of his sending to them.

His call, in these words, "I send thee."

The parties he is sent unto, are "the children of Israel;" who are described to be,

First, "a rebellious nation;" and this their sin is amplified three ways:

1. It is "against me."

2. It is the same evil their fathers have done; they "transgressed against me," and so have their children.

3. It is continued; "to this day."

Secondly, "impudent children."

Thirdly, "stiff-hearted."

Fourthly, "a rebellious house."

The reason of his sending is; that they might "know there hath been a prophet among them."

I shall first open the words of this third verse; and after give you the observations.

"I send thee." In the Hebrew it is, I am sending thee, or, about to send thee. שְׁלַח מִלְּפָנַי

The present tense in the Scripture noteth the purpose and firm resolution of the mind: Luke xix. 8, saith Zaccheus, "The half of my goods I give to the poor;" that is, I purpose and decree to give them, it is the firm resolution of my mind. But it notes more here: "I send thee," I intend and am resolved to make thee a prophet; that is not all, I ordain, constitute thee to be a prophet, for such is the meaning of send in this verse: and that will appear from Jer. xiv. 14, "The prophets prophesy lies in my name;" they pretend, saith God, that they have commission and countenance from me, but I sent them not, I never intended or constituted them to be prophets. They never had authority from me, I commanded them not, neither spake unto them, they went of their own heads, for their own ends; and if they be prophets, they are lying ones; my authority did never establish them, but it shall punish them.

“Children of Israel.” That is, the Jews, that were brought into Babylon, who were called the children of Israel, from Jacob, who wrestling with God, and prevailing, had his name changed from Jacob to Israel; Gen. xxxii. 28, “Thy name shall be no more Jacob, but Israel; for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed.” Not Israel because he hath seen God, as some interpret it; nor Israel because he was a man right with God; but Israel is of a word which signifies to rule, with the addition of el to it; and so it follows in the verse, because thou hast prevailed with God. Here was a good root, but the branches were degenerate, the sons of Israel were not like their father Israel, a praying and prevailing people: sons of Israel, according to the flesh, external shows, and in opinion, so the most of them were; but they did not follow the faith and purity of their father Israel: Rom. ix. 6, “They are not all Israel that are of Israel.”

“A rebellious nation.” The word for nation is in the plural number, גוֹיִם which word is mostly in Scripture applied to the unbelieving gentiles, those that were without God, and strangers to the commonwealth of Israel: as Hab. i. 5, “the heathen,” and Psal. cvi. 41, “He gave them into the hand of the heathen,” it is goim: the Septuagint renders it, “Into the hands of their enemies;” so the Jews accounted the gentiles, and in disgrace called them goim, an abominable nation; and at this day they call the christians so, and make that name which was common before to all gentiles, now, since Christ, to be special to christians. The Turks they call Ishmaelites; and Ethiopians, Cushites; but the christians, goim, an abominable nation; and here the Spirit of God calls them goim, a rebellious nation, by way of contempt. The prophet prophesied against the Syrians, Egyptians, Babylonians, and others, which, in common sense of the word, were the nations; but here it is put upon the Jews, who were as vile in the eyes of God, as the gentiles were in theirs; for they had forsaken the truth, entertained their idolatries and corruptions, and turned aside to notorious wickednesses. Something of most nations about them they had taken in, and so are called goim, nations, as if they had had the wickedness of all the nations. Or, because they were divided in their false and idolatrous worship; some were for the Ammonitish way, some the Moabitish, some for other ways, most for wrong ways; and this made them like the nations, who had their several ways, and to deserve the brand of goim.

“Rebellious.” המרריים the rebellious ones of Marod, which signifies to fall off, to apostatize, to rebel and resist. It is like the practice of men against states and princes; when they have made laws for their subjects to live by, and they have accepted of those laws, and then fall off, withdraw from their subjection, obedience, and shake off their yoke, it is called rebellion: Gen. xiv. 4, the Kings served Chedorlaomer twelve years, and in the thirteenth rebelled; that is, shook off those laws and yokes they were under.

In the law sense, rebellion is a traitorous taking up arms against the state, be it by the natural subjects, or by others formerly subdued, or by whomsoever. When arms are taken up to overthrow the settled laws of a kingdom, and religion settled by those laws, this is rebellion against that state; and that state may preserve itself, the law of nature, reason, and religion warranting the same. I am not to speak of rebellion in this sense, but theologically. When men will not be under the laws and government of Christ, but go a whoring after their own lusts and inventions, or others’, then they rebel: so the other tribes told Reuben, Gad, and Manassch, Josh. xxii. 16, “What trespass is this ye have committed against the God of Israel, to turn away this day from following the Lord, in that ye have builded you an altar, that ye might rebel this day against the Lord?” Turning from God, and taking up our own or other inventions, is rebelling against God.

The Vulgate hath it, to the apostatizing nations; and the Septuagint renders the word rebel, in Nchem. vi. 6, to apostatize, Thou and the Jews think to apostatize. And apostasy is a wicked departing from God and his truth, acknowledged and confessed, to false ways of worship. And such were the Israelites at this time; they had left the God of Israel, and chosen other gods, and served idols, which made the Lord to say, Jer. ii. 11, “Hath a nation changed their gods, which yet are no gods? but my people have changed their glory.” Such is the apostasy of antichrist and his followers, they have departed from the true God and his worship, and set up false gods and false worship; so that he and all his children are goim hammordim, a rebellious, an apostatizing nation.

“Against me.” It is not against their king, their high priest, but against me, against my covenant, saith Jerom. God had made a covenant with them, not only a spousal covenant, “I will betroth thee to me for ever,” Hos. ii. 19, but a matrimonial covenant, “I am the Lord thy God; thou shalt have no other gods before me,” Exod. xx. 2. 3. God said, he would have them, and no other people, to be his. God kept the covenant on his part, he took not in any other nation; but they brake with him, and took in other gods, and brought them not into the city only, but into the temple, and provoked their God to jealousy.

“Even to this day.” The Hebrew is, to the body, strength, essence of this day, even this self-same day: these very words you have in Lev. xxiii. 14, “until the self-same day.” Had not this people been brutish, they might have seen what an unprofitable thing it was to bestow honour upon altars, idols, to set up corrupt, invented worship; they might have seen what truth and force was in prophetic threats, how powerful God was to save and to destroy: for now they were carried out of their own country, they were in Babylon, a most idolatrous place, subject to the nations they so disdained, and had been some years in bondage; yet even here, to that present time, they were addicted to their old ways, and served false gods night and day, Jer. xvi. 13.

“Transgress.” The Hebrew word signifies, to sin, not ignorantly, or of infirmity, but wilfully, ex superbia, from pride. Isa. i. 2, “I have brought up children, and they have rebelled;” it is the same word is in the text, they have proudly, voluntarily sinned against me. The Septuagint therefore render it, They have per-

varicated with me, rejected me, they have taken me out of the way, who was established to be their God, and have willingly brought in other gods. And this word pushang is of larger extent than marad, say rabbies; but in Scripture they are promiscuously used: Hos. xiv. 9, “The transgressors shall fall therein;” those who go from under the command of God, and oppose him.

Obs. 1. That it is Christ’s prerogative to set up and send officers unto the church. I send thee, I that sit upon the throne, that am Jehovah, that know things to come, that have all power in my hand, that can save and destroy, that am the great Prophet of my people, I send thee. So Matt. xxviii. 18, 19, Christ is invested with all power, and therefore sends officers to all nations: Eph. iv. 11, "He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;" it was Christ gave them, and set them up in the church. Hence saith the apostle, 1 Cor. iv. 1, "Let a man so account of us, as the ministers of Christ;" we are set up and sent by him, who is the Head of the church, the Author of all offices, and Lord of all officers. Hence follows:

(1.) That those offices and officers are holy and warrantable, which depend upon the will and authority of Christ; not those which are of the wills and authority of men, as are all in the Romish synagogue, and too many are amongst us. Apostles, prophets, evangelists, they were of Christ; but being extraordinary, are ceased. Pastors, teachers, elders, deacons, Christ hath given to be standing officers in the church, and their callings we acknowledge holy and lawful; but all others are of human institution, and so unholy, and unwholesome for the church. The papists deny the calling of pastors and teachers in the reformed churches to be lawful, because they are not sent by the pope, and ordained by his bishops, and so in succession from Christ; but it is clear that pastors and teachers were given of Christ, before ever popes or prelates were thought on, Eph. iv. 11. And as for them, the pope and his clergy, we may safely say, that neither himself, nor any of his hierarchy, ever had any lawful calling; because none of them are sent of Christ, he will never own it that he sent any of them, neither were they ordained according to the will of Christ and his apostles.

(2.) That men unable and dishonest, in the offices of the church, if set up by him, were never sent by him. He gives gifts and graces to men, and then sends them; the Spirit entered into Ezekiel, and then, "I send thee." He hath the power of sending, it depends on his will, and that is sacred; he would not put in an insufficient or corrupt man upon any terms, and therefore he hath set rules and laws to show what men he would have in those holy functions. He hath given precedents of his own choosing: Rom. i. 5, "By whom we received grace and apostleship," first grace, and then apostleship, 2 Cor. iii. 6, "Who hath made us able ministers of the new testament." The Lord Christ's ministers are able, not only in parts, but chiefly in the Spirit, that is light and life in them; such he sends, such he approves. And as for ignorant and evil ones, see what the Lord saith, Hos. iv. 6, "Because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me." Christ would not have a profane, ignorant man to be in that calling.

(3.) That those that are sent of Christ may not delegate their power, and execute the office by others, but must do it themselves. The prophet might not appoint another, being sent of Christ to the children of Israel; "I send thee," and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord. Ambassadors are themselves to deliver their messages, and not others for them, or in their stead. Ministers are ambassadors, and, 2 Cor. v. 20, for Christ, and do preach and pray in Christ's stead, who is their Head and Lord; whereupon saith Paul, "Woe unto me, if I preach not the gospel," 1 Cor. ix. 16. And what is the ground of it? Ver. 17, "The dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me." I am commanded to do it, I may not, I dare not commit or delegate this trust, this power, to others. Delegation is actus imperii, an act of power, and all the officers of the church must be obsequious, not imperious; therefore hierarchists, and those that substitute others to preach in their stead, usurp the power of Christ, to whom it belongs to delegate men to preach in his stead, and over thousands of churches, if he please.

(4.) That those Christ sends, and sets over people, are by divine institution. "I send thee to the children of Israel;" he was not a prophet to others, but unto them, and that by divine authority. Acts xx. 28, "Take heed unto all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers;" this was the church of Ephesus, and the elders of it were set there by no less authority than that of the Holy Ghost: the office, power, jurisdiction over such a people is not human, arbitrary, but of divine institution.

Obs. 2. That many are called, and seem to be Israelites, which in truth are not. The Jews were called the children of Israel here, and were so according to the flesh, but they were not so in the Spirit; they had not the principles of Jacob in them; they walked not in his steps; they had his name, but not his faith. They were called Israelites, but were not true Israelites: Rom. ix. 6, "They are not all Israel that are of Israel;" in the true sense of the Scripture, they are not all Israel; that is, spiritual, such as Jacob was, men of prayer, wrestling with God, prevailing like princes; but they are of Israel according to the flesh, and fleshly Israelites, to whom the promises pertained not. In Matt. viii. 12, they are called children of the kingdom, but yet such as should be cast out into utter darkness: they thought themselves safe in being called so, and conceited themselves such, but they were deluded. And so now many thousands think themselves christians, saints, when in truth they are nothing less, the very contrary, enemies to true christians and saints. The papists boast that they are catholics, christians, the church of God; but it is in no better sense than these rebellious Jews are termed the children of Israel. What are titles, when truth is wanting? No other than a kind of blaspheming: Rev. ii. 9, "I know the blasphemy of them that say they are Jews, and are not:" they were jews by name, and did reproach the christians, and the Lord Christ, but were not Jews in truth: Rom. ii. 28, 29, "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly," in circumcision of the flesh; "but he is a Jew which is one inwardly," whose heart is circumcised, and is one in the Spirit. Now these men, saying they are Jews, and were not, did blaspheme, much prejudice and wound the honourable name of being a Jew; and what were they? a synagogue of Satan. And now these that think, call themselves christians, and are not, they blaspheme and wound that honourable name of christians; and so they that call themselves churches, and are not, they blaspheme and wrong that honourable name of church. Papists say they are the church. Be it so; it is the church of Satan, not of Christ; they worship idols, not Christ; they are Babel, not Bethel; they have title, not the substance.

Obs. 3. That when God's people degenerate, and fall to sinful practices, then they lose their glory, and contract reproach. Before the Israelites fell to idolatrous courses, and violation of divine law, they were God's inheritance, Deut. iv. 20, his portion, Deut. xxxii. 9, his peculiar treasure, Exod. xix. 5, his strength and his glory, Psal. lxxviii. 61, his anointed ones, Psal. cv. 15; they were so honourable in his account, and precious in his eye, that he suffered none to do them harm; he rebuked kings for their sakes, and he gave Egypt a ransom for them, men and people for their life, Isa. xliii. 3, 4. God thought nothing too dear for them, no titles too good, "a kingdom of priests, a holy nation," Exod. xix. 6; but when they fell from him to sinful and base courses, then their honourable titles are turned into reproachful and bitter ones. They are called here goyim, profane, rejected, pollution; so the Jews accounted of the gentiles, and so God accounts of them here; they judged so of the Babylonians, and God metes out the same measure unto them. In Prov. xiv. 34, it is said, "Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people," even to God's own people; it makes them vile, hateful, abominable to God and man, and brings such terms as proclaims their shame. God calls them rulers of Sodom, and people of Gomorrah, Isa. i. 10; sons of the soreceress, the seed of the adulterer and whore, Isa. lviii. 3; an hypocritical nation, Isa. x. 6; a nation not desired, Zeph. ii. 1; a thievish nation, Mal. iii. 9; the generation of his wrath, Jer. vii. 29; Lo-ammi, none of my people, Hos. i.

Obs. 4. See here the great evil which is in sin. It is rebellion against God, 1 Sam. xii. 15; not only great sins, idolatry, murder, &c. but even all sin. It is a casting off God, a withdrawing from his laws, commands, authority: as Hos. iv. 12, "They have gone a whoring from under their God;" as a wife that is false to her husband will not be kept in, be under the guidance, counsel, and power of her husband, but will out, follow her lovers, and satisfy her lusts. And so is it with the soul's sinning with God, it will go from under the guidance, counsel, command, and authority of God. It saith of God, in effect, as they in the gospel said of God, "We will not have this man to reign over us," we will not be under him; and sinners will not be under God. God commanded Saul to smite Amalek, to destroy all, and neither spare man nor beast; but Saul spared Agag, the goodly things, and fat of the beast, and this by entreaty of the people. This might seem no great matter, especially the cattle being spared to sacrifice to the Lord, as they pretended. But see what God saith of it, 1 Sam. xv. 11, "It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king, for he is turned back from following me;" he is apostatized from me. God calls this sin apostasy, and Samuel, ver. 23, calls it rebellion: Saul, thou hast rebelled against God; and will you know what a sin rebellion is? it "is as the sin of witchcraft," and you all know it is abominable, and worthy of death: thy sin is of that malignity, as that by it thou hast rejected God, and for it God hath rejected thee, and thou art a man of death for it. Rebel is an ill name, and here is a king a rebel against God; and so is every sinner, for he not only withdraws from under God, but takes up arms against God. Bitter lying, swearing, reproaching words, are called arrows and swords, in Psal. lvii. 4; and Psal. lxxiii. 9, it is said of wicked men, "They set their mouth against the heavens," that is, against God in the heavens: and of a proud man it is said, Jam. iv. 6, God resists him: he is in rebellion against God, hath taken up arms against him, and God takes up arms to meet him; it is a military word, God sets himself in a military posture against him; Aets v. 39, those who opposed the apostle, were fighters against God. But there is no hope for sinners to do good this way; God will prevail, and wound the hairy scalps of his enemies, whatever they be, that go on still in their wickedness. Let us therefore cast down our weapons, and submit to God. Rebellion is an odious thing against a state, much more against God. Let us all say, we will not be rebels but subjects of the Most High; we will be governed by his laws, we will be under his authority: and as they said to Joshua, chap. i. 18, let us say to God, "Whosoever he be that doth rebel against thy commandment, and will not hearken to thy words in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death."

Obs. 5. That sins about worship are rebellious against Christ, and he takes it heinously; they have "rebelled against me." It was Christ who sat upon the sapphire throne, that spake to the prophet, that said, They rebel against me; and wherein was the rebellion? in casting off his worship, and in corrupting it. When people fall to idolatrous and false worship, or corrupt the true and pure worship of Christ by deduction of any part of it, or by additionals and mixtures of their own, then they sin. So about worship, as it is rebellion against Christ; sometimes they fell to flat idolatry, forsaking the true worship of God, and joined to Baal-Peor, P'sal. evi. 28; sometimes they set up their posts with God's posts, and brought in their own inventions, and mingled their water with God's wine, and the wisdom of their flesh with the wisdom of Christ. And this he complains of as rebellion against him; and the ground of it is, because Christ was the Head of the church then as well as now, and the Lawgiver unto them as well as unto us. There was never but one Head and one Lawgiver to the church: and when he, out of his infinite wisdom, hath set a way of worship that will delight the Father, himself, and his Spirit, for mortal worms of the earth to leave it, to pervert it, to mix their own devices with it, provokes bitterly, and mounts up to the nature of rebellion, and that against Christ. "Blessed are the undefiled in the way," ^{Indebitum cultum, indebito modo.} Psal. exix. 1. What way? In the way of worship especially; that admit not unwarranted worship, nor worship in a wrong manner, but walk in the law of the Lord.

Obs. 6. That children usually tread in the paths of their fathers: "They and their fathers have transgressed against me." Do the fathers sin knowingly, wilfully? the children will do so; do they fall off from the true worship of God, embrace lies, superstition, oppression, whoredom? it is a miracle if their children do not. Adam ate the forbidden fruit, and all mankind have followed his steps to that tree. The name of a father, and his example, are strong traces, to draw the children into their way. We read of some kings in Judah, that left the way of their fathers; but not one of Israel, they all followed the steps of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, that made Israel to sin. Let the parents be never so vile, if grace prevent not, the children will walk in their ways. Ahab was bad enough, that sold himself to commit wickedness; and yet Ahaziah his son is said to walk in his way, in his mother's way, who was Jezebel, and in Jeroboam's, 1 Kings xxii. 52. And if it be possible, they will go beyond their fathers in wickedness: Judg. ii. 19, "They corrupted themselves more than their fathers." Jer. vii. 26, "They did worse than their fathers." Iniquity improves in the going; like a river, the farther it runs, the broader and deeper it grows. In John viii. 44. Christ tells the Jews they were of their father the devil, and his lusts they will do; they were such wilful sinners, sinning against such clear and strong light, that their sin was devilish. Let parents take heed what they do, how they sin before their children: when they do so, they pave a way to hell for them, and dig the pit for their destruction. Raboldus, a duke of Friezeland, about the year of Christ 900, being persuaded to turn christian, and going to be baptized, asked the bishop if all his forefathers were damned; who indiscreetly affirming it, saith the duke, Then will I be damned with them, rather than be baptized by thee.

Obs. 7. Antiquity is not the rule for worship. You and your fathers have transgressed against me. The traditions and examples of forefathers will not warrant the children in point of worship. Here they could plead, We did what our forefathers did many hundred years together, and have faithfully walked in their steps, and hope we are unblamable. No, saith Christ, you and your fathers have transgressed; you should not have made their examples, but my word, the rule of worship. The Samaritans could plead antiquity for their worship in mount Gerizim, above two hundred years, where they had a temple, and many things according to Moses. And hence was it, that the woman of Samaria said to Christ, "Our fathers worshipped in this mountain," John iv. 20. But Christ told her, ver. 22, "You worship you know not what." You have the wills, inventions, and examples of men for the warrant of your worship, and good intentions in the execution of your worship; but because you have not my word, that is not a light, a law, and rule unto you in point of your worship, "you worship you know not what;" and your good intentions neither make it acceptable unto God, nor profitable to you. In Hos. xi. 12, it is said, "Ephraim compasseth me about with lies, and the house of Israel with deceit:" they had their fathers and antiquity to plead, even from Jeroboam's days; but because they had corrupted the worship of God with their own inventions, the Lord calls all lies and deceit. In point of worship,

you must look at divine laws, not human examples; the rust of antiquity will not go for pay with God. Men's traditions make ineffectual his commands, Matt. xv. 6; and can they be effectual ordinances unto us? If so, we had not been redeemed from them by the blood of Christ. 1 Pet. i. 18, 19, he tells them they were redeemed from their vain conversation by tradition from their fathers, by the precious blood of Christ. And what was that vain conversation? A Jesuit tells us, it was in lege Moysi, et gentilitate, in the law and in gentilitism. And are they freed from Moses's law given by God, and gentilitism, the traditions of men? Are not we freed from that vain conversation which is in the laws of popery and prelates, and traditions of fathers? Yea, we are freed, and that by the blood of Christ; he must be our antiquity, our rule, our law; and what is not after Christ, but after the traditions of men, must be thrown out and trodden down as beggarly elements and worldly rudiments. Therefore hear Christ, (who speaks in this prophesy,) in Ezek. xx. 18, 19, saying, "Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols: I am the Lord your God, walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them."

Obs. 8. A sinful nation is not changed by afflictions. They were now in captivity amongst Babylonians, that were bitter, scoffing enemies, that said, "Sing us one of the songs of Sion;" they were under the wrath of God, put hard to it for all their necessities; and yet they ceased not their rebellious transgressions against God, "even to this very day:" they had been five years also in this hard condition, and yet continued. Afflictions are invalid to subdue corruptions, or change dispositions. Put a stone into the fire, it neither softens it, nor changes it: neither cold nor hot water will make a blackamoor white; empty vinegar from vessel to vessel, it will never become wine; and empty a wicked heart from condition to condition, it will never become gracious. Afflictions may cause restraint of corruption, hinder execution of it, stir up natural principles and common gifts to act, but never alter a man; but usually wicked men are worse for afflictions. Here they sinned against God rebelliously in the land of their captivity. Wicked men grow worse and worse every day: Isa. i. 5, "Why should you be smitten any more? you will revolt more and more: the whole head is sick, and the heart is faint," &c. When sinners are in an ill way through their own corrupt natures, strengthened in it by example of their fathers and their own practice, the more blows they have, the harder they grow, and sin more desperately.

Ver. 4. For they are impudent children and stiff-hearted.

The words, "impudent children," are in the Hebrew, hard of face; their faces were so hard, that reproof and reproach would not make them blush; and therefore it is rendered impudent, without shame, without blushing. The face is the seat of shame; and when men sin, and are told of it, or conceive others know it, their faces are oft filled with shame: and it is hard for one guilty to keep shame out of his face; it is hard not to be a traitor to himself. But these were past shame, they had the forehead of a harlot; they sinned, and were not ashamed. Jer. vi. 15, "Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush."

"Stiff-hearted." Strong in heart, or of heart; strong with a sinful strength, with stubbornness against God. There is a natural stiffness in men, which they inherit from their forefathers, and bring into the world; and there is a contracted stiffness, gotten by continuance in sin. Both these were in this people, and the principle of stubbornness was not broken, but strengthened; so that no threatenings did make them fear, no blows did make them yield; but being stubborn they rebelled all; no promises or kindnesses did melt them. This sin had been in them even from Moses's time; Matt. xix. 8, "Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives:" the tender love of a wife could not prevail with them.

Obs. 1. That progress in sin makes impudent. The original is, and are impudent; they sin to this day, and are impudent, or hard of face. The beginnings of sin are modest, but progress in sin is shameless. In a harlot are first wanton thoughts, then wanton looks, after waiting for opportunities, and here yet may be blushing; but when it comes to that in Prov. vii. 13, "She caught him, and kissed him," then it is come to shamelessness; and therefore it follows, "with an impudent face she said, I have peace-offerings, I have paid my vows;" God hath had his due, and now my flesh must have its due; "I have deeked my bed, come, let us take our fill of love." The Hebrew for impudent is, she strengthened her face; it was strengthened against modesty and shame; for progress in sin had made her shameless of sin: and so the prophet speaks of the Jews, Jer. iii. 3, "Thou hast a whore's forehead, thou refusest to be ashamed;" Judah was so impudent, that she scorned to blush: Jer. viii. 12, "Were they ashamed when they committed abomination?" I looked for it, but "they were not ashamed at all, neither could they blush." O what a condition doth Erubescencia est fuga rei indecentis.

Impudence is the contrary: sin is the most indecent thing, et maxime erubescibile; we blush at the nakedness of our bodies, not at sin, which made the nakedness of the body shameful.

Quantum displicet Deo immunditia peccati, in tantum placet Deo erubescencia penitentis. Bernard.

sin bring to! Monica, the mother of Austin, at first sipped a little wine, after drank off a little more, in time whole cups, and at last it came to drunkenness, and so to impudency. When the calves were first mentioned in Israel, the people trembled at it; but afterwards they could kiss calves, and sacrifice to Baal, Hos. xiii. 1, and outstand the threats of the prophet. Sin banisheth shame from its habitation; so that the sinner and shame are not acquainted. Psal. lii. 1, "Why boastest thou thyself in mischief, O mighty man?" Doeg boasted of his bloodiness, that he had killed the priests at the command of Saul. Zeph. iii. 5, "The unjust knoweth no shame." Though men foam out their shame, Jude 13, and glory in their shame, Phil. iii. 19, yet they will know no shame. It is an exceeding evil to be past shame, to be impudent in sinning; if ever God show mercy to such sinners, they must be ashamed. "What fruit had you in those things, whereof now ye are ashamed?" Rom. vi. 21: ye were impudent in committing, but now ye are ashamed in confessing and remembering of them.

Obs. 2. That where there is an impudent face, there is a hard, stiff heart. If the heart were not stony before God, the face would not be impudent before man: Acts vii. 51, "Ye stiff-necked, and uncircumcised in heart;" there was brawnishness within, and impudency without. And a hard heart is one of the greatest evils. Mercies prevail not: what mercies had they in the wilderness, and in Canaan, and yet they did not move them! Miracles will not do it: when they took Christ, he said, "I am he," and they all fell backward to the ground: after this, Peter cuts off Malchus's ear; Christ heals it: here were two miracles, yet they did no good upon their hard hearts; they went on, laid hands on Christ, who wrought the miracles, bound him as a malefactor, and thought to make him sure for doing any more miracles. Pharaoh saw ten miracles; the Israelites wore a miracle about them; forty years their clothes and shoes wore not out; they were new at forty years' end; yet these wrought not upon their hard hearts. It is not fasting and prayer will do it; many are hardened in them. There are waters, that whatever is cast in, they turn into stone; and some men's hearts grow stony in whatever ordinances they are. A hard heart is a grievous disease, worse than the stone in the reins or bladder. It was Nabal's disease and death; and most men are sick and die of that disease.

Obs. 3. That God sends his prophets and ministers about hard services, such as are full of discouragements, when they are looked upon with a carnal eye. Ezekiel had presently to object, Lord, wilt thou send me to a people that is impudent? I shall never make them blush; to a people hard-hearted? I shall never make impression on their spirits, by any truths I shall preach unto them; my labour will be in vain. Are they a rebellious nation? do they rebel against thee? and will they not much more rebel against me? This is a hard task; if thou regardest not me, yet regard thy truths. What! shall they be cast away about such a people as this? O spare me, and spare thy truths! No, saith God, I send thee unto them, and thou shalt speak unto them. They are hard tasks that God puts his servants upon. Isaiah was called to a hard service, chap. vi. 9, 10, to preach ruin and destruction to a people; and so unwelcome he was, that he saith, chap. viii. 18, "I am for a sign and wonder in Israel." Jeremiah is set over nations and kingdoms, "to root out, to pull down, and to destroy," chap. i. 10: the kings of Judah, the princes, priests, and people, he was to deal with; and ver. 19, it is said, "They shall fight against thee." Preaching provokes all sorts of men: and so hard did Jeremiah find his work, although God promised to be with him; he was so derided, saw so little good come of his labours; that he resolved to lay down his calling, and to speak no more in the name of the Lord, Jer. xx. 9. Knox, when called to preach, he burst forth into an abundance of tears; and so withdrew himself to his chamber, and was full of grief, and troubled, till he was compelled to preach. Preaching is a warring, 2 Tim. ii. 4, and preachers are soldiers. Hence Paul calls Timothy "a good soldier of Christ." And when we come to spoil and plunder people of their goods, their lusts, wills, humours, opinions, and to take away their strong holds, their carnal reasoning against Christ in the gospel, and ways of God; they are in a rage, take up arms against us. Paul fought with beasts at Ephesus, 1 Cor. xv. 32, and they gored him, and sought his death. The Galatians, that would have at first pulled out their eyes for Paul, thrust out their tongues against Paul; he was their enemy, because he told them the truth. Those who cried Hosannah a little before, were ready to cry, Crucify, crucify. Hardly a prophet or an apostle, but suffered by the hands of their hearers.

Obs. 4. Ministers should not so much look at the persons they are sent to, or the event of their ministry, as at their call. "I send thee," saith God, look thou to that; trouble not thyself at the persons that are so wicked, nor at the success of thy ministry, but consider I have called and sent thee. God's will and command must content us, support us. What if we be scoffed at, reviled, made the offscouring and filth of the world; yet here is the comfort of a true prophet, of a true minister, Christ sent him; and he that set him to work will pay him his wages, whether they hear or hear not to whom he is sent. The nurse hath her wages, whether the child live or die; and "we are a sweet savour of Christ unto God in them that are saved, and in them that perish," 2 Cor. ii. 15. The soldier hath his respect and reward, whether he kill men or take them alive; and we are acceptable unto God as well in the deaths as the lives of men. This consideration comforted Isaiah: chap. xlix. 4, 5, "I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought: yet surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God. And though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and my God shall be my strength." He would look at God, and not at the difficulty of the work, or discouragements from men, and want of success. Sometimes God gives large encouragement, promises, hope, success, providing for our infirmities; at other times a bare commission and command must suffice, to do that which would make one's heart ache: it is his prerogative to send whom he will, and upon what service he will. Let us lay aside all discouraging thoughts, look to our call, rest in God's will, and know it is honour to be in his service, though nothing come of it; we are acceptable to him, if not to men, and shall find a reward in heaven, if none on earth.

Obs. 5. That those who are sent of God must deliver, not their own, but God's message: "And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God." A prophet is os Dei, the mouth of God; and it is great honour to him, that the great God will speak by his tongue; "Thou shalt be as my mouth," Jer. xv. 19. So Jeremiah had God's words put in his mouth, chap. i. 9; and those he must speak, not his own words; what God commanded, that he must speak, and not what himself fancied. When a man comes furnished with the word of God, then he comes as a man of God, with authority and power. This made the apostle say, "Our weapons are not carnal," not the words of man's wisdom, but the oracles of God, "which are mighty through God:" Acts xx. 27, he delivered the whole counsel of God, and not his own.

Ver. 5. And they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) yet shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.

Here the end or reason of the prophet's sending is given. I send thee to this people: to take away all pleas and pretences of theirs, thou shalt prophesy unto them, and tell them of their sins, what I require at thy hands; and if they will not hear, I have not left myself without witnesses; "they shall know," &c. They would otherwise have had to object against thee, and said, If we had had a prophet in our captivity to have reproved us for our sins, and have showed us God's displeasure, our danger, and the way to escape, we would have ceased from our evil ways, have learned righteousness, and laid hold of offers of mercy and grace; but we had not any to reprove or instruct us, we perished for want of visions. It is true, we had prophets in our country, but there they were common, and we did not much regard them; but had one been given us now in this desolate, afflicted condition, we would have hearkened, obeyed, &c. This objection God takes away, and tells them, whether they will hear or no, a prophet they shall have; he will not be wanting to them, they shall have no cause to object against or complain of him.

"A rebellious house." The original בית כרי is, a house of rebellion. It is in the abstract, and notes the strength and provocation of their sin. The Vulgate hath it, the exasperating house, the house that provokes and vexes the Lord, or, the embittering house, that embitters God; and so the Septuagint renders that in the third verse, which have rebelled against me, which have turned me into bitterness, and made me deal bitterly with them. A house, not because God dwelt amongst them, and was now driven out by their rebellions; but a house, because they were the family and seed of Israel. And this parenthesis is inserted to arm the prophet against their obstinacy, that he, understanding beforehand what they were, might not be despondent, but proceed cheerfully in his work, whatever he met with.

Obs. 1. That there be few that hear and receive the word savingly. I send thee to this people, and there be not many among them that will entertain thy message, or believe the word that I put into thy mouth. "Whether they will hear, or forbear, for they are a rebellious house." This strongly imports they would not hear, not savingly, but rather oppose the truth. There was a great number of them in Babylon, yet very few hearkened to the prophet; and so was it before they went into Babylon: Isa. liii. "Who hath believed our report?" We have preached, and made report of God and Christ, in the temple, in the synagogues, in the gates and streets; but, who hath believed us? Isaiah was a princely prophet, had a princely language, and yet neither among the great ones at court, nor inferior sort, was there any considerable number; for, Isa. viii. 18, he saith, "I and the children the Lord hath given me, are for signs and wonders in Israel." If they had been many, they would not have been for wonders: that is a wonder which is rare, and it is a rare thing for men and women to believe the word of God. Multitudes flock to the gates and posts of Wisdom, but few lay up sound wisdom in their hearts: many hearers, few believers. "We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness,"

1 Cor. i. 24: the generality of both reject Christ and his doctrine. Of those that hear the gospel, scarce the hundredth man is a believing man, saith Calvin. And Chrysostome exceeds him in his 40th Homily Ad Pop. Antioch. He thinks that scarce the thousandth man that hears the word will be saved. It is conceived by some expositors, that in Antioch were above a hundred thousand people; and yet this father feared that hardly a hundred of them were right. Noah preached unto the old world, and few or none hearkened. When the Jews were in the wilderness, how few hearkened unto the voice of the Lord! Of six hundred thousand only Caleb and Joshua hearkened, obeyed, and entered into Canaan. Set aside all profane hearers, all negligent ones, all forgetful, all unbelieving and unpractical hearers, and you shall find the number very few of saving hearers. Many come to hear, but few get into heaven. And you know what Christ hath said, That narrow is the way to life, and few there be that find it; but broad is the way to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat. Let Christ speak, he is not heard, not received; let Satan or antichrist do it, they are heard and followed. John v. 43, "I come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive." When antichrist came he was received; Rev. xiii. 3, "And all the world wondered after the beast and worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast?" The doctrine and worship of the beast was easy, suitable to carnal spirits; but the doctrine of Christ is spiritual, deep, contrary to our fleshly and sinful principles. And herein the greatness of the mystery of the gospel is set out, that few do hear and believe.

Obs. 2. See the infinite goodness of God, that will give a prophet to such a people as this. They were rebellious, had slighted, rejected, abused all the prophets in Canaan: 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, 16, "The Lord God sent to them by his messengers, because he had compassion on them; but they mocked the messengers of God, despised his word, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose, and there was no remedy" or healing. God saw nothing would do them good, but that they must be ruined by war, be thrown into captivity, and buried in Babylon; yet such was the compassion and goodness of God, that he gives them a prophet here to try them what they will do, whether they would hear and learn righteousness; God will not be overcome with man's evil, but will overcome evil with good. When the Jews had taken Christ the heir, and put him to death, yet he being risen, pours out his Spirit upon the apostles, and gives them both to Jews and gentiles; and Peter, at a sermon, converted some of those that had washed their hands in his blood. When God will, nothing shall hinder his kindness; he will give the choicest ministers to the most corrupt people.

Obs. 3. That sinners in time come to a height and perfection of sinning. They were not only a rebelrious house, but a house of rebellion: when it comes to the abstract once, it is at the height. As there is a going on in God's ways to perfection, Heb. vi. 1, so there is in sin's ways. James tells us of sin finished, perfected, chap. i. 15. Hence, ἀμαρτία ἀποτε-λεσθεσσα, Eccles. viii. 11, mention is made of hearts fully set to do evil; and, Jer. iii. 5, Judah is said to speak and do evil, as she could; and Israel's sins are called mighty sins, Amos v. 12; the original is, bony sins: as men when Fortia peccata. עצמות their bones are come to their full growth, are strong, and men of might; so is it in sinning, when sins are come to their full growth, then are they mighty sins. The like is that in Jer. xlv. 16, 17, "As for the word thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee. But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth out of our own mouth; to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, as we have done, we, and our fathers, our kings, and our princes," &c. This was the sin of Judah, her whole heart and will was in it; and Israel was not behind: Hos. ii. 5, "I will go after my lovers, that give me my bread and my water, my wool and my flax, mine oil and my drink." They sinned with greediness, as they in Ephes. iv. 19, which sets out the greatness of their sin. The Scripture calls such sinners, sons of Belial; Judg. xix. 22, "Sons of Belial beset the house round about," where the Levite and his concubine were, in the old man's house at Gibeah; they got her and forced her to death. These were sons of Belial indeed, without profit, as some interpret the word, without yoke, as others; that is, lawless, rebellious men, men of wickedness, given to wickedness; as Hophni and Phinehas, 1 Sam. ii. 12; such as Christ will have nothing to do with, 2 Cor. vi. 15, unless it be to destroy them.

Obs. 4. That sin is an embittering thing. The house of rebellion may be termed the house of bitterness, that deals bitterly with me, and embitters my Spirit against them: Hos. xii. 14, "Ephraim provoked him to anger most bitterly," with bitter-nesses. Ephraim's sins were sins full of bitterness; they turn God's sweetness into bitterness, his patience into wrath, his bowels into wormwood. If any thing can sadden divine nature, and embitter the same, it is sin. What a bitter thing is it, that God should be thrust out of his throne and temple, and an idol set up! What a bitter thing, that the heart and conscience, which is the seat of God, should be the habitation of lusts and devils! When God sees this, it doth much embitter his spirit. When Christ hung upon the cross, they gave him gall and vinegar to drink, which was a bitter provocation; and when we sin, we give God and Christ pure gall to drink. Lam. i. 18, the words there are, "The Lord is righteous, for I have rebelled against his commandment;" the Hebrew is otherwise, because I have made bitter his mouth, I have given him gall and wormwood to drink, a cup of rebellion and disobedience; he is righteous in these bitter afflictions, because I have embittered his mouth and Spirit with my bitter sins. God is all love, sweetness, mercy, and would not afflict and deal bitterly with us, if we did not drink to him in gall, provoke him by our sins to it. Hos. xiii. 16, "Samaria shall become desolate, for she hath rebelled against God;" the Vulgate is, because she hath stirred up God to bitterness: and he will deal as bitterly by her; "They shall fall by the sword," saith God, "their infants shall be dashed in pieces, and their women with child shall be ripped up." Here was great bitterness, we think, but it is nothing to the bitterness of our sins: our sins cross God's will, darken his glory, murdered his Son, grieve and vex his Spirit, deface his work, and burden him daily. There is a double bitterness considerable about sin, the bitterness in sin, and that for sin: this last God never tastes, but all mankind hath, and shall taste; fears, sorrows, troubles, sickness, death, &c.; but the other bitterness in sin, God always tastes it. Deut. xxxii. 32, "Their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter;" both their works and worship are bitter, there is hypocrisy and superstition in them. There cannot be the least dram of gall in any thing his people do, especially in worship, but the Lord tastes it, and distastes it. Our mouths are so out of relish, that we find sweet in sin, which is gall, wormwood, yea, bitterness itself. Job xx. 12—14, "Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, he hide it under his tongue; keep it, and will not forsake it: yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of asps within him." It is a metaphor from a man given to his appetite, who meeting with some sweet, pleasing morsel, keeps it long in his mouth, sucks out the sweet, delights his sense with it, and lets it not go down too quickly; but when it is down it proves a poisoned bit; and though it pleased his palate, yet it torments his bowels. So sin in most men's mouths, in their fancies and to their senses, is sweet, and they roll it up and down in their thoughts, and delight themselves in a conceited pleasure of it; but there is the gall of asps in it, the bitterness of death. And Solomon, who had found sweetness in the ways of the flesh, at last felt and acknowledged the bitterness in sin, and in that sin, Eccles. vii. 26, "I find more bitter than death the woman whose heart is snares and nets." Prov. v. 4, "Her end is bitter as wormwood." The bitterness in sin will be tasted at one time or other: Jer. ii. 19, "It is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God."

Obs. 5. A rebellious people grow worse by the means of grace. Let them hear the word, or have it tendered to them, they are more obstinate, opposite than before. The point rises thus: "whether they will hear or no; for they are a rebellious house." They will not hear, they will not receive thee nor thy message: but out of their old malice and rebellious dispositions, they will be the worse for a prophet sent unto them; more hardened they will be against thee, thy person, thy doctrine, thy conversation, and thy calling; they will quarrel and question all. Jer. xlv. 16, 17, "As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee: but we will certainly do whatever thing goeth out of our own mouth." They were the worse for the prophet, more obstinate and set against him, and the truths he delivered: In doing we will do; since thou hast spoken to the contrary, we are more resolved and set upon it. When Christ the great Prophet was sent unto the Jews, did they not grow more hard, vile, and opposite to him and his doctrine? did they not question his calling, and quarrel at his conversation? When Christ had told them that the Spirit was upon him, and that he was sent to preach the gospel, deliverance, liberty, the acceptable year, Luke iv. 18, 19; and spake so, as that they wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth; yet, in ver. 28, 29, it is said, "All they that were in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath, and rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill, that they might cast him down headlong." Christ was a Nazarene; and yet thus would the Nazarenes have served their Prophet, their Messiah, their own citizen; they would have thrown him down, and broke his neck and bones together: which made Ambrose say, that these men were worse than the devil; because when he had Christ upon the top of the pinnacle, he offered not to throw him down, but said, "Throw thyself down;" but these would have thrown him down with their own hands. Wicked men storm and rage against Christ, his doctrine and doings: Luke vi. 11, when he had confuted their corrupt opinions about the sabbath, and healed the man with the withered hand, it is said, "They were filled with madness, and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus." You may see how the words of Christ ripened their corruptions. The gospel is like the sun, which ripens weeds as well as corn, crabs as well as good fruit; the vine of Sodom, Deut. xxxii. 32, as well as the vine of Sibmah, Isa. xvi. 8; and the vineyards of Timnath among the Philistines, Judg. xiv. 5, as the vineyards of Engedi among the Israelites, Cant. i. 14. And so the word of God and gospel of Christ ripen the corruptions of the rebellious, as well as the graces of the regenerate: Judas's treason, the Pharisees' hypocrisy, are ripened by the word, as well as John's love, and Nathanael's sincerity. In the hottest countries are the rankest poisons, the most venomous serpents; and in England, which is zona torrida for the means of grace, is the bitterest enmity to godliness, here are the rankest serpents that ever lived.

Obs. 6. That God will leave wicked men without excuse. It is God's intention; they shall never be able to challenge me, nor to justify themselves. God's primary intentions, where he sends prophets and means of grace, are the good of his elect, their comfort, sanctification, and salvation; but his secondary intentions, are the inexcusableness of the wicked, and their just damnation. Hence is it that the apostle saith, "We are the savour of life unto life, and the savour of death unto death," 2 Cor. ii. 16. There is a sort of men that the gospel is a sweet savour unto, they smell life in it, and it revives them, it works unto life; and these are the elect ones. But there is another sort, that the gospel is a savour of death unto; they smell death in it, and find deadly effects from it; they are hardened, made worse, embittered, and so it works unto death; it is like a strong scent, that kills immediately: and those it proves so unto, are the reprobate, the lost, whose minds the god of this world hath blinded, 2 Cor. iv. 4. Christ also tells us, John ix. 39, "For judgment I am come into this world, that they which see not might see; and that they which see might be made blind." His first aim was at those under election, to do them good, to make them see; the secondary end and aim was, to make others blind, that is, such as were in a reprobate condition. When God sends his word in any place, it shall and must prosper in the thing whereunto he sends it, Isa. lv. 11; be it to win and draw, or to harden and make inexcusable. See Isa. vi. 9, 10, "Go and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; see ye, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes," &c. And this scripture is six times in the New Testament repeated; intimating, that as people are hardened under the means, so they are inexcusable having had the means; and it is a dreadful condition, to have law or gospel, prophets or apostles, and not to thrive by them. Christ pronounces a woe to the cities, Matt. xi. that had the means of grace, and mighty works done in them, and repented not; he tells them, it shall be more tolerable for Sodom than for them, at the day of judgment. Cursed Sodomites, that were destroyed with so dreadful a judgment from Heaven, shall find more favour at the day of judgment, and more ease in hell after that day, than any that have had the gospel and means of grace, and not profited by them. Let us learn to tremble at the word of God, hear it as the word of God, as that word that shall judge us, and receive the truths of God with love; lest otherwise God send us strong delusions, and we be damned for not believing the truth.

Obs. 7. Wicked men shall one day be awakened, and see what mercy, what means, offers of grace, they have refused and slighted. "They shall know that there hath been a prophet amongst them." The time shall come, that they shall see and feel that I was near, that my word was among them, that salvation was at their doors. They shall find me a severe Judge, that would not accept of me a tender Father. Men go on a long time in a careless, sleepy, or scornful way; but when sickness comes, death is before them, and they ready to take possession of an eternal condition, then their conscience stings them, and they feel what an evil it is, that they have opposed, neglected, undervalued the prophets, and sons of the prophets. The adulterer will be roused out of his pleasing dream and soft bed at last, "And say, How have I hated instruction, and my heart despised reproof; and have not obeyed the voice of my teachers, nor inclined mine ear to them that instructed me!" Prov. v. 12, 13. There will be strong convictions in the bosom of such a sinner, and conscience will sound in his ears, and set upon his spirit those truths of his teachers that formerly have been despised. When Pharaoh and the Egyptians were in the Red sea, and the old world had the flood about its ears, what language did their consciences speak? Did they not tell them, they had had Moses and Noah, prophets and preachers of righteousness, and gave no ear to them? did they not sting them to death, and make them cry out, and say, O that we had hearkened to those servants of the living God? Whilst wicked men are hearing, sometimes their consciences are nettled and galled. "The high priest, and all with him," when they heard and saw what was done by the apostles, they "were filled with indignation;" Acts v. 17; and John viii. 59, the Jews were so vexed at Christ, that they took up stones to cast at him; and those that heard Stephen, Acts vii. 54, "They were cut to the heart, and gnashed on him with their teeth;" with the saw of anger, malice, and envy, they were even sawn in sunder, and gnashed on him with their teeth. And if the word were so terrible, while they had shifts to evade the stroke of it, and comforts to allay the power of it, what would it be to them at last, when all shifts and comforts should fail them! Some have confessed their consciences have been so affected at the hearing of some men, as they never were in all their days before; others, that truths have been so darted into them, they could not get them out in a week or month after; they have stuek like arrows in their livers, and have been half-deaths unto them. What will the word be at last unto rebellious sinners? It will arrest them, and be most terrible unto them: Zech. i. 6, "Did not my words take hold of your fathers?" It did, and will do in these days; John xii. 48, the word of Christ will judge and condemn sin-

Obs. 8. That the prophets shall be witnesses at last, for or against their hearers. "They shall know there hath been a prophet amongst them;" his person, his pains, his truths, his life, his sufferings, his death, will all come in for witnesses one day. Every prophet, every preacher that Christ sends, is a witness, as well as an officer or a minister; Acts xxvi. 16. I have made " thee a minister and a witness." All faithful ministers are Christ's witnesses, Acts i. 8. They bear witness of Christ and his doctrine; and if we receive not him and his doctrine, they will be Christ's witnesses against us. When the Lord Christ shall say to a people, I have knocked at your doors many years together, but ye would not open unto me; I tendered life and salvation, grace and glory, in my gospel and ordinances, but you would none of them; you had your farms, oxen, and wives to take up your thoughts, mammon to serve, honour and praise to seek of one another, examples of men to follow, &c. As for me and my prophets, my ministers, you despised, or only gave the hearing, and that was all: and my charge is not false: here are my witnesses. What say you to it? Speak, ye ministers of such a city, and such a place. What, did you not preach many a sermon, shed many a tear, sweat many a drop, make many a prayer for them? did ye not early and late watch for the good of their souls? &c. Yea, Lord, but they would not receive us, they would not believe our report we made of thee, they would not take thy yoke upon them, &c.; we shook off the dust of our feet against them. This will be dreadful, when such witness of the prophets comes in against hearers.

Ver. 6. And thou, son of man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briars and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.

The prophet being struck down with the sight of his glory which sat upon the throne, in the former chapter, is lifted up and comforted by the Spirit, in the two first verses, and called to public service, in the three next, and that among a wretched, rebellious people. In this and the two next verses, the Lord Christ gives him instruction concerning his office. First, negatively, in the 6th verse, "Be not afraid of them;" I have made thee a prophet, and it is not for a prophet to fear the face of man.

Secondly, positively, in the 7th verse, where he informs him, whose words he must speak unto them; "Thou shalt speak my words unto them:" it is not for a prophet to speak his own words, but the words of him that sends him.

Thirdly, both negatively and positively, in the 8th verse; "Be not thou rebellious, like that rebellious house:" they will not hear me, submit to my laws, walk in my ways, they go after their own counsels, wills, lusts; but be not thou like them. And then positively, "Open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee."

- In the 6th verse you have,
1. The appellation, "Son of man."
 2. The instruction, prohibition, or duty, "Be not afraid," which is often repeated in the verse.
 3. The causes and grounds of fear are specified, which are divers:

First, the quality of their persons. Thou mayst pretend they are great, princes and nobles, but "be not afraid," mehem, from them. מֵהֶם

The second cause is their words. They will reproach thee, and seek by evil speeches to discourage thee, but, "Be not thou afraid of their words."

The third is their looks. They will look strangely, frown bitterly, swell against thee, and brow-beat thee; "Be not dismayed at their looks."

The fourth is their disposition:

1. Metaphorically, by briars, thorns, and scorpions; they will scratch and tear, sting and kill.
2. Literally, "They are a rebellious house."

"Fear not, be not afraid, be not dismayed," &c. These words are four times mentioned in the verse, to show our aptness unto fear, and to show the forwardness of the Lord Christ to cure our fear. The word dismayed (there is no difficulty in the other) comes from a word that signifies to bruise or beat in pieces. Be not thou so affected with fear, as to have thy spirit faint, broken, sunk, and discouraged within thee; "be not dismayed," let not thy spirit yield at all, stand it out; show thyself a man of courage, a man of God, carrying thyself in thy place befitting the Son of God that put thee in that place.

The greater difficulty lies in the other words; briars, thorns, and scorpions.

"Briars," סרבים. This Hebrew word is no where found in holy writ, except ἀπὸς λεγόμενον. in this place. The rabbies speak of twenty kinds of thorns in Scripture, whereof this is one, and notes briars with sharp prieks, which do fret and burn in the pricking, much like unto a nettle; and therefore Kirker thinks the word here to signify nettles: the Jews would be as nettles unto the prophet; and nettles are stinging, burning things. Urtica, ab urtica. The Septuagint expresses it by a word which notes a kind of madness; as cattle that are bit with flies which suck blood, and make them run as if they were mad; so they should, like wild beasts, grow cruel and outrageous against the prophet. Shindler interprets it, rebellious, contumacious; others, refractory, drawing back, and stubbornly Retractantes. Mont. resisting.

"Thorns," sallonim. Spina aculeata, sharp-pointed thorns. Ezek. xxviii. 24, Spina dotorifica, "a pricking brier, a grieving thorn." The Septuagint, an offence of bitterness, or, a bitter offence. The word here in our text is in the Vulgate, subverters, because thorns in a man's way do hinder and subvert him; therefore Kirker thinks sillon is from sallul, which is, properly, to lay heaps of earth and stones in the way; and so here heaps of thorns, which may prick and offend passengers.

There is one word more to open, and that is scorpion.

"Scorpion," קקבים. It signifies sometimes spinosan herbam, a plant that grows in the form of a scorpion, whereof instruments were made to scourge malefactors. 1 Kings xii. 14, Rehoboam would chastise them with scorpions, that is, with whips that had hooks in them, resembling the claws and stings of scorpions. It is also a living creature, venomous, hurtful, and stinging with its tail; Deut. viii. 15, "God led them through the great and terrible wilderness, where were fiery serpents and scorpions." Mercer thinks the word to be from קק the heel or hoof, because this serpent doth bite those parts, and the name scorpion is from its scattering and throwing its poison up and down.

Now the great business we have to do, is to open unto you who are meant by these thorns, briars, and scorpions. And by these are meant wicked and ungodly men. I shall make that out unto you from two places of Scripture: Josh. xxiii. 13, "They shall be scourges in your sides, and thorns in your eyes;" he speaks of the nations that were wicked and among them. And Luke x. 19, Christ tells the Seventy, they should "tread upon serpents and scorpions," that is, wicked men, which are like unto those venomous creatures; and thrice in Matthew are wicked men called "a generation of vipers," Matt. iii. 7; xii. 34; xxiii. 33.

I will show you,

1. Wherein they resemble thorns: and,

II. Scorpions: and then draw some conclusions.

1. Ungodly men are like unto thorns in these respects:

First, they are worthless things, of little use: they serve to make a hedge, to stop a gap, and that is all; they are not for great use and service. And wicked men are worthless things: Prov. x. 20, "The heart of the wicked is little worth;" the best part of a wicked man, his heart, is of little or no value. His lands may be worth somewhat; his shop, his clothes, his jewels may be of great value; but himself is a worthless thing. Jer. xxii. 28, Coniah, king of Judah, because wicked, is called "a despised broken idol, a vessel wherein is no pleasure;" "An idol," saith the apostle, 1 Cor. viii. 4, "is nothing in the world;" that is, a thing of no moment, of no use. What then is a broken idol? That is altogether inconsiderable. But may there not be some beauty, some engraving, some gilding upon it, that may delight? No; he is "a vessel wherein is no pleasure;" he is so far from delighting at all, that he is a vessel loathsome, to be cast on the dunghill, and trod under-foot. Hence in Daniel, Antiochus Epiphanes is called "a vile person," Dan. xi. 21; one so little worth, as to be scorned and rejected as a vile thing. And Job, speaking of such men, tells us they are "viler than the earth," men to be trod and spit upon as the vilest earth, Job xxx. 8.

Secondly, they are vexing and grieving things. Ezek. xxviii. 24, there is mention made of the pricking brier and grieving thorn; and wicked men are full of prickles and grievances. "If you will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you, then those you let remain of them shall be prickles in your eyes, and thorns in your sides, and shall vex you in the land wherein you dwell," Numb. xxxiii. 55.

Wherein lies this grieving and thorny disposition of the wicked?

I. In their words: and that appears,

(1.) In their misconstruing the words and ways of the godly. Matt. xxvi. 61, said the witnesses against Christ, "This fellow said, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and build it in three days." They mistook Christ, who spake of the temple of his body," John ii. 21. Jer. xxvi. 4, 6, "Thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord: If ye will not hearken to me, to walk in my law, then will I make this house like Shiloh, and this city a curse." Now in the 9th verse see how they mistook his words, and perverted his meaning: "Why hast thou prophesied in the name of the Lord, saying, This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city desolate?" He had told them it should be so, if they did not hearken, repent, and amend; but they left out that, and pretend he had absolutely said, "This house shall be like Shiloh." So many people mistake the ministers, and say they preach damnation, when it is conditionally; if they repent not and believe, they must then certainly look for damnation.

(2.) In their calumniations. They forge lies and falsehoods. Job's friends charged him with lies, hypoetry, pride, &c.; but he tells them they are "forgers of lies," Job xiii. 4; you come to comfort me, but you wound me with your lies and slanders. And David found this, Psal. cxix. 69, "The proud have forged a lie." They trim up lies with shadows of truth and neat language; they have mints to frame their lies curiously in, and presses to print their lies withal. Sanballat calumniates Nehemiah, that zealous and faithful servant of God, and tells him, It is reported among the heathen, and Gashmu saith it, that thou and the Jews think to rebel; that thou wilt be king, and hast appointed preachers at Jerusalem to say, There is a king in Judah, Neh. vi. 6. Here was a malicious forgery, a trim lie, and no less reproach than rebel, traitor, must be laid upon this great worthy and reformer in Israel. Nehemiah returns an answer, ver. 8, "There are no such things done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart." The devil is the father of lies, John viii. 44, and all his children are like him, forgers of lies, Jer. xx. 10, "Report," said Jeremiah's back friends, "and we will report it;" invent some slanders, some lie against the prophet, and we will report it, spread it, carry it to the king's court and ear, and cause him to smart for his boldness. Jeremiah heard the defaming of many; it was their daily work. They said, "Let us smite him with the tongue," Jer. xviii. 18. No man can have a beautiful and well-favoured name for these briars; they will scratch it, and make it very bloody: it was their daily work. The christians in the primitive time were accused of all the evils that fell out: if there were great floods, famines, wars, earthquakes, plagues, in the Roman commonwealth, they cried, Away with the christians to the lions; and Austin observeth, that they made it a proverb, The rain failed, because the christian name was suffered.

(3.) Daring, provoking words. Neh. vi. 2, Sanballat and Geshem dared Nehemiah to meet them; "Come, let us meet together in one of the villages." Four times they sent unto him in that manner, thinking by this way to have drawn out Nehemiah, and done him mischief. Daring provocation comes from the wicked, and herein they are thorns and briars.

(4.) Scorning, scoffing speeches. Neh. iv. 2, when the walls of Jerusalem were building, Sanballat scoffs, and says, "What do these feeble Jews? will they fortify themselves? will they sacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they revive the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish which are burned?" And so Tobiah, "If a fox go up, he shall even break down their stone wall." These scoffs and jeers went to the heart of Nehemiah, and made him pierce the heavens for help; "Hear, O our God; for we are despised;" the Hebrew is, despiht: we are not only despised, but we and our work are despiht, in the abstract. Mockings are biting things, therefore they are called cruel mockings, Heb. xi. 36. Ishmael's mocking of Isaac, Gen. xxi. 9, is called a persecution, Gal. iv. 29. The servants of God have been mocked and reproached in all ages.

(5.) Threatenings. Acts iv. 17, "Let us straitly threaten them, that they speak no more in Christ's name;" and ver. 21, "When they had further threatened them." Their tongues were tipped with threats; they were thorny tongues, mine sunt spine, threats are thorns, and pricked them on to the throne of grace, and made them pray as men pierced to the quick: for, ver. 29, "Now, Lord, behold their threatenings," let not them wound and weaken us, but "grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word." Saul, Acts ix. 1, breathed out threatenings against the saints. He was Benoni, a son of affliction to the church: so are all wicked men, and their tongues are thorns. Hence they are said in Scripture to be "whet," Psal. lxxiv. 3; to be "a sharp sword," Psal. lxxiv. 4, "a sharp razor," Psal. lii. 2; and the words of it are called "arrows, bitter words, devouring words," Psal. lii. 4, "deadly words," Prov. xviii. 21. Death and life are in the power of the tongue; it comforts, it destroys. Take the tongue of an evil man that slanders and backbites, it is a great murderer. We read of some double-tongued, 1 Tim. iii. 8; but such a one is treble-tongued, and kills, as Bernard saith, three at once; himself that speaks, the person he speaks to, and him he speaks of: and the worst is, he murders his own soul. Therefore Chrysostom observes well, and saith, The tongue is almost the very gate of death, it is the death and ruin of most men in the world.

(6.) "Their tongues are briars and thorns," in regard of their slighting and undervaluing of God's servants; as Paul is called a babbler, Christ, a fellow, the carpenter's son. And many of God's servants are slighted in these days; such words they meet with as are thorns and pricks in their sides and eyes. Because I will not multiply, take their blasphemies, O what thorns are those! thorns to God, and thorns to man. When the French had got some victory in Scotland against the reforming party there, the queen regent brake out into these speeches, "Where is now Knox's God? Now my God is better than Knox's God." Here was a blasphemous passage. And have we not such blasphemies in our days? Where is now your God of prayer and fasting? What is become of all your hearing, preaching, and seeking of your God? I might add another particular, which is the thorny counsels that wicked men do give. 1 Kings xxi. 9, what counsel Jezebel gave against Naboth! "Proclaim a fast, set him up on high among the people, and set two sons of Be-lial before him, to bear witness against him, that he blasphemed God and the king;" here were words of death, here was counsel from hell. It is not unknown what ill counsel hath been given his Majesty of late, and likewise to many others.

2. In their looks; that is in the text also. There is much in the faces of men to daunt and trouble; men's spirits are much discerned by their faces: Gen. xxxi. 5, I see your father's countenance is not towards me as before, by his face I find a difference in his spirit, saith Jacob to his wives; he found no favour in it. The face is the seat of favour or frowns. There is some majesty in the face and looks of man; and when he is angry, frowns, there is majestical terror in it. In Prov. xxv. 23, there is mention of an angry countenance, and it is likened to a north wind, which is cold and scattering; it drives away the clouds that have the rain in them: and oftentimes wicked men have such northern countenances, that they discourage, if not drive away, the prophets, who come with the dews of heaven. When men frown, knit their brows, look angrily, they have put on vizards, and they be scaring things: Job xxiv. 15, "He disguiseth his face;" he is like a man that hath on some terrible vizard, which affrights those that behold it. One of the Nevils, earl of Warwick, had so terrible a look when moved a little, that it was said of him, every wrinkle in his forehead was a sepulchre to bury a prince in: he was of kin to that nation, Deut. xxviii. 50, that had fierce countenances. And Antiochus, a wicked king, is described in Dan. viii. 23, to be of a fierce countenance; his very aspect was terrible. And some have been blasted by the frowns of mortals. When some men frown, look sour, and sparkle with their eyes, they prove basilisks, and kill those they look upon.

3. Like thorns in their catching nature; they catch hold of a man when he thinks he is rid of them, and entangle him more: so wicked men, when you think you have satisfied them, and done with them, they catch hold again, they seek new advantages. Jer. xx. 10, "All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him, and we shall take our revenge on him." The words, "all my familiars," in the Hebrew are, every man of my peace. I thought I had satisfied all their evils, slanders, and objections, that they had aimed at my peace and good; but they watched for my halting, they sought to entice me, and get advantage. This is the nature of wicked men. Christ, when he had to do with any sort of them, he convinced them, stopped their mouths, they went away and left him, and yet they were not satisfied, but sent, and set men to catch him in his words, Mark xii. 13. When the godly fall into the courts and prisons where wicked men have some power, what advantages do they seek against them. And when nothing can be proved, no reason but they should be dismissed, fees are multiplied, oaths and protestations tendered; and unless these thorns may scratch them, and draw blood from their purses and consciences, they will hold them fast, and liberty must not be had.

4. A thorn will never alter its nature; set it in the garden or orchard, water it with milk or wine, do what you will to the thorn, when you have done all, a thorn is a thorn: so is the nature of wicked and ungodly men. Transplant them whither you will, bring them from the country to the city, from the city to the court, put them in high or low places, bring them to the water's side, to the rivers of God, plant them in the orchards of God, in paradise itself, under the means of grace, let them have the dew of heaven, the shining of the sun;—a wicked man, he abides wicked still, he will not alter his nature, he will be no more a changeling; he is a blackamoor, he will be a blackamoor; he will live and die in his way, though he perish in that way.

5. Thorns are for the fire, Psal. lxxiii. 9, "Before your pots can feel the thorns," the heat of the fire made with thorns: they are for burning: and that is the end of wicked ones, Isa. x. 17, "The light of Israel shall be for a fire; and it shall burn and devour his thorns and his briars in one day." In fire is light and heat; God would be light to Israel, comfort and joy, but heat and burning to the Assyrian; he sent down fire to burn the sacrifice, and he would send a fire to burn the Assyrians, which were briars and thorns to the Jews, and that in one day. And when was this? When he sent an angel, and slew 185,000. Here was fire from heaven, a seraphim, a coal of juniper, that burnt up such a thicket of briars and thorns; and after this fire they fell into a worse, even the fire of hell, which is the place prepared for all the wicked: Psal. ix. 17, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God;" there is their end. Hell is large enough to hold all: Isa. xxx. 33, it is "deep and large, the pile thereof is fire and much wood;" it is sicut crecabilis, an accursed wood; such wood the earth brought forth upon the curse, briars and thorns, Gen. iii. 18, and the wicked are the fruit of the curse. This phrase "much wood," some expositors think, hath reference Musi. to the fact of the Jews, when the 185,000 Assyrians were slain in the valley of Tophet, they made great piles of wood, and burnt those bodies. So God hath piles of wood, thousands and millions of wicked ones, briars and brambles heaped together: and his breath like a stream of brimstone, kindles those heaps.

11. In what hath been said you see wherein wicked men are thorns and briars: now I must present to you wherein they are scorpions. You may by briars and thorns understand wicked men of a lower condition, and by scorpions those of a higher, that have more power, means, and opportunity to do mischief; and the analogy between the scorpion and them, lies in these particulars.

1. The scorpion is animal insidiosum, an insidious creature, it lies lurking under thorns and briars, hides itself in holes. Serpents also are subtle. When they will sting, erga vertut, of a molis declinare vulgatum. Conrad. in Apocal. "The serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field," Gen. iii. 1; and stops his ear against the voice of the charmer, Psa. lxxiii.; and bites the horse by the heel, so that the rider may fall, Gen. xlix. 17. And there is one word that signifies simplicity and subtily, that signifies plainness and double-dealing:

When Adam and Eve were both naked, they were plain and simple; but the serpent was guorum in a contrary sense, crafty, full of folds and windings. And wicked men are subtle: "Come let us deal wisely with them;" Exod. i. 10.

The Septuagint is, Let us deal cunningly against them. And in Psal. cv. 25. it is said, they dealt subtilly with his servants. How cunningly did the adversaries carry their plot in the days of Nehemiah! chap. iv. 11. "They shall not know nor see, till we come in the midst of them and slay them." The gunpowder treason was, and some since have been, carried on with dark lanterns, with secrecy and craft. Had not the enemies a close and crafty design to make a conjunction between papists and protestants in doctrine, discipline, and ceremony? And had not the only wise God interposed, turned wise men backward, and made their knowledge foolish, England and Rome had met, and we had been in conjunction with antichristian planets. And we may fear conjunctions still, more than open violence. Are not things carried with that subtilty at this present, as makes the world to wonder? Men against us pretend religion, king, parliament, the liberty of the subject, to be their quarrel. Here is much of the serpent, and little of the dove.

2. The scorpion is vigilant, watching opportunity of mischief. Pliny saith, some serpents sleep not all the summer, but are always thrusting out their stings, and waking, lest they should miss their opportunity. And wicked men are very wakeful, and watching their opportunity to do mischief: Prov. iv. 16. "They sleep not, unless they have done mischief, or caused some to fall." Ahab is sick, and cannot sleep, unless he have Naboth's vineyard. Amnon must have Tamar to satisfy his lust, else he must lay awake all night. Wicked men cannot be in quiet unless they sleep in wickedness. When Christ came to his disciples, they were asleep: but the wicked rout were awake, and coming to take him. They are restless like the sea: Isa. lvii. 20. "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest:" not when it is calm, but in its working, boiling, restless condition; when it threatens storms, to swallow up ships, to break over the banks, &c. Such are wicked ones, they storm, they swell, and watch where to break out to empty themselves of their estates, to drown a country in the blood of a civil war. Mic. vii. 2, 3. "They all lie in wait for blood; they hunt every man his brother with a net; that they may do evil with both hands earnestly;" &c. They have their net set, they hunt, they watch, and will not lose an opportunity; if one hand will not serve, both shall, and in the intention of their spirits also they are earnest in the work. And as they are wise to watch their season, so their feet are swift in running to the accomplishment of them, Prov. vi. 18. Were not our enemies watchful and active to break parliaments, to make canons, to search pockets, to fetch men into their courts?

3. They are exceeding troublesome to the countries where they are. They will get up their walls, into their chambers and beds, as some expositors observe; and therefore to prevent such evils, they set their beds remote from the wall, and the feet of their beds in pots full of water; and for fear of them, they lie in the highest rooms: they molest them much, and multiply their fears. In this they are not unlike them. Ahab was a troubler of Israel. Wicked men are the incendiaries in church and state. I must not name any; you know more than enough that are not nick-named when they are so termed; they have troubled this state and this city.

4. They join to do mischief. One will stick fast to the roof or wall, a second unto him, a third unto the second, and so make a chain, till they reach the party asleep: and the last stings him, and returns, and so every one back in order. This I find of the scorpion in Eglims upon the Revelation. Here is both their craft and malice unto man, that they are subservient one to another, and so linked together for such a purpose. Herein are wicked men truly scorpions: Prov. i. 14. "Come, let us all have one purse." Nahum i. 10. the wicked are as thorns folded together, stick together as the scales of leviathan. Acts iv. 5, 6. rulers, elders, scribes, high priest, Caiaphas, John, Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high priest, were gathered together against Christ and his apostles.

5. The scorpion feeds upon the dust of the earth. It feeds upon base and low things, upon vile and venomous things; so do wicked and ungodly men. As the serpent licks the dust of the earth, so do they lick the dust of the earth; they feed upon malice, they feed upon blood, they feed upon that which is not their own: Amos ii. 7. "They pant after the very dust of the earth;" they pant after the estates and means that poor men have in any place where they come, and they feed upon it, and satisfy their malice and revenge to the full, in sucking the estates, and crushing the bones of the saints of God.

6. They kill lenta morte, by a slow death, but gravi supplicio, with severe torment. When they set upon a man, they prick him, they prick him, they prick him, they poison him, which quickly torments, and within a few days kills: Rev. ix. 5. "Their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man." Some scorpions have double stings, and that they may be sure to kill, they strike with both. Wicked men deceive us with their treaties, and kill us with their treacheries: Psal. lv. 21. their words are softer than oil, but they are drawn swords. In the treaties and flatteries of wicked men, if we were not blind, we might see drawn swords, death at the throat of our estate, of our religion, laws and liberties. Haman flattered Esther, that sought the destruction of the Jews; the decree is sealed for the death of young and old, Esth. iii.: here was a scorpion. And Jer. xxxviii. 4. the princes beseech the king to put Jeremiah to death. Such a scorpion was Jezebel and Ahab, which stung Naboth to death, and got his vineyard. Hence that law in Ezek. xlvi. 18, "The prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression, to thrust them out of their possession."

7. Scorpions are driven away, if any of them be burnt in the house where they haunt. When Joab and Shimei were put to death by the sword of Solomon, then the other scorpions in Israel were afraid, and hid themselves; "and the kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon," 1 Kings ii. 46. If we shake not our vipers into the fire, they will do us harm. Thus you see wherein the resemblance lies between the wicked, in regard that they are called briars, thorns, and scorpions in the text.

The observations that do arise from the text are:

Obs. 1. That he is the fittest man for public employment, who is sensible of his own weakness, and insufficiency for place or service. "Son of man, be not afraid." I see, Ezekiel, that thou art sensible of thy own insufficiency; be not thou afraid, thou art the fitter man for my service. Moses pretended that he was a man slow of speech, and unfit for the great work of delivering God's people, and leading them out of Egypt into Canaan; but he was the fitter man for God. So those ministers or magistrates that are sensible of their own weaknesses, they are fittest for Christ and church service, and the Lord Christ will show his power most in their weakness.

Obs. 2. Those that are in God's work, and do intend heaven, they must look for afflictions, they must look for trouble. Ezekiel, saith Christ, I will put thee into my service; but know, thou must not go a smooth way, thou must meet with thorns and briars; thou shalt meet with scorpions and serpents. There is a scorpion in heaven, and scorpions on earth too; let a man be in a heavenly calling, a prophet; let a man be in a worldly calling, a magistrate; he shall meet with scorpions and serpents. Through many afflictions we must enter into heaven, and it is well we enter through many afflictions.

Obs. 3. The way and method of the Lord Christ is, to propound unto us the hardest things at first. He deals so with Ezekiel here. He hears of thorns, scorpions, a rebellious house, and hears of that which might have discouraged him; but Christ's way is to let you know what you must look for; Matt. x. "You shall be hated of all men for my name's sake;" you shall be carried to the court; you shall be scourged; you shall be brought before governors; you shall be put to death. He tells them of all these things,

First, because it was the way to arm them against those evils. We say, præmoniti, præmuniti, men forewarned are forearmed.

Secondly, that they may have no cause to complain they met with worse things than ever they heard of.

Thirdly, to strengthen their faith. When they should see such things fall out; they might say, These are the things which were foretold, and are tokens that we are in Christ's way. God began the world with this method: Gen. i. "The evening and the morning were the first day." It is not the morning and the evening, but you must have night before day, a winter before a spring, and thunder and lightning before a calm: and this is Christ's way. Therefore, if you intend heaven, think not to meet only with ease.

These things are all general; we come now to more particular observations.

Obs. 1. Then we must walk warily. Though wicked men be not to be feared, yet they are to be heeded. When Christ sent out his apostles, he tells them what thorns and scorpions they must be amongst;

men as cruel as wolves, that would persecute unto death; and what saith he? Be wise as serpents, innocent as doves, Matt. x.; keep yourselves from their teeth, do not you inconsiderately run into their harms; give them no just cause or occasion of injuring you. "Be innocent as doves;"

without horns, without pushing, goring, ^{incipit} wronging any; only be wary, and defend yourselves, as the next verse is. "Beware of men;" look to them, they are dangerous creatures; wolves, thorns, serpents are not so dangerous as they. Be exact, therefore, circumspect; yet not so cautious as to prejudice duty, or multiply fears; for, ver. 26, it is said, "Fear them not." He had told them they should be hated, ver. 22, scourged, ver. 17, persecuted from place to place, ver. 23, put to death, ver. 21; yet they must not fear, but they must beware of men. He saith not, beware of devils, they were subject unto the disciples through Christ's name; but men would not be subject, therefore beware of them. Elian tells us, in Libya men slept with their boots ^{Ocreatos dormire solete.} on, because of the scorpions, that they might not sting them. Let us not sleep, but walk, booted; I mean, let us be "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," Eph. vi. 15, be shod with a disposition unto peace: let us be peaceable, harmless, innocent, and careful of our conversation, that they do neither scratch nor sting us.

Obs. 2. Public and great designs cannot be carried on with ease and speed; there be thorns and briars in the way, yea, scorpions, some difficulty or other. Sluggards pretend lions in the way; but public, active spirits, when they are upon weighty affairs, find lions in the way. Joshua, when about a great work, to take Ai, there was an Achan in the way to make a great demur, and had almost overthrown the design, Josh. vii. Nehemiah had a great work in hand; and were there no obstacles to hinder? Tobiah and Sanballat were in the way, they scoffed, they complied, they armed, threatened; yea, the nobles of Judah give intelligence to Tobiah, Neh. vi. 17. The work of reformation now is a great and good work; and are there no obstacles in the way? Yea, there are thorns, and heaps of them, which have pricked and lamed some; scorpions, which have bit and stung others, that they move not, or very slowly, in this great work: some are unwilling, some unfaithful, some insufficient, some deeply guilty of foul sins, which puts the work more back in one day, than they can forward with their hearts, heads, hands, purses, and lives in many days. There are men employed that are Achans, Sanballats, Judases. We have much policy and carnal wisdom, and think by that to speed great works to their period; but this is, I will not say, the only, but a principal hindrance. While we will convey the ark, and carry on things, upon the shoulders of policy, we are in danger to lose the ark; yea, in danger to lose all. We will not yet see, lay the finger upon the right sore, and go to the root of evils. Things of weight in state or church have their obstacles, and come not to birth in the day of expectation. This should keep our hearts from sinking, and our tongues from censuring, when great designs stick, and come not to perfection. Let us remember there be thorns, scor- ^{Molestam et in-} pions in the way. ^{peditum cursum.} Pity and pray for the parliament, armies, magistrates, and ministers, who have difficult and dangerous work.

Obs. 3. Wonder not that men in place are injured in their credits, and wounded in their estates; they dwell among thorns and scorpions; the fleece and flesh suffer by them many times. Nehemiah is a rebel, Elijah a troubler of Israel, Christ an enemy to Cæsar, and Paul a seditious and pestilent fellow.

The Israelites could not go through the wilderness, without being stung with the fiery serpents. Daniel escaped the teeth of the lions in the den, but not the sting of the scorpions in the court. Men that go into the war, must not think to escape all bullets and blows. Magistrates and ministers are God's soldiers, they both bear the sword; Jer. i. 19, "They shall fight against thee," and it must not seem strange if they get wounds. When Adam and Manasses are among the bushes, can less be expected than wounds? It is the nature of wicked men to blast the name of others; they have learned and do practise the devil's or the Jesuits' doctrine, Reproach to purpose, and something will fasten.

But let the wicked black, God will white, wash the names of his servants. Daniel's innocency was cleared up to the king himself, Dan. vi. 22. Christ saith, "Woe to you, when all speak well of you!" Luke vi. He never saith, Woe to you when men speak ill of you! he is so far from that, that he fastens a blessing upon it; Matt. v. 11, "Blessed are you, when men speak all manner of evil of you falsely, for my sake." Basil saith, When men defame us we are sorry for them; else I should almost have said, we acknowledge thanks to them for their blasphemies, as procurers of our bliss. It is honour to be reviled of the wicked, their calumination is our commendation: then a man shows himself a man of God and for God, when he displeases those who please not God. Seneca could see on which side right was, when he said, Argumentum est recti malis displicere, The displeasure of the wicked is a testimony to the truth.

Obs. 4. Seek not the acquaintance of wicked men. The prophet Micah will give you reason for it, chap. vii. 4, "The best of them is a brier; the most upright is sharper than a thorn hedge." You think some of them are fair men, have good natures, good parts, great places; and you may be intimate with them, lean upon them, and get good by them, if not do good to them: but you are deceived; saith he, "the best of them," for wit, parts, birth, breeding, place, "is a brier;" yea, "the most upright," those that are civil, that have a form of godliness, and walk according to their light, even they "are sharper than a thorn hedge." And because it is incident to the nature of man to mind great ones, and seek their acquaintance; he speaks, in the verse before, of princes, judges, and great men, and beats men off from looking after and leaning upon them. The sheep run to the hedge for shade in the heat, and shelter in the storm; but what is the issue? If they escape with their lives, yet they go off with rent garments. And if the best of them be briers, what are the worst of them?

What shall you, what can you have from a scorpion, but aculeum, stings, venenum (Gall of palm insubabur-fer. Sempiternam, scipe vitam perditum. When one commended Julian the cardinal to Sigismund the emperor, he answered, Iamen Romanus est. And so when any wicked man is commended to you, answer, Iamen sentis est.

When David was become a courtier, he met with a spear, and found Saul sharper than a thorn hedge. His spirit was vexed with him, and no marvel; wicked men vex the Spirit of God, who hath more patience and wisdom than men, who is without all corruption, and altogether holy, yet his Spirit is vexed with them, Isa. lxiii. 10. Therefore the Spirit of God counsels us what acquaintance to seek; Job xxii. 21, "Acquaint thyself with God, and be at peace; and thy quiet good shall come unto thee:" he will not be a brier or thorn to run into thy hand; he will not vex thy spirit; trust him, he will not deceive or disappoint thee.

Obs. 5. See what fruit to look for from them; fruits suitable to their nature. 1 Sam. xxiv. 13,

"Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked;" it is a proverb, and they have much truth and strength in them; and it was ancient then, and in all ages hath been made good, observed, that wickedness comes from the wicked. By it David clears himself, taxes his malicious enemies, and confutes Saul himself. As for me, I am accused to be a seditious and traitorous fellow, a man that seeks thy life, O Saul; thou hast followers and flatterers about thee to exasperate thee against me, that put thee on to hunt me as a partridge on the mountain, and to spill my blood; but I am no such man as they pretend, and thou conceivest. I had thee at advantage, was counselled to take away thy life, and could have done it; but wickedness was not in me; I cut off the lap of thy coat when I could have cut off thy head. I will make thee judge who is the wicked man, those that accuse me, thou that pursuest the soul of an innocent man, or myself, that have spared thee, having such advantage. Wickedness proceeds from the wicked; if I had been a wicked subject, as thou and others thought, thy life had gone: but thy courtiers, thy counsellors, are wicked; yea, and thou art wicked, and nothing but wickedness comes from you; and that proceeds as light from the sun, water from the fountain, breath from the nostrils. Christ tells us; we must not look for good from them, Matt. vii. 16, "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" If you look for such fruit, you will be deceived; they may grow green as the vine and fig tree, but their fruit is different. What fruit have papists and prelatical ones brought forth in church or state these many years? Corrupt trees cannot bear good fruit: briers, thorns, brambles, may bring fruit for Gadarenes and swine, not for Christ and his disciples. Judg. ix. the olive tree had its fatness, the fig tree its sweetness and good fruit, the vine its pleasant wine; (they would not leave their places for promotion: for usually when men are promoted, they lose of their excellency; the olive trees, fig trees, vines, they lose of their fatness, if not all their fatness, of their sweetness, if not all their sweetness;) but what had the bramble? Fire, and fire to consume the cedars of Lebanon. Brambles are of an aspiring nature, and when they are got up, they fire states and kingdoms.

Obs. 6. Then it is no great loss when wicked men are taken away. When briers and thorns are cut down, and scorpions killed, who is a sufferer by it? Wicked men are the very plagues of the earth, they suck away the sweet ^{Spinae sunt pestes terrae et linguam nostram. Plin.} from the vine, the fat from the olive. It was said of Nero, that he was venenum terrae, the poison of the earth; and when that pitcher was broken, it was gain, not loss, matter for praise, not mourning. The husbandman is not grieved when the grievous thorn and pricking thistle are cut out of his corn. Prov. xi. 10, "When the wicked perish, there is shouting;" shouting on earth, that justice is done, his wickedness at an end, the church and state eased of such a burden, rid of such a thorn; and shouting in hell, Isa. xiv. 9. When Jehoiakim died, there was no lamentation made for him; he was a wicked and worthless king, his carcass was no better than the body of an ass, and he had the burial of an ass, drawn and cast out in the highway or ditches, Jer. xxii. 18, 19; he had an infamous burial. And such, saith Olympiodorus, is the end of every magistrate or minister that teaches and governs well, but lives ill, his end is infamous, he is buried in infamy. But godly men are of great worth; Heb. xi. 38, "The world was not worthy of them;" those precious ones mentioned there, and those who are living now, God valued, and values above the world. Godly men are the pillars of the earth; they are the marrow, blood, and soul of the world; the world languishes and lies dying when they are pulled away. Moses held God's hands, Exod. xxxii. 10. Moses is a man that hath power in earth and in heaven; he is a man that, when there is a danger, can go up to the heavens, and so put the Lord to it, that he saith, Let me alone, that I may destroy this wicked people, and I will make thee a great nation; he would have hired him to come to an accommodation. Men are now upon accommodating, but a Moses will not accommodate; no, not with God himself, when his people are in danger; but he will have a blessing upon good terms, he will have God's wrath removed, and a reconciliation between heaven and earth, or else Moses will never be quiet with God. What a loss is such a man! After his death, if God had not raised up a Joshua, what had become of Israel? When Elijah was taken away, the horsemen and chariots of Israel went.

Obs. 7. See here a ground why we are so wary in having peace with our adversaries. There is much ado about peace; we all say, Peace, but give us leave to be wary when we make a peace, when we dwell among thorns and scorpions. Thorns have their prickles and grievances, scorpions have their stings, and we are unwilling to be stung; we would not have our consciences, our liberties stung; we would not have our privileges plucked from us, and all be in danger; we are unwilling to come to this. When Scotland had made peace with England, Flanders, and the Easterlings, it was said, they had peace with the world; but their prelates made war with God; so we may have peace with men, but there are those amongst us, who, if we look not to it, will make war with God, with the Lamb, and those that follow him. It is reported of the Spaniards, that they had peace with all the world, but were out with God. If we make such a peace, as to have peace with men, and to be out with God, this would be a cursed peace. If wicked men will lay aside their stings and subtilties; be Nathanaels, and not Ahithophels; doves, and not serpents, we would willingly embrace a peace. We have on the shoes of the gospel of the preparation of peace.

Obs. 8. Seeing wicked men are thorns and scorpions, let those in authority look to it, and do their duty, that the briars and thorns grow not too high, nor too great; that scorpions do not abound. It is said there were nine kinds of scorpions about Jerusalem and Syria, and very great ones; and twenty kinds of thorns also. I fear we have all those kinds

σκorpionος εὐδία.

The Greeks have a proverb. There is a scorpion under every stone. And where almost can a man go among us, but there are scorpions, thorns and briars, scratching, catching, and doing a mischief? Let magistrates tread upon those scorpions, and ministers hew those thorns, Psal. xci. 13; Hos. vi. 5. Let ministers do as Chrysostom did, who would have his hand cut off, before he would suffer scorpions and thorns to come to the table of the Lord, to poison that wine and bread, and to prick the sheep that came to feed there. Magistrates likewise should do what lies in them, that neither the scorpions nor briars do mischief the sheep. You may find scorpions in more places than one; in your courts, markets, shops, fields, ale-houses. If you drive them not out of their holes, they will be "pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your sides, and vex you in the land wherein you dwell," Numb. xxxiii. 55. You may make oil of these scorpions, and meat of these Leviathans. Pliny and others observe, that if you burn one scorpion in the midst of the house, all the rest will fly away. If authority would execute justice upon some of our scorpions, cut down some of our thorns, the rest would fly away. We are so fearful and backward herein, that we let scorpions multiply, thorns and brambles increase, not only till our fleeces be scratched from us, but our flesh stung about us, our liberties and lives endangered. We will not see where our sore is, nor search to the bottom of it; and because we will not do it, God may justly send fiery serpents to sting us, and afford no brazen serpent to cure us. For your encouragement to deal with these, consider Psal. cxviii. 12; 2 Sam. xxiii. 6; and Ezek. xxviii. 24, where it is said, "There shall be no more a pricking brier, or grieving thorn unto the house of Israel; and they shall know that I am the Lord God."

Another principal observation is. That we must not be afraid of men, whatever they be; especially those who are called to public place, as ministers and magistrates. Christ calls Ezekiel to public service, and four times he is forbidden to fear in this verse, "Be not afraid of them," that is, their frowns, be they great ones, kings, princes, nobles, or whomsoever; be not "afraid of their words," though stormy, grievous, stout, contradictory, &c.; because words do stick and strike deep oftentimes, it is repeated again, "Be not afraid of their words," let them not affect thee, "nor be dismayed at their looks." The Hebrew word תמה signifies to be amazed, dejected, discouraged, and hindered in one's way; but the prophet must not be amazed, or discouraged, with whatever he hears, sees, or meets with.

To give some few reasons concerning this, and some helps whereby to fortify our spirits, that we may not be fearful, having to do with scorpions and thorns:

1. Fears are prejudicial; they take away our liberty; they put halters about our necks, and strangle our comforts; they multiply and prolong our miseries; they wound and disable us. The word is to be done bene, libere, intrepide, well, freely, boldly; if we fear, that will fetter, enfeeble, and make us bungle. Isa. xxii. 2, they were slain, not with the sword, but with fears. Fear slays a man while he is alive; fear buries a man before he is dead; fears are prejudicial to those that are in public place.

Tuus timor tibi
est Nero, tua
tentatio tibi est
Julianus.

2. They are to be men of courage who are in public place. Exod. xviii. 21. Moses was to provide able men to be magistrates and rulers; the original is, men of strength and courage. The word signifies virtue, strength, a bulwark, riches, an army, all which do increase courage: so that a magistrate should have the courage of all these; of the virtuous, of the strong, of one in a bulwark, of the rich, of an army. He is to be a man of might: Dan. iii. 20, "He commanded the most mighty men;" it is the same word; the men of most courage, that were of mighty courage, "to bind Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego." Those God puts into public places are to be such. Josh. i. 9, "Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed." Where courage is required, fear is prohibited; and where fear is prohibited, as in our text, there courage is employed. "Should such a man as I flee?" fear? said Nehemiah, chap. vi. 11. No, I will not fear nor flee, but be courageous, and stand it out against Sanballat and the rest, their power, their scoffs, their threats, their plots. Magistrates, ministers, and all God's people, should be men of courage, when reformation and temple work are in hand. Hag. ii. 4, "Be strong, O Zerubbabel; and be strong, O Joshua; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work." The work of reformation, and of the temple, will not go on if you faint and flag. Samuel was a man of courage, when he told Saul, entreating him to return with him, that he might worship, but he would not return with him. For, thou hast rejected God, and God hath rejected thee from being king; and thinkest thou that I will countenance thee? 1 Sam. xv. 25, 26. So Elijah was no timid prophet, but a man of courage: 1 Kings xviii. 15—19, "As the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand," speaking to Obadiah, "I will surely show myself to Ahab this day." But Jezebel hath vowed thy death, and Ahab makes search for thee all the land over, and if thou be found, thou art a dead man. Well, saith Elijah, I will show myself. And when he came into his presence, what a salute had he! "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" I will have thee despatched one way or other. Is the prophet daunted now? No, but replies, I am not he, but it is thou and thy father's house. Send and gather to me all Israel: (what a commanding, what a suspicious word was this! he might have thought that this man would get power about him, and offer violence to him and his house;) thou thinkest to have my blood, but I will have the blood of all the false prophets, &c. Who might not think that Elijah rather was king than Ahab? 2 Chron. xxvi. 17, 18, when king Uzziah would have burnt incense to the Lord, the priest resisted Uzziah, and thrust him out of the temple. They that are in public place, are to be men of courage, and therefore they must not fear.

3. God is with his, those he calls and employs in public service. Josh. i. 9, why should he be strong, and of good courage? "for the Lord thy God is with thee." Jer. i. 8, "Be not afraid of their faces; for I am with thee to deliver thee." God's presence should put life into us. When inferior natures are backed with a superior, they are full of courage: when the master is by, the dog will venture upon creatures greater than himself, and fear not; at another time he will not do it, when his master is absent. When God is with us, who is the supreme, it should make us fearless. It did David; Psal. cxviii. 6, "The Lord is on my side," my help; "I will not fear: what can man do unto me." Let him do his worst, frown, threat, plot, arm, strike: the Lord is on my side, he hath a special care of me, he is a shield unto me, I will not fear, but hope: as it is in the next verse, "I shall see my desire on them that hate me," I shall see them changed or ruined. Our help is in the name of the Lord, but our fears are in the name of man. God takes special care of men in public place. The angels of the church are like the stars in his right hand, Rev. i. 16, he holds them fast; and it is said of Christ, Isa. xlix. 2, that he was hid "in the shadow of his hand;" in the protection of his hand, is the Septuagint, Umbra est symbolum protectionis, The shadow is the symbol of protection, it defends from the heat of the sun, that was in Judea exceeding hot: God hides Christ, yea, all that are eminent, and under, who belong to him, in a special manner, and delivers them from danger. Zech. ii. 5, I will be unto Jerusalem "a wall of fire round about;" who shall dare to come near it then, to hurt the magistrates, ministers, or people there? Some think it alludes to the cherubin, that with a fiery flaming sword kept paradise; others, to the fiery chariots round about Dothan, 2 Kings vi. 17, where Elisha was: either of these is good, and notes protection. But there is another, and it may be a more suitable interpretation; and it is this: When they travelled in the wilderness, oft wild beasts would be assailing them, especially in the night, when they laid down to rest; then they made a circular fire about them, and so no beast, lion, wolf, or leopard dare meddle with them, the fire was a wall to them: and hence the expression seems to be taken, that God, when wild beasts, wicked men, should offer violence to Jerusalem, he would be a wall of fire round about it.

4. Those who are in public place, are in God's place; "I have said, Ye are gods," Psal. lxxxii. 6. Moses was to Aaron instead of God, Exod. iv. 16. And so ministers, they are in Christ's stead, 2 Cor. v. 20; and they must be like unto God, fearless of men, but dreadful unto men. It is an ill thing to see a drunken god, to hear a swearing god; and it is as ill to see a trembling, fearful god, a magistrate, a minister, afraid of man, whereas they, having the image and authority of God stamped upon them, are to make others, especially sinners, to quake. Rom. xiii. 4, the apostle bids evil-doers, not the powers, be afraid. Why? they are the ministers of God, and bear not the sword in vain; they must not fear, but make others do it. So did the apostles and prophets; John made Herod quake, and Paul made Felix tremble: here were lambs scaring lions.

5. They that are godly, true christians, their godliness, their cause suffers by their fearfulness. They have received another spirit than that of the world, 1 Cor. ii. 12, even the Spirit of God, which is no timorous, cowardly Spirit: the apostle denies that, 2 Tim. i. 7, "God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, of love, and a sound mind." Where there is a base fear, there is sickness of mind, no soundness; and there is little love, and less power. Those that have the Spirit of Christ, and the Spirit of God, it is not for them to fear. Have you the Spirit of the Lord of hosts in you? have you the Spirit of Jesus Christ in you? and will you fear and tremble before men, that have the spirit of devils in them? The Spirit of the Lord of hosts is like himself, and the Spirit of Jesus Christ is like Christ himself: he was not afraid of any. If therefore men in place have this Spirit, they must not fear, for they do dishonour christianity, and the Spirit they have received from their Lord and Master Jesus Christ.

6. There is not that in wicked men, that should make us to fear them, if we consider they are briars, thorns, scorpions, contemptible things, rather to be despised than feared. If they had truth, grace, and God with them, then they might be feared: they have not God with them, they are a rebellious house, and he is against them. They cannot pray to fetch in might to make them dreadful: if they say a prayer, "the prayer of the wicked is abomination to the Lord." They are full of fears themselves, and have no true valour in them; that arises from other and better principles than they have. If they had truth of grace, God with them, then we might fear them; but their guilt, their wickedness doth weaken them, and multiply their fears. Can wicked men be without fears? Isa. viii. 12, "Fear ye not their fear:" they have a slavish, distracting, heart-smiting, tormenting, bellish fear. Saul feared the people, 1 Sam. xv. 24. Is there not a spirit of fear upon many in Ireland and England too? Have not judges feared the courts they have sat in?

7. God will dismay and confound us, if we fear men. Jer. i. 17, "Be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them," or break thee in pieces. Jeremiah, saith God, if thou dost fear them, and betray the truth I have committed to thee, I will forsake thee, leave thee to their hands, malice, cruelty, and break thee to pieces before their faces. Fearfulness doth much provoke God. He that sees not sufficiency in God to support him, shall find enough to daunt and confound him; but if we go on with courage, discharge the place and trust committed to us, if we should fall into the hands of wicked men, and suffer, God will own us, let out himself unto us, support us, sympathize with us, deliver us, or make us and our sufferings glorious. Stars shine in the night; they are obscured in the day. When Vincentius was tormented by the tyrant, he said, Thou shalt see me more courageous in suffering, than thyself in tormenting.

Some helps against fear.

1. Let your fear be exercised about God; he is an object fit to be feared. All flesh is grass, all nations are a drop of the bucket, and the small dust of the balance; inhabitants of the earth are as a swarm of flies, a troop of grasshoppers; and shall we fear these little things? The world is nothing unto God; there is no greatness beside God himself. He hath made the world, he hath dried up the seas, he sends out the mighty winds, he changes times and seasons; he brings princes to nothing, makes judges vanity; he tumbles nations into hell, and can destroy the soul and body eternally. Him fear, saith Christ, Luke xii. 4, 5, not men, that can but kill the body; but fear him, who, after the body is dead, can kill the soul, and east into hell; I say unto you, fear him. And Isa. viii. 13, "Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, let him be your dread;" let there be such a frame of spirit in you as becomes the Lord of hosts, suitable to his greatness, his sovereignty and authority over you and all creatures; then you will not fear. When the fear of God is strong in your heart, then the fear of man ceaseth. When the dictator ruled at Rome, then all other officers ceased; and when this fear of God rules, all other fears will be hushed: and that is not all, if God be sanctified by us, he will be a sanctuary unto us.

Nihil magnum, nisi magnus Deus.

2. Set faith to work. Men in public places should have their hands at work on earth, and their faith in heaven. The just live by faith, and will not die by fear. Hezekiah, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 7, 8, when Sennacherib was coming against Jerusalem, and troubled the whole land, he set his hands to work to fortify the city, and his faith to fortify himself: "Be strong and courageous, be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria and his multitude; for there be more with us than be with him: with him is an arm of flesh; but with us is the Lord our God to help us, and to fight our battles." Here was an army of 185,000 to affright him; but here was faith in the Lord of hosts to establish him. Moses feared not "the wrath of the king; for he endured, as seeing him who is invisible," Heb. xi. 27: by faith he saw the invisible God, and that made him hold out against the king, though his wrath was hot, his looks fierce, his words terrible, his face cruel. Moses knew, that whatever he lost for God, he should find in God. Prov. xxix. 25, "The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe." Man's fear brings a snare, and so death. Had Moses feared Pharaoh, he had compounded with him, and so ruined himself and others: but he that puts his trust in the Lord shall be safe; the Hebrew is, set on high, like a bird upon the wing, that is, out of the reach of every snare and fowler, though never so cunning. Cardinal Borromaus being told of great danger from some who lay in wait for him, said, An Deus est in mundo pro nihilo? Is God idle in the world? and Johannes Silentarius, being in the like case, said, If God take not care of me, why do I live?

3. Labour for purity and holiness. The most holy men are the least fearing men. Paul was of great courage, he had much holiness, 1 Thess. ii. 10, and when the viper leaped upon his hand, he feared not; it could not kill him, but he could kill it; he shook it into the fire. Adam, at first no creature could harm him, because holy. In the lives of the fathers, mention is made of one Abbas Paulus, who handled serpents and scorpions, and cut them in pieces, without any hurt; and being asked how he came to this condition, said, If a man be holy, all things are subject to him, as to Adam before his sin in paradise. If our hearts and consciences be polluted, we shall fear, if not flee. 1 Sam. xviii. 12, Saul was afraid of David; he had great riches, many forces, yet fears David, a poor man, a banished, reproached man. And Herod feared John: he was a holy man; piety has great weight. Job xvii. 9, "The righteous shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger." "The righteous are bold as a lion," Prov. xxviii. 1. A man that is truly and thoroughly godly, that knows nothing by himself, that hath purged out every spot, and gotten off all guilt, and needs not blush at any thing, past or present, he is a lion, he is a brazen wall, nothing shall daunt him; but the wicked flee when none pursue. Nehemiah was a holy man, and he would not flee; but Manasseh, a wicked king, hides himself among the thorns, and Adam runs to the thickets; they had prickings without, and worse prickles within.

4. Value not life too much. Let us be willing to lay out our lives in God's service, to spend and be spent for God. Paul said, "I am ready not to be bound only, but to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus," Acts xxi. 13: he prized the name of Christ above his life; and if we would prize something above our lives, we should not so overrate them, as, through fear of man, to lose better things to keep them. The devil tells us, "Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life," Job ii. 4: true, all to save life. But there are some things of more worth than man's life; as, the glory of God, the favour of God, the peace of God, the truth of God, the name of Christ, &c.; and we should so account of them, and be ready to sacrifice our lives for them. Nehemiah would not go into the temple to save his life; he knew the glory of God, the cause, work, and people of God, should suffer by it, and therefore he would venture his life. So Basil, when threatened with cruel usage and death, said to him who had the power in his hand, This body thou art lord of only, not of our faith, or the cause we stand for; and whereas swords, wild beasts, cutting of our flesh, &c. are threatened, these things are rather pleasures than terrors to us; we look at better things than the world hath, for which we are not unwilling to lay out our lives. The worthies of those times "loved not their lives unto the death," they stood, bled, died for Christ and his cause, who had stood, bled, died for them, Rev. xii. 11. Another observation is, that it is the lot of the righteous to dwell amongst the wicked. The prophet here dwelt amongst scorpions, and was amidst briars and thorns, a sad habitation, yet such as is common to the saints. Lot dwelt in Sodom, and his righteous soul was vexed, 2 Pet. ii. 8; it was pained, tormented, as a man upon the rack. And David dwelt among those who were enemies to peace, and it made him cry out, "Woe is me, that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar!" Psal. cxx. 5: that is, with ungodly and barbarous people. And it is not the condition of some few, but the church itself, which is "as a hily among thorns," Cant. ii. 2. So was the church in Egypt, in Babylon, in the primitive times, amongst the persecuting emperors and their officers; so in the time of antichrist, and at this day, it is among thorns and scorpions; but here is the comfort of it, God takes notice thereof. The church of Pergamus dwelt where Satan's throne was; where he bare most sway, had most honour, a multitude of servants; where was great uncleanness, hot persecution, Rev. ii. 13: there did the church of Pergamus dwell: and what saith the text, "I know thy works, and where thou dwellest;" I know, that is, I take special notice of all thy works, wrongs, how the thorns do scratch, the scorpions sting thee, and I will reward thee for all. After mention being made of Lot's being vexed with the Sodomites, it is said, "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations;" he observes who they are among, how they are tempted, and knows ways of deliverance for them, and appears amongst them, 2 Pet. ii. 9.

Ver. 7. And thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear: for they are most rebellious.

There is nothing difficult in this verse; the words, "they are most rebellious," in the original are, they are rebellion, in the abstract; noting the strength and growth of their sin, of which hath been spoken in the 5th verse; only observe from hence:

1. That the messengers of God must speak the word of God. "Thou shalt speak my words unto them;" not thine own, not other men's, but my words. God's words are divine, verba vite et mortis, words of life and of death, and they must be spoken unto the people; not our chaffy, powerless words. Matt. xxviii. 20, "Teaching them to observe whatsoever I have commanded you;" they must speak only that, and all that, nothing must they dissemble or hide away.

2. That God cares not whether wicked, vile sinners hear or not. It is sufficient to him that they refuse offers of grace; that is enough to justify him, and condemn them; "whether they will hear or forbear," it matters not, I shall have my glory, and thou thy reward, whatever becomes of them. And God deals roundly with them. So Christ, in Mark xvi. 16, "He that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned;" yea, John iii. 18, "He that believeth not is condemned already." And when Christ sent out his disciples, see how quick and round he is with those who should not receive them and their word: "Whosoever shall not receive you and your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet," as a testimony against them, Matt. x. 14. "It shall be more easy for Sodom and Gomorrah than for that house or city," Mark vi. 11.

Ver. 8—10. But thou, son of man, hear what I say unto thee; Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee. And when I looked, behold, an hand was sent unto me; and, lo, a roll of a book was therein; and he spread it before me: and it was written within and without: and there was written therein lamentations, and mourning, and woe.

In these verses, besides Christ instructing of the prophet, you have his further confirmation in his prophetic office, and that by a visible sign, by which he conveys the gift of prophesying unto Ezekiel; and it is by "a roll of a book," concerning which we have these things considerable:

1. The efficient cause, or whence it came, "an hand was sent unto me."

2. The material cause, "a roll of a book."

3. The opening of it, it was "spread before me."

4. The contents of it, "lamentations, mourning, and woe."

But before we come to this roll, and the particulars of it, we must speak of Christ's instructions to the prophet, in the 8th verse, where we have,

First, an exhortation, "Son of man, hear what I say unto thee."

Secondly, a prohibition, "Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house."

Thirdly, a command, "Open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee."

The sum of the verse is this: Ezekiel, saith Christ, see thou hearken unto my voice; whatsoever I say to thee, let that be acceptable: regard not what men, what thy heart and carnal reason, say to thee; but remember I am God and King, I sit upon the throne, my counsels and words must stand. Be not thou rebellious as the Jews are: let not their example, power, relation to thee, make thee refuse to hear what I say, or to eat this visible and sacramental sign which I give thee.

There is nothing difficult in the verse to clear up unto you; only these words, "open thy mouth," you may think superfluous, and that the word "eat" had been enough: but there is nothing idle in the Scripture, all is of weight, and such weight, that heaven and earth shall pass away before one iota of God's word. It is a rule among the learned, Verba quæ videtur otiosa plurimum faciunt ad effectum, The word which seems least important gives the greatest force. It notes the ardent desire of Christ, that the prophet should have the benefit of this sacramental sign, and that he should be forward and ready unto it, do any thing that conduced that way.

Obs. 1. That those who are to teach others, must first hear and be taught themselves; they must hear Christ, and learn of him. Ezekiel must hear what Christ saith unto him, and then he would be fit to speak unto others. When the Lord Christ sent out his disciples, he instructed them first, Matt. x. So the apostles were taught forty days together in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, Acts i. 3; the institution of churches, the laws, government, ordinances, offices, and officers of them, they were instructed in. And John, in his first epistle, chap. i. 3, saith, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you." And so it was of the prophets, what they heard, that they spake: Heb. i. 1, "God spake unto the fathers by the prophets;" he first spake to the prophets, and in them to the fathers. The ministers and messengers of God must hear Christ first, and then declare his mind; be obedient unto his commands, and then mention and publish his will.

Obs. 2. God looks for more from them he calls to any service than from others. And "thou, son of man, be not thou rebellious;" I expect other things at thy hand; I look thou shouldst be as tractable as they have been untractable, as dutiful as they have been rebellious; you see who have been most active among them against me, I look thou shouldst be as active in thy place for me. Those God doth put honour upon, and set in public places, it is equal he should have much from, yea, more than from others. Paul says, The Lord Christ enabled me, counted me faithful, put me into the ministry, 1 Tim. i. 12; and, 1 Cor. xv. 10, "His grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all." God, who had done much for him, expected it at his hands; and he deceived not expectation.

Obs. 3. See here what God accounts rebellion. We think it must be some great, notorious thing that makes a rebel or rebellious; but there is great difference between the judgment of men and judgment of God. If Ezekiel should be difficult and backward to his work he called him unto, he would count it rebellion; if he would not hear and do what God bid him, he should be numbered among the rebellious. If he did not hear every thing that Christ spake, Quæcumque ad te loquar audi. Whatsoever things I shall speak to thee, hear thou; so the words are read by Calvin, and the original bears it; if there should be a crossing of God's will in any thing, in the least thing, in refusing to hear or do, it should be before him rebellion. Isa. i. 20, "If ye refuse and rebel:" refusing to hear God's will, and to do it, being heard, is rebellion against God. So in 1 Sam. xii. 15, "If ye will not obey the voice of the Lord, but rebel against the commandment:" not obeying God, whatever pretence we have, is rebellion.

Obs. 4. That we must not follow the examples and ways of sinful men. "Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house;" they have set an ill example before thee, do not thou imitate them; they have written a foul copy, write not after them; they have walked in wrong paths, do not trace their steps. Men usually are such as those they live with. It is easy to grow naught, if we live among those that are naught. Joseph learned to swear in Pharaoh's court, and Peter to judaize among the Jews. Consent and example of others, is like a mighty torrent that carries off all before it. Example is a potent thing; Gal. ii. 14, "Why compellest thou the gentiles to judaize?" Paul tells Peter, that there was a compulsory virtue and force in his example, to draw the gentiles into evil. And it is certain, the customs, traditions, persuasions, and examples of friends, are of much prevalency. That Christ foresaw, and arms the prophet against them: "Hear what I say," not what they say; let them say what they will, regard it not; only let my words have place in thee, and power with thee. But thou wilt object and say, They are my friends that persuade me; my kindred, my own flesh and blood, that counsel me; they are great ones, yea, all, prince and people, that go that way; they are my parents that command me to do so, and I may sin in refusing to hearken unto them. The Lord Christ takes off all these and other objections: Be not rebellious, as they have been, and are; but consider, are they friends, kindred, great, parents? and have they and theirs long been in that way? know, that I that speak to thee am thy Friend, and best Friend thou hast. I am thy Kinsman; I am here in the form of the Son of man, and to suffer in thy nature hereafter, that thou mayst be the son of God. I am thy Brother, who hath redeemed thee from sin, death, and hell. If others be great, I am greater than they, and my throne is above all thrones; if they be thy parents, I am thy "everlasting Father," Isa. ix. 6; and as I have had everlasting care of thee, so do give thee everlasting laws and rules of worship and godliness, in comparison of whose light and wisdom all men are darkness and folly. And what! will you prefer friends, kindred, great ones, parents, any before me? Be not rebellious like them, but hearken unto me, and let them go. Make no league with them that are wicked and rebellious, Exod. xxxiv. 12; do not imitate their worship, match not into their families, feast not at their tables, choose none of their ways, Prov. iii. 31; and, Rom. xii. 2, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind;" that is, do not make the manners of the world the rule of your life, nor the worship of the world the rule of your worship, but look higher. Let not your corrupt minds, that will carry you after a corrupt world, a corrupt worship, and corrupt manners, prevail with you; but receive new light from Christ and the gospel into your minds, and then you will be transformed, you will reject all old ways, old traditions and examples of men, and will be led by Christ, and live by his rules and laws. And thus we may be wiser than our forefathers and teachers. P'sal. cxix. 99, 100, "I have more understanding than all my teachers," saith David, and "I understand more than the ancients." And what was the ground of it? He made God's law and word his meditation and his rule. And those in these latter days, that have done so, have got more understanding than their teachers, and are wiser than the ancients that are for human inventions. It is laws, not examples, we must look to; and the lawyers have a rule very useful, Men must consider, not what is done, but what ought to be done.

Obs. 5. That it is the Lord's prerogative to appoint significant typical and sacramental signs. "Eat that I give thee:" that was the roll, which was sacramental, and signified the gift of prophecy. No man may lift up a creature to a higher spiritual excellency than what God has set it in by nature. What mortal had power to have put upon the brazen serpent a typicalness to represent Christ? who had power to make the rainbow a sign of the covenant between God and man? who could make the temple a type of Christ, but he that filled the temple with glory? and who can institute sacraments, ordinary or extraordinary, but God and Christ? In them always is a command and a promise of grace, which falls not within the compass of man's power.

Obs. 6. That the Lord Christ provides meat for his servants: "Eat that I give thee." Christ had prophetic meat for him, a roll to give him. It is from Christ that truths come. As a nurse prepares meat for the child, and puts it into the mouth of the child, so doth Christ here; he ever gives seed to his sowers; he furnisheth his servants with abilities; if they want books he will provide them.

Ver. 9. And when I looked, behold, an hand was sent unto me; and, lo, a roll of a book was therein.

Here we have the efficient instrumental and material cause to treat of. "A hand was sent unto me," sent from Christ. There could not be a hand without some author. He that sat upon the throne, and made all, he made, he sent this hand. No mention is made of any arm or body: a hand might write it, and reach it forth. In Belshazzar's sad vision, the fingers of a hand came forth, and wrote upon the plaster of the wall. Dan. v. 5; nothing but a hand appeared. Had there been no hand, the prophet might have doubted whence it came, taken it for some casual thing; but being reached out by a hand, it was evident to him it came from Heaven, even him that he saw so glorious, fell down before, and was comforted by.

The material cause is, "a roll of a book," ספר. The ancients at first wrote in barks of trees, afterwards in skins of beasts, which they call Pergamena, vellum, or parchment, supposing them to be invented at Pergamus, by king Attalus, where was a famous library of parchments and manuscripts; but rolls of vellum or parchment were before that time. Ezekiel's vision was long before the Roman monarchy; Attalus lived when that flourished, and having no issue, made the Roman state heir to his crown; but rolls were in Isaiah's days, chap. viii. 1, "Take thee a great roll;" yea, in David's days, Psal. xl. 7, "In the volume of thy book," בגמלתו in the roll of thy book. They are very ancient, and called rolls from the rolling them up about cedar, or some precious wood, that they might be the better preserved. The law and prophets were written in such rolls, and when they unrolled them, the Jewish doctors used to expound them, as is gathered from that place, Luke iv. 17. These rolls are in practice to this day in the Jewish synagoge; and they have their תורה or law written in one volume, and rolled up, as Marcus observes on the 5th of the Revelation. Kings have their courts of rolls. And there is nothing ancient in the courts and libraries of princes, in their treasury of monuments, but is written in rolls or volumes.

For the signification of this roll, some make it to signify the secret counsels of God. It is true, they were written in it, but not signified by it. The roll here is symbolum prophetiarum, a typical sign of the gift of prophecy to be given to the prophet, and in that sense we are to take it.

Obs. 1. That the Lord Christ doth at his pleasure put forth creative and infinite virtue to effect what he speaks. "Eat that I give thee;" and presently a hand is created, a roll is presented unto the prophet, which none could have done being destitute of divine power. Christ hath a hand in readiness always to do what he will have done. He hath sometimes a visible hand to do it, as here; sometimes an invisible. When he called Lazarus forth from the grave, he had a hand invisible to effect it; when he bid the dead to hear, the dumb to speak, the lame to walk, devils to depart their habitation, he had an invisible hand that effected those things. So in Acts xi. 20, 21, when some of the brethren had preached the Lord Christ, and faith in him, it is said presently, "The hand of the Lord was with them, and a great number believed;" there was a secret hand of divine power effecting that in their hearts, which the disciples preached in their ears. And Acts iv. 30, Christ hath a hand to stretch forth, and to heal; to heal soul diseases, and bodily too; to heal state and church diseases. The leper said to Christ, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. And Jesus put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will: be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed," Matt. viii. 2, 3. If we would look to Christ as this leper did, we might find and feel the hand of Christ.

Obs. 2. That the Lord doth oftentimes extraordinary things for the encouragement and confirmation of his servants in their function. Here is a hand and a roll reached out to Ezekiel. Jeremiah is fearful and backward to the work of God, and God, to encourage and establish him, puts forth his hand, and toucheth his mouth, Jer. i. 9. Moses is doubting, and pleading with God to dismiss him; but by the miracles of the rod, and of the leprous hand, he is confirmed in his call to that great and hard service, Exod. iv. Isaiah's lips are touched with a coal from the altar in the hand of a seraphim, his iniquity is purged, and so he is heartened to his work, Isa. vi. Christ breathed upon his apostles, and said, "Receive the Holy Ghost," John xx. 22; by these extraordinary things they were consecrated to and confirmed in their offices.

Obs. 3. That there is a near conjunction and sweet analogy between the symbols the Lord Christ useth, and the things intended. Christ intends here the gift of prophecy, to confirm that upon Ezekiel. Now what is the external sign or symbol? It is a book written full of prophetic things, and so did fitly resemble the thing intended. In all the symbols that God had used in the Old and New Testament in a sacramental way, there have been fit analogies between them and the thing signified by them. Circumcision, the paschal lamb, water in baptism, bread and wine in the supper of the Lord, do set out the manifold wisdom of God and Christ in accommodating symbols so near to the truth, and holding it forth so lively; and the wisdom of Christ appeared in conveying the gift of prophecy by "a roll of a book." From this example of Christ, giving a roll to Ezekiel, some conceive, springs that custom in the universities, at the creation of doctors,—it is done by reaching them out a book; but how warrantable, I leave to judgment. They that do it, may give them rolumen, but not rem voluminis, the volume, but not its power. If they had given them the gift of prophecy, we should never have had so many unpreaching doctors and prelates.

Obs. 4. That the gift of prophecy is from Christ. He reached out a hand, and gave the roll of a book. He is the great Prophet, and hath all prophecy and prophetic power in himself; and whom he pleaseth he can make a prophet, and inspire with prophetic virtue, and where he pleases, even in Babylon as well as in Canaan.

Ver. 10. And he spread it before me; and it was written within and without; and there was written therein lamentations, and mourning, and woe.

In this verse you have the opening of the roll, the fulness and contents of it. "He spread it before me," that is, unrolled it, and laid it open before me. The word in the original signifies to expound and interpret; and we may conceive that Christ did not only spread the roll before his eyes, but caused him to understand it; by this spreading, he saw it was written within and without; but by Christ's interpretation of it, he knew that there were written in it, "lamentations, mourning, and woe."

Greg.

"It was written within and without." The Hebrew is, in the face and in the back; that is, on both sides. Lavater thinks, that on one side were written their sins, and on the other God's judgments. This fulness of the roll intimates, either the length of the prophecy, as Vatablus conceives, or a multitude of evils hanging over the heads of the Jews, as Maldonate thinks, or the abundance of revelations committed to the prophet, as Junius; not what Jerom and Bellarmine conceit, that the writing within and without should note the literal and mystical sense of the Scripture.

"Lamentations, mourning, and woe." Here are the contents of the roll, bitter and sad things; the burning of the temple, the overthrow of Jerusalem, the captivity of the Jewish nation, and all the evil which should befall them. The word kinim, lamentation, noteth a plain complaint, a sad speech, testifying the sorrows of mind; as David in the case of Absalom, "O Absalom, Absalom," &c.; this was a natural complaint, and simple lamentation, suddenly breaking forth, without all premeditation.

Amara et mœsta.

Mourning is more, it is deeper, and upon consideration. The word in the Hebrew is from נהגה to meditate, and noteth the deepest sigh. When one hath mused much and seriously upon the cause and matter of grief, and then fetcheth deep sighs, such as are indicative of intense and bitter sorrows, that is the mourning here. Isa. xxxviii. 14, "I did mourn like a dove;" the Hebrew is, I will meditate, noting mourning that comes from meditation; the dove's mourning is inward. Cranes chatter and lament, doves mourn.

"Woe." This word און noteth not only the voice in lamentations and groans in mourning, but knocking of the breast, and clapping of the hands together, as is used in great afflictions: thus some interpreters understand it; but I conceive by "woe" here, is meant the threatenings of judgment, or judgments threatened, according to those woes in Matt. xxiii. and the fruit of them, as it is, Lam. v. 16.

Obs. 1. That divine mysteries are unknown to men, though very easy and familiar, till they be unfolded. This roll could the prophet never have comprehended the meaning of, if Christ had not opened it. Take all the types and ceremonies of the law, there were mysteries wrapped up in them, which neither Aaron nor Moses had known, if they had been left to their own abilities. Those elements used in baptism and the supper of the Lord, we should never have known the mysteries of them, if Heaven had not helped us. Would we think the rainbow an emblem of mercy, if Scripture had not held it out to us? Indians, heathens, do not, cannot so apprehend it. Take any divine mysteries, they are too transcendent for our capacities, there are depths in them that we cannot fathom: 2 Cor. ii. 14, the natural man cannot know the things of God, they are spiritually discerned; there must be a great mystery wrought in him before he can discern mysteries.

Obs. 2. It is the Lord Christ that opens and interprets mystical things efficaciously unto the faithful. He spread the roll before Ezekiel, and made him to understand the mysteries of it. What are the Scriptures but a roll folded up, a book sealed till Christ open it? We may all say as the eunuch, being demanded what he read, said, "How can I, except some man guide me?" Acts viii. 30, 31. So, unless Christ guide us, and lead us into the mysteries of the word, we cannot understand them. When none could open the book sealed up, "the Lion of the tribe of Judah" could do it, Rev. v. 5. He hath strength to untie all knots, and a Spirit to search all deeps. Christ himself is the greatest mystery, and he is the great opener of mysteries: "All things are delivered to me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Father, save the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him," Matt. xi. 27. If ever God be made known savingly to the soul, it must be by the Lord Christ; and he doth not reveal unto all, but to whomsoever he will, to his elect ones; from others he conceals him; they have the letter, the roll, but not the mystery thereof; their light is darkness. But there are some in the world, that Christ doth interpret the riddles and dark things of the Scripture unto: see that place in John xv. 15, "Henceforth," saith Christ, "I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." These were Christ's friends, Christ revealed all to them, but from others all was kept. It was Christ revealed unto the prophets what they had, and to the apostles what they had. The Scripture may well be called the Revelation of Christ. You have one book called so; Rev. i. 1, "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants," that is, his faithful ones. If we would therefore understand the roll of the book, the mysteries in the Scripture, we must look up to Christ, and entreat him to spread them before our eyes, and to interpret them to our hearts.

Obs. 3. That the servants of God must not refuse to receive and propound large and sad messages to the people. Here is a "roll, written within and without," and filled with "lamentation, and mourning, and woe." Here was liber mortis, a book of death, and deadly things; this the prophet must receive, and declare to the people, however they take it. People would gladly hear from the men of God good tidings; they would have a law of kindness in our lips, our mouths to drop honey; they would have us sons of consolation: but we must speak what our great Lord and Master puts into the roll; if he bid us preach "lamentation, mourning, and woe," we must do it.

Obs. 4. That the Lord gives to his prophets truths suitable to his providence. Here is a roll, full of "lamentation, mourning, and woe;" sad things, and such things the Lord was bringing upon them. There is a sweet analogy between God's word and works; his works are his word fulfilled: Psal. cxlviii. 8, "Fire and hail, snow and vapours, stormy wind; fulfilling his word." When there is thunder and lightning, snows, rains, and winds, these are fulfillings of God's word: no providences do cross his word, but all perform it. God's works are the best commentaries upon his word; and had we the wisdom to bring his word and works together, we should see a sweet harmony between them. This roll given to the prophet, and God's proceedings with the Jews after, were proportionable, they felt what here was written. All that is done in the world now, is the fulfilling of what was written. When God gave John his Revelation, he laid in truths to suit with his providence and works to the end of the world. It is liber Providentialis, the book of Providence, and many things in it are acting in our days, and before our eyes, though we discern it not: there are truths for these times, and it is their advantage that can take them up.

Obs. 5. That dreadful things hang over the head of a sinful, guilty nation.

CHAPTER III.

Ver. 1—3. Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel. So I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat that roll. And he said unto me, Son of man, cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee. Then did I eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.

THESE words, and to the end of the 15th verse, by some expositors, are made part of the second chapter; and when the division of chapters was made, (about four hundred and fifty-seven years since,) it had been more suitable to have ended the second chapter at the 4th or 15th verse of this chapter, than where it is: but we will take it as we find it. In the chapter you have,

I. A further narration of Ezekiel's call, to the 12th verse.

II. A declaration of what befell him thereupon, from the 12th to the 16th.

III. A new revelation, with the events following it, unto the end of the chapter.

In the first part of the chapter you have two things :

The first is the continuance of Christ's speech, and the prophet's actions about the sacramental sign, viz. the roll.

Secondly, a renewal of his sending to prophesy, which is from the 4th verse to the 11th.

In these verses there is little that needs explaining. That which hath most difficulty in it, is the "eating of the roll." What eating is here meant? How could the prophet eat a great roll (a thing not credible) without prejudice of his health, life, or both?

Ans. w. He that commanded him to eat, could have prevented all danger and prejudice, if the eating had been corporal and literal. But it is conceived here, that the eating was not literal, but spiritual, or in vision; and that in the 10th verse of the chapter confirms us in it, where it is said, "All my words that I shall speak unto thee, receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears:" this was the eating, to hear, meditate, and believe. His journey was spiritual, his work was spiritual; he was to go and prophesy, and such was his meat, spiritual meat, and spiritually eaten.

But why is he bid to eat the roll? had not seeing and reading been more suitable? Look on it, read it; why is the mouth brought in rather than the eye or ear?

Ans. w. The Scripture doth attribute excellency to, and place natural and supernatural virtue in, that organ or sense by which it is exercised. Gen. ii. 7, "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life:" the meaning is, he put a soul into him. The nostrils are not the seat of the soul; but because the breath in the nostrils doth manifest the presence of the soul in man, and discovers it, therefore it is said, "He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." And so here, Ezekiel is said to "eat the roll;" not to see or hear it, because by the mouth the gift of prophecy which was given him by the roll was to be manifested and discovered to the people.

"Cause thy belly to eat." Could his, or can any man's belly eat? This seems a strange speech: but take it thus; eating is taken in Scripture, not only for chewing, but for all the actions belonging to meat, as concoction and consumption of it; and the Hebrew word אכל signifies to eat, to dissolve, to consume; and so the sword and fire in Scripture are said to eat, that is, to dissolve, and to destroy. The meaning then is, do thou by this roll, as the stomach and belly do by meat, when they get good thereby: the one doth not presently reject, nor the other transmit, but they retain the meat, draw out all the virtue, concoct it, live and work in the strength of it: so here, "let thy belly eat," that is, concoct, digest the truths thou hearest, by serious meditation, and by faith: do not like those that have weak and sickly stomachs, that quickly return what they receive, and get no benefit thereby; but do thou take in all the arguments and truths of this roll; do thou so concoct and consume them by the stomach and belly of meditation and faith, that they may become thy nutriment, and thou mayst feel the power and efficacy of them in thy heart, and act accordingly.

Obs. 1. That our obedience unto Christ must be absolute and simple. "Eat that thou findest," saith Christ, whatever thou findest. There might something unsavoury, bitter, have been tendered to the prophet, even that which nature abhors; however, he must eat it, not dispute the ease, but yield obedience. When Christ commands, entire obedience is the best, to do it up on that ground, and no other; here the commandet's will is warrant for the fact. Luke v. 5, this prevailed with Peter, "Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing; nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net." Christ's word was all unto him; he looked not at his labour lost, at his gain to come, but at the word of Christ, and that was warrant enough to him. So other apostles, when Christ called them, and bid them follow him, "they left all, and straightway followed him;" they consulted not with flesh and blood, they made no objections, chose not what they would themselves, but submitted to Christ's will. Abraham left his country at God's call, and knew not whither he should go, and this was true obedience. With men we must not be so tractable, as to do things merely upon their wills and commands: they are no gods, their wills and power are no rules. They may sin; we must give account; and therefore may and must examine, "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." Human things it is our duty, it is wisdom and safety, to question, and search into; but divine things are without dispute to be believed and obeyed. Therefore saith Christ, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." John xv. 14; then we show the greatest love to Christ, when we give him absolute obedience.

Obs. 2. That the symbols and truths which Christ gives, are the meat that the souls of prophets and ministers must feed upon. "Eat what thou findest;" "eat this roll." It is this, emphatically; other rolls and books they may look into, but this they must eat. The book of Christ is the book of their studies. Many scholars study other books more than the Scriptures, than the rolls of Christ; they are helvones librorum, book-eaters; fathers, schoolmen, historians, poets, and pamphlets, they devour, and are least acquainted with the Scriptures; but Christ's command is to eat this roll, search the Scriptures, meditate in the law night and day; he sends us to no other. A young disciple asking an old rabbi whether he might not have time to learn the Greek tongue, he said, if he would do it neither by night nor by day he might, because by night and day he was to study the law: hereby he intimated that scholars' greatest study should be in the word of God. Paul therefore exhorts Timothy to give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine; he bids him "meditate upon these things, give himself wholly to them," 1 Tim. iv. 15; his whole strength and time should be in them. Man's life is short; and if it were never so long, it should be spent in the knowledge of the holy Scriptures. When Paul was at the gates of death, 2 Tim. iv. 6, 13, you find he sends for the books and parchments: Paul would study them over again. It is said of Ambrose, that to his death he ceased not to write commentaries, and expound Scriptures, and died at that in the psalm, "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised." This book they must eat, read, study, with great diligence, and make it their own. Alphonso, king of Aragon, read over the Scriptures some twelve or fourteen times, notwithstanding his great public employments; and one of note read over the New Testament with Beza's larger notes, sixteen times in three years. The Scriptures are Heaven's epistles sent to men; they cannot be read too often, being full of divine mysteries.

Omnia enim minima plena sunt sensu, mysterio et spiritu. Bas. Hom. 6.

Obs. 3. That when ministers and messengers of God have eaten and digested the truths of God, then they are fit to go and preach them to the people of God. "Eat this roll, and go;" first eat, then go. Elijah must eat, and then take his journey; and so ministers must first eat themselves, then feed others. If the nurse herself do not eat, she will have no milk for her child; if she eat and do not digest, turn it into blood and milk, all is in vain; so the messengers of God must turn what they eat, what they read, in succum et sanguinem, into nourishment; and then, being their own, in their hearts and bowels, they will speak from the heart.

Obs. 4. That faith is requisite to the receipt of spiritual things: he opened his mouth, and ate the roll, he received the truths and believed. Look, how necessary a mouth is to take in the meat of the body, to chew it, and send it down to the other parts, else there is no benefit comes to a man by it; so necessary is faith to take in the spiritual food of the soul. Faith is the mouth and stomach of the soul; if that receive in truths, digest and send them to the organs of actions, benefit accrues to the man; if not, prejudice. John vi. 35, 36, Christ tells them that he is the "bread of life," that he that comes to him shall "never hunger," and that he that believes on him shall "never thirst," but "ye have seen me and believe not." Though Christ were bread and water of life, because they had no faith, no mouth to eat and drink thereof, therefore they had no benefit; and as a man that can receive no food must die: so here, John viii. 24, "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins;" here is prejudice irreparable, death eternal, for want of faith. Our prophet received the fruits Christ tendered, and got by them. All believers are or may be gainers by the truths of Christ: 1 Thess. ii. 13, "The word wrought effectually in them that believed." Faith makes good concoction of that meat, and answerable operation; but, Heb. iv. 2, "The word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." Where there is no faith to receive into the soul, there is no profit: the ear may set it into the head, but faith must bring it into the heart, and keep it there, till it be spirit and life to the man. The original is, the word of hearing did not profit them, being not united by faith to them that heard.

Obs. 5. The godly must act and put forth their graces towards further reception of spiritual things. When Christ will give Ezekiel donum prophetiæ, the gift of prophecy, a roll to eat, he opens his mouth, he employs his faith to receive this gift of prophecy. Faith in the habit is like the mouth shut up, nothing enters; but in exercise it is like the mouth open and ready to receive. It is infinite mercy that God at any time will offer us spiritual favours and excellences; we should therefore be forward, and stir up our souls and graces to the receipt of such mercies. It is a lazy and ill excuse for godly ones to say they can do nothing. Grace is an active and an enabling thing, and where there is a principle of life, (as all godly men have,) there is a special difference between that man and another that hath it not: a man without it, cannot act and stir up himself to a further reception of spiritual things, because he is dead; but a man that hath it, can and ought to quicken up his own soul to spiritual things. The prophet had received the Spirit that entered into him, and he opened his mouth, exercised his faith, to take what the Lord should give. The apostle Paul bids Timothy stir up the gift of God that was in him, 2 Tim. i. 6; he ἀναζωοποιεῖν would have men deal with their gifts and graces, as they do with fire under the ashes, they blow them off, and blow the fire up, and there is a flame fit for service. Sloth, fear, infirmity, carnal reason, are ashes that do often cover divine fire, that it seems dead; but we must stir up ourselves, blow off those ashes, and blow up the fire of grace, that it may burn and shine, be useful to ourselves and others. The prophet complains in Isa. lxiv. 7, "There is none that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee;" they are like men asleep, that sit still and do nothing. The Vulgate is, Non est qui surgat, There is no one who will arise.

Obs. 6. When man hath done all he can, the efficacy and fruit is from God. Ezekiel opened his mouth, but the Lord Christ caused him to eat the roll; he makes it effectual. It is not our stirring up our graces, opening our hearts, putting forth ourselves to the utmost, that will make an ordinance effectual, without Christ; it is he must do the deed: John xv. 5, "Without me ye can do nothing." Ezekiel could not eat the roll; nor digest it, being eaten; nor act, being digested: and so the apostles, though branches in the vine, could draw no sap from the root, unless that sent it up; when sent up, they could not send it forth without him; if sent forth into clusters, they could not ripen it without him. All is from him; he gives grace, exercises and strengthens grace: Paul may plant, but there is no rooting of those plants but by Christ; Apollos may water, but there is no growth, no increase, but by Christ, 1 Cor. iii. 6.

Obs. 7. Ministers and all should feed liberally upon the word. "Fill thy bowels with this roll;" not taste of it a little, but feed and fill themselves. There is great variety in the rolls of God, and we may feed upon them all, and fill ourselves with divine truth. Matt. xiii. 52, Every scribe instructed to the kingdom of heaven hath a treasury of things new and old. As a householder hath all meats, wines, household-stuff, and furniture that are needful, both old and new; so should a servant of God have old and new truths, those of Moses and the prophets, and the mysteries of the gospel also. "Let the word of God dwell in you richly," Col. iii. 16; he means not some part of it, but the whole word of God; it is not limited to any part, but spoken indefinitely, and so includes all; and it must not be in the assemblies, in the houses only, but it must be in you, and dwell in you; you must know it, and have it in readiness, as you know those who dwell in the house with you, and are ready to do any service for you. The Corinthians were enriched in all knowledge; and we should so abound with divine knowledge, that there should be no place for errors in us; the word of God should be in our hearts, in our heads, in our lips, in our lives; we all should be like Ezekiel's roll, written within and without.

Obs. 8. The word of God is sweet and delightful to the soul. It was "as honey for sweetness." There is nothing more sweet than honey. The word is as sweet as it; yea, Psal. xix. 10, "sweeter than honey and the honeycomb;" the greatest sweetness is in the word of any thing in the world. The sweetness is in the revelation of the counsels and mysteries of God and Christ, which is sweet to know; for "knowledge is pleasant," Prov. ii. 10; and the more excellent the knowledge, the more pleasant it is. It is a "word of life," Phil. ii. 16; and life is sweet, and the more spiritual the life is, the more sweet still. It converts the soul, Psal. xix. 7. It is pubulum animæ, the food of the soul, called by Peter, ἄβυσσος γάλα, 1 Pet. ii. 2, sincere milk; and that is sweet, nourishing into eternal life. It is "the grace of God that bringeth salvation," Tit. ii. 11; and "the power of God to salvation," Rom. i. 16; and herein is sweetness. It sanctifies, Job xvii. 17. It comforts the soul in all straits and afflictions; Psal. cxix. 92, "Unless thy law had been my delights, I should then have perished in mine affliction." It satisfies the conscience, which nothing else can do. It shows the equity of God's judgments and dealings with wicked men; and so the sharpest threats, and most dreadful judgments, are sweet to a gracious heart. Here was a roll full of "lamentation, mourning, and woe;" and yet when the Lord commends it to Ezekiel, he finds sweetness in it: not that he was not sensible and affected with the miseries coming upon him, for he was not ἀσπογγος, without natural affection; but seeing the righteousness of God in his judgments towards them, he could not but be affected with a spiritual joy, and find sweetness therein, his will being revealed, and that which a gracious heart rests in.

Ver. 4—11. And he said unto me, Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them. For thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech and of an hard language, but to the house of Israel; not to many people of a strange speech and of an hard language, whose words thou canst not understand. Surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened unto thee. But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee; for they will not hearken unto me: for all the house of Israel are impudent and hardhearted. Behold, I have made thy face strong against their faces, and thy forehead strong against their foreheads. As an adamant harder than flint have I made thy forehead: fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house. Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, all my words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears. And go, get thee to them of the captivity, unto the children of thy people, and speak unto them, and tell them, Thus saith the Lord God; whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.

In these verses is a renewal of the prophet's sending to his prophetic function, and they have in them matter of encouragement, and manifestation what he must expect.

1. Matter of encouragement; and, (1.) In that he was not sent to "a people of a strange language," that understood him not, ver. 5, 6; that would be discouragement, to preach to a people that should not know what a man said. This was not the prophet's ease, but he was to go "to the house of Israel," whom he knew, whose language he understood, who also understood his.

(2.) In that Christ had strengthened and fitted him for that service, ver. 8, 9, and would yet do more for him, give him more truths, reveal more prophetic things unto him, ver. 10.

(3.) That it should be all one to him, whether they heard the prophet or not, ver. 11.

2. There is manifestation what he must expect.

(1.) More from heathens than from them; ver. 6, end, "Surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened."

(2.) Obstinate refusal of him and his prophecy; ver. 7, "The house of Israel will not hearken unto thee;" and it is proved by a double argument.

First, "they will not hearken unto me," is an argument from the greater. If they will not hear me their God, they will not hear thee my servant, their prophet.

The second is an argument from their disposition, and the universality of it; "for all the house of Israel are impudent and hardhearted." And then a repetition of his mission, in the 11th verse.

I shall open what is difficult in the verses, and then give you some observations out of them.

The words in the 5th verse, "of a strange speech and hard language," and the same in the 6th verse, are expounded in that place in Isa. xxxiii. 19. In the original the words are עקני שפה וכבדי לשון deep of lip, and heavy of tongue, or rather, a people of depths of lip, and heaviness of tongue. In the word depths, there is a metalepsis; depths are dark and difficult, hard to be understood. It is not so here; thou art not sent to such a people, a people of a hard and heavy language, of an unknown tongue. The Septuagint hath it thus, οὐ προς λαόν βαθύχειλον και βαρυγλωσσον, not to a people of a deep lip, or heavy tongue; thou art sent to a people that understand thee, and what thou sayest, and whom thou dost understand also. It is not with thee as it was with Jonah; he was sent to a people of a strange speech and hard language. I send thee not to Egyptians, to Chaldeans, but to Israelites, not Parthians, Seythians, &c.; but though thou art in Babylon, where was the confusion of tongues, yet thou art to go to the house of Israel, and speak to them, that have heard Moses and other prophets before, and me in them.

In the 7th verse it is said, "the house of Israel are impudent and hardhearted." The Hebrew is, strong of face, and hard of heart, the same with those words in the second chapter, ver. 4; only the difference is, that in chap. ii. it is duri faciebus, strong of face, and here it is duri corde, hard of heart; there it is robusti corde, strong in heart, and here it is robusti fronte, bold in countenance.

In the 9th verse it is, כששיר "as an adamant harder than flint have I made thy forehead;" keshamir. The word shamir signifies a brier: Isa. v. 6, "There shall come up briers," ששיר a brier; and it is from שמר custodie, servare, to keep, to preserve, because a brier by its prickles doth preserve itself. It signifies also a hard and flinty stone, such as an adamant is, which is lapis serrabilis, because it keeps itself by its hardness from all injuries; no weather, no violence of hammer or fire will conquer it: so much the name adamant imports, being Ab a et dauōō-lapis indomabilis: Zech. vii. 12, "They have made their hearts as an adamant." There are four sorts, the Arabic, Macedonian, Cyprian, and Indian, which is the chiefest.

"Harder than a flint;" חזק מן הצור strong above a rock. By these expressions are set out the invincible courage and constancy that God would give the prophet; such as neither shame nor fear should prevail against.

In the 10th verse, "All my words receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears;" it is ὑστερον πρότερον, the last first, and first last, hear with thine ears, and receive into thine heart.

Obs. That those that are sent of God must speak with or in God's words. Saith Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 23, "For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you;" not what I have received of men, of learned heathens and Jews: not what I had of my own; but what I received of the Lord, his words, his institutions. God's words are weighty, and have divine authority in them, but man's are weak like himself.

From the 5th and 6th verses, Obs. 1. That it is God determines and disposes of his prophets and ministers, for their places and people; what places they shall be in, what number they shall be over: "Thou art not sent to a people of a strange language, not to many people, but to the house of Israel." God had the power in his hand to have sent him to other nations, great, mighty, of an unknown language, but he sent him among Israelites: Acts xx. 28, it is a divine constitution.

Obs. 2. That men called of God to do him service in the church, should not be discouraged, whatever difficulties are before them. "Thou art not sent unto a people of a strange speech, not to many:" this implies, that if he were sent to these, he should go willingly, cheerfully; and much more, being upon easier service, the call of God should be encouragement enough. And if our eyes be much upon that, it will prevent much sin, many distempers. Oft the servants of God (when they come amongst their own friends, acquaintance, countrymen) are slighted, and meet with hard measure and coarse usage; but they must remember who called, who sent them.

Obs. 3. That God's ways and judgments are unsearchable. The means of grace are denied to those that would embrace them, and given to those that refused them. "Surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened;" although thou hadst preached in a tongue unknown, by one means or other they would have been brought to repentance; they would not have been so perverse and ungrateful as the Jews were. Jonah, and Nahum too, as Pradus conceives, preached to Nineveh, and they repented; and it is likely many nations now, if they had the gospel preached unto them, would embrace it, and bring forth better fruits than christians do. Matt. xi. 21, 23, Christ saith, if the works he had done in Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, had been done in Tyre, Sidon, and Sodom, "they would have repented, and remained to this day;" but God, in his infinite wisdom and justice, denied both the words and works of Christ to those places. We cannot sound this depth; yet let us say, God is righteous, and take heed it be not verified of us, that Turkey, Persia, and Tartary, would have repented, if they had had the means we have.

From the 7th verse,

Obs. 1. Men's wills do harden them and ruin them: "They will not hearken unto thee." There is obstinacy and malice in the wills of men, that they reject the word of God, and what is for their good: "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life," saith Christ, John v. 40. I will give you life for fetching, and you will none of it. And when he came to them, what said they to him? "We will not have this man to reign over us." Let Christ come, a King of righteousness, seeking the good, the salvation of sinners, they will not submit to him; their own wills shall stand between them and salvation. Voluntas tua est infernus tuus. Bernard saith, A man's will is his hell; it carries a man against heaven, and swiftly to hell.

Obs. 2. There is such corruption and strength of stubbornness in men, that they will not hear God himself: "They will not hearken unto me." Though there be infinite equity in it, that they should give me their ears, hearts, all their strength and intentions; for I have created them of nothing; redeemed them, being worse than nothing; I have prepared eternal mansions in the heavens for them that do hear me: I speak the words of wisdom and life; I aim at their good and comfort in all that I speak; yet they will not hear me. Here is the strength and perfection of stubbornness. A child not to hear its parents, a people not to hear their minister, subjects not to hear their prince, is thought bad enough; but children, people, subjects, not to hear their God, is the height of iniquity. And because they will not hear Christ, therefore they will not hear his messengers, but despise, persecute, and murder them, and that because he sends them; John xv. 21, "All these things will they do unto you for my name's sake."

Obs. 3. Corruption lies not only hid in the heart of sinners, but breaks out in an impudent manner: they "are impudent and hardhearted;" there is stoniness within, and impudence without.

Obs. 4. Sin is of a spreading, infectious nature: the whole "house of Israel are impudent and hardhearted," the one corrupted another. As it is in a bunch of grapes, if one be corrupt, it will corrupt its neighbour, and that another, till they be all alike; so was it here, one infected another, till the whole house was so; it is like the leprosy in a garment or house, that spreads through all. Gen. vi. 12, "All flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth."

From the 8th and 9th verses,

Obs. 1. That the ministers of God must look for opposition in their way. Their face and foreheads were against the prophet; they would be like beasts, that use to push with their horns and heads. I Cor. xvi. 9, "There is an effectual door opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." When God opens to his ministers a door of hope to do good, there presently appear many adversaries to shut that door again, and so to take away the hope and opportunity of doing good. It was at Ephesus, and there he met and fought with beasts. In the course of his ministry he met with Hymeneus, Alexander, and Demetrius, that opposed him. John met with a Diotrophes, and we must look for many such.

Obs. 2. Divine virtue and assistance doth accompany a divine call. "I have made thy face strong against their faces." I called thee, and strengthened thee. The Hebrew is, give thee a face strong; I do and will enable thee with spirit and audacity to outface them. In Matt. xxviii. 20, Go preach, "and lo, I am with you always to the end of the world." He sends them, and seconds them; he calls them, and encourages them; "I am with you," by my grace, strength, comfort, direction, Spirit. Those that are called of Christ, and sent of him, therefore may with comfort expect the help of Christ to go through the work he hath put them in. Paul, when sent to the Corinthians, he came "in demonstration of the Spirit and power," I Cor. ii. 4. And in Col. i. 29, he saith, the working of grace was mighty in him, in power and efficacy. We are oft discouraged at the greatness and difficulty of the work: "Who is sufficient for these things?" said Paul; but when he looked at Christ, he said, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," Phil. iv. 13. And if we would look more at him, and lean upon him, we should do more, and do better. If thoughts of our weakness, of the work, of our oppositions and enemies, sink us, Christ gives balm, spirit, and a face to bear all. A minister doth not warfare in his own strength, but is armed from above. Non militat propriis viribus, sed armatur celestis virtute.

Obs. 3. Whatever ministers have, it is given; if they be endued with the Spirit, wisdom, liberty of speech, courage, or any other excellency, it is that the Lord Christ bestows upon them; I have made thee so and so. Let not us be lift up; our Master, Christ, had in him all the treasures of wisdom, the Spirit above measure; he was full of grace and truth, did more than all; his fame was great, and yet he was humble, and bad us learn of him. He did not slight or despise men of mean talents, and infinitely beneath himself, but acknowledged the least good which was in any, and encouraged it. His steps should we follow, and not swell with a conceit of worth, nor with reality of parts and excellences. It is the practice of too many to slight others, and build up themselves by their ruins; but this is a worldly and wicked practice, never taught by Christ. His doctrine is, "Let each esteem other better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others," Phil. ii. 3, 4: it is injury and indignity to Christ, not to reverence and esteem his graces and gifts in others. Bernard tells of one, who, bewailing his own condition, said, he saw thirty virtues in another, whereof he had not one in himself. And perhaps, saith Bernard, of all his thirty, he had not one like this man's humility. This grace is the glory of a christian, and especially of a minister: pride is for prelates, and humility for prophets. God brooks not pride in any, least of all in his messengers. Christ's disciples had a tincture of it; their thoughts were aspiring, who should be greatest; but he sets a child before them, and tells them who is greatest; not he that hath the strongest head, the best notions, doth the most service, but he that is the most humble, he is the most high. Humility is so valued of God, that he likes it in malefactis, those that have done ill, rather than pride in recte factis, those that have done well. A man that is innocent and proud, is less in God's eye than he that is guilty and humble. Let us rather mind the good in others, to honour them, and maintain love, than that which is in ourselves, to lift us up, and make us slight others.

Obs. 4. Christ puts insuperable virtue and strength into his servants, such as the powers of darkness and the world cannot prevail against. "I have made thy face strong against their faces, as an adamant," as a rock. Let the winds, waters, floods, blow, wash, beat, they prevail not against the adamant, the rock; they are things which cannot be conquered. So is the power, virtue, and grace of Christ in the heart and head of a faithful minister. Reproach and derision put Jeremiah to it, had almost silenced him: I will preach no more, Jer. xx. 9, "but his word was as a burning fire, shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay;" there was virtue within which would out and act. God had told them, that they should fight against him, but not prevail, Jer. xv. 20. Christ tells his disciples, he will give them "a mouth and wisdom which all their adversaries shall not be able to resist," Luke xxi. 15. And could that great council, in the 4th of the Acts, prevail against Peter and John? "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard," ver. 20. So Stephen was too stout for all his adversaries, Acts vi. 10. Such virtue was put into Basil the great. You know how he answered the ruler, and stood impregnable against his threats, who went and told the emperor, saying, Ficti sumus, rex, in ecclesie hujus negotio; vir ille minis est superior, verbis robustior, et persuasionibus fortior, We have been vanquished, O ruler, in this affair of the church; that man is superior to our threats, more powerful than words, and one who will not yield to persuasions. This made Nazianzen say of him, that he was perventibus adamantis, et dissidentibus magnes, an adamant to those striking him, and a loadstone to those differing from him. Could all the policy of the conclave, and power of antichrist, conquer that divine virtue which was put into Luther? The wicked may drive the godly from their standings, not from their stedfastness.

Obs. 5. That the messengers of God, being called and strengthened by Christ, are to go on animo intrepido, with an intrepid mind. "Fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be rebellious," &c. If they be strong, or against thee, I am stronger than am with thee; if they frown, I smile; if they watch to do thee hurt, I watch to do thee good; if thy doctrine provoke them, yet it pleases me.

From the 10th verse,

Obs. 1. That the heart is the treasury where the truth should be laid up. "Receive my words in thine heart." He must hear with his ear, but that is not enough, he must also admit the word into his heart, and lay it up there. What is in the head may soon be lost, but what is in the heart abides. Books locked up in the closet are safe, and truths laid up in the heart are secure. Jam. i. 21, "Lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of" malice, or "naughtiness, and receive with meekness the ingrafted word," τὸν ἐμφυτον λόγον. They must first put out of their hearts filthiness, malice, wrath, whatever had possession of the heart, and kept out the word, and open their hearts to entertain the word; that as it is with a graft put into a stock, so it might be with the word in their hearts, even be an ingrafted word, a word to root and grow there, and bear fruit in the life. The seed on the good ground, are they which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit, Luke viii. 15. The heart is the ground this seed will grow in. David knew this, and therefore hid the word of God in his heart, Psal. cxix. 11: and why there? "that I might not sin against thee." This corn will not let the weeds grow: when the word is in the heart, it keeps under all corruptions, it makes them languish and come to nothing. Many do by the word as by their jewels, they hang them at their ears, that is the place for them: and so the word is only in their ears: they hear, and that is all; it enters not into their hearts, and therefore is subject to casualty, the devil, world, pleasures, one thing or other, steal it away, or make it unfruitful; but the heart is the right and best place for that treasure. A godly man's treasure is in the heart, within; and theirs in the ear, and without; many hear the word with the ear, but receive it not into the heart, and that is a worthless hearing: John viii. 47, the Jews heard Christ preach, yet he tells them their hearing was no hearing; "Ye hear not God's words, because ye are not of God." They heard, but not with the heart; the truth entered not, abode not with them. Let us look to our hearing, and lay up the truths of Christ in our heart: Luke ii. 19, "Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart."

Obs. 2. All the truths of Christ must have interest in the heart. Psal. xl. 8, "Thy law is within my heart:" he doth not say, a precept or two, a part, or half the law is within my heart, but thy law, the whole law. Some truth is with most persons. None is so bad, but he would give entertainment unto truths of mercy, truths of liberty, truths of ease and comfort, truths in credit: so men might pick and choose what truths they listed, they would embrace them; but when truths are reproached, will subject to danger, loss, difficulties, when they strike at our lusts, call for mortification, self-denial, conformity to Christ, &c. then men will scarcely afford truth their ears, much less their hearts. Hence those expressions in Scripture, of men's perverting the ways of God, Acts xiii. 10; of being contentious against the truth, Rom. ii. 8; speaking evil of it, 2 Pet. ii. 2; of resisting it, 2 Tim. iii. 8; yea, persecuting it, Acts xxii. 4. There are many truths that flesh and blood cannot endure. Some have torn out parts of Scripture, because cross to their lusts and lives. It is known what hath been done to the word of God in Ireland, and England too of late days. Some are enemies to the whole truth, most to some parts of it, but we must receive all the words of Christ. If the least title of the law and gospel be more durable and excellent than heaven and earth, there is sufficient reason it should have interest in our hearts. Let the truths be what they will, so they be the words and truths of Christ, we should receive them; and that which makes us receive one, should make us receive all. Do I receive one, because it is from Christ? then I should receive all, because they are from Christ. If I do not receive all, I may miscarry for refusing of one truth: Psal. exix. 6, "Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all thy commandments."

From the 12th verse,

Obs. 1. That affliction is a fit time for instruction. "Get thee to them of the captivity." They were in Babylon, stript of all, captives under Nebuchadnezzar, and now the Lord judged it a fit season for a prophet to be sent unto them. When people are in misery, they see the uncertainty of life, the insufficiency of all creatures, the sinfulness of sin, that the wrath of God is a dreadful thing; thoughts of death and eternity are upon them; and now is a good season to bring the truths of the eternal God unto them. Vexatio dat intellectum, affliction quickens consideration; it makes men thoughtful, look about, inquire how they may be delivered, where to get safety. When a kingdom is in danger, a parliament is seasonable; when there is war in the gates, then counsel and instruction are welcome; and when people are in captivity, a prophet amongst them will do well.

Obs. 2. When God's people degenerate, he owns them not for his. "Get thee to the captivity, and to thy people." God owned them not; now his care of them, and affection towards them, is much abated. God doth look upon things and persons, that he formerly took delight in, being corrupt, as not his own. Isa. i. 14, "Your new moons and appointed feasts my soul hateth:" they were the Lord's people, he appointed the new moons and feasts, but because they had corrupted them, he owns them not, but calls them theirs. So in Exod. xxxii. 7, God bids Moses get him down from the mount. What was the matter? "Thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves:" their corrupting themselves with idolatry, made God disclaim them: They are thy people, go look after them, or I will destroy them. He calls them Moses's people there, and here he calls them Ezekiel's, to let them see how his heart was estranged from them. While they were faithful to God, he counted highly of them, they were precious in his sight, honourable, beloved; but when they went a whoring from God, he accounts not of them, he calls them not his, owns them not: they had shamefully dishonoured God by their sins, and he will not honour them with the title of his people.

Obs. 3. The servants of Christ must execute their functions without respect of persons, or regard to success. "Speak to them," whatever they be, "and tell them, Thus saith the Lord," that one greater than themselves hath sent thee, and will call them to account; and "whether they will hear or forbear," let not that trouble thee, do thy duty, be not troubled at the oppositions of men, or successlessness of thy labours.

Ver. 12—15. Then the spirit took me up, and I heard behind me a voice of a great rushing, saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place. I heard also the noise of the wings of the living creatures that touched one another, and the noise of the wheels over against them, and a noise of a great rushing. So the spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit; but the hand of the Lord was strong upon me. Then I came to them of the captivity at Tel-abib, that dwelt by the river of Chebar, and I sat where they sat, and remained there astonished among them seven days.

These words are the second part of the chapter, and contain in them a declaration of what befell the prophet, being so called; and the particulars are these:

I. The work of the Spirit in taking and lifting him up, ver. 12.

II. The voice he heard, ver. 12, and what it was, "Blessed," &c.

III. The noise of wings and wheels, ver. 13.

IV. The ablation of the prophet, ver. 14. In the 12th was a sublation, in this an ablation.

V. The journey he went, in ver. 14, 15. And,

VI. His condition; he was in bitterness of spirit, he sat and mourned seven days, ver. 14, 15.

"The spirit took me up." By spirit here we understand, not the wind, as if some great wind should take up the prophet; nor an angel, as if he had been lift up by angelical virtue; nor his own spirit, as Jerom would have it: but that Spirit which was in the living creatures and wheels, chap. i. 12, 20, and led them; that Spirit which entered into Ezekiel, and set him upon his feet, chap. ii. 2; that Spirit which led Christ into the wilderness, Matt. iv. 1; even the eternal Spirit of God.

This taking up of Ezekiel by the Spirit of God was:

1. To perfect and ratify his call to the prophetic office. The Lord Christ had spoken much unto him about it, and now the Spirit lifts him up, and seals the same unto his soul, strengthening him in the full assurance thereof. When he had heard Christ's voice, and found his Spirit working so extraordinarily, as to lift him up; this could not but mightily prevail with and satisfy the soul of the prophet.

2. That he might have a more clear and full view of the glory of him that sat upon the throne. When we would have one see things distinctly and fully, we set or lift him up on high. The devil carried Christ unto an exceeding high mountain, and showed him the glory of the kingdoms of the world, Matt. iv. 8.

3. To put honour upon him, in letting him see that he was to be an organ of the Spirit for the future; he was to be employed in great service by the Spirit, and that was a great honour. He was to be the mouth of the Spirit unto that people; to be wholly at the disposal of the Spirit.

4. To call away his thoughts from things below, and to settle them upon the contemplation of things divine. A prophet is not to look downward, his heart should be lifted up to heaven and heavenly things.

"And I heard behind me a voice of a great rushing." It was not the voice of thunder, or of an earthquake, but of "the living creatures;" and the voice some make to be the words, "Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place;" which words are in the original, the blessed glory of the Lord from his place; that is, the glory of God is now going out of his place, and it troubles the angels, that they lament, and make a great noise, to behold so dreadful a judgment to befall Jerusalem and the Jews; and so the voice to be differing from these words. If it be granted, that these words were the voice uttered, yet may they be taken in that sense which is expressed, to show their sorrow for the ruin of the church. The blessed glory of the Lord is departing from its place, God is leaving his habitation and people, and all is hastening to spoil and desolation; this affected the very angels. When some great man, that hath been a great patron and friend to a place, is going away, what lamentation is made! what a noise and stir is there at it! As in these days, when some ministers, magistrates, and other eminent christians, are forced from their place by the enemy, what complaint doth it cause! what a noise doth it make! And so when God leaves a people, that were beloved and dear unto him, it fetches sighs and complaints, not only from men, but even from angels also: the soul finds it a sad thing when God departs from it, and oft mourns bitterly. Some take the words for a doxology, and make the sense this; Blessed be the glory of God, which is seen in punishing the wicked, and delivering the church. God shows himself just and righteous, that he will no longer stay among a sinful people, but be gone from them, and render to them according to their ways. The query will be, in what sense we may take the words? Both senses may without prejudice be admitted. While the angels looked upon the great loss the Jews should have by God's departure, the great evils which would follow thereupon; they sympathized, and were so affected with it, that they brake out into these expressions. The blessed glory of God is going out of its place; and so it is vox lamentationis, an expression of grief. But when they looked at God's justice and holiness, "Blessed is" or be "the glory of the Lord." Though men be ruined, cities and nations destroyed, and God driven from his habitation, yet let his name be glorious. And so it is vox laudis, an expression of praise, and brought in to answer the objections and cavils the people might make. They might say, What! will God leave us? expose us to the spoil of foreign enemies? shall we and ours be cut off? will he thus deal with his people? is it come to this? What equity is in it? The angels, to prevent such murmurs, and vile speech, said, "Blessed," &c.; even when he is in a way of judgment, he is to be honoured and made glorious.

"Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place." We must make some search into these words, and inquire after the person, the place, and the glory. The person here is taken to be Christ, who appeared unto the prophet in the vision; the place, the throne where Christ sat; and the glory, that is mentioned in the end of the first chapter. And Christ now being about to go off his throne, and put an end to the vision, the angels cried, "Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place." This is not all we must expect from the words, they type out unto us the departure of the Lord from the temple; that God would be gone, and take away that which was the chief glory of it.

"From his place." God is without place, and the rabbins use that word to signify it. Makom is a space, or place, because all things subsist in it; Hammakom, per antiphrasin, is illocubis, infinitus, one that subsists, or is comprehended in no place, and so is an attribute of God. How then is God here said to have place, מקום, from his place? God properly hath no place; in a metaphorical sense that place is given to him; where he in any special manner doth manifest his glory, power, grace, and goodness, that is said to be his place.

And three places God is said to have in the Scripture:

1. The heavens: Isa. lxvi. 1, "Heaven is my throne;" and 1 Kings viii. 30, "Ucar in heaven thy dwelling-place."

2. The humble heart, Isa. lvii. 15, that is God's dwelling place. And,

3. The temple in Zion. Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14,

Zion was his habitation, there was his rest and abode; that is, in the temple, being in Zion. In the temple and sanctuary were his voice, his way, Psal. xviii. 6; lxxvii. 13. That was the place where his honour dwelt, Psal. xxvi. 8, the habitation of his glory. The words are in the original, the place of the habitation or tabernacle of his glory, alluding to that in Exod. xl. 34, 35, where it is said, "The glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle." So the glory of the Lord filled the temple; there was the presence of God; there were manifestations of his glory; there he heard prayers, and there he gave out many gracious answers; there he accepted of their sacrifices, and communicated himself unto them; there were the ark and sign of God's presence, and the cherubims, from between which God gave out the answers. In these things lay the glory of the temple; but now God would be gone, and all the glory of the temple should depart. God moved not from place to place, being infinite, without place, immovable; but he is said to depart, when he ceases to do as formerly he did in the soul; when you find not God acting and manifesting himself, you say he is gone. Here now God would answer them no more, not accept their sacrifice, nor hear their prayers, &c.; he would not do as formerly he had done; he would not protect them any longer, but look upon them as being unworthy of his presence, glory, protection, and help, and in his wrath leave them to ruin and the spoil of their adversaries; and this was God departing, according to that in Hos. v. 15, "I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence." That phrase, "Blessed be the glory of the Lord," you may, for your better understanding, conceive thus, Blessed be the glorious Lord, or, the glory, the Lord; or, if you will take it as it is read, the meaning is, that the glory of the Lord is to be celebrated.

Obs. 1. That those that are called to employment in the church of Christ, have need not only of Christ's word, but Christ's Spirit also. Christ had spoken largely unto Ezekiel, and here the Spirit lifts him up, and doth in an especial manner animate and arm him to the work. When the apostles had been long with Christ, heard his sermons, seen his miracles and life, joined with him in prayer, all this would not do it, though Christ had forty days spoken to them in particular of the things of the kingdom, Acts i. 3, till they had the Spirit, and were filled with that; therefore Christ bid them wait for it, ver. 4. He knew they had need of it, and that it would do more in them, than all he had said unto them. The Spirit would be Doctor intus, an inward Teacher, and acquaint them with all truth. The Spirit would purge out their fears and distempers; it would warm, heat, seal, ratify, and make them resolute in the work.

Obs. 2. That the angels do sympathize with the church and people of God in their miseries. This voice was, as I showed in the opening, the voice of the living creatures; and they made a noise, lamenting the state of Jerusalem, God being upon the leaving of it, and exposing it to great misery. Ah, said they, the blessed and glorious Lord is going from his place, and all miseries are now stepping in upon his people: this affected them. We know that the angels rejoice at the conversion of sinners, and by the law of contraries we infer they are saddened at the destruction of sinners, of states and churches. They have been employed to comfort in trouble; and where there is no sympathy, there is little solace. Do you not think, that the angel seeing Christ his Lord and Master in his agony, that he did sympathize first with him, and then strengthen him? Angels being without sin, are as full of pity as the devils are of cruelty. God, Christ, and the Spirit, are full of pity; and it cannot be that angels, which are so near them, should be void of it. No, they have a holy sympathy with us: in God's departure from a place is sad news, even to angels.

Obs. 3. The happiness of a people is to have the Lord and his glory amongst them, and their greatest misery is to have God depart from them. Most think the happiness of a people to lie in liberty, honour, plenty of all things. David once subscribed to it, Psal. cxliv. 15, "Happy is that people that is in such a case:" but he quickly crossed out that subscription, and said, "yea, happy is that people whose God is the Lord:" there is the happiness, to have God among them. He is the glory of a people: Zech. ii. 5, he was the glory in the midst of Jerusalem; there God dwelt, as his worship, laws, oracles, miracles, testified, and so he made Jerusalem glorious among all nations. Where true religion is, pure worship and ordinances, and God working for the good of a people, defending them, that is the glory and excellency of a kingdom. 2 Chron. xiii. 12, saith Abijah, "God is with us for our captain;" this was more than all the strength of Judah beside, when Jeroboam came against him with 800,000 chosen men. With you are the golden calves, ver. 8, "ye be a great multitude:" but God is not with you to be your glory and defence: you have the calves, which is your shame and nakedness, but God is with us, who is our glory and defence. And when Jerusalem fell to idolatry, God tells them, that they had "changed their glory for that which did not profit," Jer. ii. 11, they had driven away their glory: and here was the beginning of their woe. That is the misery of a kingdom, to have God depart from it: then public enterprises prosper not, Josh. vii. 12: then counsel fails, 1 Sam. xxviii. 15, protection is gone, Isa. v. 5: then peace, loving-kindness, and mercies go, Jer. xvi. 5. This is as taking the sun out of the firmament, the eyes out of the head, or soul out of the body. Now a kingdom and people lie exposed to all evils and mischiefs: Hos. ix. 12, "Woe to them when I depart from them." All mischiefs presently crowd in upon a people left of God: famine, wars, captivity, a perverse spirit, and treacherousness one to another, came upon this people, when God left his place. And so after Christ's days, when God left them, and that voice was heard

Joseph de Bel. in the temple, Migremus hinc, Let us depart hence: which Tacitus in his

Lib. 21. Annals also mentions, Auditū major humanæ vocis, excedere deos, simul ingens motus excedentium, A greater than a human voice was heard, that the gods had departed, and at the same time a prodigious motion as of those departing: after this, dreadful misery befell them, war, famine, dispersion was their portion: they are without God, Christ, and mercy to this day: an undone and most unhappy people. We had almost driven away God by our sins, specially by our idolatry and superstitions: but God and his glory are not quite gone: Jer. xiv. 9, "Yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name: leave us not."

Obs. 4. God is glory, or glorious. There is nothing in God inglorious. As in the sun is only light, so God is light, and in him is no darkness. He is all light, all glory; his attributes are glory, his essence is glory, his life is glory, God is only glory. Blessed be the glory, the Lord.

Obs. 5. Under the law, God confined himself to a particular place, to the temple; there he dwelt, appeared, received sacrifices, gave answers, &c. So that the temple was not only locus, the place, but medium divini cultus, the medium of divine worship:

the Jews were bound to set their faces towards it when they prayed, 1 Kings viii. 48; Dan. vi. 10; it being also a type of the body of Christ, John ii. 19, that sanctified their assemblies and sacrifices, Matt. xxiii. 19. But it is otherwise now under the gospel; neither Jerusalem nor Samaria is the place where God is fixed, John iv. 21, but God's habitation is in all places where he hath saints. Matt. xviii. 20, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." 2 Cor. vi. 16, "Ye are the temple of the living God:" and what saith God? I will dwell in them, and walk about in them; that is, in the church of Corinth; and so in all congregations. Now the congregations are God's habitation; he walks amongst the golden candlesticks; there is the glorious God seen, the glorious God heard. But the place now where the meetings are held, are neither means nor parts of worship, no types of Christ, nor do they sanctify the people or service done in them: rather do the people and ordinances, while they are there, sanctify them; and yet when the ordinances are ended, and people gone, no holiness abides in them, but they are as other places.

Obs. 6. The Lord is worthy of praise, when he is in a way of judgment. "Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place." Now he was departing from Jerusalem, all woes and miseries taking hold of them, yet was he a God deserving praises. God's judgments are deep; we oft know not the reasons of them, see not the equity of God's proceedings in them, yet we should be so far from murmuring, that we should count him worthy of honour and praise, when he deserts churches and kingdoms: Exod. xv. 11, "God is fearful in praises."

Obs. 7. It is the work and office of angels to praise God. The living creatures here said, "Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place." And Rev. v. 11, 12, there were many angels about the throne; and what did they? They sang, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing." So the seraphims in Isa. vi. 3, their song was, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory." Angels are musical creatures, and make the best melody. Arias thinks it was an angel dictated the song of Deborah unto her. Luke ii. 13, 14, there was a heavenly chorus, and sang a heavenly song, "Glory to God in the highest, on the earth peace, and good-will towards men:" this was a short, but a sweet song. When great things have been done by God, the angels have been brought in praising God, as when God created the world; Job xxxviii. 4, 7, "Where wast thou," saith God to Job, "when I laid the foundations of the earth?—when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?" that is, the angels, as interpreters observe, who, at the sight of that great and glorious work, were much affected, and sang the praises of God. So at the birth of Christ, and here at the departure of God out of the temple, the great God, doing great works, must have great praises, even the praises of angels. Praise is an angelical work, and the office of angels, and the Spirit calls for it at their hands: Psal. cxlviii. 2, "As praise ye him, all his angels:" and they do it when he is in his judgments. The Jews thought God dealt hardly in punishing them; but angels saw cause to praise God for his departure from them, and vindicating his glory in the punishment of hypocrites.

A. Lapid. on Judg. v. 23.

Obs. 8. God doth his works without motion or mutation. Here it is said, "from his place;" there is a show of motion and change, but no such thing befalls God; his works make motions and changes in the creature, not in himself. He is infinite, fills heaven and earth, and never removes from one place to another; he is immutable, and not subject to changes.

From the 13th verse of the wings, wheels, and noise of them, I have spoken in the first chapter largely; yet a little I shall speak of this verse. It is said, that the living creatures "touched one another;" the Hebrew is from קָרַב to kiss; and each other, in the Hebrew, is a woman to her sister.

Obs. 1. God makes use of angels and second causes in the government of the world, and execution of his judgments. All creatures have being from and dependence on God, and he may employ them to what service he will.

Obs. 2. God's judgments do often come suddenly and swiftly. Wings make a noise, and wheels do rattle in a moment, and judgments come in an instant: Hos. x. 15, "In a morning shall the king of Israel be cut off utterly;" Belshazzar, in a night, Dan. v. 30; Nebuchadnezzar in an hour driven from his palace and pride, Dan. iv. 33.

Obs. 3. There is much harmony and love between the angels. Their wings touch, kiss, they go lovingly together in the execution of their offices; they have like affections, as a woman to her sister. They sang sweetly together at the birth of Christ. There is no contention, envy, or division among them, but much love; they are near God, and the nearer any are to God, the more love is in them. If we could agree better, and love more, we should be angelical.

In the 14th verse is laid down, what the Spirit did with the prophet, after it had lift him up. It took him away; after the sublation, there was an ablation. The prophet was carried by the power of the Spirit to Tel-abib. This was not a visional thing, but real; for being lifted up, he was taken away from the place where he saw the vision; he was not set down, and so left to go to Tel-abib, but he was carried in the arms of the Spirit, as Philip was caught up by the Spirit, and carried to Azotus, Acts viii. 39. 40. The Spirit was the fiery chariot that carried Philip and our prophet through the air to their several places.

"And I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit." The Hebrew is, I went bitter in the hot anger of my spirit. Here the infirmity of our prophet appears much, in that after he had seen and heard such great and glorious things, had found such favour in the eyes of Christ, as to have his Spirit enter into him, comfort him, confirm him, and to bestow prophetic gifts upon him, yet now he should be unwilling to obey Christ's call, be in bitterness and opposition to his will; this is a great infirmity. If I go and preach of the glory departing from the temple, I shall stir up the people against me, they will stone me; if not, I shall offend God. The prophet now thought upon God's anger against his people; his departure out of the temple, the ruin of the city, the stubbornness and impudence of the house of Israel. Now the weightiness of the work enjoined him by Christ seized upon him; and now, like Jonah, he thought to decline the service. His spirit was bitter, he in a great heat, that he was so pressed to a work so little affected, and overpowered by the Spirit of God, that, willing or unwilling, on he must; for the next words are,

"But the hand of the Lord was strong upon me." Which words do declare, that had not God's hand overpowered him, he would not have set upon that hard work of the prophetic office; fears, difficulties, dangers, carnal reason, unbelief, self-love, one or all of these, would have turned him back, if the hand of God had not strongly prevailed with him.

By "hand of the Lord," some understand the spirit of prophecy, as if that did mightily urge him; so the Chaldee exposition is. Others understand by it, divinum auxilium, divine aid, or, virtus Spiritus, the influence of the Spirit, which is as a hand to help. We may safely understand the Spirit by it, which put forth its mighty power upon and in the prophet. Why the Spirit is resembled to a hand, I showed in chap. i. 3. A hand is symbolum energiae, index rei, et instrumentum operationis, the symbol of power, a director, and the instrument of operation. There is strength in the hand; it shows what is to be done, and effects it: so here, the Spirit took hold of the prophet, which notes his power, showed him his duty, and caused him to do it.

"Was strong." The Hebrew root קָרַב signifies, fortiter apprehendere, tenere, to lay hold of firmly, to retain; as one that holds loose joints and nerves of the body, to strengthen and confirm them, that so the man may be more compact and able to do any thing: it notes laying hold with strength, as men in danger of drowning; and the Septuagint frequently renders it by a word that notes so much; as Ezek. vii. 13; κράτειν, et ἰμπεράρειν, xxii. 14, which is to hold by strength.

And this sense suits with the hand of the Lord that took hold of the prophet, whose spirit was remiss, infirm, like a member out of joint, and strengthened it, and enabled it to do what was intended and appointed: the Spirit held the prophet by its mighty power, that he could not wrest from it by any means, but like a man conquered, must yield, and do what was required.

Obs. 1. The prophets were put on to and carried on in their works of prophecy, and giving the Scriptures, by extraordinary acts of the Spirit; that enters into Ezekiel, takes him up, takes him away with mighty power, comes upon him, and constrains him to prophesy. Here was inspiration and impulsion of the Spirit. 2 Pet. i. 20, 21, "Prophecy came not by the will of man, but holy ἰδίας ἐπιλόσεως. men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost;" it was not their own spirit moved, that is private; but it was the Spirit of God, which is divine and public, and carried them on with might: so that the Scriptures are not inventum humanum, but oracula Dei, they are not of man, but of God. Therefore Philo saith, Propheta est interpretes Dei dicentis oracula. A prophet is an interpreter of God declaring his will. The Spirit dictates all, and man only utters or writes what is dictated. And as the Scriptures are not of man, but of the Spirit, so their interpretation is not of man, but of the Spirit likewise. Let councils, fathers, churches, give their sense of Scripture; it is private, if it be not the sense and interpretation of the Spirit. Let a private man give the true sense of the Scripture; it is not private, because it is divine. The sense of the Holy Ghost, and private, in this place of Peter, is not opposed to public, but to divine; and the words are to be read, no Scripture is of a man's own interpretation; that is, private, contrary to divine.

Obs. 2. The Holy Ghost is God, and a person distinct from the Son. The Spirit was in the living creatures, in the wheels, and in Ezekiel. How could this be, if the Spirit were not God? None but God can be at the same time in many places; it is his peculiar prerogative and nature to be every where. The beams of the sun are in several places, but not the essence or body of the sun, that is in one place only; but the Holy Ghost was in its essence, in the angels, in the wheels, in Ezekiel; it was in Jeremiah, who lived then at Jerusalem; it was in all the saints there, in Daniel, and the rest of the saints in Babylon: so that the Spirit is co-essential with the Father and the Son, and it is a person; otherwise how could it have taken up the prophet, and carried him? And it is distinct from the Son, who is described to be upon the throne, and to give commands unto the prophet. And that the Spirit here is brought in distinct from him, is most clear in that place in Matt. iii. 16, 17, where the Spirit is distinguished from the Son, baptized, and from the Father, acknowledging Christ his Son, in whom he was well pleased.

Obs. 3. Great saints have great infirmities. Ezekiel goes in bitterness, in the heat of his spirit; he was in a froward humour, in a great distemper; the Vulgate hath it, in indignatione spiritus, there was indignation in his spirit to the work. Some have thought this affliction of the prophet not altogether sinful, yet some sinfulness to be in it, which cannot be denied. It is granted by Calvin, that it did differ from the grace of the Spirit; and for him, after so clear and strong a call, to refuse, to be in a chafe, to withstand, was an infirmity, if not a sin. He had rather have been out of service than in it, lien hid among the people, than have been an ambassador of Christ unto them; he had rather they should have perished without vision, than that himself should be a seer amongst them: here was the weakness of this good man. I could tell you of Abraham's, Jacob's, Moses's, David's, Paul's, and John's failings. There never was since sin entered any perfect saint: in many things we sin all, Jam. iii. 2. And yet the apostles were filled with the Spirit, there was a fulness of grace in them, and in the prophets; yet neither the one nor the other were altogether free from carnal influence, notwithstanding all their graces and excellences, they did still breathe something earthly. And now, wherever the Spirit comes, it neither extinguishes nature nor corruption wholly in this life. The best wine hath its dregs and its lees, and the best of saints hath his spots and weaknesses; there is no perfection in any.

Obs. 4. Holy men set down their own infirmities, which is an argument of the truth of the word, and the divine nature of it. Men that are mere men, seek their own glory, and will not shame themselves in their writings; but the penmen of Scripture, having received another spirit, are content to shame themselves, so God may have glory, his truth credit, his people caution and comfort: all these are in the setting down of their own sins. When holy men confess their weaknesses, set them down, as Moses, Exod. iv. 10; as David, Psal. li. 3—5; as Jonah, chap. i. 3; as Paul, 1 Tim. i. 13; as John, Rev. xxii. 8; God is glorified by their shame. It is evidenced what God did for, and by, these men, notwithstanding their sins. Men are persuaded of the truth of the word, seeing they spared not themselves, and would not bury their own thoughts in silence. Others, that see the slips of such men of God, are admonished thereby to look to their standings, and to be watchful; and those who are beaten down with the sense of their failings, see it is the common sickness of the saints, and not their case alone, which is some ease unto them.

Obs. 5. That some truths of God, sweet in the reception, oft prove bitter in the operation. The roll that Ezekiel did eat, ver. 3, was sweet as honey at first unto him; but now he was to go and put it in practice, he found it bitter, and sought to decline that service: it was like pills sugared over, sweet in the mouth, but being dissolved in his bowels, produced distressing pain. He was upon the rack, and sick of the business, and perplexed that he had eaten such a roll. The stony-ground hearers heard the word with joy, it was sweet to the taste, but afterwards it was bitter: when persecution and temptation came, those hearers were offended and fell away, Matt. xiii. 20, 21. The word of joy proved a word of bitterness unto them, and it is so to most men at one time or other; they find it a sad and difficult thing to act those truths which are sweet to the understanding. John ate the little book, it was sweet in his mouth, bitter in his belly, Rev. x. 9, 10; that is, in the operation of it; John saw that those truths written in it would beget hatreds, persecutions, imprisonments, banishments, martyrdom, &c. When we come to find the operations of truths, that they will cost us dear, dear friends, dear liberties, dear lusts, dear limbs, dear lives; we find a bitterness in truths, though formerly they have been like Ezekiel's roll and John's little book to our mouths.

Obs. 6. Man's wisdom and spirit is opposite to the wisdom and spirit of the Lord Christ. Christ calls, sends Ezekiel in his infinite wisdom; he thinks it best for him to go to these captive Jews, this rebellious house. The Spirit enters into Ezekiel, assures him of his call, strengthens him, assists him; and yet he is averse, in bitterness, in the heat of his spirit; he shows the antipathy between his wisdom and Christ's, his spirit and the Spirit of Christ, they closed not. There are principles of opposition in godly men to the ways of Christ and his Spirit; so far as they are unregenerate, so far they are opposite. Rom. viii. 7, "The carnal mind is enmity against God;" it is in the original, the wisdom of the flesh is enmity against God. There is flesh in the best men; that flesh hath wisdom, it hath a spirit; (the flesh is the old man, a whole man, and must have a spirit in it to act it, such a one as it is); and both the wisdom and spirit of the flesh are enmity to God, not subject to his law and will; and enmity to man, they work death, and end in death. Jonah had such wisdom, and such a spirit in him, when he ran from God; but it had cost him his life, if God had not been more gracious than he dutiful. Paul complains, he found a law in his members warring against the law of his mind, Rom. vii. 23. Gal. v. 17, "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit;" the work of the flesh is lusting and warring against the Spirit. It is with a godly man, as it was with Rebekah, Gen. xxv. 22, 23; she had great strugglings in her womb, and what was the cause of it? there were two nations in her womb, one contrary to the other; and there is heaven and earth in a godly man's heart, which are contrary, and make great strugglings. The same soul that commands obedience, opposeth obedience; the same will that delights in the law of God, hath a cross motion to the law of sin; the heart that trusteth God, doubts of his favour; while we are believing, unbelief is opposing; Mark ix. 24, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

Obs. 7. Saints may do the will of God unwillingly, if not against their will. Ezekiel was in bitterness, in the heat of his spirit, unwilling to be a prophet to this people, yet he went—"I went." Jonah goes to Nineveh, but his heart is not full on the work, there was not a thoroughness in it: he saw there was a necessity for it; God had power to punish disobedience, and could quickly crush him; and therefore now, in a prudential way, he would go and prophesy to Nineveh: there was in him an unwilling willingness, his spirit was not totally willing, as you may gather from chap. iv. 1—3. He was against the sparing of Nineveh; it stuck upon his spirit, that he should lie under the imputation of a false prophet; he wishes death upon it, which shows that his spirit was not wholly in the service. We do the work and will of God oftentimes with great unwillingness, as women part with their jointures, or children; as merchants throw their goods overboard in a storm; as many, now assessed, part with their goods to the public service; necessity is too strong for them, and prudence puts them on, and there is a willing unwillingness; so it is with the godly, they pray and hear unwillingly, they give unwillingly, &c. This is from the imbecility of grace, the power of corruption, misapprehension of God and his ways, violence of temptations, entanglements with the world, pressures of guilt, and unsuccessfulness of service. Let us be sensible of our unwillingnesses in God's ways, be humbled for them, and strive to do all animo prompto, with a ready mind. Deut. xxviii. 47, 48, "Because thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things; therefore shalt thou serve thine enemies." It is good for us to have our wills and whole hearts in the work of God.

Obs. 8. The infirmities of God's people do not interrupt his love and grace. Ezekiel went in bitterness, in heat of spirit, "but the hand of the Lord was strong upon me." This great distemper in the prophet did not distemper God, it did not cause him to retract or divert his love; but he takes hold of him by his hand, and upholds him, as a parent would do to a child, falling, or down; the weakness or sickness of a child doth not estrange the heart of the parent, it rather enlarges and draws out the bowels more fully. And so it is with God: Psal. ciii. 13, 14, "As a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him;" and why so? "he knoweth our frame; he remembereth we are but dust;" the Lord knows what weak and frail things we are. The word for frame, notes a formed vessel of earth, and the Chaldee expounds it, of our evil concupiscence, which carrieth us into error: God knows that we are earthen vessels, full of lusts and infirmities, which lead us from him, which disable us to serve him. Now here is the love, bowels, goodness of a God; because we are so, therefore he pitieth us: so Psal. lxxviii. 37, 38, their hearts were not right nor steadfast with God, but God was right and steadfast with them; "he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not." Infirmities may bring crosses, but cannot cut off from mercies: this should strengthen our faith, comfort our hearts, and encourage us with a holy boldness to go to the throne of grace. Heb. iv. 15, 16, Christ, saith the apostle, is a merciful "High Priest, touched with the feeling of our infirmities;" and what infers he upon it? "Let us go boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace in time of need."

Obs. 9. The Spirit of Christ is the healer and helper of our infirmities. Ezekiel was distempered and sick of the business, and the hand, the Spirit of the Lord, was strong upon him, that helped, that healed him: Psal. cvii. 20, "He sent his word and healed them;" the Spirit in that word did the cure. And here he sent his Spirit to seize upon Ezekiel, to work out the ill humor, to settle his thoughts, and sweeten his spirit that was so embittered. The Spirit is compared to oil, Psal. xlv. 7: 1 John ii. 27, and that is of a mollifying, cleansing, healing, and quickening nature. When Christ was anointed, then he healed the broken-hearted, Luke iv. 18, he dropped that oil into their hearts, and that did soften, purge, heal, and quicken them. Gifts of healing are attributed to the Spirit, 1 Cor. xii. 9; and helping our infirmities in prayer is the work of it, Rom. viii. 26. The Spirit brings the strength: we are συναρτῶσαι βῆ-ναι infirm, and can do nothing; but the Spirit, together with us, and for us, takes up the work, that we faint not. It answers to the word here, "was strong, took hold on me," bound up my spirit together, and strengthened me, not suffering my spirit to run out.

Lastly, the Spirit works invincibly. Ezekiel may struggle, but the Spirit will overcome; that was strong upon him. Men would not come in to Christ, and do his work, unless a Spirit mightier than their own come upon them. God's Spirit is a Spirit of power: Luke i. 35, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee;" the Holy Ghost is the power of the Highest. And when Paul preached, it was "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power," 1 Cor. ii. 4; and his ministry was able to beat down strong-holds, 2 Cor. x. 4, 5, to cast down all high things, and to captivate thoughts and spirits to the obedience of Christ. The Spirit works invisibly, it is a hand under a wing; and it works invincibly, it is a strong hand, there is none can stand before the strength of it: antichrist shall be consumed by the Spirit of the Lord, 2 Thess. ii. 8. This Spirit is fire to consume enemies; it is a hand, powerful to fetch in the friends under election. The Jews are now stiff enemies of Christ; but when the Spirit of grace is poured out upon them, when this hand takes hold of them, then they will mourn, come in, submit to Christ. No violence doth the Spirit offer to the wills of men, notwithstanding it works invincibly; it files off the enmity and averseness of our wills to God, and inclines them to yield, omnipotentis suavitate, et suavi omnipotentia, by an omnipotent sweetness, and a sweet omnipotence.

Prosop.

Ver. 15. Then I came to them of the captivity at Tel-abib, that dwelt by the river of Chebar, and I sat where they sat, and remained there astonished among them seven days.

In this verse is the terminus, or end, of his journey, and his condition then, mourning and sadness.

The word Tel-abib signifies a heap of new fruits, or green ears of corn; of אכר acervus, Acervum novarum frugum, and אביב, spica maturescens. Jerom and the Vulgate translate it, a heap of new fruit or corn; and Jerom thinks the Jews were placed there, to plough, sow, reap, thrash, and that now they were beating out the new corn. But this Ad opera rusticana exercenda, opinion we cannot admit, for it was in the fourth month, chap. i. 1, that Ezekiel had his vision, and their harvests in those hot countries were not in the fourth month, but rather in the first or second. The Israelites came out of Egypt in the month Abib, Exod. xiii. 4; and that was their first month, Exod. xii. 2, and answered to the latter end of that month which is called January, and to the beginning of the other called February. And in Exod. ix. 31, it is said, "the barley was in the ear;" the word is abib, an ear of corn, and denominates the month, because in it the barley eared. So then it could not be harvest when Ezekiel came to them at Tel-abib, it was rather over. We take the word for the name of a place, as Tel-melah, Tel-harsa, Ezra ii. 59; in their etymology, the one signifies a heap of wood, the other a heap of salt; yet by Ezra they are called places: "These were they which went up from Tel-melah, Tel-harsa," &c. so "Tel-abib" here. And it was in the middle part of Mesopotamia, between two rivers, Chebar and Saocorah; and here they were placed, as Junius thinks, both to secure them, that they might not think of getting away, being shut up between two rivers, or if they did, not easily accomplish it; and secondly, to secure the place, which was subject to inundations, and so uninhabited, and opened to enemies, but now by their labour, art, and strength, might be made useful and defensive.

“I sat where they sat, and remained there astonished among them seven days.” Sitting notes a quiet posture of the body, abiding in a place; Exod. xvi. 3. “When we sat by the flesh pots,” that is, abode, dwelt where we had them. Also great grief; Lam. ii. 10, “The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, and keep silence.” And so in that place in Isa. xlvii. 8, “I shall not sit as a widow,” solitary, mourning in deep sorrow; to which alludes that in Lam. i. 1, “How doth the city sit solitary! how is she become as a widow!” Great grief silenceth the whole man; the tongue speaks not, the body moves not. Job ii. 13, Job’s friends “sat down with him upon the ground seven days and nights, and none spake a word to him; for they saw that his grief was very great;” so great, it made them all quiet and hushed: and seven days he sat in that doleful posture, because they were used to mourn seven days in cases of great grief; as Joseph mourned seven days for his father, Gen. 1. 10; and seven days’ mourning is an argument of great grief, and a testimony of much love. If we refer our prophet’s mourning to the condition which the Jews were coming to, it might be lawful; he saw their death and funeral was at hand, and so, being sensible, laid it deeply to heart, and bewailed it seven days, testifying his good will and affection to them; but if we refer it to his unwillingness to go in the service Christ called him to, it is not excusable, but a further argument of his great weakness. The cause of the prophet’s sitting there seven days, might be to know the state of the people more exactly, to whom he was to prophesy; it might be upon divine command; it might also be for further direction from God when to begin his prophecy. A prophet he was made, but had no time appointed to begin his hard work. It might also be to prepare and awaken the people, that seeing him sit still, sad, amazed, they might inquire what this strange sadness meant, and so his word take the deeper impression when he should speak unto them.

“Astonished.” The Hebrew word מַשְׁתַּמֵּם masmim, from shamam, notes great astonishment, even to wonder; Isa. lix. 16, “He wondered that there was no intercessor.” It notes also desolation, and may here be rendered, I sat desolate seven days; the Spirit left me in that place, and men regarded me not, being full of grief, and telling them I had sad news; so the word is used, Lam. v. 18, “The mountain of Zion is desolate;” and thus we may take it. The vision being ended, the prophet, set down there by the Spirit, and neither seeing, hearing, or having to do now with Christ, the living creatures, wheels, or the Spirit, found himself desolate, and was astonished at that great change. The Septuagint renders it αναπεφθμενος, intimating the prophet’s meditating, and inward discoursing of the miseries and woes that were written in the roll, and coming upon the people; the hard task he had to perform among this people.

Obs. 1. That in the place and condition God sets his people, they must abide in the same. The Spirit brings Ezekiel to Tel-abib, there he continues, till the Spirit adviseth his departure; let him be among captives, between overflowing rivers, he continues and stirs not. It must not be any slight thing that removes men from the calling God hath set them in. Ministers may not at pleasure go from place to place, as if there were no tie upon them. Neither captivity, incorrigibility of persons, nor discommodity of place, are weighty enough to take off Ezekiel from that place and people the Spirit had set him over. When the Holy Ghost hath set men over a flock, they must take heed to that flock, and not seek occasion to be gone upon discontents, &c. The worst are forwardest to remove. The bramble will leave his place to be king, when the olive, fig-tree, and vine will not stir. Christ will not be made a king by entreaty, nor by force.

Obs. 2. The men of this world are politic for their own ends. The captivity were placed at Tel-abib, between two rivers, that they might not get away, that they might make that part of the country strong and useful. Worldly men are wiser in their generation than the children of light. How cunningly did Pharaoh deal with the Israelites! Exod. i. 10, “Let us work wisely with them,” saith he; they multiply, and we are in danger, lest upon any occasion they take part with our enemies, or make a head of themselves, or attempt an escape: come, let us set task-masters over them, wear them out with much work, and employ them to build cities for us. Here was the cunning to avoid the name of tyranny: he will not destroy them with sword, fire, open violence, but work they must in brick and clay, and fall by hard labour; so he covers up his cruelty under a fair pretence, and provides for his own security and profit in the Israelites’ service. Wicked and worldly men are all self, and all their actions draw home-wards, they are their own centres; the wisdom of the flesh, of the serpent, of the world is theirs, and they must needs be crafty for themselves.

Obs. 3. The condition of the saints and servants of God is very changeable here. Ezekiel hath a glorious vision, sight of, and converse with Christ, the company of angels, sees the course and motion of things in the world, had the Spirit enter into him, comforting him, strengthening and assisting him; and now he is a desolate, an astonished man, he sits as one forsaken of all. Here was a great change, and it was not Ezekiel’s case alone; others, even all the worthies of God, have found the like. David was strong through divine favour, and quickly troubled for the want of God’s face; he had his singings and his sorrowings, Psal. xxx.; he was oft in the valleys; Psal. xxv. 16, 17, “I am desolate and afflicted; the troubles of my heart are enlarged;” and Psal. cxliii. 4, “My spirit is overwhelmed, my heart within me is desolate.” Paul is one day rapt up into the third heavens, and another day he hath a thorn in the flesh; if he have the revelation of the Spirit to exalt him, he hath the buffetings of Satan to humble him. Paul himself knew changes.

Obs. 4. Distempers of spirit fasten and continue oft with the servants of God. Ezekiel was in his distemper of bitterness and heat of spirit seven days. It is not easy to shake off distempers when they have taken hold of us. Jonah was in an ill humour and frame of spirit many days together; he must be drenched, buried, and boiled in the whale’s belly, ere he will be pliable to the will of God. When Uzzah was smitten for his error, David was displeased, and in a pet with God himself, and would not bring the ark in three months to Sion, 2 Sam. vi.

Obs. 5. Distemperdness of spirit unfits for the service of God: he sits seven days, and nothing is done. The apostle James knew this, and therefore said, "Be slow to wrath; for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God," Jam. i. 19, 20. Wrath darkens the mind, and puts all out of frame. Wise men in their wrath see not their ways nor work: when the light of reason, truth, and the Spirit is gone, what can a man do befitting God? Wrath makes men err in their own business, much more in the Lord's; it works not the righteousness of God, but its own righteousness; that which seems right in its own eyes, that shall be done. Ezekiel thought it right not to prophesy, not to submit to the will of Christ and work of the Spirit; but his passion was prejudiced to him and to the work of God. It is evil when wrath prevents reason, and foreeth it to action; then whatever is done, is the work of anger, not of reason, not of righteousness. When wrath hath the kingdom, when that is in the head and heart, there is no place for the righteousness of God. This made Clement say, Where wrath dwells, God dwells not. Wrath is a special friend of Satan's, many of his counsels and designs are effected by it: the more of this humour, the more service hath hell; the less of it, the more serviceable for heaven. Moses was the meekest man upon the earth, and he did most work for heaven. Christ was meeker than all other, and he did work the righteousness of God effectually, he did work for heaven and earth.

Obs. 6. That the prophets could not prophesy at their pleasure. Ezekiel sits seven days, and there is no prophesying. Aquinas hath a question, whether prophecy be a habit; if it were so, it is in the power of man to use it any time, but so could not the prophet. When the Shunammite's son was dead, and she came to Elisha, what said he? "Her soul is vexed within her; and the Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me," 2 Kings iv. 27. Unless the Lord reveal himself unto them afresh, the prophets could not tell things; the schoolmen therefore conclude, that prophecy is not in the prophet as a habit, but as a transient impression. Habits are permanent things, but prophecy is a transient thing, a light in the air; for as the air doth always need a new illumination, so the mind of a prophet doth always need a new revelation, else the prophet sits in darkness, and knows not more than other men: Lam. ii. 9, "Her prophets find no vision from the Lord;" and so in Psal. lxxiv. 9, "There is no more any prophet, neither is there among us any that knoweth how long." It was night oft with the prophets. Nathan spake not from heaven, when he bid David go and do all that was in his heart touching the building of God a house; for it is said, "that night came the word of the Lord unto Nathan," 2 Sam. vii. 3, 4; before he had not a word, and when it came, it was not for David, but Solomon, to build the house. So that it is true which Gregory saith, Sometimes the spirit of prophecy is wanting to the prophets, and their minds are dark. Samuel mistook, when he said, "Surely the Lord's anointed is before him," 1 Sam. xvi. 6, 7.

Ver. 16—19. And it came to pass at the end of seven days, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

In these words, and the rest to the end of the chapter, is a new revelation made to the prophet, together with the events following thereupon; or thus:

I. You have the call of the prophet to his office renewed, and that is in the words read, and on to the end of the 21st verse.

II. Special directions and events laid down from the 21st verse to the end of the chapter.

In the words read, you have, First, the circumstance of time, when this repetition of his call or new revelation was made, and that was after "seven days," ver. 16.

Secondly, his office specified, which is to be a watchman," ver. 17.

Thirdly, the parties he is to watch over and admonish:

1. In general laid down, and that is, "the house of Israel," ver. 17.

2. More particularly:

(1.) "The wicked," ver. 18, 19.

(2.) "The righteous," ver. 20, 21.

Fourthly, the reasons of it, why he must admonish both sorts:

The first is, the danger and mischief of it; both they and he shall die if it be not done.

The second, it may be they will turn upon admonition, and so be saved; if not, yet the prophet delivers his own soul, and there is advantage by it.

The words in the 16th verse have little difficulty in them.

"At the end of seven days." It is probable the sitting still and silence of the prophet was from sabbath to sabbath; on that day he had his glorious vision, and seven days after he had a new revelation, the word of the Lord came to him. All the six days he was solitary, mourning, meditating, and silent, but on the seventh the Lord appeared again unto him; and so after, he had upon sabbaths revelations from God.

Junius.

Obs. 1. That God bears with the weaknesses and distempers of his servants. Ezekiel declines the call of Christ, shows his great ingratitude; having had such great favours from Christ, seen so much glory, and being commanded once, twice, to go and preach to the house of Israel, yet he sits down, is silent, and that seven days together. This might have provoked the Lord to great wrath, to have refused him, as a stubborn, self-willed man, and made him to say, he would never admit him to be his prophet, put such honour upon him, intrust him with such great matters; but the Lord bears with his weakness, yea, his continued weakness. Sometimes God's anger kindles, and breaks out quickly, and that for little things in our eyes and opinions; as the man that gathered a few sticks on the sabbath, he must be stoned to death; those who peeped irreverently into the ark, the Lord smote fifty thousand and upward dead for it presently, 1 Sam. vi. 19. Ananias and Sapphira, a small matter in our conceits, it was to keep back a portion of their goods, and to excuse it with a lie; for this God was wroth, and they died, Acts v.: but the weaknesses of his children he bears with and those great ones.

Obs. 2. Man's will and weakness cannot hinder the efficacy and execution of God's decree. The prophet's spirit was against this work; he refused, sat still seven days together, and would have frustrated God's intentions if he could, but it was decreed in heaven: that decree was efficacious, his will must be brought off, and he must be the man to execute God's pleasure in a prophetic way to the house of Israel. Jonah departs, will prejudice God's design concerning Nineveh; but the Lord knew how to humble him, to fetch him back, being fled, and to make him instrumental to his ends, notwithstanding his wilfulness and weakness. Psal. xxxiii. 9, "He commanded, and it stood fast;" and ver. 11, "The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever." Let there be contrary counsels, wills, commands; they stand not. God brings them to nought, he makes them of none effect: Prov. xix. 21, "There are many devices in a man's heart;" he thinks not to do this, and not to do that, and it shall be so and so; "nevertheless the counsel of the Lord shall stand;" he will perfect the work he hath begun in men, and by men, notwithstanding their infirmities.

Obs. 3. Spiritual employments must have sedate, quiet, well composed affections and spirits. The Spirit of prophecy came not upon Ezekiel all the time he was distempered and discontented; but when time had wrought off the distemper, and the ill humour was digested, then was he stirred by the Spirit of prophecy: when the minstrel was tuned, then the hand of the Lord came upon Elisha, 2 Kings iii. 15. Men's hearts and spirits are like minstrels, out of order quickly, and long in tuning, and right setting; but the music is sweetest when the instrument is best set, then God delights to communicate his Spirit to us, to employ us. In the night oft God appeared to the patriarchs; then were they most quiet, and fittest to receive instruction. In Augustus's days, when there was peace throughout the world, then was Christ given, then was he born. When there is peace throughout the little world, then are we aptest for reception of Christ's instructions, and readiest for his service; God will not commit weighty and great things to men, without due fitness for them. The prophet had this time deeply to consider of the business, and to get himself into such a frame, as might best sort with the function he was to be in.

Obs. 4. The Lord doth not leave his people long, although they be in distempers; at the end of seven days the word of the Lord came unto him. We may by our failings and distempers drive away God from us, but he will visit us again; he may be gone all the week, but come again at the end of it. God's anger is for a moment; our weeping for a night, and joy in the morning, Psal. xxx. 5. It is not long this good Physician will be absent from his patient, and when he comes, he will comfort and cure.

Obs. 5. Our prophet brought not his own, but the word of the Lord unto the people. It is his word must be commended unto them; prophets, apostles, ministers, are his ambassadors, and must speak what is given them in commission. If they go or speak of their own heads, they provoke God and wrong the people. Jer. xxiii. 30, "I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that steal my words, every one from his neighbour:" the false prophets would take some sayings of the true prophets, and mingle them with their own lies and errors, to get the more credit unto them; and sometimes by false interpretations they would wrest the word to establish their own phantasies. They would prophesy for their own glory and profit, and this was stealing of the word: they did handle the word alieno sensu, spiritu, et fine, in another sense and spirit, and for another end, than God or the true prophets intended; so that their word was not conceived to be the word of God, but their own. And yet they would fasten it upon God; ver. 31, "I am against the prophets that use their tongues, and say, He saith." The word is הלקתי which signifies, lenire, to mitigate. They flattered and smoothed up the people, speaking things pleasing, and said, "He saith." They made God the author of their dreams, which the Lord reproves, ver. 32, and saith, "Behold, I am against them that prophesy false dreams, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the Lord." People had need look to their teachers, what they are, whether sent of God, and such as speak the truths of God; otherwise they can look for no blessing, no profit; but when men come in God's name, and with God's word, you may look for great benefit; you must expect reality: for in the Hebrew are two words, which note יהוה reality and being. God's words are things of great weight and worth.

Ver. 17. I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me.

In this verse is the office of Ezekiel laid down:

First, generally, "a watchman."

Secondly, more peculiarly:

1. He must learn of Christ.

2. Warn the people.

"A watchman." צופה is from צפה to watch, to see from a high place, to look about on every side, to observe accurately; as in Prov. xv. 3, "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good." The word for beholding, is tzophoth, the same with that in the verse, and notes God's exact and accurate eyeing of things; and it is metaphorically taken from those that are set in watch-towers, whose office is to observe with the eye, and intention of mind, what danger is in preparation, approach, or execution, and to inform the city, town, or army, to which he is a watchman, that all may timely look to themselves. If any fire, robbery, treachery, invasion, or danger whatsoever, appeared, the watchmen were wont to give notice by signs or voice, both in the night and day, and that constantly. Such was the prophet to be here unto the house of Israel, he was to foresee and foretell the dangers that were threatened, prepared, approaching, in execution; and this he was to do constantly, according to that in Isa. xxi. 8, "I stand continually upon the watch-tower in the day time; and I am set in my ward whole nights:" so Gen. xxxi. 40.

There were two sorts of watchmen God set in his church; extraordinary, prophets, apostles, evangelists; and ordinary, pastors and teachers; these continue to this day, and these watch for the good of souls, Heb. xiii. 17, and their office is, as the prophets', to learn of Christ, and to warn the people: the other are ceased.

Obs. 1. The goodness and bounty of Christ, that converseth with, and communicates unto the sons of men his precious truths and counsels. "Son of man," saith Christ, "I have made thee," &c. It had been honour to Ezekiel to have had an angel confer with him, and impart secrets to him; it is a great matter to have a prince talk kindly to his subject, tell him his counsels and purposes: what was it then for our prophet, to have Christ, the Lord of angels, and King of kings, to speak lovingly to him, to tell him of heavenly mysteries! And thus he doth to us in his word, that yet never saw his face: there he opens himself sweetly to us, all things being written for our instruction.

Obs. 2. It is Christ's prerogative to appoint watchmen in the church. "I have made thee a watchman;" he might not make himself one; others, without Christ's commission and directions, might not have made him one. Men should not come into the watch-tower, except called. Heb. v. 4; if they do, they will prove neither good watchmen nor good workmen. Christ himself is the great Watchman of the church, he is the Head, and appoints who shall be in his stead. 2 Cor. v. 20, the apostles were in his stead; so the prophet here; so are all the faithful ministers of the gospel, who are called mediately by the church according to his will.

Obs. 3. The ministers of Christ must be men of knowledge. They are watchmen, and watchmen must have eyes in their heads, they must not be blind. In 1 Sam. ix. 9, they are called seers; if they have no eyes, they cannot be seers, and if not seers, not watchmen; and then mischief may befall the church suddenly, and that without remedy: if the blind lead the blind they may both fall into the ditch. Isa. ix. 16, "The leaders of this people cause them to err; and they that are led of them are destroyed." Ignorance causeth error, and error destruction; therefore said the apostle to the elders of Ephesus, "Take heed to the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers," ἐπισκόπους, Acts xx. 28, unto which, and over which you are overseers, or watchmen. The Septuagint renders it here in our prophet, σκόπων; and Origen calls a bishop or watchman, oculum ecclesie, the eye of the church. And Psal. cix. 8. "Let another take his office;" the word office is from pacad, which is, to visit; and visiting cannot be without eyes, without knowledge. If a watchman want eyes and knowledge, how can he discern danger, instruct the ignorant, heal the wounded, reduce the straying, lift up the fallen, feed the hungry, comfort the feeble, resolve conscience, and compare things past with things present and future: a watchman, a minister, should be like Argus, who, the poets say, had a hundred eyes; they should be full of eyes. The beasts about Christ's throne were full of eyes, before and behind, Rev. iv. 6; they saw things gone, and things to come; they saw every way. Ignorance is blamable in any, but chiefly in a watchman. Papists say, Ignorance is the mother of devotion, but the Toletan council tells them otherwise. Ignorance is the mother of all errors, and chiefly to be avoided in the ministers of God, who have taken upon them the office to instruct the people of God. "The priest's lips should keep knowledge," not ignorance, Mal. ii. 7. Let antichrist have ignorant priests, blind watchmen; Christ must have knowing, judicious, seeing watchmen; they are men of God, "thoroughly furnished," 2 Tim. iii. 17.

Obs. 4. Ministers must not be sleepy, drowsy persons. They are watchmen, and it is not enough to have eyes in their heads, but their eyes must be open; not sufficient to have knowledge, but that must be improved: the wakeful geese did better service than the sleepy watchmen. Matt. xiii. 25, "While men slept, the enemy came and sowed tares." By men Jerom and Augustine understand the officers of the church; and by their sleeping, their carelessness and negligence in their place; wicked ones took advantage to sow tares, errors, and heresy, while they were remiss. The same word that is for a seer, is for a sleeper, chostin; because if men see not to purpose, they are no better than sleepers. Such watchmen Isaiah speaks of, chap. lvi. 10, "His watchmen are blind, sleeping; lying down, loving to slumber." When the shepherds sleep, then the wolves watch, walk, and devour. Acts xx. 29, "I know, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Therefore watch," saith he, ver. 31; intimating, that if there be not watching of the shepherds, there will be fearful spoiling of the sheep; the sleepiness of the shepherds is the joy of the wolves. Luke xii. 37, "Blessed are those," &c.

Somnolentia pastorum est gaudium luporum. I. A. Zm. tract. De Timoe Dei.

Obs. 5. If watchmen, then they must endure hardships, all winds and weathers, the cold of the night, and heat of the day. They must look for succession of good and bad. Isa. xxi. 11, 12. "Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night." It was now night with the watchmen, there were troubles, afflictions, saddening things; but there was a morning of hope, and after that an evening of sorrows; changeable conditions, which the watchman must endure. 2 Tim. ii. 3, Paul counsels Timothy to endure hardness as a good soldier of Christ. Soldiers must not only stand sentinel in the night and day, but go upon desperate services. Such a watchman was Paul; 2 Cor. xi. 23—30, he saith, in stripes he was above measure, in prisons frequent, in deaths oft, five times he had forty stripes save one, thrice was he beaten with rods, once stoned, thrice he suffered shipwreck, a night and a day in the deeps, in perils every where, in weariness, painfulness, watchings, fastings, cold, nakedness, &c. The scouts and sentinels are exposed to the greatest hazards, they are taken first. You know the ministers are the men stricken at in these days, they are likeliest to meet with the first and greatest dangers. When the people were to go through the waters of Jordan, Josh. iii. 13, the Levites and priests were first to go in, and to stand therein till all the people passed over. It is the watchmen who are to meet with the waters of affliction, and to stand in them.

Obs. 6. That the church and people of God, the house of Israel, are subject to dangers and enemies; otherwise what should a watchman need? Cities and armies do not send out scouts and watchmen, if there are no enemies; where there is watching and warding, you may be sure of it there is danger. The church is like a ship, tossed at sea among rocks and sands, with winds and waves, and needs the most skilful pilot to direct and steer it; it is like a lamb among lions, and needs the most watchful shepherd. They were in much danger in Babylon amidst scoffing enemies, and the church is not safe in Zion; her children are the wheat, and the world thrasheth them; they are the vine, the clusters, and the wicked reed, press, tear them. What is the colour of the church but black? Schisms have so divided her, errors so shaken her, heresies so tossed her, and persecutions so battered her, that she is black and blue, and hardly a sound part left in her. The church is besieged with devils and wicked men, open enemies, secret hypocrites, endangered daily; out of its own bosom and bowels do those arise that threaten the ruin of it daily, Acts xx. 30. The church hath bred Eutychians, Nestorians, Pelagians, antitrinitarians, and a generation of vipers in our days, that under pretence of the church, would eat up the true church; and certainly it had been done, if we had not had a better watchman than Ezekiel. Isa. xxvii. 3, "I the Lord do keep it; lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day."

Obs. 7. That watchmen are not for themselves, but for the flock, for the whole. "I have made thee a watchman to the house of Israel," not some particular person, not some part, not to half, but to the house of Israel. When one is become a watchman, he hath a great trust committed to him, and must look to that, the welfare of the whole depends on him: as a man, as a christian, he may foresee danger, and hide himself; but as a watchman he may not foresee it, run away, and leave the flock to spoil; he must discover it, discharge the trust reposed in him, and see to the safety of the whole, with the hazard of himself; if he do not so he will show himself a treacherous watchman, a false, fearful, self-seeking prophet: the good of Zion, and not of self, should be aimed at in every prophet, in every minister. But we may take up the apostle's complaint in Phil. ii. 21, "All seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's," not his gospel, his church, his government. Paul had the care of all the churches upon him, 2 Cor. xi. 28. And for Corinth, he sought not theirs, but them, chap. xii. 14, their safety, their peace, comfort, growth in knowledge, in faith, in all spiritual excellences; and why? he looked upon them as his children, his bowels, his heirs, and therefore would communicate all he could to them, and do what was in his power for them.

Hence he saith in ver. 15, "I will very gladly spend and be spent for you:" the former word, δαπανήσω, notes to be at cost with them, to take some pains; he would pray for them, preach to them, write to them, do much: but the other word notes the spending of all; so that he would keep back nothing at all, his estate, his strength should go, so that he would empty himself wholly; and when that was done, then his spirit, his blood, his life should go. Besides that that false apostles or teachers will do, I will do more: if they will give you of their estates, you shall have all mine; if they will take pains, I will take more; if they will venture their liberties to do you good, I will venture my life and all for you: let them go far, I will go beyond them, gladly will I be spent for you; it is for your souls, not for your estates. And though he should get nothing by it, he would do it, though they should love him the less. Here is a great apostle, of a greater spirit, and of the greatest charity; he was careful of all those he was a watchman unto, faithful in seeking their good, and should be a precedent unto us.

Now I come to the two particular duties of the watchman, laid down in the verse:

"Therefore hear the word at my mouth," there is the first;

"And give them warning from me," there is the second.

Obs. 1. That none have such a sufficiency of light, knowledge, grace, but they must depend upon Christ for more. Ezekiel had seen and heard much, the Spirit entered into him, he had eaten the roll, yet he must attend upon Christ, and hear the word at his mouth. No prophet, no apostle, no minister hath a perfection of knowledge, or knoweth the whole mind of Christ. Paul studied to know Christ more and more; and so did other apostles: if they had not received daily, they could not have given daily.

Obs. 2. That ministers must learn as well as teach, hear before they speak; and it is Christ they must hear, of him they must learn. Thou shalt "hear the word at my mouth:" they must hear a word, but it must be a word of Christ; he spake immediately to Ezekiel, he speaks in his word to us: Matt. xvii. 5. "Hear him," saith the Father; and why? "He is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased;" what he saith is truth, he had it from my bosom, out of my counsels, and it is pleasing unto me; therefore hear him. And Matt. xxiii. 8, "One is your Master," καθ' ἑνός, "even Christ;" he is the only teacher, according to the mind of God: he is the leader in the way, in the right and good way. Then prophets and ministers must learn, and be learned; but their learning is not to be fetched from Aristotle, Justinian, Machiavel, from traditions, fathers, or councils, but from Christ. Ministers are watchmen, and therefore they must hear the word at Christ's mouth; they must inform the church and people of God in nothing he speaks not and warrants not. You have an excellent place in Hab. ii. 1, "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me." The prophet's eye and ear were towards God, he cared not what the people and false prophets said, desired, determined, expected, but he only looked at God; he would see what he did, hear what he said, which way he moved, and take all his light from him, and then he knew he should not err, he should not wrong any. And it follows, "The Lord answered me, and said;" the prophet durst not give out any thing to the church, till the Lord first gave out to him; and when ought was revealed to him, he durst not keep it back. If prophets might not bring what they had not from the mouth of God, how shall we dare to do it? They sin greatly, who obtrude upon the church the wills and decrees of men, as authenticall.

Obs. 3. That it is the office of prophets and ministers, to premonish their people, to foresee danger, and foretell them. The word sahaz properly signifies to shine, enlighten, to make clear as the sun; and metaphorically, to admonish, because he who is admonished is enlightened. Ministers must deal plainly and clearly with sinners; convince them of their sins, and the punishments which are threatened against them. Ministers must not daub and sew pillows under men's elbows; but, as it is in Isa. lviii. 1, they must "cry aloud," and "not spare," they must "lift up their voice like trumpets, and show the people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins." The word "show them" notes a setting of them before their faces; so that they must see and take notice of them, and the danger they are subject unto. The ministers must not spare any, not great ones, not the greatest, the house of Jacob must be told of them; and Ezekiel is a watchman to the house of Israel, to the kings, princes, nobles, great, small, to all; therefore all must be warned. Chrysostom told Eudoxia the empress of her sins, and spared not for her greatness: she had set up a silver statue, about which the people exercised vain and needless sports, which tended to the disgrace of the church, and for this he dealt roundly with her. It is the prophets' fault, that princes and great ones are so bad; they seldom hear of their own sins, or God's truths.

Qui admonetur, illustratur et de rebus futuris educatur.

Obs. 4. The prophets and ministers of Christ are to do their office in the name of Christ. Thou shalt "give them warning from me," not from thyself, not in thine own name. Christ, when he was upon the great work of redeeming man, and revealing the gospel, said he came in his Father's name, John v. 43, and did his work in his Father's name, John x. 25. God sent the Son, and he did all in his name. Christ sends prophets, apostles, ministers, and they must preach and work in his name; because what they ask in his name, they receive, it is done for them; and what they do in his name abides, is blessed, John xv. 16. This should prevail with people to receive the messengers of Christ as his messengers, as those who come in his name, whatever their message be, conviction of sin, denouncing of judgment. Saith Paul, 2 Cor. v. 20, "We pray you in Christ's stead;" and here Ezekiel must warn them from Christ: be it matter of comfort or terror, all must be done in Christ's name and stead, and they entertained as those that are sent of Christ, and come from him. It is good for us so to do, for in receiving them, we receive Christ; and that is not all, we receive the Father also, that sent Christ, Matt. x. 40. A minister is good company when he brings God and Christ with him; and there is nothing lost by receiving any messenger of Christ the right way; ver. 41, "He that receives a prophet in the name of a prophet, shall receive a prophet's Non quia dives, potens, amicus. reward." You must not receive a man because he is learned, witty, of note, akin unto you, because he is engaged to you, or you to him, because you have some design upon him; but you must receive him in the name of a prophet, because he belongs to Christ, is sent out by him, and comes in his name; and then you shall have a prophet's reward, you shall profit by his doctrine, he shall bless you in the name of Christ, his prayer shall be available for you. The widow of Sarepta lost nothing by entertaining Elijah, nor the Shunammite by receiving Elisha; their presence and prayers did much advantage them. But you may take the words thus: "A prophet's reward," that is, the prophets have a great, hard, and glorious work in hand, and they shall have an eminent reward in heaven; and seeing you receive them as prophets in my name, notwithstanding all the reproach and discouragements they meet with, and danger their doctrine brings; seeing you encourage them, and help on their work, you shall have such reward as they have, be received into the same mansion I receive them.

Ver. 18, 19. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

In these verses is a more particular object of his office, viz. "the wicked," whom he must tell of his sin, or die for it. Here was the operation of the roll, sad and bitter work in the thoughts and apprehensions of the prophet.

"When I say unto the wicked." God speaks not immediately unto the wicked, how then is it here said, "When I say?" &c. God sometimes speaks to them by their conscience, which tells them from God, that they are guilty, and shall die. But this reaches not the sense of the words; it may be thus taken: "When I say to the wicked," that is, in my word; God speaks to all wicked men in his word, and there it is evidenced what is the portion of every sinner: but yet there is somewhat more in this phrase, "When I say to the wicked," that is, of the wicked, "Thou shalt die, and thou givest him not warning," &c. That in Heb. i. 7, "Of the angels he saith," in the original is, πρὸς τὰς ἀγγέλους λέγει, to the angels, but the sense is, "of the angels he saith;" and so here, "to the wicked," is, of the wicked: or, if this be not full enough, you may take it thus; When I suggest to thee by my Spirit, that the wicked shall die, and thou dost not give him notice thereof, &c.

"Thou shalt surely die." מות תמות in dying thou shalt die, that is, thou shalt certainly die. Amongst the Hebrews, where there is repetition of the word by an adverb, gerund, participle, or the verb itself, it ever increaseth the signification of the first word; as in 1 Kings viii. 13, "I have surely built thee an house;" it is in the Hebrew, In building I have built thee an house: so in 1 Sam. xxvi. 25, "Thou shalt both do great things, and also shalt still prevail;" the Hebrew is, in doing thou shalt do, in prevailing thou shalt prevail; by such duplication of the words, the signification is intended; and so in these words, "thou shalt surely die."

"In his iniquity." That is, for his iniquity; so the preposition בְּ both must be understood. If he would take notice of his sin, repent and leave it, he should not die; but because he goes on in it, he shall die for it. Hosea xii. 12, there you find "Israel served for a wife;" the Hebrew is נאשה in a wife, but the sense enforeeth it to be rendered "for a wife," and so here, "for his iniquity."

"His blood will I require at thine hand." His death shall be imputed unto thee, and thou shalt answer for it, I will charge it upon thy head, and deal with thee as a murderer; thou hast shed his blood, and I will avenge it on thee; so the word "require" imports, Gen. ix. 5, "Surely your blood of your lives will I require," &c. "Require" is thrice in that verse; and what is meant by requiring the blood or life of man, is fully expressed in the next verse, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed;" so then when blood is shed, and life is lost, God's requiring of it is to have blood for blood, and life for life; he that sheds blood, or suffers blood to be shed, when he may prevent it, he shall be responsible for it. God is wronged by shedding of blood, and will have satisfaction for it; therefore he is said to make inquisition for blood, Psal. ix. 12. God's requiring, mentioned Deut. xviii. 19, is expounded by Peter, of destruction, Acts iii. 23.

What death is meant in this verse is doubted among interpreters: whether the death of the body, or of the soul, or of both. The ancients interpret it of the death of the soul; the soul of the wicked going on in his sin, and of the prophet neglecting his duty, shall die for it. Some later expositors would have it meant of the death of the body, some temporal judgment to cut them off by; but we see many ill prophets, that neglect to warn the wicked of their evil ways, and many wicked men, go on in their sinful courses, and neither taken away by temporal judgments. The young prophet was slain by a lion, 1 Kings xiii. because he was less faithful than he should have been; and Jonah was cast into the deep, buried in the belly of a whale, because he declined the service of the Lord; but these were extraordinary acts and chastisements, not vindictæ, true, real punishments. I conceive therefore by death is meant all calamities leading unto death, and the death of soul and body at last, if faith and repentance did not intervene. If eternal death be due to the sinner dying in his sins, it is threatened to the prophet for not telling him of his sin; otherwise a temporal punishment for an immortal soul lost eternally by the negligence of the prophet, should be all the recompence made, and that is not compensatio sufficiens, an ample compensation; nay, frequently there should not be any, for ill and idle prophets do live as long, as healthfully and happily as others, and die without any hand of God observable upon them.

Obs. 1. The Lord Christ knows who are wicked and vile. We guess at men, and presume oft wrongfully they are such, but the Lord knows who are such in truth, and is not deceived; he knows the goats and swine as really as the sheep and lambs; he can distinguish between the vile and precious, between his jewels and the reprobate silver. He never mistitles or miscalls any; he knew the scribes and Pharisees were hypocrites, and therefore called them so; he knew that Judas was a traitor, and therefore branded him with that name; he called Herod a fox, Nathanael a true Israelite, and in neither was he mistaken; 2 Tim. ii. 9, "The Lord knoweth them that are his," yea, and those that are not his. Christ could tell Ezekiel what the people of Israel were, better than himself that dwelt amongst them; he told him they were briars, thorns, scorpions, a rebellious house. If all the world besides had said so, and not Christ, it had been no great matter; the world is full of error, it mistakes; but when the Lord himself, who is infallible, shall pronounce a man wicked, then is he wicked indeed. There is great weight in it, let us look to it; what he saith in his word of us, if he call us wicked, proud, froward, &c. we are so.

Obs. 2. The power of life and death is in Christ's hand. "When I say to the wicked, Thou shalt die;" he hath authority over their lives, and can at his pleasure pronounce them dead men: Acts iii. 15, he is "the Prince of life;" and Rev. i. 18, he hath "the keys of hell and death," he can let out the soul from the body, and let it into hell, when he will. The life of man, which is most dear to him, is at the will of another. He spake with authority, when he said, "Bring those mine enemies that will not have me to reign over them, and slay them before me," Luke xix. 27. When men are armed with power over our lives, they are much feared. Judges, when they go forth to keep assizes, make counties to quake; and princes, when they go forth to war, make kingdoms tremble. Now, Psal. ii. 10—12, kings and judges are commanded to serve him with fear, to kiss him with subjection, lest he be angry, and command them to be slain, or tell them they shall die. If kings and judges, that make others fear, must fear the Lord Christ, and submit unto him, how should all under them do it then! Christ knows us, what we are, how we have sinned, what we deserve, and can in a moment destroy us, or proclaim in our consciences that we shall die in our iniquities, and eternally suffer for them. It was he awakened Judas's conscience, and set it on fire, let out his life, and sent his soul to perdition. Be you great or small, he is the Lord, he is Ruler of the princes of the earth, all power is in his hand; and though he be the Lamb of God, yet he is also the Lion of the tribe of Judah, and can shake kingdoms and consciences with his voice: let us fear before him.

Obs. 3. When Christ sends prophets and ministers, he doth not deprive himself of his power, and authorize them to condemn or absolve at their pleasure; they must depend upon Christ, hear him speak, and say of the wicked, "Thou shalt surely die," before they pronounce a man a dead man, a wicked man. Their power is declaratory, and if Christ do not declare to them, they must not declare against others; Jam. iv. 12, "There is one Lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy: who art thou that judgest another?" None have power to make or impose laws upon the good or the bad, but Christ; all others must have warrant from him, be they princes or prophets; and why? it is he that hath the power to save and to destroy, not they; and therefore it follows; "Who art thou that judgest another?" It is arrogance and boldness in any to step into Christ's place, and impose any laws, decrees, or inventions of men upon the consciences of others, or to judge the conditions of men, without warrant from Christ, and his word; prophets may not do it, much less others. Hence, what the prophets and all ministers say, must be examined: Isa. viii. 20, "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them;" no morning, saith the Hebrew; because Christ hath not appeared unto them, warranted them, and then their impositions and censures have no weight in them, and we may prudentially refuse them.

Obs. 4. The fruit of sin is death. If wickedness be found in men, death will be threatened from God; wickedness calls for its pay, and that is death: "If I say to the wicked, Thou shalt surely die." When man's wickedness clamours in heaven, Christ will cause the sound of death to be heard on earth: Rom. vi. 23, "The wages of sin is death;" the word is ὀψώνια, and properly signifies whatever is edible with bread, and synecdochically, the wages or salary of soldiers, and it suits in both senses with our purpose. Sin is a work, and a work of darkness, Eph. v. 11, a work of the flesh, Gal. v. 19, and they who commit it are workers of iniquity, Psal. liii. 4; and it is equity that workmen should have meat and wages, and here is both; death is the delicacy that the sinner hath to feed upon, and death the wages that the sinner earns; such meat and wages he is sure to have. Others may miss of both, work and have no meat, work and go without wages; but this workman, the wicked man, he shall never miss of either of these, "he shall surely die," his meat and wages shall not be withheld; man's own sin will slay him, Prov. v. 22.

Obs. 5. The prophets and ministers of Christ must not only warn the people, but warn them oft, warn them themselves, and speak to warn, put on others also to do it; they must not be slack, remiss in this business, they must do it earnestly and constantly, use all means to regain the wicked; the repetition of the words imports so much; if thou givest him not warning, nor speak to warn; he must be solicitous and frequent in the work. Paul knew it, and therefore counsels Timothy, not only to preach the word, but to be instant, in season and out of season, 2 Tim. iv. 2. Carnal reason counts preaching unseasonable, that is, upon week days and occasional; but the servants of God must take all opportunities to warn sinners of their evil courses, and to win souls. Christ forbore his meat and drink, and Paul his sleep, Acts xx. 7, to preach unto the people. Flesh and blood judges night preaching unseasonable, if not unlawful; but Paul thought it not unseasonable to preach even till midnight to do them good; he was a night preacher and a day preacher; ver. 31, saith he, "By the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day." Such was his vigilance and diligence; he was exceeding careful to prevent evil, and to do them good; Phil. iii. 18, he told them often of the same thing, and warned them to take heed of the same men.

Obs. 6. There is hope of wicked men, that live in dissolute ways. Before, the Lord termed them "a rebellious nation, impudent children, stiff-hearted, briars, thorns, scorpions, most rebellious, that rebellious house;" and here he calls them "wicked ones;" and yet they must be warned, that they may return from their wicked ways and live. Some are hopeful and curable, where wickedness prevails generally, and all seems desperate. Manasses was as wicked a king as lived, a great idolater, a great dealer with enchanters, wizards, and familiar spirits, a great seducer of the people, to make them do worse than the nations did, a great shudder of innocent blood: so that the text saith, he did "wickedly above all that the Amorites did," 2 Kings xxi. 11: yet this great sinner found mercy, greater than all his sins; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12, 13, "he humbled himself greatly," he prayed, and God was entreated of him. He who is wicked one day, may turn another day; he may become penitent and believing the next day, that is cursing, blaspheming this day, as in Saul. Some come in early, at the third, sixth, ninth hour; others late, at the eleventh and twelfth; the thief came in at the last hour. Let times be never so corrupt, persons desperately wicked, yet there is hope, and God may have a seed amongst them. Let us throw the net oft, we may catch fish in maris mortuo, the dead sea.

Obs. 7. The end and scope of a prophet's and minister's labours must be to save life. He must warn the wicked, that so he may save his life, preserve his soul. Paul tells Timothy, that by preaching and continuing in the word, he should save himself, and those that heard him, 1 Tim. iv. 16. Men's lives and souls are in great danger daily: errors, heresies, lusts, temptations, threaten ruin and destruction to men continually; the work and care of the prophets is, to secure them from these, and to recall them from their sinful practices. Jam. v. 20, "He that converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins." That which Ezekiel calls the sinner's wicked way, James calls "the error of his way," his sinful manners, actions, courses, opinions, humours, affections, and principles; from these must the servant of God labour to deliver him. It is ministers' work, and the end of the ministry, to save souls; therefore,

(1.) Their scope must not be to show learning, wit, eloquence. The apostle preached, "but not with wisdom of words," 1 Cor. i. 17; "not with excellency of speech," chap. ii. 1; "not with enticing words of man's wisdom," ver. 4: and he gives the reason of it; "lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect;" that is, lest men should think they are saved rather by virtue of man's wisdom than Christ's passion. Or as it is more fully in chap. ii. 5, that their "faith should not stand in the wisdom of men." It will go off from one to another, as men are more witty, and hold out the truth in finer and more enticing expressions, which will prove evil. Therefore he declined the wisdom of men, and preached in demonstration of the Spirit, that their faith might stand in the power of God, in such conviction and operation of the Spirit, as might breed invincible stedfastness in them.

(2.) Not to please men. Gal. i. 10, "Do I seek to please men?" if that were my end, "I should not be the servant of Christ;" but he must serve Christ in saving of souls, not in pleasing of men. When that is propounded unto men, they will subject truth to men's humour, and become flatterers; but ministers must not do so, not frame their sermons according to men's humours and minds. Jer. xv. 19, "Let them return unto thee, but return not thou unto them;" do not thou comply, debase the truth, to please them, but speak as the oracles of God, and let them please or provoke, it matters not; the provoking of them may be the nearest way to their salvation, and that is thy end.

(3.) Not to get a living; that is not the end of a prophet's office; it is to make men living men, to save their lives and souls. Paul preached the gospel without charge to any, and told the Corinthians he sought them, not theirs, their souls, not their substance. Yet he denies not but "that they that preach the gospel should live of it," 1 Cor. ix. 14. It is fit preachers should have maintenance, Cadit asina, et est qui sub-levat eam, perit anima et nemo est qui reparat. Bern. and sufficient; but the end of preaching is not a living, but life, the life of sinners, to save, to deliver them. Seeing this is the end of their calling, how should it quicken them to their work! If a sheep were in a pit, a child in a fire, what haste would we make to pull them forth! And shall we see souls rushing into the eternal pit, the eternal fire, and not move our feet, our tongues to help them!

Obs. 8. The office of a prophet and minister is honourable. It is to save life, to save souls; their calling is conversant about the lives and souls of men. The soul is the immediate work of God, the image of God, of more worth than all the world. It was for the soul's sake that Christ came down from heaven, prayed, preached, wrought miracles, suffered death, and gave his heart's blood. This made the father say, Precious is the soul, being redeemed with Christ's blood. And being a thing of such worth and consequence, the minister's work is to save it, that very work which is the Lord's and Christ's. Therefore in 1 Cor. iii. 9, the apostle saith of himself, and all ministers, "We are labourers together with God," co-workers, concurrent with God in the salvation of sinners, Magna res anima quae Christi sanguine redempta est. Bern. Ep.

This is great honour, and made Jerom say, Ipse Salvator apostolos suos mundi esse voluit salvatores, Christ hath made apostles saviours of the world. He calls them the light and salt of the world, they enlighten the blind, and season the unsavoury souls of men, and so save them from corruption and perdition. It is a hard, but an honourable work; therefore saith James, Let him know that hath converted a sinner, that he hath saved a soul from death, Jam. v. 20; let him know it, it is a great and glorious work which is done, that he may be encouraged, and God be praised. αἰνεῖσθαι.

Obs. 9. Ignorance will be no plea for wicked men. If they be not warned, not told of their sins, they shall die. Men are apt to excuse themselves; they are ignorant, they know not this or that to be sins, their teachers were insufficient or negligent; and this may be truth; but neither their fault nor thy ignorance will be a sufficient plea before God: warned or unwarned, the wicked shall die. Isa. xxvii. 11, "It is a people of no understanding; therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will show them no favour." Nescience may excuse in part, but ignorance hardly at all. That which men produce in favour of themselves, God produces against them. You are an ignorant people, saith God, of no understanding; you know not prima principia, first principles, neither God nor yourselves, and think because you are ignorant, therefore to find mercy and favour at my hands; but you are deceived, your ignorance aggravates your woe ever; therefore will I show you no mercy, no favour. Those that are ignorant of God and his ways, God will be ignorant of them in their greatest straits: "Depart from me; I never knew you," Matt. vii. 23. Ignorance is a great evil; it makes men brutish, like Nebuchadnezzar, who had an ox's heart in a man's shape. Ignorance is part of the devil's image, as knowledge is of God's; we should labour therefore to get knowledge, savoury and saving; for it is not good that the heart be without knowledge, Prov. xix. 2.

Obs. 10. See here who are the most eruel, bloody, and damning ministers; even those that are silent, that warn not the people of their sins, that preach flattering things, or to no purpose. Let men be dumb, and not speak at all, or preach so as not to warn them of their sins and dangers; they are, whoever they be, whether the greater or lesser clergy, as they use to distinguish themselves, they are the bloody, damning, soul-murdering ministers. You cry out of those ministers that tell you most of your sins, that set judgment, hell, and damnation before you, they are bitter, harsh men, cried out of on all sides; whereas they are the faithfullest friends that sinners have; they would fain save your souls, pull you out of the pit, keep you out of hell, and help you into heaven; and are they censurable for this? Should one see a company of travellers going in a way they should fall into the hands of cavaliers or thieves, and tell them the danger of it with great affection and compassion; should another see them, and say nothing, or bid them go on, and they do so, are taken, stripped, imprisoned, starved to death; you can easily tell which of these dealt most faithfully and friendly, which treacherously and cruelly. Too many of the ministers in England have been faulty this way, and guilty of murdering multitudes, if not millions of souls; it is one of the crying sins of the land, that we have had such a dumb, insufficient, and consequently such a bloody, soul-damning ministry; and many amongst them having slain souls, now, by putting on these wars, seek to slay bodies also.

Obs. 11. There is a great necessity lieth upon the prophets and ministers of Christ, to preach, and to preach home to the conscience. Warn them they must, and so warn them that they may take notice; else it is in vain, and shall be before the Lord as no warning. This they must do, and do it oft; and why? else the blood of the wicked will be required at their hand. Their blood, their lives, lie at the stake for sinners' souls, they have a hard task, a dangerous calling; and therefore had need preach, and tell them of their sins, that, if it be possible, they may save their souls, if not, their own. People wonder many times at some preachers, they are so fiery, so particular, so terrible, so long. You may cease to wonder; their lives, their souls, go for it, if they do it not; the hazard of souls and lives will make dumb men speak. Croesus' son being dumb, and seeing one ready to strike and endanger the life of his father, cried out, "What! will you kill my father?" and if our dumb ministers had any faith, if they did believe that sin was slaying the souls of their people, they would lift up their voice, they would speak. Psal. cxvi. 10, "I believed," said David, "therefore have I spoken;" and godly ministers believe men's souls are in danger, that their own do lie at the stake, and therefore they have spoken, do speak, and will speak. You that have curam animarum, the charge of souls, look about you; if you discharge not your duty, you undo them, and undo yourselves; let not fear, favour, credits, gifts, hopes, bias you; let not difficulties, mistakes of people, or any other thing, discourage you; but remember your own danger, warn sinners, else their blood will be upon you, and that is a dreadful thing. Did men well consider this, they would not be so greedy of livings, and pawn their souls for pelf. If the death of the body were only here meant, as it is not, we have great cause to fear silence; for if we be liable to death for the death of that which is perishable and must die, what guilt then doth a prophet contract for the death of a soul, which might have lived for ever if he had done his duty! David knew the weight of blood-guiltiness; Psal. li. 14, when he cried out so, "Deliver me from blood-guiltiness," &c. That was but the blood of the body; what then is the blood of souls! it is a mountainous, sinking thing. We have sins sufficient of our own, we had not need to draw the guilt of others upon us. So many we kill, as we see to sin, and silently suffer to go on in their sins. Paul knew it, and therefore said, "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel," 1 Cor. ix. 16. And there is a woe to all that have charges, that preach not unto them; it is needful for us all, but especially for non-residents, dumb ministers, those who are negligent in their preaching, or impertinent, to meditate oft on these words, "his blood will I require at thy hands;" which words are fulmina, non verba, thunderbolts, not words, saith Erasmus. When the bell rings for a wicked man, fear, lest there be blood to be required at thy hand. Euenius, a shepherd, that had the sheep belonging to a city committed to him, through his negligence, a wolf entered, and devoured sixty of them; upon this he was condemned, and lost his eyes. Not only ministers, but parents and masters, their souls are engaged for their children and servants, and they must be responsible for them, if they warn them not, if they perish through their default.

Obs. 12. It is the duty of people to hear their ministers, and willingly to receive instructions, and take warning from them; especially people of their ministers, because they watch for their souls, they work for them, and they venture for them, even their own lives and souls; it is mercy God will send any to admonish us. If we hearken to admonitions we shall live, if we do not, we grieve the servants of God; if they be silent, our sins are not the less.

Obs. 1. That men may be warned from their wicked ways, and yet be never the better, they may go on still; this is too evident amongst us daily.

Obs. 2. It is not fruitless, if wicked men return not from their evil ways upon warning. The prophet hath warned the wicked, and hath freed his own soul; and this was a great comfort unto Paul, Acts xx. 26, when he appeals to the people themselves, "I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men;" and how doth he prove it? thus, "for I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." He left none unwarned of sin and danger, untaught their duty towards God and man; and therefore he had this testimony, yielding sound comfort, "I am pure from the blood of all." So when he had preached Christ to the Jews, and they opposed, blasphemed, "he shook his raiment, and said, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean," Acts xviii. 5, 6; much like that of David, 2 Sam. iii. 28, 29, "I and my kingdom are guiltless before the Lord for ever from the blood of Abner; let it rest on the head of Joab." That which Paul calls clean, David calls guiltless; when a man is guiltless, he is clean, he hath solid comfort. A minister having conscientiously warned the wicked, and nothing comes of it in regard of them, yet somewhat comes of it in regard of himself; he is a free man, a clear man; the blood of souls shall not be charged upon him. A minister that is faithful shall not need to complain of the want of success; if he save not others he shall save himself.

Herod. 1. 9.

Ver. 20, 21. Again, when a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumblingblock before him, he shall die; because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless if thou warn the righteous man that the righteous sin not, and he doth sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou hast delivered thy soul.

In these words is laid down the other part of the prophet's charge. It is not only "the wicked," but "the righteous" also fall under his care; and if he sin, and be not warned, that effect will be dangerous and deadly to the prophet. He is not only to deal with the wicked, to get them into the way of God; but also with the righteous, to see that he go not out of the way; and if he do, to reduce him. Guilt will lie upon a prophet, if he do not call upon the wicked for repentance; and likewise, if he keep not the righteous in the right way, them must not he suffer to run out into errors, into loose courses; but he must inform them of the danger, bring them to a sound mind, into the right way, and confirm them in the truth, otherwise their blood will be required at his hand.

There is difficulty in these words, and they must be opened unto you. In Prov. x. 25, "The righteous is an everlasting foundation;" and chap. xii. 3, "The root of the righteous shall not be moved;" ver. 7, "The house of the righteous shall stand;" Matt. xxv. 46, "They go into life eternal;" if so, how saith our prophet here, "When a righteous man turns from his righteousness?" it seems that righteousness is not an incorruptible seed, a man may leave it, fall into sin, and die in it. I must therefore bestow some time in opening these words.

"When a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness," &c. You shall find in Scripture a double righteousness, and so, suitably, "righteous men." There is,

1. "A righteousness of faith," Rom. ix. 30; and this is in Phil. iii. 9, "The righteousness of God by faith;" this is evangelical righteousness.

2. There is "the righteousness of the law," Rom. ii. 26; x. 5; and this is called a man's "own righteousness," Rom. x. 3. Phil. iii. 9, "Not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law." When a man's actions are suitable unto the law, that is legal righteousness, and so his own.

According to these two, are two sorts of righteous men:

(1.) The man that is righteous by faith, who hath the pardon of his sins, union with Christ, and communion with God. Such a one is he Peter speaks of, 1 Pet. iv. 18, "If the righteous scarcely be saved;" such a one John mentions, 1 Epist. ii. 29; and Paul pointeth at such, Rom. v. 19; and their "righteousness remaineth for ever," 2 Cor. ix. 9. Of a man righteous in this sense, I conceive the words are not meant; this righteousness makes a man's person righteous, and righteous before God.

(2.) There is a righteous man according to the law. Paul was such a man before his conversion; Phil. iii. 6, "Touching the righteousness which is in the law," saith he, "I was blameless." And men righteous in this sense, are either seeming, or real: seeming, Matt. xxiii. 28, "Ye outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity;" men thought them to be righteous, but God knew them to be wicked; and such legalists think themselves righteous, Luke xviii. 9, they "trusted in themselves that they were righteous;" in others' and their own eyes they seemed so, but in truth were not so. Zacharias and Elisabeth were righteous before God, Luke i. 6.

But there is, [1.] An outside aetional righteousness before men, without reality within, and from this it is no difficult thing to turn aside; and of such "a righteous man" we may understand this place. The Chaldee expounds it so; Eos qui justi videri volunt, permitam in publicum peccatum labi, Those that seem to be righteous, I will suffer to fall into open sins. And the scholiast refers a righteous man to the priest, who hath doctoral dignity, and seems to love virtue, but doth not; and the soundest interpreters agree in it. Calvin calls it a righteousness which hath externam speciem tantum, non radicem, an outward show but no reality. Many have been zealous in the service and cause of God, and gone beyond others in promoting his glory, but have had no true root within. Such were those who promoted lately with much intention the prelatical ways and innovations, but now are turned from their righteousness, and are become parliament converts; their righteousness lay in opinion, not in reality, and such is this here; and the Scripture speaks frequently after the opinions and conceits of men; "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." The Pharisees were conceived by this world and themselves to be righteous, when in truth they had none; and Matt. viii. 12, "The children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness;" they were not so really, but in opinion, and externally.

[2.] If it be here meant a real righteous man, whose inside and outside is suitable to the law, blameless, as Paul and Zacharias; yet he that stands upon that foundation, viz. the law, he will slide from his righteousness. Witness Adam, who had a fuller righteousness than any of his sons since, and yet he turned away from it. The law required two things, to depart from evil, and to do good; and he did the contrary, depart from good, and do evil; and in this he hath too many followers; all his children have traced those steps; and men that not only seem, but are legally righteous, may still do it; the 18th chapter of this prophecy is clear for it.

[3.] If it should be granted that here is meant man justified, righteous with the righteousness of faith, it follows not that he must necessarily turn from his righteousness, lose his faith, and be in an unjustified condition. Gal. i. 8, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached, let him be accursed." It cannot be inferred hence that an angel will, or ever shall preach another gospel; it is one thousand five hundred years since this was written, and no angels have attempted any such thing, nor ever will. Hypothetical propositions, according to logicians, produce no effects, but they prove the necessity of a consequent; as thus, 1 Cor. xv. 14, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain;" the supposition doth not enforce that Christ is not risen, but it strongly proves, that if Christ be not risen, preaching and believing in Christ are in vain. And so here, if a righteous man could turn from his righteousness he should die; but he that is once righteous with the righteousness of faith, is ever righteous; because God's decree is unchangeable, 2 Tim. ii. 19; his love is permanent, John xiii. 1; his promises are faithful, 1 Cor. i. 8. 2 Cor. i. 20; he forgets not his covenant, Psal. lxxxix. 34; Christ's prayers are efficacious, John xi. 41, 42; xvii. 15; because he is united to Christ, and that union is indissoluble, 1 Cor. xiii. 13; because the Spirit abides in them, 1 John ii. 27; and lastly, because he is "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation," 1 Pet.

"Commit iniquity." The Hebrew is, לַעֲשׂוֹת רָעָה to do evil, and answereeth to that phrase in the New Testament, ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἀμαρτίαν, 1 John iii. 4, he that committeth sin. And this phrase of committing sin, hath more in it than ἀμαρτάνω, which is, to sin, to miss the mark; for 1 John ii. 1, ἵναν τὴν ἀμαρτίαν, "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father," Christ pleads and intercedes for such a sinner; but "he that commits sin is of the devil," 1 John iii. 8; he is his son, he is of his seed, family, kingdom, acted by his counsel and spirit; it is his trade to sin as it is the devil's, and this trade he delights in and follows: a godly man hath given it over; 1 John iii. 3, "He that hath this hope purifies himself;" and then follows, "He that commits sin?" and it is in opposition to him that purifies himself from sin, he is a man that minds not holiness. Besides this, John viii. 34, "He that commits sin is the servant of sin;" where sin reigns, and its counsels, laws, commands are obeyed by men, there is the commission of sin: it is a ready, a willing obedience; to commit sin is, magnopere delectari peccato, to have a man's will and heart in it; when a man's thoughts, counsels, meditations, purposes, lie that way, and he is given to that work, ὁ ποιῶν ἀμαρτίαν, is a sin maker, one that is an artist, a workman. Such the prophet speaks of, Jer. iv. 22, "They are wise to do evil;" Ezek. xxi. 31, "skillful to destroy:" some are bunglers in that work, others take pleasure in it, and set it off better. That in Rom. xiii. 14, "Make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof:" men love to provide for their families, their wives and little ones, and when they do so, they make provision; and so men love to provide for the flesh and lusts of it, and then they make sin, or commit sin. There be three expressions in Scripture about sin, which give us light in this point.

1. Νόμος ἀμαρτίας, the law of sin, Rom. vii. 23.
 2. Ὁδὸς, the way of sin, Matt. vii. 13.
 3. Ἀποθέλωμα, the perfection of sin, James i. 15.

When a man subjects himself to the law of sin, chooses and walks in the way of sin, and brings sin to a perfection, then doth he commit sin.

"And I lay a stumblingblock before him." The Hebrew is, and I give a stumblingblock before his face; כִּסְאֵי comes of כָּסַל to dash against, to offend, to fall; and a stumblingblock is that a man dasheth his foot against, is offended at, and falls by; the same with scandalum, the bridge in a trap, which when vermin or wild beasts touch, they are taken: so that to lay a stumblingblock in a man's way, is to trap him, destroy him. This phrase of God's laying "a stumblingblock before him," seems very harsh; therefore some fathers think the word stumblingblock is not here put in an ill sense, as tending to his destruction, that "turns from his righteousness," but that it proceeds from favour, not hatred. When a just man goeth out from God, God will cross him in his sinful way, not let him thrive in it, but east in something contrary to his expectation and intention, whereby he may come to see his error, and be reduced, according to that in Hos. ii. 6, 7. Theodotus thinks God will set hell before him, and therefore he renders it barathrum, I will lay hell before him; as if God would present the terrors of hell and state of the damned to him, to make him consider and return to his former righteousness. But this sense of the fathers coheres not with what follows, "he shall die;" this stumblingblock is in order unto his death: it was the watchman's part to propound heaven and hell, all arguments possible to do him good, else he should die. Some other expositors would have it to be meant of punishment, that God would punish such a sinner by some act of his, make him smart, repent, and so to live; therefore the Septuagint render it πάσαν, torment, God would afflict his body or conscience; and if it be taken in this sense, then you must carry it further, God would punish him, not in a saving, but a destroying way; and therefore this stumblingblock comes not from love, but revenging justice. I conceive God's laying a stumblingblock, is to be taken for the punishment of sin past, and an occasion of sin future. The righteous man having turned from his righteousness, God might lay aside that peculiar care and providence which he exercised formerly towards that man; he may take away those means and helps which should preserve from stumbling, let him go on in just judgment for his deserting him, and not recall him, but turn all things into snares and stumblings unto him, whereby corruptions are ripened, and destruction is hastened; Psal. lxxix. 22, "Let their table become a snare before them; and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap." When God in his justice once orders it so, that men's tables (that is, all their comforts) do turn to their ruin, then he lays stumblingblocks before them. Neither is God the author of sin, but the avenger of it, by denying assistance, propounding objects, and exciting affections. God may be said to lay stumblingblocks, but he never infuses any corruption; and so that in James, "God tempts no man," chap. i. 13, is to be understood. Gregory saith, this laying a stumblingblock is by no means to lead men to sin; he is not the cause of any man's sin. A man may lay money to try his servant. God takes away estates from men, gives peace to the wicked: true; he lays before them outward occasions, 2 Sam. xvi. 21, 22; he gives Satan leave to tempt and seduce them, 1 Kings xxii. 22; when they are out of his way, he carries them forward in their own evil way, Psal. cvi. 15; and thus he doth in justice, punishing one sin with the occasion or commission of another. Hence he is said to "add iniquity unto their iniquity," Psal. lxxix. 27; to "send them strong delusion," or, as the words are, the efficacy or activity of error, 2 Thess. ii. 11; to give up to uncleanness, to vile affections, to a reprobate sense, Rom. i. 24, 26, 28. God finds sin in man, and may draw it out without sin. There is suaritas in rosa, fator in cadavere, sweetness in the rose, offensiveness in the dead body; the sun by his beams draws forth the one and the other, and without fault.

"His righteousness shall not be remembered." Men may remember it, but God will not, he will have no regard to what is done to reward it; his righteousness shall not be set against his iniquities to keep off punishments; his righteousness shall be as filthy rags, Isa. lxiv. 6, in the eyes of God. When God pardons the sins of his people, he blots them out and remembers them no more, Isa. xlvi. 25. So when God deals with a man who degenerates, he blots out his righteousness, and remembereth it no more, it is as if it had never been; it neither profits him unto life, nor frees him from death. Ezek. xviii. 22, when a wicked man turns away from his sins, "they shall not be mentioned unto him," that is, they shall no way hurt him, he shall not hear of them, nor see them any more; and the righteous man that leaves his righteousness, shall neither hear nor see it any more. Aquinas hath a question,

Part. 3. q. 89. Utrum opera virtutum in charitate facta possint mortificari? Whether good works done in love can perish? And he affirms it from that in Ezek. xviii. 24, "All his righteousness which he hath done shall not be mentioned."

Obs. 1. It concerns every man to look narrowly to his righteousness. Some righteousness or other every man looks at, fixes his heart upon; and there is deceivable righteousnesses. If our righteousness be legal, a duty righteousness, and not evangelical, a righteousness of faith, it will deceive us. Matt. v. 20, "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Let that righteousness be what it will, a man is in an ill case that cannot enter into heaven with it; yet the scribes and Pharisees were exact keepers of the law, but the righteousness of the law and of duties will never send or help a man into heaven. Paul laboured to win Christ, to be found in him, not having his own righteousness, but "the righteousness which is of God by faith," Phil. iii. 8, 9. Paul durst not stick to a legal and duty righteousness, he knew it was too short to satisfy divine justice, to cover man's nakedness, or comfort his conscience; it was a higher, a better righteousness he minded, even the righteousness of Christ; and that is the righteousness God will accept, and he that is righteous with that righteousness, shall not fall away, but shall enter into heaven. 2 Pet. i. 10, 11, "Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; that is, their calling to Christ, and election in him. And what follows? "If ye do these things, ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom."

Obs. 2. No man should boast of or confide in his own righteousness. There were some who "trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others;" but this neither pleased God, nor profited them, as the parable ensuing shows, Luke xviii. 9. If men have excellences, they should be humble and fearing, not boasting and confident, especially when their excellences are in the number of movables and changeables. 1 Cor. i. 30, Christ is made unto us wisdom and righteousness, that no flesh should glory in itself, but in the Lord; and so that no flesh should have confidence in itself, but in the Lord. Phil. iii. 3, "We rejoice in Christ," saith Paul, "and have no confidence in the flesh." Whatever we have or do, let us not repose upon it: we are apt to do it, but there are apostolical rules to help us: Gal. vi. 3, "If a man think himself any thing, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself." We are nothing, and it is nothing we do; and shall we glory in nothing, or confide in nothing? Christ is something, and God is something; in them we may, we must glory and confide; the more we do it the better; we cannot sin in going too far that way. Another rule is, Phil. ii. 3, "Let each esteem others better than themselves," their righteousness may be a lasting righteousness, when thine is a perishing one. Another rule is, Rom. xi. 20, "Be not high-minded, but fear." Let men's righteousness be legal or evangelical, they should not swell, but fear, lest they fall; and besides, they should watch, pray, and persevere in prayer; remembering what our blessed Saviour hath said, "He that shall endure to the end, the same shall be saved," Matt. xxiv. 13. Let none be secure, but "serve the Lord with fear," Psal. ii. 11.

Obs. 3. Apostasy from God and his ways is a dreadful condition. When men fall from their righteousness, great mischief is done; they stain the society they were of, they blast the church, they make their friends mourn, and enemies laugh; they wrong God much, yea, more than infidels and heretics. Plura vincula conjunctionis violantur, et Deus ipse tacite accusatur quasi iniquus. Many bonds of union are broken, and God himself is tacitly accused as unjust; which causeth God to complain, O my people, what have I done unto thee? wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me; You are withdrawn, fallen to idolatrous passages; I brought you out of Egypt, and sent before you Moses and Aaron, I delivered you from Balak, &c.; many ties are upon you to keep close to me, and to cause you to honour me; but you have forgotten all my kindnesses, are gone away, and do slight me, as if idol gods and ways were better than Jehovah and his ways. This made God to say, Heb. x. 38, "If any draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him;" and what an ill condition is that man in, in whom God hath no pleasure!

There be four great evils in the words of our prophet:

(1.) He will "commit iniquity." When a man turns from righteousness he turns to sin, embraces it, serves it, walks in the ways of it, and fulfils the ends of it, and this is a sad condition; for such a man is a worker of iniquity, and so hated of God. Psal. v. 5, "Thou hatest all workers of iniquity;" it is more than having no pleasure, and notes God is against them, and will pursue them as enemies.

(2.) God will "lay a stumblingblock before him;" one thing or other, at which he shall fall. God denies him assistance, gives Satan leave to tempt and seduce, propounds objects to draw out his corruptions to the full. Demas forsook Paul and the truth, and loved the present world; there was an object sufficient to draw out his covetous disposition. Sometimes the afflictions of the godly are a stumblingblock unto the wicked; sometimes the prosperity of the wicked is a stumblingblock unto them, &c. It is a dreadful thing when God shall make any thing a stumblingblock unto a man, but more dreadful when he makes every thing so.

(3.) He shall die in that condition. Julian apostatized, and by the stroke of God he died in his apostasy; and what heavier judgment than to die in a man's sinful condition! Therefore Christ told the Pharisees they should die in their sins, John viii. 21; they would not receive him, believe in him, therefore they should die in their unbelief, and no place is left unto them for repentance.

(4.) "His righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered." If a man die, yet if his righteousness might follow him and help him, it were some comfort; but that shall not be thought upon, he loseth all he hath done and suffered. Suppose he have done much for the church, for poor ministers, prisoners, and other christians, for truth itself, and for the glory of God, no good shall come of it unto him now. All Adam's righteousness would not advantage him; whatever he had done before, when he comes to eat of the forbidden fruit, he must surely die, Gen. ii. 17, his former righteousness is forgotten. Jam. ii. 10, "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all." Antecedent righteousness will not make up the present breach, nor prevent future wrath. When the Galatians began to fall off, Paul intimates to them, that all their sufferings would be lost; "Have ye suffered so many things in vain?" Gal. iii. 4. When men in war forsake their colours, and run to the other side, all the good services they have done are forgotten, and they are accounted traitors to their country and cause; and so it is when men run from God and his truth, to the world's and Satan's service; Inanis est poenitentia quam sequens culpa coinquinat, The repentance is fruitless which is polluted by succeeding crime. But this is not all; that his righteousness shall not be remembered for him, but it will be remembered against him. 2 Pet. ii. 21, "It had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from it;" and why better? because they now sin against righteousness, and that way they have affected and professed, and their righteousness will be a witness against them. Let us all take heed, lest there be an evil heart in any of us, to depart from the living God, Heb. iii. 12.

Obs. 4. Man's ruin is from himself. He departs from his righteousness, commits iniquity, and God lays a stumblingblock; this in justice he doth, because man hath sinned: but who causes him to fall? not God; that is man's own act, he looks not to his way, it is his own lust draws him aside, enticeth him, Jam. i. 14; the cause is from within, only the occasion is from without. Riches, honour, friends, peace, credit, parts, beauty, truths, Christ, are the good and great blessings of God; and God, in his wise disposition of things, may lay these as occasion of stumbling before us; but if we do stumble, that is man's, not God's fault. Hos. xiii. 9, "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thy help;" destruction is man's, salvation is the Lord's. Man fell by his own free will, but if ever he be raised, it is by God's free grace; and if God will not have mercy, he will turn their iniquity upon them: Psal. xciv. 23, "He shall bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness;" yet, Prov. i. 32, it is said, "The turning away of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them."

Obs. 5. God's proceedings with the wicked and godly are divers. Here he speaks of laying a stumblingblock before the wicked man; and in Jer. vi. 21, "Behold, I will lay stumblingblocks before this people, the fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; the neighbour and his friend shall perish;" yea, Isa. viii. 14, God himself will be "a stone of stumbling, a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem;" and Jer. xlvi. 6, "They shall stumble and fall." But it is otherwise with the godly; touching them he saith, "Take up the stumblingblock out of the way of my people," Isa. lvii. 14, he will remove what offends and endangers them; and Isa. lxiii. 13, lest they should stumble he leads them;" and Prov. iv. 12, "When thou runnest, thou shalt not stumble;" and Psal. cxix. 165, "Great peace have they which love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." God is careful of the godly, that they be not offended. If they should be so offended, as to stumble and fall at any time, Psal. xxxvii. 24, "He shall not be utterly east down, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand," and keepeth them that they dash not their feet against the stones. If God do lay stumblingblocks at any time before his people, it is in the ways of sin, as Hos. ii. 6, "I will hedge up thy way;" but for the wicked he lays stumbling blocks in the way of mercies; they stumble at the word, 1 Pet. ii. 8; it is the savour of death to them, 2 Cor. ii. 16; they stumble at the Lord's supper, they eat and drink damnation there, 1 Cor. xi. 29; they stumble at Christ himself, 1 Cor. i. 23.

Obs. 6. An unfaithful minister is perfidious to God and man. "Because thou gavest him not warning, he shall die in his sin, and his blood will I require at thy hands." God hath put honour upon the minister, set him in a great place, made him a watchman, trusted him with souls, and he now, through sloth, fear, inconsiderateness, entanglements in the world, neglects to warn the sinner; hereby souls are lost, Satan robs God of them, is diligent to get and keep them; this will be treachery and sacrilege too at last, and fall heavy upon him that is guilty. If a band of men be slain through the captain's fault, or taken through falsehood, all cry out of it; and when souls perish through the fault and falsehood of the prophet, it is dreadful.

Mont. in loc. Zeph. iii. 4, "Her prophets are light and treacherous persons;" the word treacherous in Hebrew, is, viri pravaricationum, qui debitam Deo et populo fidem pariter violaverint, such as falsify their faith to God and man; and it is the highest treachery that can be, to be false to God, and to rob him of the souls of men.

Obs. 7. That if a minister may perish for not warning of sinners, much more for encouraging them by corrupt doctrine, and by a lewd life. If death be in an omission, much more in positive evils; corrupt doctrine, and a corrupt life, are strong traces to draw men to perdition, 2 Pet. ii. 1; he speaks of false teachers, that bring in damnable heresies, and withal, that bring upon themselves swift destruction; but their damnable heresies and opinions prevail with the people, they follow their pernicious ways, and meet with their destructive ends: Isa. ix. 16, "The leaders of this people cause them to err; and they that are led of them are destroyed."

Ver. 21. Nevertheless if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou hast delivered thy soul.

The words need little opening. "He shall surely live;" in living he shall live; he shall have his life for a prey in time of danger, or shall live comfortably, that persists in this righteousness, he shall be secure from fear of death.

Obs. 1. A minister's or prophet's care must extend to all sorts of people. Before he had said, the wicked must be warned; here he saith, the righteous also must be warned. Good and bad fall under admonition and circumspection of the prophets; both are committed to their charge, and they must warn them, give account of them, and if they fail of their duty, die for it: the best and worst they must tell of their sins.

Obs. 2. The ministry of the word is very needful. Wicked and righteous must be warned that they may not sin, return when they have sinned, escape death and be saved. The warnings of the prophets are, salutaria remedia adversus mortem animarum, salutary remedies against the death of souls; not only the ministry of the word in general, but admonitions and reproofs are means through God to prevent the death of souls. Prov. xv. 31, it is called "the reproof of life;" there is life in reproof, as death in sin; increpationes sunt salutes, et vivificatrices, censures are profitable to souls, they teach the way to live, and lead to eternal life. Hence you have such expressions, as that, "he that hateth reproof is brutish," Prov. xii. 1, he is void of understanding, a sensual, brutish creature; "he that regardeth it shall be honoured," Prov. xv. 10.

Prov. xiii. 18, honoured with comfort, safety, and life. Noah was warned of God, and made an ark to the salvation of himself and his house, Heb. xi. 7; and when sinners take warning, it is life, salvation to them. Ezek. xxxiii. 5, "He that taketh warning shall deliver his soul." How needful then is warning! how profitable, if souls be saved by it! 2 Tim. iii. 16, "All Scripture is given by inspiration, and is profitable for instruction, for reproof," &c.; it is so profitable that the salvation of souls depends upon it. When David was reproved by Nathan for his sin, it reduced him from the error of his way, and was salvation to him. Let us bless God for his word, and reproofs tendered to us out of it; and subject ourselves unto them, as tending to our present and eternal good. Be not offended with the reprovers, but afflicted with the reproofs.

Ver. 22—24. And the hand of the Lord was there upon me; and he said unto me, Arise, go forth into the plain, and I will there talk with thee. Then I arose, and went forth into the plain: and, behold, the glory of the Lord stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar: and I fell on my face. Then the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, and said unto me, Go, shut thyself within thine house.

In these and the following verses to the end, you have directions for the prophet, and events that fell out.

The hand of the Lord coming upon him, he is directed to go to the plain, where the Lord Christ promised to speak with him; and he going thither,

I. He saw the glory of the Lord standing there, ver. 23.

II. He is amazed and falls down at it, which is implied in ver. 24.

III. He hath the Spirit entering into him, and is strengthened by it, set upon his feet, which is expressed in ver. 24.

Then here is a further direction, that he should go and shut up himself, ver. 24. And here his silence is declared,

1. By this inclusion of himself in his house.

2. By the bands imposed upon him, ver. 25, "They shall put bands upon thee."

3. By the impediments Christ himself infers, ver. 26, "I will make thy tongue to cleave to the roof of thy mouth, and thou shalt be dumb."

4. The time of his prophesyings mentioned, ver. 27, which is, when Christ should speak unto him.

I come to open the words:

"The hand of the Lord was there upon me."

In the 14th verse of this chapter, and in the 3rd verse of the first chapter, you have had these words opened already. This "hand of the Lord" was the Spirit of the Lord, which acted the prophet, and showed him and others, that he was not moved in a human way, or by inconsiderate motions, but divinely; the power and efficacy of the Spirit.

"There," That is, at Tel-abib, in ver. 15; he came thither, and sat down there seven days. And being in his habitation, sad, and backward unto the work he was called unto, the word of the Lord came to him, ver. 16, and the hand of the Lord was there upon him. He thought, being shut up in his house, that the business would fall, and that he should be excused from prophetic service; but he was mistaken. God's hand finds him out, and he is bidden to go forth into the plain, not to stay any longer within his doors, but to go into the plain, or valley;

so the word in Hebrew signifies, being בקעה bakeah from a word which is to cut, divide, break. This plain, or valley, was divided from the mountains, and a solitary place, free from company and disturbances, delightful, fit to refresh and quiet the spirits of men.

Obs. 1. The Spirit is the great agent in divine things. It is the hand of the Lord that doth all; it beautifies with gifts and graces, calls to office, directs whither to go, what to do; it assists and enables to all divine operations. Christ had the chiefest work to do that concerned the church, and the hand of the Lord was upon him: Isa. lxi. 1, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me;" and Isa. xi. 2, it is a "Spirit of might;" and Luke xxiv. 19, enabled him to do mighty things. And so Stephen, Acts vi. 10, "They were not able to resist the Spirit by which he spake." It is the Spirit doth the great things in religion; sanctification and mortification are the works of this hand of the Spirit of God, 1 Cor. vi. 11: Acts xiii. 2, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."

Obs. 2. The servants of Christ have daily need of new influences of the Spirit to encourage them to and strengthen them in their work. Ezekiel was full of fears, had many discouragements, sat in a doubtful condition what to do, and the hand of the Lord was upon him. He had formerly felt divine virtue, seen Christ, and heard him; yet all this doth not suffice, the hand must work again and help him, else nothing will be done. The apostles had been much with Christ, seen his miracles, heard his doctrine, and yet they must stay at Jerusalem till the Spirit fall upon them, Acts i. 4. Paul saith of himself and others, "We are not sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God," 2 Cor. iii. 5; that is, all our strength and help lies in him; we daily find a want in ourselves, and God, as it pleases him, lets out from his sufficiency unto us, now a little, and then a little, and we are ever receiving from him, and enabled by his grace and Spirit to do what is done. In ἐπιχορηγίας τῷ πνεύματι Phil. i. 19, is mentioned the supply of the Spirit; it is the administration, subministration, under-supplying, underpropping of the Spirit; all which words note the saints' infirmities, and need of the Spirit. Those things which befell Paul, would not turn to his good without the Philippians' prayers, and further supply of the Spirit: as a weak house must be underpropped, a sickly man have daily help, an army constant supply; so must the servants of God be underpropped, helped, and supplied by the Spirit. Therefore we should daily pray, as it is in Psal. lxxviii. 28, "Strengthen, O God, that which thou hast wrought for us," and that which thou hast wrought in us.

Obs. 3. No place can keep off the hand of God from coming upon us. There at Tel-abib, shut up in his house, divine virtue seized upon him. He thought now to hear no more of prophesying, and doing public service of that nature to the Jews; but the Spirit of God found him out; that cannot be excluded from any place, or limited to any time; it is like the wind, that blows where and when it listeth. When the apostles were shut up in a room, Acts ii. 2, 4, there was a rushing mighty wind, that filled all the house, and the Spirit with it, that filled all them. So when Cornelius and his company heard Peter preach in a private room, "the Holy Ghost fell on them all," Acts x. 44. As no place can include the Spirit of God, so can none exclude it. There were saints in Nero's court, and this hand of God had been working there. It is not a dungeon, any prison, can keep out the Spirit of God from coming to and comforting of his servants. Glover found the truth of it when he said, O Austin, he is come!

Obs. 4. The more separate from the world, the more fit for communion with God. Ezekiel must go into the plain, and there the Lord would talk with him. He could have conversed with him at Tel-abib, among the people in his own habitation; but the Lord declines that, intimating that while we are conversant with worldly and wicked men, we are incapable of divine mysteries; but when we are remote from them, solitary and sedate, we are fitter to hear God speak. When the church was allured into the wilderness, Hos. ii. 14. then God would speak, and that comfortably, unto her. It was by the river Chebar he had his former visions; when he was absent from popular noise, domestic troubles, his mind serene and contemplative, then the Lord opened himself unto him. Christ oft left the multitude; and when he was gotten aside into the mount, then was his transfiguration, and the voice, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him," Matt. xvii. 5.

Ver. 23. Then I arose, and went forth into the plain: and, behold, the glory of the Lord stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar: and I fell on my face.

If aught have need of opening in this verse, it is "the glory of the Lord;" and there is no cloud upon this. The verse expounds itself, it is the glory he saw before by the river Chebar; that glorious vision he had there, is represented again here unto the prophet. The vision was not like the temple, fixed to a place; but it was movable; it was first presented to him at Chebar, and now again in this plain.

The reasons of this second apparition of the glory of God, are,

First, to possess the heart of the prophet with greater reverence of divine Majesty. He was unwilling to the service called to by God, sought excuses, thought to decline it, which argued neglect of divine Majesty. To strike out such distempers, and to strike in a deeper impression of fear and respect to God, this glorious vision is set before his eyes, and frames him to a fitness for that employment. He might now see Christ sitting as judge, compassed about with glory, having angels ready to execute his pleasure and power in and over all parts of the world; and if he should refuse the employment appointed, he ran a manifest hazard of his life.

Secondly, to confirm the truth of the prophecy, and him in it.

Thirdly, to prepare the church in all ages to a high esteem of this prophecy, that was ushered into the world with such glorious visions.

Obs. 1. Divine virtue makes men obedient unto the command of God. The hand of the Lord was upon him, he bids him go forth; and presently he arose and went forth into the plain. If things enjoined suit not with our wills, opinions, and humours, we deny them, excuse and take off ourselves from the doing of them, or defer them; but let God enjoin what he will, be it harsh to flesh and blood, contrary to our wills, carnal reason, &c. if divine virtue once come upon us, and the Spirit move in us, we will do it. God bid Abraham take his son, his only son Isaac whom he loved, and go and sacrifice him upon a mountain in the land of Moriah, Gen. xxii. Flesh and blood had much to object here; but because he was acted by divine virtue, therefore he obeyed presently; he rose early, took his son, went to the place, stretched out his hand to slay him, and to make him a sacrifice. We stick oft at small things when nature only works; not at any thing when the Spirit of God works in us.

Obs. 2. They who are obedient to God simply upon his command, meet with mercies unexpected. Ezekiel goes forth upon command, not knowing what was to come, what was to be done, and he meets with an extraordinary mercy; he saw the glory of the Lord, a ravishing, a satisfying mercy. Abraham, obeying the command of God, hears the voice of an angel twice, and meets with a multitude of blessings; Gen. xxii. 17, "In blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice." So Jacob returned from Laban to his father's house upon divine command, and he meets with angels, Gen. xxxii. 1; he met with God, and, like a prince, prevailed with him for a blessing, ver. 28. No man ever lost by his obedience unto God. Though we see no reason for things, yet if we have the will of God that is reason enough. Let us be tractable and forward to do the will of God, and we shall not lose our labour; we may meet with mercies unexpected, as some by coming to the ordinances have done.

Obs. 3. See the goodness of the Lord in two things:

First, in that he will manifest his glory to the view of mortal, sinful creatures. His glory is precious, a hidden thing, and not obvious to creatures; yet here, as before, he is pleased in a vision to present it to the sight of Ezekiel. It was to the ambassador of a prince that "Hezekiah showed the house of his precious things," Isa. xxxix. 2, and it was a favour to let them see such rarities: it was a greater favour from God to let Ezekiel see this rarity of rarities, his glory.

Secondly, that God should act over the same thing again, present the same vision in living creatures, wheels, eyes, firmament, a throne, and one sitting upon it, and give a sight of his glory the second time; this sets out God's goodness abundantly. Men are unwilling to do the same thing twice, whereas they may do it better the second time than the first, and advantage themselves by it; but God hath no advantage, doth it perfectly at first; yet, simply for man's good, he condescends to do the same thing again. So that Ezekiel may be brought to a fitness for divine dispensations, encouraged to, and in his work, he shall have a sight of glory, and a glorious vision presented to him the second time by God's own hand. We think repetitions of things in vain; a sermon twice over is stale, unwelcome, oft neither minister nor people find any savour in it; and so other things; but God repeats the vision without prejudice to himself, or damage to the prophet.

Obs. 4. Sin makes us incapable of happiness. It is man's happiness to see the glorious God, and have communion with him. While Adam stood, he could behold God, converse with him in his glorious appearances unto him; but after his fall, he fled from his presence, was disabled, and incapable of the sight of him and his glory; so here, Ezekiel cannot abide the sight of this glorious vision, but falls down upon his face, and hides himself from his own happiness. Till sin be purged out of us, it will be so; therefore God hath appointed purging ordinances, that we, being purified, might at last see him, and have fruition of him. Two things especially are required to the sight of glory; holiness and strength, to both which sin is opposite: it defiles, it enfeebles, so that we dare not, we cannot behold glory. See what mischief sin hath done us.

Obs. 5. Apprehensions and sight of glory do much humble gracious hearts. When Ezekiel saw the glory of the Lord, he fell upon his face; the glory of a creature raises a carnal heart, but the glory of the Creator humbles a gracious heart. John i. 14, "We beheld his glory, as the only begotten of the Father;" and this made John, the greatest prophet that ever was born of a woman, to be so low in his own eyes, that he professed himself unworthy to loose the latchet of his shoe, ver. 27. There be some things in the sight of divine glory, that work strongly to humble the soul.

(1.) It is of that lustre and excellency, as that it darkens all the glory of the world, and makes it seem no more than the lustre of a glowworm to the sun.

(2.) It sets out the shamefulness and blackness of sin.

(3.) It discovers the insufficiency of all human motions and duties to attain unto it.

(4.) It shows the infinite distance between God and the creature.

All which are humbling things, and concurring do humble more thoroughly. Ezekiel was not only amazed, doth not only fall down, but falls upon his face, and that after a second sight of the same glory; so that it is in the nature of glory to humble. Other things may humble a little, but glory most of all: that which comes by the ear doth something, but that which is seen by the eye affects most. Isaiah had heard the seraphims crying, "Holy, holy, holy,—the earth is full of his glory;" but this struck not so deeply into his heart, as the sight of glory. When he saw the King, the Lord of hosts in his glory, then he cried out, "Woe is me! I am undone:" his holiness was nothing, his prophetic office was nothing, all was nothing to him, he was an undone man, he saw so much sin in himself; "I am a man of unclean lips," &c.

Ver. 24. Then the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, and said unto me, Go, shut thyself within thine house.

Being in a dejected condition, the Spirit entered. It was said before, "the hand of the Lord came upon him," which was the Spirit: and here, "the Spirit entered into me." What difference is there between these two phrases? You may observe this difference: the hand of the Lord upon the prophet, notes the efficacy and work of the Spirit in general, the common gifts and graces of it, which may fit a man for public employment. The entering of the Spirit notes, not only those, but the sanctifying of a man, so that he shall employ his gifts and graces to the glory of God, and eternal good of his own soul. Of the Spirit's entering and setting the prophet upon his feet I spake in the 2nd chapter, ver. 2. It was not the air, his own spirit returning, nor an angel, but the Holy Spirit of God. This entrance of the Spirit notes, not motion from place to place, for the Spirit is infinite and fills heaven and earth; but it notes operation, manifestation, impletion. When the Spirit doth work efficaciously, manifest itself (for there may be invisible operations,) fill the heart of any with divine virtue; when it doth any one of these, or all these, it is said to be sent, to come, to enter. It comforted the prophet, being amazed, sunk in apprehension of his own unworthiness, and manifested its operation by setting him upon his feet, giving new strength to go and prophesy when time should serve.

"Go, shut thyself within thine house." These words are not ironically spoken, or by way of sarcasm, because he had formerly shut up himself; but they are a command from God to the prophet. It is true, by reason of the rebellious disposition of the people, the weightiness of the calling he was to be in, and the infirmity of the flesh, he had withdrawn from his duty; and God bears with him, bids him withdraw from the public view. Jerom thinks this shutting up was a type of the besieging of the city, that as he should be shut up in his house, so the Jews at Jerusalem. Others think more probably, that it was to receive instructions from God, and to hear from him, before he should speak ought to the people; therefore some observe that our prophet heard and saw much, and spake not till the end of the 11th chapter, ver. 25, where he saith, "Then I spake unto them of the captivity," &c. This shutting up made way for the credit and authority of the prophet and his prophecy.

Obs. 1. The Spirit affects and visits an humble soul. When the prophet was humbled with the sense of his own unworthiness, trembled at the sight of glory and majesty, was destitute of strength, then it pleased the Spirit of God to enter. Humiliations upon sight of glory and greatness are deepest, and the Spirit loves to visit them speedily. God doth not long leave humble souls without operations and manifestations of his Spirit: Jam. iv. 6, "He resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble;" he sends the Spirit into their hearts to comfort and strengthen them, because they are low, vile in their own eyes; but destruction is for the proud, God is in battle-array against them. The Spirit appeared like a dove, and is a dove of the valleys, not of the mountains. While Paul was a mountain in his own eyes, the Spirit never came near him; but when he was humbled with the sight of glory, Acts ix., even the glory of Christ, and became a valley, then quickly the spiritual Dove took her flight to him; for, ver. 17, saith Ananias, "Brother Saul, the Lord hath sent me that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost:" the Lord Jesus would not let him want his Spirit to revive him, that was so effectually humbled at the sight of his glory.

Obs. 2. The godly before Christ had the same Spirit, grace, and comforts that we have since Christ. Ezekiel had the Spirit enter into him. What Spirit? Even the Spirit of God and Christ, the third Person in the sacred Trinity. Neither doth that in John cross this truth, "The Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified," chap. vii. 39. Not given at all is not the meaning, but was not given so plentifully, so visibly, till Christ was glorified. You know that kings, when they enter their kingdoms first, or ride in triumph after great victories, then they scatter gold and silver plentifully, and give the greatest honours and gifts unto men; so Christ reserved the pouring out of his Spirit in such plenty and visible signs, till his glorifying. Therefore Austin saith, The prophets had not another Spirit who foretold Christ to come. But this is meant of that manner of giving, which appeared not at all before. They under the law had not the Spirit given in that way and so largely, but they had the same Spirit, 2 Pet. i. 21, and Luke i. 41, 67.

Obs. 3. The Spirit of Christ which the godly receive, is not a spirit of bondage, but of comfort, of grace and freedom. This Spirit did not straiten the prophet, but enlarge him. He was imprisoned with his own fears, beat down under a sense of his own worthlessness; but this Spirit of Christ did set him at liberty, and lifts him up again, and works graciously in him. This Spirit is oft called the Comforter, and that emphatically, because no man, no angel, no ordinance, do or can comfort like the Spirit: it helps against fears, sins, guilt, temptations, straitness of heart: this made the apostle say, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," 2 Cor. iii. 17. It knocks off bolts, locks, shackles; it makes way for his own graces to act, and act with liveliness; and if there be strong-holds within, strong lusts that oppose, it is a Spirit of power, and will carry all before it: 2 Tim. i. 7. "God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power;" such power as will conquer all the rebellions of a man's will, bring all into order, captivate every thought unto Christ, and make a man able to do the whole will of God, an Ezekiel to prophesy to a rebellions people, and to venture his life amongst them.

Obs. 4. Those Christ sends unto the church, he gives his Spirit unto. Ezekiel hath the Spirit enter into him before he enters upon his office. Men void of the Spirit, are not meet to be church officers. All things in the church come under spiritual consideration; the people are to be professors of holiness, ordinances are holy, and what should unholty officers do there? If they have not the Spirit of Christ, they are none of his; and what should they do in the church of Christ? He will ask them one day, Friend's how came you in hither? I sent you not.

Obs. 5. The Spirit performs what Christ promised. In the 22nd verse, Christ bids the prophet go forth into the plain, and tells him he will there talk with him; but being come thither, the Spirit entered into him, and spake with him. Christ and the Spirit are one in essence, one in will, and one in operation; so that the prophet was not deceived, but it was the same as if Christ had spoken to him. I will be with you to the end of the world, saith Christ. His Spirit was with them, and so in that it was made good that he was with them. The Spirit makes good whatever the Lord Jesus hath promised, when it comes; and it cannot be otherwise, for these three, Father, Word, and Holy Ghost, are one, and agree in one, 1 John v. 7.

Obs. 6. There is a language of the Spirit within a man. "The Spirit entered into me, and spake with me." How it speaks is hard to make out unto you. We have heard that the devil hath spoken in parties bewitched and possessed, and you have text of Scripture for it; Acts xix. 13—15, when the sons of Seeva adjured the evil spirit in the name of Jesus, "the evil spirit answered, Jesus I know, and Paul I know, but who are ye?" Thus did the devil express himself in the possessed. And surely the Spirit of God can speak vocally in those where it dwells; but that is not the ordinary language of the Spirit. A man speaks to another, quando conceptum mentis alteri manifestat, when he makes known to another that which he has conceived in his mind; and as the schools say of angels, they speak manifestando suum volutum, in the manifestation of their will, so we may say, the Spirit speaks unto us by manifestation of its mind unto us. John xvi. 13, " whatsoever the Spirit shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come:" and ver. 14, "He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you."

Obs. 7. The proceedings of God with his own servants are various and darksome. The prophet was bid to preach oft before. In the 22nd verse, he is called forth into the plain; and when he is there the Lord bids him go and shut himself up in his house, as it is in this 24th verse. Now he will have him prophesy, and presently he suspends him from his office and liberty; neither is there any change in God, but he by these various dispensations fulfils his eternal counsels.

Obs. 8. God considers the weaknesses of his servants, bears with and provides well against them.

Ezekiel was timorous, the house of Israel rebellious, and like enough to offer violence to the prophet, if he should have presently propounded the dreadful judgments of God that were at hand against Jerusalem; and therefore he takes care of him, and commands him to shut up himself, that so he might be safe, and not at first be discouraged at the wickedness of the people, or weightiness of his work. God is full of bowels, and tenders his servants, when put upon difficult employments.

Ver. 25. But thou, O Son of man, behold, they shall put bands upon thee, and shall bind thee with them, and thou shalt not go out among them.

This verse speaks of the bands imposed upon the prophet, and what these were we must inquire. The word is עֲבָתִים which the Syriac renders catenæ, chains; the Vulgate, vincula, bands; Montanus, funes, ropes; and not any ropes, but funes contorti adeoque densi, thick twisted ropes, as the original signifies. Now these ropes or bands are taken literally by some, and metaphorically by others.

Literally thus: They seeing the prophet sad seven days, and now astonished at what he had seen and heard, and observing some strange looks and carriages from him, they thought he was or would be beside himself, and therefore they bound him. It was a conceit among Jews and gentiles, that prophets were a kind of madmen. Hos. ix. 7, "The spiritual man," or, as the Hebrew is, the man of the Spirit, "is mad?" they thought him out of his wits. Our prophet had received the Spirit of Christ, and that wrought in him, and the people might be apt enough to judge him a madman. When a prophet came to anoint Jehu, his companions said, "Wherefore came this mad fellow?" 2 Kings ix. 11, Prophets were reputed mad fellows, and that not only by the Jews, but by gentiles also. Plato in Phædro saith, Quidam divino beneficio sunt insani, ut prophetæ et sibyllæ, Some are mad by a divine influence, as prophets and the sibyls; and Tully, in his 2nd book De Divinationibus, Quid habet authoritatis furor iste quem divinum vocatis, ut quæ sapiens non videt ea vident insanus; et is qui humanos sensus amiserit, divinos assecut us sit; et raticinari idem sit quod insanire, What authority has that madness which you call divine, that what things a wise man does not perceive, are seen by an insane person; and he who has lost the natural senses, has obtained those which are divine; and to prophesy is the same thing as to be mad. This opinion was also in the apostles' time: Acts xxvi. 24, Festus the governor of Syria tells Paul, that he was beside himself; that much learning had made him mad.

Martyr in 2 Kings ix. 11. Knecht thinks that the prophets were so called quod dum vaticinarentur, speciem præteritæ cum a mente, tum a sensibus.

In the metaphorical sense take it thus: The Jews cannot endure thee, nor thy prophecy; they are so bitter, so rebellious, obstinate, and set against thee, that they will not suffer thee to look out of doors, and come among them; they decline thee and thy prophecy, they will not endure either of them; and so thou art as a prisoner and man in bands. Not that he had any material bands upon him, but was bound up in this sense; their sins were the prophet's bonds. And we may take up this observation from it, that people's sins do imprison and imbondage the spirits of the prophets, and so hinder the course of the word. This Paul knew, and therefore requests the Colossians to pray, that God would open to him and others a door of utterance, Col. iv. 3, that they might not be straitened in the work of their ministry. Men's sins do silence the ministers, and send them to prisons. If you look not well to it, your sins may quickly make this good.

I incline to the literal sense, and then it is doubtful who bound the prophet. "They shall put bands," &c. Not the angels; though God use them in the government of the world, yet we find not that God uses them to bind his prophets. Some conceive it to be his friends and familiar acquaintance, and that it was done in love. If others had done it, they would have left him in custody other where than in his own house; but without prejudice to any, I conceive it came from the people, who either bound him, or bespoke his binding. And my ground for it is this: he is made a watchman to the house of Israel; in that capacity and relation the Lord speaks unto him. Here is no mention of any domestic friends, but of the people; it was they without, not they within; as is clear from the words, "They shall put bands upon thee, and thou shalt not go out among them."

Obs. 1. Christ deals fairly, not fraudulently with his; he tells them at first what they must expect; not gold and silver, but bands and chains. "They shall bind thee." He told Jeremiah, they shall fight against him, Jer. i. 19. So Paul no sooner is called to preaching, but he hears of suffering: Acts ix. 16, "I will show him how great things he must suffer." And Matt. xxiv. 9, Christ tells all the apostles that they must be afflicted, hated, killed; and this he doth in faithfulness, love, and wisdom, that they might not be deceived in looking for other kind of entertainment in the world; that they might not have hard thoughts of him for hiding away such things from them; that they might be confirmed against such evils when they fell out, and remember it was no more than the Lord foretold them of: John xvi. 2, "They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, they shall kill you, and think they do God good service;" and ver. 4, "These things have I told you, that you may remember I told you of them when the time comes."

Obs. 2. No excellency exempts a prophet from the malice of men's tongues and hands. Ezekiel is immediately called and sent by Christ, sees extraordinary visions, hath much converse with Christ, is filled with the Spirit; yet all this keeps him not out of bonds; they spake evil of him, and bound him. Christ himself was all excellency, beauty, goodness, yet these preserved him not out of the hands of malice. There is nothing will satisfy it, but men's liberties and lives; malice feeds on such dainties.

Obs. 3. The generality of people are enemies to their own good, and active to their own ruin. The house of Israel, they are against the prophet; they fetter and chain him up, and think they have done well, to make him secure from coming amongst them. And alas, what have they done! thrust away the physician that should cure them; shut out mercy by shutting up a prophet; put out the light. And now are there not droves and multitudes of people that would think it a happiness to get all the prophets silenced, imprisoned, banished, if not more? they would live in darkness, and die in darkness, and so undo themselves for ever. Christ the great Prophet, the people, after all his precious sermons and glorious miracles, cry, "Away with this man, Crucify him, crucify him." Luke xxiii. 18, 21. They had cried Hosanna formerly, but now the time being turned, they turn against Christ. There be many that show some kindness outwardly to the prophets, but inwardly they are against them.

Obs. 4. Wicked ones deal severely, cruelly with the prophets, when they fall into their hands. They put bands, not one or two, but many bands upon Ezekiel; and they were wreathed, twisted, heavy, thick bands, such as might not only hold, but hurt and pain the prophet. When Ahab had got Micaiah into his hands, he sends him to prison, and commands him to be fed with bread and water of affliction; that is, with so little and so unsavoury, ut longam potius mortem trahat, quam vitam sustentet, that it would rather bring on a lingering death than support life; he would kill him, non brevi morte, sed lenta fame, not by a speedy death, but by slow famine. Jeremiah, the princes are wroth with him, smite him, put him in the prison, Jer. xxxvii. 15; yea, into the dungeon, where he sunk into deep mire, and had perished, if Ebed-melech, an Ethiopian, had not been more propitious to him than his own countrymen the Jews were, Jer. xxxviii. 6, 7. Josephus saith, they put him into a muddy pit, ut ibi praefocatus Antiq. 10. moretur, that there suffocated he might die, which might easily have been, for he was usque ad collummersus, plunged even to the neck. Others think they aimed not at his present death, but thought, paedore et fame, by filth and by famine, lingeringly to consume him. Peter, when he fell into Herod's hands, was bound with two chains, Acts xii. 6. You may observe something in that verse; there is a prison, chains, soldiers, keepers, all these mentioned in it; which show the severity of Herod. A bare prison had been too much for such an apostle, but he must be chained, and with two chains; and for fear he should get out of his chains, he must be between two soldiers, which probably were more afflictive to his spirit with their oaths, &c. than the iron was to his body. And lest he should get from these, there was also the keepers at the door, watching. Paul tells you how he was handled by wicked men: 2 Cor. xi. 23, 24, "In stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck."

Obs. 5. Afflictive conditions seldom better men's spirits. They were in Babylon under captivity, and five years passed in that condition, chap. i. 2; yet were their proud hearts not humbled, their old enmity to the prophets not worn out, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15—17, God sent them messengers, prophets, and they mocked them, misused them, till the wrath came, and there was no remedy; and therefore he brought upon them the Chaldeans, who led them into captivity, where they were servants and slaves. Their wronging of the prophets was the cause of their suffering, and yet all their sufferings did not subdue their spirits, and work them to entertain the truth, and walk peaceably towards the prophet; they bind him in the land of bondage. The plough breaks the earth in many places, but doth not better it, but leaves it as it was; nothing is put in by the plough. If the master dung it, and sow good seed in it, when the plough hath broken it, then there is like to be a harvest; but if nothing be sown, weeds, nettles, thorns will grow where the plough hath been. And so afflictions may break our estates, our bodies, our sleep; yet if nothing be added, if God do not sanctify them, the harvest will be tares, and not wheat.

Obs. 6. It is no new thing for prophets and ministers to be roughly entreated, and laid by as useless things. Ezekiel, four hundred years before Christ, is shut up, bound, kept from coming among the people; and this misery hath befallen the prophets in several ages. Jezebel cut off the prophets, and then they were hid by fifties in caves, 1 Kings xviii. 4.

Jeremiah was shut up in the prison in the king's court, Jer. xxxii. 2. Most of the prophets and apostles were restrained from their public employments, shut up in prisons, banished or driven into corners; and that proves oft a great saddening to ingenious spirits, not so much in that they suffer, but because they are out of employment. But let those that are in such conditions, or may shortly be, consider it is no strange, unwonted thing; such afflictions have been formerly; 1 Pet. v. 9, "The same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world;" besides, God hath need of no men, nor any of their parts.

Ver. 26. And I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou shalt be dumb, and shalt not be to them a reprovèr: for they are a rebellious house.

Here is a further and full manifestation of his silence, but there is doubt concerning the meaning of the words. The Septuagint hath it, I will bind thy tongue; and this bond, it is conceived, was a divine precept; God commanding him to be silent, and thereupon it was that he forbore to speak unto them. Others take the words literally, and hold that the use of his tongue was taken away; so that neither in public nor in private he might speak unto them, but be a wordless and tongueless man amongst them; whereupon they being troubled, and wondering at what had befallen Ezekiel, might search out the cause, and become more willing to hear those sad messages he had to deliver. But I conceive the words are not to be taken in their literal sense:

1. Because the prophet is bid in the next chapter, ver. 9, to prepare him meat, and to eat thereof, which he could not do, if his tongue had cleaved to the roof of his mouth; the motion of the tongue is needful to that action.

2. It is plain from the 14th verse of that 4th chapter, that it cannot be meant literally; for there the prophet speaks, "Then said I, Ah Lord God! behold, my soul hath not been polluted," &c. We are then to take the words figuratively, thus: Thou shalt be as a man whose tongue cleaves to his mouth, as a man that is dumb; such a one shalt thou be amongst them. And this sense the words following infer, "Thou shalt not be to them a reprovèr;" they would not have thee to tell them of their sins, of my judgments, and the danger thereupon; "and thou shalt not be a reprovèr unto them;" and it is the Scripture language to call them dumb that are in the place of ministers and prophets, and preach not, Isa. lvi. 10.

Obs. 1. The Lord hath the power over prophets' lips, to shut and open them at his pleasure: "I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth," &c. If God forbid the prophets to speak, they must be dumb; on the contrary, if he command, they cannot be silent: Amos iii. 8, "The Lord hath spoken, who can but prophesy?" The Jews objected against the prophets, that they prophesied no good unto them, only sad things, and were messengers of death. The prophet answers, It is true, but God hath commanded; he hath spoken, and who can be silent? Who shall dare not to deliver and hear his message? he is a roaring lion, will tear in pieces disobedient prophets and people. He was to speak, and to be silent, when God would have it so. Balaam knew this, Numb. xxii. 38, "Lo, I am come unto thee, O Balak; have I any power at all to say any thing?" can I with cunning do any thing? so is the Hebrew; "the word that God putteth in my mouth, that shall I speak." It was in God to open or shut his mouth; he could not with all his cunning do ought. Prov. xvi. 1, "The preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord;" and so the silence of the tongue, and cessation of the spirit in man, is from the Lord. Prophets are to be silenced and suspended, not when prelates or people will, but when the Lord will.

Obs. 2. People are impatient of reproofs. "Thou shalt not be a reprovèr unto them; for they are rebellious;" they would not endure him to deal roughly with them, to convince them of their sins. Many affect the prophets being shining lights, but when they are burning lights they hate them; when they scorch men with thorough reproofs and evident convictions of their guiltiness, then they hate them, and seek to mischief them: Isa. xxix. 21, he that reprovèd in the gate had a snare laid for him; and Micaiah is a hateful man to Ahab, 1 Kings xxii. 8, because he prophesied not good to him. Reproofs are veritates mordaces, biting truths; they have salt and fire in them, which few men can endure, especially being sore; and therefore they will imprison and murder the prophets: "Put this fellow into prison," saith Ahab, ver. 27. Let John reprove Herod, and he is presently clapped into a prison, Luke iii. 19. proofs evidence to men that their sins are known, awaken guilt, and cross them in the things they love, and therefore they cannot endure them. Like Moses's rod, in hand it was without hurt, but thrown down it became a serpent; so reproofs thrown forth prove serpents to men, they molest and sting them.

Obs. 3. The people's sins do cause God to cut them short of spiritual mercies. Here was a prophet furnished with the treasure of heaven, and the Lord shuts up his mouth and makes him a dumb prophet unto them. And why so? "for they are a rebellious house;" they did not profit under their judgments; they still undervalued their prophets; they went on stubbornly in their ways against God; and this made God deny them the benefit of the prophet's labours. Unbelief, neglect of reformation, and ingratitude are provoking sins, and God punishes people for them, and such like, with the removal of his word and prophets. In Amos viii. the Lord tells them, there shall be howlings in the temple, dead bodies in all places, ver. 3; that their sun should go down at noon, their feasts be turned into mournings, and such mournings as are for an only son, deep and lasting, ver. 8, 9. And why so? they had sinned greatly in slighting and being weary of God's sabbaths and ordinances; they were covetous, they oppressed the poor, &c.; and now God would send a famine of the word, ver. 11, and there would be howlings, darkness, and death above measure. It is a dreadful thing when people provoke God to take away his prophets by death, to command them silence, or to remove them into corners. The prophets and ministers are the light and salt of the earth; if God take them away, people will be unsavoury, full of worms, noisome lusts, and corruptions, they will be in darkness, and hasten to eternal darkness. It is the word that makes all sweet and comfortable; if that go, God's face is hid, his presence departed, and all lies open to ruin. It is the sins of the people that introduce such a judgment. God takes away his word, and the preachers of it, because the people's lives are exasperating, not conformable to what is taught. This judgment we may fear in this land because the distance is exceeding great between God's word and our lives. I will not prophesy, but pray. The Lord prevent and divert such a judgment from England. If it should come, it would be the most dreadful that befell the land these fourscore years. Afflictions you are like to meet withal, and pressing ones; but that I may not discourage your hearts, cast your eyes and thoughts upon that promise in Isa. xxx. 19, 20, "He will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he will answer thee. And though the Lord give you the bread of adversity, and the water of affliction, yet shall not thy teachers be removed into a corner any more." The word in Hebrew literally is, Thy teachers shall not be winged, and fly from thee when danger is, but thine eyes shall see thy teachers, and thou shalt hear a voice behind thee, &c. This is spoken of the church under the gospel, as well as before. If you can therefore take hold of this promise, and cry earnestly unto God, you shall not lose your teachers, and the truth, though you lose your estates and outward comforts. If God should take away your teachers from you, it would be an argument of much

Lam. ii. 9. wrath, and that this people is unworthy of spiritual mercies.

Ver. 27. But when I speak with thee, I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; He that heareth, let him hear; and he that forbeareth, let him forbear: for they are a rebellious house.

The greatest part of this verse hath been spoken of in the 11th verse of this chapter, and 5th verse of the second chapter, and therefore shall not need now to be opened unto you.

Obs. 1. All times are not times for the prophets to speak in. Thy mouth is now shut, and it is not seasonable for thee to prophesy; but hereafter when I shall speak with thee, I will open thy mouth. Prophets must therefore wait upon God, as for varrant to speak, so for liberty and opportunity of speaking: Amos v. 13, "The prudent shall keep silence in that time." There are times when God, in judgment to a people, would not have them speak: Eccl. iii. 7, "There is a time to keep silence, and a time to speak;" and both these the Lord will show his servants.

Obs. 2. Neither the prophets' infirmities, nor the people's sins, shall always keep the prophets' mouths shut: "When I speak with thee, I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say unto them," &c.

Obs. 3. God tries many ways with a sinful, wretched people to gain them; he sends them into captivity, gives them a prophet there, shuts up his mouth, opens it again, and all to see what this people will do: "I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say, Thus saith the Lord; He that heareth, let him hear," &c. There are but few amongst you who will hear, I am afraid; but if any will hear, "let him hear," &c. God will try men whether they are curable or no.

CHAPTER IV.

Ver. 1—3. Thou also, son of man, take thee a tile, and lay it before thee, and pourtray upon it the city, even Jerusalem: and lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount against it; set the camp also against it, and set battering-rams against it round about. Moreover take thou unto thee an iron pan, and set it for a wall of iron between thee and the city: and set thy face against it, and it shall be besieged, and thou shalt lay siege against it. This shall be a sign to the house of Israel.

In the three former chapters you have had the preface, now we are to come to the prophecy itself. In this chapter and the next is a prophecy against Jerusalem, the chief city of the Jews; the besieging of it, and miseries which attend that condition are laid down therein.

This chapter hath in it these parts:

I. A typical besieging of Jerusalem, in the first eight verses.

II. A great famine during this siege, and that is in ver. 9—11, 16, 17; and this is aggravated from the eating of polluted bread baked in dung, ver. 12—15.

I shall begin with the typical besieging of the city. The Jews that yet lived at Jerusalem trusted in their strength and privileges, were secure, fearing no dangers; they accounted them fools and weak ones, who had yielded themselves into the hands of the Babylonians; and because Jeremiah had counselled them to do it, and prophesied hard things against Jerusalem, they dealt roughly with him, and got him imprisoned. Here, therefore, the Lord set our prophet to work to lay siege against Jerusalem, to batter it with warlike instruments, that so the captives with him might not repent them of what they had done, nor those at Jerusalem put off any longer the evil day, cry, Peace, peace, when destruction was at hand.

In the first verse the prophet is commanded to draw the picture of Jerusalem, and that upon a tile; in the other two to represent the actions of men besieging a city.

"Take thee a tile." The Hebrew word לבנה is, a brick, or a tile. It is questioned whether one green or one dried; and if dried, whether in the sun or fire; and whether white or red: which I will pass over as not being of any great moment. It signifies also any figure that is foursquare, and so any table or thing that may be engraven upon; and because it is from a root in Hebrew that is, to be white, it is conceived to be a table of chalk, or some other whitish stone, in the form of a brick or tile, whereon incision might easily be made. Bricks and tiles are neither white, nor easily admit engravement.

"Pourtray upon it the city, even Jerusalem." That is, express the picture of it by incision and engraving in the same. It is more than describing with the pen or pencil.

The city being pictured upon the tile or table, he is commanded in the next verse to lay siege to it; and so builds a fort, casts a mount, sets a camp and battering-rams against it, and hereby shows what the Chaldeans should shortly do against Jerusalem.

"A fort." The Hebrew word is פֶּתַח, and diversely expounded by the learned. Rabbi Solomon thinks it to be an engine to throw stones within the walls, which might annoy them; the Chaldee renders it, machinas, engines; in the Vulgate, munitiones, defences for the soldiers, and such as might prevent the flight of adversaries. Some other rabbies think it to be a wooden tower, out of which they threw stones and weapons to batter the walls and kill the citizens. Vitruvius saith, that some of them were 120 cubits high, some 60, some less, and 20 cubits broad at least. The Septuagint hath it, προμαχώνας, strongholds, block-houses, fortresses; and so it agrees with our translation, "forts?" 2 Kings xxv, 1, when "Nebuchadnezzar" came "against Jerusalem with his forces, they built forts against it."

"Cast a mount against it," סִלְלָה. It is, per enallagen numeri, a singular number for a plural,

Cap. 11. et 6. de Bell. Jud.

“cast mounts against it.” The word is from סב which is, to raise up the way, when stones, turfs, and other earth are heaped up together, that make a mount: Job xix. 12. “His troops come together, and raise up their way against me;” it is the same word. When they besieged towns, it was their manner to raise mounts before them, that they might come without hurt to the walls.

“Set the camp;” or pitch tents against it, draw out forces, and let them sit down before the city.

רָמִים. “Set battering-rams against it.” The word carim signifies rams, living creatures; and here it is put for a warlike instrument, which was made with an iron head and horns like a ram, to batter and break down the walls of cities. It was drawn back by a great number of men, and then driven on with violence against the walls, and so made breaches in them; and hence it had its name, because in form it was like a ram, et adversa fronte in muros incurrebat, and with adverse forehead ran against the walls. Some understand here the chief leaders in the army, that like as rams are the leaders in the flocks, so princes, nobles, generals, colonels, and captains, are leaders in armies. 2 Kings xi. 4. 19, the word captain there is the same in Hebrew with that here for rams, and notes the chief leaders; but in this place we are to take it for military instruments, which at the command of the chief ones were employed.

“Take thee an iron pan, and set it for a wall of iron between thee and the city.” The Hebrew is, כַּהֲבֵת בְּרוֹר “a pan of iron.” By this it describes the hard-heartedness of the Jews; they were as iron or brass, inflexible before God. Others set out by it the great wrath of God against Jerusalem, which now was come to that height, that no sacrifice, no prayers or tears, could divert or abate it: Lam. iii. 44, “Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass through.” This pan stood as a wall between the city and the prophet; a great impediment between God and them; so that neither their prayers or miseries should come up to God, nor his mercies descend upon them; according to that in Isa. lix. 2, “Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear.” Others think it notes out miseries and tortures the Jews should suffer from the king of Babylon, when he besieged and took Jerusalem. This pan was such a one as they used to fry things in; and Jer. xxix. 22, it is said, that Ahab and Zedekiah were “roasted in the fire” by the king of Babylon; they suffered hard things, they were fried in the pan of afflictions. And this sense agrees with that of Jeremiah, chap. i. 13, who saw a seething pot from the north, which set out the terrible afflictions Nebuchadnezzar should boil the Jews in. There may be some truth in these several senses, but we may, I conceive, understand by this “iron pan” set between the prophet and the city, the firm resolution of Nebuchadnezzar to besiege this city, and to continue it till he had obtained his design; he would not be moved from it, but be as inflexible as iron, and as immovable in it as a settled wall. Or to go a little higher; the resolution of God himself by Nebuchadnezzar to besiege and destroy this city, and that without remedy; for the prophet besieging the city acted God’s part, and this iron pan sets out his firm purpose to besiege them, and his implacable displeasure against them; which is also noted in these words; of the judge to the law, who by no authority, entreaties, or tears can be induced to pardon. And this noted out God’s setting his face against them, of which he told them, Jer. xxi. 10, “I have set my face against this city for evil, and not for good, saith the Lord: it shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire.”

“Set thy face against it;” which, as Pradus saith, is severitatis signum gestusque judicis constantis in decreto, qui nullius auctoritate, precibus, aut fletibus commoveatur ad veniam, a token of the firm adherence

“This shall be a sign to the house of Israel.” Here was the end of all, that the Jews at Jerusalem might no longer trust in the lying words of false prophets, which promised safety to them and their city, whereupon they derided those who were gone into Babylon, and insulted over them; and likewise that those in captivity with the prophets might lay aside all thoughts of returning again into their country, and see it mercy that they were from Jerusalem, which was to undergo the greatest wrath of the Lord.

Obs. 1. The Lord deals with his people not only by his word, but also by signs and types. Here is a tile, and Jerusalem portrayed upon it; here are forts, mounts, tents, rams, iron bands, all which typed out God’s dealing with Jerusalem; and in this language God had oft expressed himself. By the rainbow in the heavens God speaks to the world. Circumcision, the paschal lamb, the high priest’s garments, the stones in Aaron’s breast, the sprinkling things with blood, did all signify and type out something to the people. So Jeremiah’s seething pot, chap. i.; his linen girdle, and bottles with wine, chap. xiii.; the potter’s vessel, chap. xix.; the basket of figs, chap. xxiv.; and yoke of iron, chap. xxviii. And so all the parables in the Old and New Testament, they utter forth the mind of God. God hath throughout his word abundantly expressed himself this way; and the Lord doth it, because types and figures make truth more evident and efficacious. The word affects the ear; types and figures affect the eye, and carry a greater efficacy with them than simple and plain speech. The parable of the barren fig-tree, lost sheep, prodigal son, ten virgins, &c. had much life and efficacy in them. So when Christ took a little child and set before his disciples, Matt. xviii. it wrought more effectually upon them than many words, and left deeper impression in them. We may therefore see the goodness of the Lord in it, that affords us such helps in his word as may affect our hearts most.

Obs. 2. That the Lord knows things to come, and reveals them at his pleasure. He knew that Jerusalem should be besieged by Nebuchadnezzar, and discovers it unto the prophet, and causes him to make a draught of it; which shows a difference between the true God and all others. They that cannot foresee and foretell things to come, are not gods; but the God of Israel can foresee things, though afar off; Psal. cxxxix. 2, “Thou understandest my thoughts afar off, even from all eternity;” and he only foretells things that fall not within the reach of created abilities. He foretold the Messiah, the Egyptian and Babylonian captivity, and times of both; there is nothing future hid from God. We know not what shall be to-morrow, Jam. iv. 14, but God knows what shall be to-morrow, next year, year, hundreds and thousands of years hence, if time be so long; and this proclaims him to be God, even the only true God. Isa. xli. 21—23, God calls there to other gods, to bring forth their reasons whereby to prove their divinity; let them show what is past, and things that are to come, and then he will take them for strong reasons, and acknowledge them gods with himself; but to tell things past and things to come, can none but the Lord himself, and they to whom he reveals them.

Obs. 3. God's appointment and authority makes things and actions mean and ridiculous in the eyes of the world to be weighty and of great use. It seems to carnal reason a childish thing, that the prophet should take a tile, draw the city upon it, make forts, mounts, warlike engines to batter it, yea, to take "a pan of iron" and set between him and the city; these men of the world are apt to look at as ridiculous, much like the practice of boys in a snow, that make forts, mounts, &c. in sport. But be not deceived; what the infinitely wise God commands, is of great concernment, how mean soever the things and actions about those things appear. The legal worship, if you look upon it in itself, seems strange; that they should kill so many beasts, and burn them to ashes; that the tabernacle, and things belonging to it, should be sprinkled with blood; that they must refrain from such meats, be unclean if they touch such things; be circumcised, eat a paschal lamb, &c.; I say, if we look at them externally, they seem irrational things, but if we eye God commanding them, they had an excellency, and were of great use to them, and instruments of much good. Now bread, wine, water, in baptism and the supper of the Lord, seem mean things, and such they are as are common to the world; but Christ's appointment to use these makes the difference; that gives dignitatem et pondus, dignity and weight, so that they are of great virtue to them that rightly partake of them. The pope and his prelates have commanded and brought much into the worship of God, quicquid poterat desiderari ad eximium splendorem, whatever could be desired for imposing splendour; but it is foolish, unsavoury, unprofitable, and efficacious only to make void the ordinances and commands of God. And why? because the Lord never commanded such things. That is contemptible in the eye of man, which being commanded of God, is honourable and efficacious; when that which is pompous, decent, honourable in the eye of the world, being not commanded of God, is despicable, fruitless, and frivolous.

Obs. 4. God is an enemy to sinful cities. He bids the prophet lay siege to Jerusalem, and to batter it; he who commands the ruin of a city is an enemy to that city; Ezek. v. 8, "Behold, I, even I, am against thee, saith the Lord." Jerusalem was once beloved; it was God's rest and desire, Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14; a faithful city, Isa. i. 21; a holy city, Isa. lii. 1; the city of the Lord, Isa. lx. 14; but now it was become a harlot, full of murders; the princes of it were rebellious, and companions of thieves, Isa. i. 21, 23. The sins of Jerusalem were very great; you may read largely of them in the 16th of Ezekiel, where you may find, that Jerusalem's sins and provocations exceeded Sodom's and Samaria's; she justified them in their abominations, they were little, not the half of Jerusalem's; and therefore this made the Lord to say, Jer. xxxii. 31, "This city hath been to me as a provocation of mine anger," or, for a provocation of mine anger, "and of my fury from the day that they built it even unto this day; that I should remove it from before my face." There was no rank of men but had greatly provoked him, kings, princes, priests, prophets, men of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, ver. 32; and therefore God was resolved to destroy it, and to make it a curse to all nations, Jer. xxvi. 6, and pronounced a woe to it in Zeph. iii. 1—4, where you further see what a city Jerusalem was now become, and what her citizens were: "Woe to her that is filthy and polluted, to the oppressing city! She obeyed not the voice; she received not correction; she trusted not in the Lord: she drew not near to her God. Her princes within her are roaring lions; her judges are evening wolves; they gnaw not the bones till the morrow. Her prophets are light and treacherous persons: her priests have polluted the sanctuary, they have done violence to the law. The just Lord is in the midst thereof," &c. And in the 6th verse, "their cities are destroyed, so that there is no man, no inhabitant." Sin makes God to lay waste great cities; Tyre, Sidon, Sodom, Gomorrah, Babylon, Jerusalem, felt the stroke and strength of God's wrath.

Obs. 5. Nothing secures a sinful city from ruin. Let it be strongly built, well fortified, abound with soldiers and munition, have great privileges, yet all these protect it not from invasion, from destruction. Jerusalem is besieged, ruined, burnt with fire; this Jerusalem was the city of David, 1 Kings ix. 24; and God did great things for David's sake, Isa. xxxvii. 35; it was the holy city, Neh. xi. 18; a strong city, Psal. xxxi. 21; the joyous city, Isa. xxxii. 13; the city of solemnities, Isa. xxxiii. 20; the perfection of beauty, and joy of the whole earth, Lam. ii. 15. It was the city which had the temple, the oracles, and ordinances of God, and greatest privileges that ever city had; therefore it is said, kings should bring presents thither, Psal. lxxviii. 29. It was the city that God himself chose above all others, to put his name there, 1 Kings xiv. 21; and hereupon it was called oft the city of God, Psal. xlvi. 4; the city of the great King, Psal. lxxviii. 2; the city of the Lord of hosts, ver. 8. And for her situation, it was among mountains, Psal. cxxv. 2; had towers and bulwarks, Psal. xlvi. 12, 13; and was accounted impregnable: Lam. iv. 12, "The kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed that the enemy should have entered into the gates of Jerusalem." It was conceived to be of invincible strength; therefore the Jebusites, when David came to take it, placed the lame and blind to defend it, thinking them sufficient to keep out David and all his strength, 2 Sam. v. 6, 7, 8. But notwithstanding all these particulars, this was the city to be visited, Jer. vi. 6; and why? she was wholly oppression in the midst of her; she cast out wickedness as a fountain waters, ver. 7. This was the city to be besieged and made desolate, Jer. xix. 8; yea a curse, Jer. xxvi. 6. Nineveh was the great city, Jonah i. 2, but its greatness preserved it not, Neh. iii. Babylon was the golden city, and yet it ceased, Isa. xiv. 4. Jerusalem exceeded all in favours, in privileges, in promises of safety, yet this city is invaded, taken, and laid even with the ground. Let none therefore confide in cities, in any created strength, in any arm of flesh; men are exceeding apt to do it; some trust in chariots, some in horses, some in cities, some in princes and great men; but you will find horses, and chariots, and cities vain things; and for men, that there is no trusting in them at any time; therefore saith David, Psal. lxxii. 8, "Trust in the Lord at all times; ye people pour out your heart before him: God is a refuge for us;" other things are not: and because you will think men are considerable, he adds, "Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie," they will deceive if you confide in them.

Obs. 6. The sins of a people and city may be so provoking, at such a height, that neither God nor man will show mercy to them. God bids him set an iron pan between him and them; showing, that both himself, and the army that he should bring, would be as iron to them. They had iron hearts and necks, Isa. xlvi. 4, and would not yield to God; and now he would be so to them, and cause their enemies also to be such; God would set his face against them, and the faces of their adversaries.

Great sins make God inexorable, severe: Ezek. xiv. 13, 14, "When the land sins grievously, I will stretch out my hand, and cut off man and beast; and though Noah, Job, and Daniel were in it, they should deliver but their own souls;" all their prayers, tears, righteousness, interest in God, should extend no further than themselves. God now had shut his eyes, and would not look upon them; he had stopped his ears, and would not hear them praying, nor others for them. He was set against them, resolved to punish them; therefore no miseries, no complaints, no sufferings of the living, or groans of the dying, could prevail with him; and when the army came, it used them severely enough.

Obs. 7. The Lord sends out his declarations before he causes destructions. "This shall be a sign to the house of Israel." God steals not upon men by public judgments before they hear of them, but tells them of their coming while they are at some distance; the prophets hear of them, and they proclaim and discover them some way or other. This fact of the prophet's would quickly spread and be at Jerusalem, and so might be a warning unto them. God sends out the lightning before he thunders, he frowns before he smites, and gives tokens of his coming in wrath before he executes it.

Ver. 4—8. Lie thou also upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it: according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it thou shalt bear their iniquity. For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days: so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel. And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year. Therefore thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem, and thine arm shall be uncovered, and thou shalt prophesy against it. And, behold, I will lay bands upon thee, and thou shalt not turn thee from one side to another, till thou hast ended the days of thy siege.

In these verses the prophet proceeds in the typical besieging of Jerusalem; and the words declare to us the duration of the siege, which was to be many days; and the cause of it, their iniquity.

The word "iniquity" notes here, not sin, but the punishment of sin, and in that sense it is oft used in sacred language: Isa. liii. 6, "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all," that is, the punishment of our sin; and Psal. lxi. 27, "Add iniquity unto their iniquity," that is, punish their iniquity; punishment is an inseparable companion of sin, and therefore it hath the name of sin. And the prophet was to bear their iniquity; that is, the punishment of it. This he did representatively, by this act of lying upon his side so long; setting out the long-suffering of God, who had borne with the sins of this people, and not punished them as they deserved. Our prophet did not here represent Christ, who bare our iniquities; but at the command of God he sustained the person of the ten tribes and kingdom of Judah; and therefore it is said, ver. 5, "I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity." I have appointed thee, by lying on thy side so many days, to represent the time they have offended me by their idolatries and sins attending the same, and so to set out my patience, and aggravate the punishment of their sin. Christ bare the sin of men to take away the punishment of it; the prophet, to increase the same.

For our better understanding of these hieroglyphical passages in the verses read, we shall make inquiry into sundry things.

1. Whether our prophet did in the literal sense lie so many days upon his side, or was it only in vision?

Some make it real, and say, Ezekiel did lie upon his side all the days that are mentioned; although he slept not all the time, yet he lay in that posture; and that it was by special help of God, if nature could not of itself reach unto it. Yet it is related of a noble man of Louvain, who lay sixteen years in one posture, viz. with his face upwards; and Pradus saith, he saw a madman which had lain upon one side fifteen years. Theodoret thinks he lay bound all this time, and felt most grievous pain, that so he might represent the great miseries of Jerusalem's siege, which suffered great famine.

This opinion hath many and great authors; yet I must join with those who are for the prophet's visional lying on his side. For besides that nature could not bear it, how shall we clear the justice of God, that should for the idolatries and sins of others, which former prophets had reproved, so greatly afflict and punish one innocent.

Again, he was to prepare himself bread, ver. 15 of this chapter; he was to set his face against the mountains of Israel, chap. vi. 2; and if he lay still all these days on his sides, how could either of these be done? It is also said in the 8th chapter, ver. 1, "In the sixth year, in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I sat in mine house, and the elders of Judah sat before me, that the hand of the Lord God fell there upon me." If Ezekiel did in the letter lie so many days, the time was not expired; for the prophet had his first vision in the fifth year of the captivity, the fourth month, and the fifth day, chap. i. 2; and seven days after this vision he had another, chap. iii. 15, which made it the twelfth day of that month; and on that day he was commanded to lie on his side; and if you reckon from thence, you will find not above 413, as Pradus reckons it, or 418; and then if you join the days the prophet lay on his side, they amount to 430. So it will then appear the prophet had twelve or seventeen days to lie on his side, when the text saith, "he sat before the elders." This lying therefore is to be taken visionally, not really.

2. What the lying on the left side points out unto us; and why the iniquity of Israel is laid upon that side. There is some mystery in it, and the opinions of men are different. Some make the reason of it to be the situation of Samaria, which was the head city of the ten tribes, Isa. vii. 9, and this city was on the left hand of Jerusalem, Ezek. xvi. 46; and thereupon the prophet lay on his left side, to represent them and their sins, and on his right to represent the house of Judah and their sins. But beyond this, there is something to be taken hold of, and it is this; the left side, or hand, notes disrespect; the right side, or hand, dignity or favour; Matt. xxv. 34, 41, the good were on the right hand, the bad on the left. By this posture of the prophet, is typed out to us the different respect of God to the house of Israel and Judah. The ten tribes were less dear to God than the other; they had grievous sins, and God would show them less mercy, deal with them as those at his left side. But for Judah, whose sins were as great as theirs, yet God would chastise with less severity; he would not take away his loving-kindness from Judah, though he did from Israel;

Judah was at his right side, and God would in his distribution of sorrow and wrath remember mercy.

3. Whom we are to understand here by the house of Israel. The ten tribes, which are usually so called in the Scripture, were carried into captivity 130 years before by Shalmaneser, in the sixth year of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 9, 10. To what end, therefore, should they be brought in here, under a typical siege of Jerusalem, when they sinned not at Jerusalem; and if they had, were now gone, and under the severity of God?

Some take "the house of Israel" to be meant distinctly of the ten tribes; and this lying of the prophet on his left side not to refer to Jerusalem's siege, but to the sins of the tribes, and the patience of God towards them. Others include the house of Israel in the house of Judah, and so make not the prophet's literal lying to look at the ten tribes in captivity, but at those of them who were joined to the house of Judah. For when the great rent was by Jeroboam, all of the ten tribes did not cleave to him; and many that at first did, afterwards seeing the evil of his idolatrous ways, withdrew from him, and closed with the house of Judah; 2 Chron. xi. 16, 17, when they saw what Jeroboam intended those that "set their hearts to seek God came to Jerusalem to sacrifice, and strengthened the kingdom of Judah." And in Asa's days, many fell to him out of Ephraim, Manasseh, and Simeon, 2 Chron. xv. 9; yea, in abundance: Asa being a good king, they came flocking to him, and willingly sat down under his shade. It is more than probable also, that when Shalmaneser came out against Samaria, and carried away the tribes, that many fled to Jerusalem, and the parts there about; for it is said in 2 Chron. xxx. 6, "That they escaped out of the hand of the kings of Assyria;" and in the 11th verse, that divers of "Asher, Manasseh, and Zebulun humbled themselves, and came to Jerusalem;" this was to receive the passover, and then they returned to their possessions in their own cities, chap. xxxi. 1. So that there were some of the other tribes left, which did partly mingle with them of Judah and Benjamin, and partly dwell by themselves; these, I conceive, our prophet means by "the house of Israel," and together with these their predecessors, which were dead, and in captivity; and that because the three hundred and ninety days, which import so many years, as it is expressed in the 6th verse of this chapter, must needs fetch the house of Israel into this consideration from before the time of their captivity; and that is the next thing we are to examine, namely, where these three hundred and ninety days, typing out so many years, begin.

Various and intricate are the thoughts of men about the beginning and ending of these years; and it would take up much time to present them unto you, and perplex your thoughts much.

I will give you on this point, not what myself, but the soundest interpreters and chronologers, do judge the truth.

Fenceius and Bibliander, two famous chronologers, begin this account at the falling off of the ten tribes, 1 Kings xii.; and so do interpreters of much worth.

Lavater, Polanus, Pradus, A Lapide, and Sanetius, begin it at the beginning of the Jewish monarchy, between Rehoboam and Jeroboam; then were the calves set up at Dan and Bethel, and the ten tribes became idolatrous, and not only Jeroboam and his subjects, but Rehoboam and his likewise, forsook the Lord, 2 Chron. xii. 1.

From this time to the destruction of Jerusalem, were three hundred and ninety years; which will thus appear:

Rehoboam reigned well	3	years	2 Chr. xi. 17.
After his rent	13		2 Chr. xii. 12.
Abijah his son,	3		2 Chr. xiii. 1.
Asa	41		1 Kin. xv. 10.
Jehoshaphat	25		1 Kin. xxii. 42.
Jehoram	8		2 Chr. xxi. 5.
Ahaziah	1		2 Chr. xxii. 2.
Athaliah	7		2 Kin. xi. 4.
Jehoash	40		2 Kin. xii. 1.
Amaziah	29		2 Kin. xiv. 2.
Azariah	52		2 Kin. xv. 2.
Jotham	16		2 Kin. xv. 33.
Ahaz	16		2 Kin. xvi. 2.
Hezekiah	29		2 Kin. xviii. 2.
Manasseh	55		2 Kin. xxi. 1.
Amon	2		2 Kin. xxi. 19.
Josiah	31		2 Kin. xxii. 1.
Jehoahaz	3	months	2 Kin. xxiii. 31.
Jehoiakim	11		2 Kin. xxiii. 36.
Jehoiachin	3	months	2 Kin. xxiv. 8.
Zedekiah	11		2 Kin. xxiv. 18.

These summed, being added together, make up 390 years. Junius begins this account at the 27th year of Solomon's reign, when he and the people fell to idolatry, and extends it to the 5th year after Zedekiah's captivity; but according to the account formerly given, this amounts to a greater sum; besides, Solomon did not by any public edict set up idolatry, nor abolish the true worship of God.

The next thing to be opened, is the forty days, referring to the house of Judah, in the 6th verse; and here it is questioned whether these years are to be taken inclusively in the three hundred and ninety, or exclusively and distinct from them. Some comprehend them in the three hundred and ninety days, because otherwise they would not be finished before the vision in the 8th chapter, ver. 1, as hath formerly been showed; but the prophet's lying on his sides, being visional, not real, it makes not against a distinct exception of these forty years from the three hundred and ninety; for he might in a vision see that he must bear the iniquity of the house of Israel three hundred and ninety days, and the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days, and this vision be over long before either number of days were accomplished. Neither is that in the 9th verse sufficient to prove these forty years are to be taken inclusively from the words, "three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof." Some collect that the prophet was to lie no longer on his sides than he was to eat of the meat prepared; if it had been said in the verse, Make thee bread according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon thy sides, this argument had been strong; but it is, "according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon thy side," that was his left side, and so the argument is invalid. I conceive the forty years to be taken distinct from the other number, because in the 5th verse you have the three hundred and ninety laid upon the prophet to bear for the house of Israel; if forty be excepted out of them, then there remains three hundred and fifty; and it could not be said, "So shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel;" neither could it be said, "When thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side?" he could not reach that number if forty years were cut off; and here is also a distinct command, "Lie again on thy right side," that is, after those three hundred and ninety be finished, then turn thee to the other side, and lie on it forty days. These forty days for so many years, are not additional to the three hundred and ninety, but he is to begin again; and that forty years within the three hundred and ninety, yet not as part of them, or included in them, but as a new account, a day for a year, to represent God's patience toward the house of Judah.

These forty years some make to be the tyrannical, bloody, and idolatrous reign of Manasseh, 2 Chron. xxxiii.; who having forty years opposed Judah, was carried into captivity, and after ten years' suffering returned, purged out idolatry, and for fifteen years served the Lord: these forty provoking years God bare with Judah. Others begin the time of these forty years from the thirteenth of Josiah unto the end of Zedekiah, the space between these is forty years; God now looked for a reformation, but they became worse and worse, as by 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16 doth evidently appear. Whether we pitch these forty years upon Manasseh's ill reign, or the time after, is not much material; so many years did the Lord bear with Judah in a special manner; only take notice, that some reckon these forty years not from the thirteenth of Josiah, but from the eighteenth, wherein was the covenant renewed between God and the people, and then they reckon five years after the captivity of Zedekiah, to make up the forty years, for it is the opinion of learned men, that it was five years after his carrying away, that Nebuzaradan came and burnt both temple and city.

Some make the three hundred and ninety days not only to set out God's patience, but to demonstrate the time of Jerusalem's siege, and God's just hand in it; which, upon due observation, will be found to be just so many days, although there be a great difficulty to make it evident. For in Jer. lii. 4, 5, 6, you may read that in the ninth year of Zedekiah's reign, the tenth month, and tenth day, Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem, and that his siege lasted to the eleventh year of Zedekiah, the fourth month, and ninth day. Now the time between comes up towards eighteen months, and makes five hundred thirty and nine days, which sum contains a hundred forty and nine days more than our prophet's three hundred and ninety, which make but thirteen months precisely, thirty days the month: so that here are five months more in this siege, according to Jeremiah, than we have in this type of Ezekiel. To clear this difficulty we must take notice, that in time of this siege Pharaoh king of Egypt came to help Zedekiah, and raised the siege: Jer. xxxvii. 5, "Then Pharaoh's army was come forth out of Egypt: and when the Chaldeans that besieged Jerusalem heard tidings of them, they departed from Jerusalem:" and so, ver. 11, it is thought they brake up the siege to go and meet Pharaoh's army, which being discomfited, turned back to Egypt, and the Chaldeans to Jerusalem, ver. 7, 8. Five months were spent this way, which Jeremiah reckons in to the siege of Jerusalem. These our prophet leaves out, and looks precisely at the time they were about Jerusalem, which was three hundred and ninety days, or thirteen months. And so you have this difficulty resolved.

Ver. 7. "Set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem." That is, strengthen, harden thy face against them, be inexorable. And this notes out the obstinacy of the Chaldeans that should besiege them; they were a resolute people, and would not be wearied out with difficulties, or easily hearken to entreaties: herein the prophet takes on him the person of the enemy, and shows he should be stern against them.

"Thine arm shall be uncovered." Soldiers of old were wont to have their arms naked in fight; the pictures of the ancient warriors and worthies are so painted; and P. Africanus upbraided monitatis uti firmior, because he made use of robes with sleeves after the fashion of women; and some interpreters say, that the Indians and Africans do it to this day, they fight with their arms naked. Here it shows the readiness and diligence of the Chaldeans, whom our prophet doth personate, to execute their resolution, and shortly to fight against Jerusalem. They would not come with faint hearts, or feeble hands; but as their faces were set against the city, so their arms were naked and prepared against it; not in their bosoms, in their pockets; not folded up, but naked and stretched out, ready to do service; and so the Vulgate reads the word extentum, not uncovered, but stretched out, which implies the uncovering, and more. A like phrase to this you have in Isa. lii. 10, "The Lord hath made bare his holy arm:" as servants strip up their sleeves, make their arms bare, and ready for service; so the Lord made bare his arms, and put forth his power to do some choice service for his people. In this manner was the prophet to prophesy unto the people.

Ver. 8. "I will lay bands upon thee, and thou shalt not turn from one side to another," &c. Some make the bands real, and take the words in a literal sense; but we are to look at all herein as visional. And here is commended the cause of the Chaldeans' obstinacy and resoluteness in this siege and ruin of Jerusalem, and that is, the authority and command of God. He commanded the prophet to lay siege to Jerusalem, to lie on his side till he had ended the days of his siege; and by the band of his power he held him so to it in the vision, that he could not do otherwise; and this typed out the authority and power of God in the king of Babylon towards his soldiers, who should hold them so to the siege of Jerusalem, that they should not depart till they had accomplished it. Their going away to meet the Egyptian army, and drive that back, was in order to the siege of Jerusalem; and these military forces were as bands upon Jerusalem, whose condition the prophet here sustained, and when the Chaldeans compassed the city about, they could not turn aside any way till the firm decree of the Lord was accomplished.

Obs. 1. That God bears with the sins of his people, though great, a long time, and forbears the punishment due to them. Three hundred and ninety years did he suffer them, which marvellously commends to us the patience of God. They provoked him daily, most bitterly, and did evil as they could, Hos. xii. 1, 14; Jer. iii. 5; yet God held his peace and his hands for hundreds of years; and therefore saith, in Isa. xlii. 14, "I have long time holden my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself." If God had not power in him to punish, his suffering with sinners so long were not so much; but God hath power enough to be avenged on all the sinners of the earth; he could crush them as a moth in his hand, every moment; he hates sin with a perfect hatred, and yet he bears with notorious sinners, with all sinners and sins, deferring the punishment of them sometimes a long season; so that he is not only patient, but long-suffering: 1 Pet. iii. 20, "The long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing." What did it wait for? even their repentance. Noah preached unto them of the flood, warned them by preparing of an ark, and God expected they should amend and turn to him; and it was a hundred years at least he waited upon that generation; and now, "the Lord is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance," 2 Pet. iii. 9. If we will not repent of our sin, God will repent of his long-suffering; his wrath will kindle, and we shall perish, be inexcusable, and have the deeper condemnation for abuse of his long-suffering.

Obs. 2. Though the Lord bear long with sinners, yet he forgets not their sins; they are in his book, sealed up in his bag, Job xiv. 17, among his treasures, Deut. xxxii. 34. It is a speech borrowed from men that count up their money, look over their writings, and put them into bags, and seal them up, that they may be safe, and reserved for a long time: so God keeps men's sins safe by him, and that a long season, and then at length, when they have forgot them, he unseals the bag, and brings them forth, and shows them how their sins have abounded, what a treasury of sin they have, and what a treasury of wrath he hath, Rom. ii. 5. God remembered the defection of Israel, which was almost three hundred and ninety years before; and however men think of their sins past, God will rub their memories, revive their consciences, and indict them for old sins: Job xiii. 26, "Thou makest me to possess the iniquities of my youth." Job xx. 11, "His bones are full of the sin of his youth." Psal. xxv. 7, "Remember not the sins of my youth." God presented before them their youthful sins that had been committed many years before. 2 Sam. xxi. 1, Saul was dead, but his sin was alive; there was a triennial famine, and for whose sake was it? "for Saul's, and his bloody house, because he slew the Gibeonites," which was done many years before; but here God remembers the sin, and visits it upon the heads of his sons; seven of them suffer for that sin. Nah. i. 2, "The Lord reserveth wrath;" he doth not presently punish sinners, but twenty, thirty, forty years after he reckons with them, and pours out the wrath reserved: when he hath had the glory of his patience, then God visits for old sins. Isa. xlii. 4, God had been silent a long time; "Now will I cry like a travelling woman; I will destroy and devour at once;" patience being ended, God's wrath begins, and revives the guilt and sin that hath lain asleep so long. Joseph's brethren being in affliction, their sins came to mind, Gen. xlii. 21, "We are verily guilty concerning our brother:" they had sold him long before, above twenty years, and thought they should never hear of him, or their sins in the sale of him; but now in a strait God brings that sin to memory: sin is not over when it is acted, but may be heard of many years after. It is likely now in these afflictive times, that many meet with their old sins, and they lie hard upon them; let that be the prayer of such, which you find, Psal. lxxix. 8, "O remember not against us former iniquities: let thy tender mercies speedily prevent us, for we are brought very low." And take heed of sinning for the future against God; for be "sure your sin will find you out," Numb. xxxii. 23, and be thorns, not in your flesh, but in your consciences; old sins will be old serpents, sting unto death: Isa. x. 3, "What will ye do in the day of visitation?" Ezek. xxii. 14, "Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee?"

Obs. 3. Such is the nature of states and churches, that falling into sinful ways, they seldom return, but proceed, adding sin to sin, filling up the measure of their iniquities. Jeroboam makes a rent, lays a foundation in idolatrous practices, and the house of Israel continue in that way three hundred and ninety years, not one king of Israel right. Solomon goes out by the enticing of his wives to false worship, he corrupts Judah, leavens it with idolatry, and not all the good kings in Judah could get out that leaven again perfectly; if there were a stop of idolatrous passages made in one king's reign, there was liberty granted in another's. Idolatry and other sins so abounded in Ahaz's, Manasseh's, and Zedekiah's days, that the Lord was weary of them, and not quiet till he had rejected them. And this is not only so in states and churches, but also in particular cases; if men fall into any way of wickedness, so corrupt is nature, so prone unto sin, that it persists unto its own perdition, rather than returns to its own salvation: it must be a merciful and powerful hand of God that reduceth a straying sinner, much more a straying state.

Obs. 4. That length of time is no good plea for errors, false worship, sinful customs and practices. They could plead hundreds of years for their high places, calves, Samaritan rites, altars, priests, &c. yet antiquity would not exempt them from guilt and punishment. He "must bear the iniquity of the house of Israel;" they had sinned in the erection, use, and retention of these, and God had visited, and would yet visit more for them. What if we have had prelacy and popery, ceremonies and superstitious rites among us hundreds of years? they are plants not of God's planting, and through age so rotten, that they need plucking up, and it will be his honour whose shoulder and strength is employed that way.

Obs. 5. The Lord shows more favour to his people, sinning great sins, than he doth to others that are not his. The house of Israel hath the left side, is Lo-ammi, none of God's people, and therefore utterly rejected, sent into captivity, and return not; the house of Judah hath the right side, God would show them favour in their captivity, and return them after seventy years' correction in Babylon. God's carriage towards his servants is different from that towards others: Psal. lxxxix. 30—33, "If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments; if they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes. Nevertheless my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from him." Here God took not away loving-kindness utterly from Judah, sending her into captivity, but it was utterly taken from Israel; if the one be whipped with rods, the other is whipped with scorpions. Saul sins in offering sacrifice, 1 Sam. xiii. in sparing Agag, 1 Sam. xv. David sins in the defilement of Bathsheba, in the murdering of Uriah, 2 Sam. xi. in numbering of the people, 2 Sam. xxiv. Solomon sins in hearkening to his wives, in falling to idolatry. Yet God dealt not with David or Solomon, whose sins were greater than Saul's, as he did with Saul: Thy kingdom shall not continue, saith Samuel, and the Lord hath rejected thee from being king; and it repented God that he had set up Saul to be king, 1 Sam. xv. 11, and he dealt severely with him, he would not answer him in his straits, but cut him off by the Philistines' and his own sword. So that he and his were broken in pieces, and rooted out by the wrath of God; but David and Solomon were chastised with the rods of men, 2 Sam. vii. 14: and see what followeth in the next verse, "My mercy shall not depart away from him," (meaning Solomon, when he committed iniquity,) "as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee." God proceeds otherwise with wicked men than he doth with his children; there is much love in all their afflictions, and mere wrath in all the wicked's sufferings. Peter's sin in denying Christ was greater than Ananias's and Sapphira's in denying a portion of their goods, and almost parallel with Judah's; yet he hath a gracious aspect from Christ, fetching penitent tears from his heart, when the others are smitten with strokes of death.

Obs. 6. The instruments God uses in the execution of his judgments shall be resolute, ready, and active. "Set thy face toward the siege, and thine arm shall be uncovered, and thou shalt prophesy." The Chaldeans were resolute upon the siege, came fitted every way to it, and were active in the work: 1 Hab. i. 8—10, "They shall fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat;—they shall gather the captivity as the sand;—they shall deride every strong-hold, for they shall heap dust and take it." When God will have any notable work done, he raiseth up instruments for it.

Obs. 7. God's power and providence overrules secondary agents so, that they shall execute his pleasure, and not disappoint it. God laid bands upon the prophet, and he could turn no way till he had accomplished the days of the siege; and when the king of Babylon and his forces were come to the work, God held them to it, and executed his judgments by them. Pilate would have quit his hands of Christ's death, but he was to be an instrument, together with Judas and others, and they did what the hand and counsel of God determined to be done, Acts iv. 28. Moses would have declined the work of bringing out the Israelites from Egypt, and bringing in of judgments upon the Egyptians, but God ordered and overruled his spirit.

Ver. 9—17. Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches, and put them in one vessel, and make thee bread thereof, according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon thy side, three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof. And thy meat which thou shalt eat shall be by weight, twenty shekels a day: from time to time shalt thou eat it. Thou shalt drink also water by measure, the sixth part of an hin: from time to time shalt thou drink. And thou shalt eat it as barley cakes, and thou shalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man, in their sight.' And the Lord said, Even thus shall the children of Israel eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them. Then said I, Ah Lord God! behold, my soul hath not been polluted: for from my youth up even till now have I not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces; neither came there abominable flesh into my mouth. Then he said unto me, Lo, I have given thee cow's dung for man's dung, and thou shalt prepare thy bread therewith. Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, behold, I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem: and they shall eat bread by weight, and with care; and they shall drink water by measure, and with astonishment: that they may want bread and water, and be astonied one with another, and consume away for their iniquity.

The time of Jerusalem's siege being typed out by the prophet's side-lying, he comes here to type out the grievous famine that should be in that siege; and this he doth,

1. From the coarse materials they should make their bread of, in ver. 9, "Wheat, barley, beans, lentiles, millet, and fitches."
2. From the quantity they should eat, ver. 10, 11, they must eat and drink by measure.
3. From the quality of it, ver. 12, it should be bread baked with dung, defiled bread; this was to type out the Israelites' eating polluted bread among the gentiles, where they were to be captives.
4. From the prophet's deprecation against eating polluted bread, ver. 14, "Ah Lord! my soul hath not been polluted," &c.

5. From God's answer, yielding to the prophet's request, in ver. 15, giving him "cow's dung for man's;" and then declaring his intention in ver. 16, 17, that he would "break the staff of bread," bring them to extreme want, and cause them to pine away.

Something I must open before I come to the instructions arising out of the words.

Ver. 10, "Twenty shekels a day." There were shekels of gold, 2 Chron. iii. 9, shekels of silver, 2 Kings xv. 20, shekels of brass, 1 Sam. xvii. 5, of iron also, ver. 7. Some of these shekels are yet to be found amongst antiquaries; on one side they have stamped the homer of manna, which God commanded Moses to lay up in the sanctuary, and in Samaritan letters written Shekel Israel; and on the other side is stamped Aaron's rod flourishing, with these words, Jerusalem Kedoshah, because the Scripture mentions the shekel of the sanctuary, as Exod. xxx. 13, and Numb. iii. 50. The rabbies, and many others, make a difference between shekels, and say, that of the sanctuary was holy, and of twenty gerahs; others were common, and of ten gerahs, half the weight of the other; and this opinion hath prevailed much amongst authors; but I find it by later writers opposed, and especially by Vilahandus. It is called the shekel of the sanctuary, not because it differed from others, but for that it was kept there to be a standard and measure for all the rest, that there might not be great and small shekels at the pleasure of men, and mischief accrue that way. They hold that the shekels were all of one weight, though not of one substance; and that,

First, because no just reason can be given why they should differ, and so doubts be multiplied of what shekel it was meant, when mention is made of shekels and half shekels, as Exod. xxx. 13, and the third part of a shekel, Neh. x. 32.

Secondly, because the shekels that are now extant in the world, are of the same weight.

Thirdly, the Scriptures make the shekels that were in common use, the same for weight with those of the sanctuary. Observe two places, and it is evident: Ezek. xlv. 9—12, he blames princes there for violence and fraud, and exhorts them to use just weights and measures, and then mentions the shekel, which shall be twenty gerahs; this was the shekel in common use: now see Exod. xxx. 13, where he speaks of the shekel in the sanctuary, and saith there a shekel is twenty gerahs, and so the same with that in public use. A gerah weighed sixteen barleycorns, and twenty gerahs came to three hundred and twenty barleycorns, which made the weight of the shekel of the sanctuary and others. Some render the word gerah by obolus, for farthings; some by stivers, and was the value of two shillings, or two shillings and four pence. For the weight, which is the thing we are here chiefly to look at, a shekel was the same with the stater among the Grecians and Romans; and Ensebicus calls shekels, στατήρας, and a stater was four drachms, called τετραδράχμων, which was half an ounce, and so accordingly the twenty shekels' weight was ten ounces; so that the loaf or weight of bread here allowed to the prophet, day by day, was of ten ounces only. Others, that follow the opinion of the common shekel, which was the fourth part of an ounce, make the weight of his meat or bread, only five ounces, for so much do twenty shekels amount unto; and this is so little, that hardly life can be maintained by it. I incline to the former opinion, and leave it to your judgment.

Shekel is a weight, from shakal, to weigh, from whence our word scale, or scéal, is taken.

Ver. 11. "The sixth part of an hin." From the bread he descends to the drink, which was no better than fair water, and not overmuch of that. A hin was a measure of liquid things, as of oil, wine, and water, and it contained twelve of those measures which are called logs, of which you

Mamon, in his which Ainsworth saith, is half a pint, the rabbies, as much as six eggs; but Pradus observes that the eggs in Palestine were greater than elsewhere, and that six of them would fill the Roman sextarius. And he clears a common error about those eggs: they are not to be taken for the eggs of fowls, which are sometimes greater, sometimes lesser: but an egg was a certain standing measure among the Jews, in the form of an egg, and the least measure they had: six of these made a log, and seventy-two an hin. So that the sixth part of an hin was two logs, that is, so much as twelve eggs would contain; for their measure of an egg was after the proportion of ordinary eggs, and came to no more than one pint, or six ounces, as some conceive; but a pint of water weighed comes to sixteen ounces, which was very little for four and twenty hours; vires non tribuit, sed mortem tantum prohibuit, it did not strengthen but only prevented death; bread and water was so little, that their hunger and thirst were rather increased than diminished thereby.

Ver. 12. "Thou shalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man, in their sight." Poor people in many places use mean things for firing; some burn straw, some brakes, some turf, some thorns, some dung, but it is the dung of beasts, which being dried by the wind and sun, burns well, and supplies the necessity of the needy; but the dung of man for firing hath scarce been heard of. This he should take, and in the embers and ashes thereof bake his miscellany bread, to set out the great scarcity of fuel, both in their siege, and in their captivity. This was a very irksome business for a prophet, to gather the dung of men, to dry it, make fires with it, and prepare his diet with such unsavoury fire, and that in their sight, not privately; this did much trouble him; but especially to eat such bread: and this sets out also the great haste and hunger they should be in; they should not stay till the bread was baked in an oven, but presently hastened their dough to the fire, though never so unwholesome.

Ver. 13. "Defiled bread." Because, in Lev. xix. 19, they were forbid to sow their fields with mingled seed, it hath been conceived thence, that this was called defiled bread, because of the mixture of grain, wheat, barley, beans, &c.; but mingling of seeds neither made the ground nor the bread polluted; for he is not afterwards bid to change the seeds, but the dung; it was that made it polluted bread, the baking of it in so noisome a fire: and this set out the coarse and polluted diet they should eat, not only when they were besieged in Jerusalem, but when they should be in Babylon.

Ver. 14. "I have not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces; neither came there abominable flesh in my mouth." Whosoever toucheth or eateth of these was unclean, Lev. xi. 39, 40; xxii. 8; Deut. xiv. 21; and so for their excrements, the Lord is careful they should not be defiled with them, Deut. xxiii. 10—14; Lev. v. 3; vii. 21. It doth not appear any where in Scripture, that bread prepared thus is defiled, only here in the former verse God calls it so; and the Jews had tender, delicate stomachs, which did abhor all unclean things, and therefore they used much washing, and oft washed their hands before meat. The strength of the prophet's argument lieth thus: Lord, I have never eaten any abominable polluting flesh, and how shall I now eat defiled bread? I have ever kept myself from what thy law hath forbidden, and how shall I now defile myself with that which nature itself abhors.

Ver. 15. "Cow's dung for man's dung." This was less terrible to nature. This relaxation was of advantage to the prophet, not to the people; for when the siege came, they did more horrid and unnatural things than eat bread baked in cow's or man's dung, as you may read, Lam. iv. 10.

Ver. 16. "I will break the staff of bread." The staff of bread is a metaphorical expression, borrowed from staves, used by those who are weak, sickly, and aged; by their staves they help and support themselves: such a staff is bread to the frail nature of man, and man that hath it blessed unto him, finds it as a staff to stay up his fainting spirit. This phrase imports two things:

First, the virtue and nourishment which comes by bread; and hence it is said to strengthen man's heart, Psal. civ. 15.

Secondly, the bread itself. There may be much bread, and little virtue in it; and, on the contrary, little bread and much virtue in it, as in the widow's meal and oil, 1 Kings xvii. 14. But when God will break the staff of bread, he ever takes away the one, if not the other, the plenty of bread, if not the virtue of it: Lev. xxvi. 26, "When I have broken the staff of your bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver you your bread again by weight; and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied." The Greek for breaking the staff of bread, renders it, afflicting with penury of bread. As breaking of bread, Acts ii. 46, notes plenty and communicating of food; so breaking the staff of bread implies want and scarcity: Psal. cv. 16, "He called for a famine upon the land, he brake the whole staff of bread," so that the land could not sustain them; and Isa. iii. 1, "The Lord of hosts doth take away from Jerusalem and from Judah the stay and the staff, the whole stay of bread, and the whole stay of water." God would take away the plenty and the virtue, he would not bless either unto them: hence it is said, "They shall eat, and not have enough," Hos. iv. 10; "not be satisfied," Mic. vi. 14. "Ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm," Hag. i. 6. Some would here understand by breaking the staff of bread, to be meant only a deficiency, not an insufficiency; but I conceive God would take away both their bread and the blessing of that which remained, according to that in Deut. xxviii. 17, "Cursed shall be thy basket and thy store?" God would take away both the bread and the blessing; that, the blessing being removed, they might be weakened, and the bread being removed, they might be consumed.

The word קק ver. 17, signifies to pine away, as a man in a consumption, and not only so, but to become noisome and loathsome; and so it is used, Psal. xxxviii. 5, "My wounds stink and are corrupt." So they should not only consume, but grow loathsome and unsavoury, as it is usual with those who are almost finished.

Obs. 1. That God's judgments upon a sinful people are seldom single, but one succeeds in the neck of another. Before the prophet had been put upon a siege, and now he must express a famine, and mind them of eating polluted bread in another land. In Deut. xxviii. and Lev. xxvi. God threatens judgment after judgment, till he hath consumed them. It is long before God begins to strike, but when he once strikes, he will go on and despatch his work, and make an end of an impenitent people; and so recompense his slackness to punishment with severity and succession of judgments. Amos iv. God had judgments, which like fish-hooks should snatch them away, cleanness of teeth, droughts, blastings, pestilence, &c. Ezek. xiv. God hath sword, famine, pestilence, and noisome beasts, to send one after another, and what one leaves the other shall devour. God smote them with the sword in Ireland, and hath not the famine followed it? We are under the edge of the one, and shall be, I fear, under the teeth of the other.

Obs. 2. That a famine upon any is a distressing judgment. If God send it upon Jerusalem, they shall find it very heavy. When David was put to that hard choice, 2 Sam. xxiv. he would not have the sword or famine to come upon him or his.

Lib. 6. Curtius reports of Alexander, that warring against the Bactrians, he and his were besieged with such a famine, as they were forced to eat up their horses that carried their necessaries. When the Carthaginians besieged Saguntus in Spain, they were brought to such miseries with a famine, that they made a fire in the midst of the market-place, and first burned that they had left, and could not eat, and then cast in themselves and children, to put an end to their miseries; whence arose that speech or proverb, Saguntina fames, a Saguntine famine, noting extreme want. It is also related of Cambyses, son of Cyrus, that seeking to subdue the revolted Ethiopians, his army was in such a strait for victuals, that they were forced to fith out every tenth man, and to live upon them; and that this continued so long, that Cambyses feared himself, and thereupon returned. It is known what a grievous famine was at Sanserre in France, when Charles IX. besieged it in the year 1573, and shot against it in three days' space 3500 great shot of ordnance, and killed not one by them; yet almost all the people were consumed by the famine in the siege thereof, having eaten up all things living, and the leather off trunks and saddles. In the days of Edward II. there was such a famine, as a parliament was called to moderate the prices of things.

Speed's History. Such was the dearth, that bread could Lib. 9. c. 11. scarce be gotten to serve the king's own family. The famine grew so terrible, that horses, dogs, yea, men and children, were stolen for food, and thieves newly brought into the gaols were torn in pieces, and eaten presently half alive, by such who had been longer there. The Scripture tells us of as great famine as we can read of: the Samaritan famine was such, as that, like vultures, dogs, and swine, they fed upon carcases and dung itself; 2 Kings vi. 25, the Assyrians besieged Samaria, until "an ass's head was sold for fourseore pieces of silver," that is, shekels, and that came to above eight pounds of our money, "and the fourth part of a kab of doves' dung for five pieces of silver;" a kab contained four pounds and five ounces, and the fourth part was thirteen ounces, and for this they gave ten shillings and upward. Some think it was the corn in the crop of the dove, which did fly abroad, and came home full; but the text is plain, it was the dung of doves, which whether they used for salt, having an acrimonious humour in it, or for food, their distress was very great. But this of Jerusalem was the sorest that ever was. They had coarse fare, the food of beasts, beans, lentiles, millet, fitches, and little of this; bread and water were measured out unto them; their bread was defiled, dressed with dung; their firing failed, having burnt up all things combustible; God's curse Deut. xxviii. 53. was upon what they had, he brake the ^{55.} staff of bread; no nourishment came from that they had; they went up and down distressed, and died for hunger. Read Lam. iv. 4, 5, &c. The tongues of the sucking children did cleave to the roofs of their mouth; other children asked bread, and none brake it unto them: the scarlet men of the city embraced dunghills, the beautiful Nazarites were blacker than coals, the slain with the sword were preferred before the slain with famine, the pitiful women sod their children, they were their daily meat. Thus God brought down Jerusalem, and quickly can do any. Let us acknowledge God's mercy that we are not under such a judgment; let us be humbled for abuse of his good creatures, no more pamper the flesh with them; let us not be proud of what we have, hoard up God's blessings, but communicate and distribute to the necessities of others, and use all to God's honour.

Obs. 3. That hunger makes coarse and loathsome things pleasant. Bread polluted will be acceptable in a famine; bread made of that which horses and swine eat, of beans, lentiles, fitches, &c. and be as barley cakes; barley of itself is a sweet grain, but being made into cakes, it was more pleasant; and such is ill diet in time of famine. Prov. xxvii. 7, "To the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet;" the sweetest thing is bitter to the full, the bitterest is sweet unto the empty. When Esau was faint, then red pottage was worth a birthright, Gen. xxv. 32. Artaxerxes being put to flight, his provisions taken away, and he had only a few dry figs, and a little barley bread, said, Hunger is the best cook, and the best sauce. When Darius drank puddle-water, and that defiled with dead carcases, he Cicer. 5. Tusc. said, he never drank more pleasant drink. As it is with women in their longings, any thing longed for is pleasant, not other things, whatever they be; so in famine, any thing edible is longed for, and that makes it pleasant, even an ass's head, doves' dung, polluted bread, man's flesh.

Obs. 4. The conformity of the punishment to their sin. They had sinned in excess, and God would take away their plenty. Hos. xiii. 6, "According to their pasture, so were they filled;" they had full pastures, fed largely, exalted their hearts, and thought they should never want; they forgot God in their fulness, and he made them to remember him in a famine. Fulness of bread was the sin of Sodom, and the sin of Jerusalem also. God brake the staff of bread. They sinned in defiling themselves with idols, and offered meal and oil, honey and flour, for a sweet savour to their idols, Ezek. xvi. and now they must eat polluted bread among the gentiles; they had worshipped dunghill gods, and should shortly eat dunghill bread: they had been proud of their ornaments, and those in scarlet should embrace the dunghills. Hab. ii. 8, "Because thou hast spoiled many nations, all the remnant of the people shall spoil thee;" it is spoken of the Chaldeans. Pharaoh drowned the Israelites' children; he and his were drowned in the Red sea for it. Solomon, to please his idolatrous wives, divided the worship of God between God, himself, and idols; and God divided his kingdom between his son and his servant. Socrates tells of Severianus a bishop, that called Chrysostom a kneeless fellow, because he would not bow and crouch to good causes: one trod upon his toe, which rankled, and he was forced to cut off that leg, and the other, and so became kneeless himself. Charles IX. who had Comment of Civil Wars of France. been bloody in his life, died of a bloody flux; and the blood issued out of the several parts of his body, who in the bloody massacre had caused and suffered blood to be shed in the several parts of his kingdom: he used to blaspheme in his life, and died blasphemously at his death. A Romish zealot repined at the fuel burnt at the king's return from Spain, and said, There was such waste of wood, as shortly there would not be a faggot left to burn heretics: this party being at Blackfriars when the downfall was, received a mark of remembrance by a piece of wood. See Doctor Goad in his relation of that accident.

Obs. 5. The afflictions and judgments which befall God's people, are not casual, but providential. If the Jews be besieged, famished, taken, carried away into other lands, and eat polluted bread there; God's eye hath directed, his hand hath acted, and therefore he saith, Whither shall I drive them? What Nebuchadnezzar and his army did, was the work of God. So Joseph said of the dealing of his brethren in selling him into Egypt, Gen. xlv. 5, that it was God sent him thither. It is the power and providence of God that acts in all troubles, and circumstantiates them for time, place, measure.

On ver. 14. Obs. 1. That the saints of old were careful to walk according to the prescriptions of the law. The law forbade eating of those things which died of themselves, whatever was torn in pieces, every abominable thing; and our prophet was careful to observe such and other prescriptions. It was the saints' duty to live after the directions of the law; what God had written to them therein, they were bound to observe, and did exactly. David had respect unto all the commands of God, Psal. exix. Moses was faithful in all the house of God.

Obs. 2. A gracious heart will deprecate that which is contrary to its sanctification. "Ah Lord, my soul hath not been polluted;" thou art the author of holiness, and I have walked holily hitherto, and now must I defile myself? ah Lord, let it not be. The words are very pathetic; he saith not Jehovah in the original, but Jehovi, which the servants of God have used in their most pathetic prayers and speeches: as Abraham, Gen. xv. 2—8. Deut. iii. 24; ix. 26, "I prayed unto the Lord," saith Moses. "and said, O Lord God, destroy not thy people and thine inheritance." Moses's spirit was exceedingly affected; and in such cases, he and others called God Jehovi; and so doth Ezekiel here, he was intense in deprecating defilements. So Peter, Acts x. when the sheet was let down with all beasts, fowls, and creeping things in it, and the voice said, "Rise, Peter: kill, and eat," his heart was stirred: What! shall I eat that which is common, unclean, and pollute my soul? "not so, Lord," ver. 14; μηκαρῶς, κίρως, in nowise, Lord; whatever becomes of me, though I starve, I will not eat any thing that shall defile me.

Obs. 3. The godly are careful not only to abstain from great sins, but from little ones also. It was no great matter to eat bread baked with a fire made of man's dung, and that in time of necessity, but even this would not Ezekiel yield unto; there was evil in it. So Daniel would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, chap. i. 8; Moses would not leave a hoof in Egypt; Job made a covenant with his eyes not to look upon a maid, and therefore gave not sway to his mind to think upon one, Job xxxi. 1; thinking is less than looking, and this he would not allow himself: Joseph abhorred the act, and Job the thought of uncleanness. Paul would not be subject one hour unto false brethren, Gal. ii. 5; and he bids the Thessalonians to "abstain from all appearance of evil," not only evil, but the appearances of it. This made Paul to blame Peter for yielding to Jewish ceremonies, when they carried a face of evil, Gal. ii. 14; and to say, rather than he would offend his weak brother by eating, he would "eat no flesh while the world standeth," 1 Cor. viii. 13. The primitive christians would not throw a little frankincense into the fire, nor bow before an idol, though their lives lay at stake upon the refusal.

Obs. 4. That the saints, through darkness and doubts, do stick at that which is lawful and warrantable. God bids Ezekiel bake his bread with man's dung, and eat it; here was warrant sufficient for him; God's command makes a thing holy. Acts x. 13, "Kill, and eat," said the voice to Peter; No, saith Peter; and why? the creatures in the sheet are common and unclean; but it was replied, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common or unclean." How came all to be clean in the sheet, when by the judgment of the law there were creatures unclean in it? It was the command of God made all so, "Kill, and eat." Peter, without doubting or questioning, might have killed and eaten any creature there, without polluting his spirit; and so Ezekiel might have eaten such bread without defilement. God's command legitimates any thing: Abraham's sacrificing of his son, Gen. xxii. 2; Hosea's marrying a wife of whoredom, Hos. i. 2; the brother marrying with the brother's wife, Deut. xxv. 5; and carrying of the bed on the sabbath day, John v. 11. Where there is a word from Heaven for any thing, we need not fear defiling ourselves. The saints of God stuck at things when they had a word; no marvel if saints now stick at things when they have no word.

On ver. 15. Note, that God doth condescend to the weakness of his servants, and mitigates what seems grievous unto them. Man's dung was very irksome to the spirit of the prophet; the Lord dispenseth with his command, and gives him cow's dung for man's. The saints are precious in God's eye, and rather than grieve and displease them, he will oft, upon their petitioning to him, dispense with his own will; but take it up warily, when the dispensation is in things that are not prejudicial to his glory, his wisdom, his truth, or his justice, and here it was not. God suffered no way in mitigating the sentence, and giving cow's dung for man's; it rather magnified God, that he will yield to the desires of his people, when he is in a way of judgment. Joshua, when Israel had sinned, and God smote them, he falls down, he weeps, and laments, beseeches God in behalf of the people; and what saith God to him? Josh. vii. 10, "Get thee up; wherefore liest thou thus upon thy face?" I will have thee mourn no longer; I will not destroy Israel. So that in Amos vii; there is a sore judgment of grasshoppers, that eat up all the grass of the land; the prophet is grieved, and prays, "O Lord God, forgive, I beseech thee: by whom shall Jacob arise? for he is small;" and ver. 3, it is said, "The Lord repented for this," and said, "it shall not be;" and so a second time, after he yielded to the request of the prophet. This should encourage us to sue to God in these times of distress, without doubting, for a mitigation of our miseries, if not a removal; he is a God hearing prayer, a God that will mitigate his own judgment, rather than exasperate the spirits of his people. Let it also teach us a condescension one to another; let us not be rigid and stick to our wills, and think it disparagement to abate of our wills and right, and yield to others, when God, who is infinitely above us, can yield to us, and doth so daily, bearing our infirmities: remember that place, Rom. xv. 1.—3, where the strong are bid to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please themselves, but to please and edify their neighbour: and what is the ground of it? Christ pleased not himself, but for our sakes he bare reproach,

On ver. 16, 17, Obs. 1. It is in God's power to blast the comforts of this life. "Behold, I will break the staff of bread." God gives bread, drink, clothes, whatever sweetens the lives of sinful, sorry men here on earth; and when he pleases he can take them or the blessing of them from us. What are clothes if they keep not warm? What is bread if it do not nourish? it is the same as if you had none. God can break the staff of bread, so that all your comforts shall be broken comforts; and he can take away the staff of bread, so that your comforts shall be no more. Amos iv. 8, "Two or three cities wandered unto one city, to drink water; but they were not satisfied; the waters quenched not their thirst, they were broken comforts: and Hos. iv. 10, they did eat, but had not enough, they were not filled and satisfied; the staff of bread was broken, and the comfort of it too short for them. But that is not all; sometimes there is no water, no bread left; Lam. i. 11; iv. 4, 5, there was not a little, but none. God can take away all the comforts of this life, and leave us as naked as we came into the world. Neither is it only in his power to break the staff of natural bread, but of the spiritual also: "Behold, I will send a famine, not of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord: and they shall wander, and shall not find it," Amos viii. 11, 12. This is the sorest famine; and such a famine is in many places. Let us take heed we provoke not God to plague us with such a famine.

Obs. 2. The end of God in his judgments, is to perplex and ruin wicked, impenitent sinners. God sends a famine, that they may eat and drink with care, with astonishment, and consume away in a loathsome manner. What a miserable sight is it to see a man pined, even to death, for want of bread! Many in time of plenty are filled with care and fear about their backs and bellies, what they shall eat, and what they shall drink, and how live the next day; how much more men in the depth of a famine! See what Isaiah saith, chap. ix. 19—21; there was a civil war to be amongst them, famine accompanying that, and the wrath of God to consume them, as fire doth fuel; and what then? "No man shall spare his brother. And he shall snatch on the right hand, and be hungry; and he shall eat on the left hand, and they shall not be satisfied; they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm: Manasseh, Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh." When they could not consume one another fast enough, they would consume themselves; eat their own arms to save life, and that eating was death.

Obs. 3. It is men's iniquities which bring such consumptive judgments upon them. "They shall consume away for their iniquity." Sin is poison, and that makes languishing; it eats up the strength of a man, wears out all his comforts, and brings him to the pit: Lev. xxvi. 39, "They shall pine away in their iniquity;" their flesh, their spirits, their hopes, their lives may leave them, but their iniquities will not.

CHAPTER V.

Ver. 1—4. And thou, son of man, take thee a sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thine head and upon thy beard:

then take thee balances to weigh, and divide the hair. Thou shalt burn with fire a third part in the midst of the city, when the days of the siege are fulfilled: and thou shalt take a third part, and smite about it with a knife: and a third part thou shalt scatter in the wind; and I will draw out a sword after them. Thou shalt also take thereof a few in number, and bind them in thy skirts. Then take of them again, and cast them into the midst of the fire, and burn them in the fire; for thereof shall a fire come forth into all the house of Israel.

This chapter carries on the argument of the former. Jerusalem's misery in that was presented to you under single types, a siege and famine; in this also, under a complex type, is set forth the judgments of God against Jerusalem. I call it a complex type, because it contains many judgments of God. It is generally propounded in the first verse, particularly in the three next. The matter of this type is here, and, touching it, he is commanded,

1. To take a knife or razor, and to cut off the hair of his head and beard.

2. To weigh it, being cut off; and,

3. To divide it.

Something I must open in the words; give you the sense of them, and then the observations.

"Take thee a sharp knife." In the Hebrew it is, a sword, קרב which signifies any instrument that cuts and divides, of iron or stone: in Josh. v. 2, "Make thee sharp knives;" knives of flint is the original. What knife our prophet meant is expressed, "a barber's razor," Hebrew, a razor of barbers, such as they use when they trim men; and they are very sharp, most commodious, and fit for that service. This razor here sets out the will and judiciary power of God in punishing the Jews by Nebuchadnezzar, who, in Isa. vii. 20, is called a razor; and that is sharp, strong, and fit for shaving.

This razor must pass upon the prophet's head and beard, and take away the hair of both, even close to the skin.

"Head." It types out unto us Jerusalem, which had the regions round about subject unto it, and now the chief city of Judah. God would shave the head and beard of this city off.

The citizens are resembled to hair of a man's head and beard:

1. For their multitudes; they are numberless, and Jerusalem had multitudes in it of her own, and thither was a conflux of all sorts, from most parts.

2. Hair is an ornament, 1 Pet. iii. 3; not only to women, but also to men; their hair doth become them, Cant. v. 11; and people are a great ornament to a city: a city unpeopled is a head without hair; people are the beauty and glory of a city. Solomon saith, Prov. xx. 29, grey hairs are the beauty of old men; and grey-headed counsellors are the beauty of cities. Some by the hair of the head think the wise men of the city are figured out, and by the hair of the beard, are the strong men; the beard is a token of manhood.

3. Hair is a weak thing, blown this way and that way with every wind; and so it is with the people; they are weak, inconstant things: Heb. xiii. 9, they were "carried about with divers and strange doctrines;" 2 Pet. ii. 2, "Many follow their pernicious ways." People are truly in this sense hair; they move forward and backward, every way, there is no steadfastness in them: hence they are compared to waters, in the holy writ, which are ever ebbing and flowing; to clouds carried about of winds, Jude 12.

By the hair of the beard we may understand those in the country towns and villages that were near unto Jerusalem.

The shaving off this hair points to us three things:

(1.) Great mourning. Shaving off the hair was used in that case, Job i. 20; when all the sad accidents were reported to Job, he "rent his mantle, and shaved his head," which was a sign of great mourning. So Ezra, chap. ix. 3, when the Jews had defiled themselves with strange women, he plucked off the hair of his head and beard, and sat down astonished. See Isa. xv. 2; Jer. xlviii. 37.

(2.) Great disgrace. So when Hanun suspected the messengers David had sent unto him, he shaved off half their beards, which was a great reproach, and vindicated with the sword, 2 Sam. x. When men are without hair on their heads or faces, it is a reproach to them; hence the boys mocked the prophet, and called him "bald head," 2 Kings ii. 23.

(3.) Destruction. When hair is cut off it falls to the earth, and perisheth; and when people are cut off from God, they perish. God would separate them from Jerusalem, from his worship, from his presence, and so they should fall to the earth, be as filth, and come to nothing.

The next thing considerable, is the weighing of the hair.

Balances are an emblem of justice, and set out here the great equity of God in dispensing of his judgments; he is exact in them, even to a hair's weight; his judgments are not too light or too heavy, but have their just weight and measure.

The division of the hair follows; and that notes out the diversity of their conditions; they should not all fare alike, but the judiciary providence of God would proceed, with some in one kind, with some in another.

Ver. 2. A third part was to be burnt in the midst of the city. It may be questioned what city, he being now in Babylon: it was the city portrayed upon the tile, chap. iv. 1, which was Jerusalem. What is meant by fire is doubted. Fire in Scripture often notes out great calamities, as in Psal. lxxvi. 12, "We went through fire and through water;" 1 Pet. iv. 12, "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial;" and here some understand fire in a metaphorical sense, for famine and plague, whereby a third part of the citizens died; others take it literally, and conceive hereby is represented the burning of Jerusalem, of which you may read 2 Kings xxv. 9, and in the last of Jeremiah. And this sense Junius favours, because it was to be done at the end of the siege; when his visional siege was expired, then he was to burn the hair; and when the siege of Jerusalem was out, and it taken, then was it burnt with fire.

Another part was to be smitten with a knife; that sets out those who were to be cut off by the sword, either in the siege, or after it, as 2 Kings xxv. 4-7; and not only those in the city, but all in the regions about it.

After this, a third part was scattered into the wind; which notes their dispersion into several parts. As hair before the wind is carried some one way, some another; so were these Jews scattered, some into Moab, some into Ammon, some into Egypt; and Johanan carried divers thither, Jer. xliii.; but God threatened them with a sword, Jer. xlii. 16, and xlv. 27, and made it good when Nebuchadnezzar conquered Egypt; which is prophesied of in the 46th of Jeremiah: God drew out a sword, and sent it after them.

Ver. 3. The binding up a few in his skirts, typifies the exemption and preservation of some few from the common calamities. It is a metaphorical speech, taken from gardeners, that pick up the good fruit in their laps and skirts, and throw aside the other. This little number were the poor which Nebuzaradan left for the vine-dressers and husbandmen, over whom Gedaliah was made ruler, 2 Kings xxv. 12, 23; and those that escaped out of Egypt when the judgment fell there, Jer. xlv. 28, it is said, a small number should escape, and return to Judah.

Ver. 4. "Take of them again, and cast into the fire." Of that remnant which was preserved he must take a parcel and burn; this was to represent to the world the death of Gedaliah, who was left governor of the little number remaining in Judea. You have the story of his death, by Ishmael, in the 41st of Jeremiah, who conspired against him, and slew him and fourscore more. After this he took those who were left by Nebuzaradan that were under Gedaliah, and attempted to carry them captives into the land of Ammon; but Johanan and the captains withstood him, recovered the people, and after carried them into Egypt; and so from that treachery against Gedaliah, a fire went forth into all the house of Israel. Some refer the fire going out of this remnant preserved, to the Jews returning out of Babylon, a great part of whom were slain by Antiochus Epiphanes; some put it upon their destruction by Titus. Gallatinus extends it to Hadrian's time, who slew at one time 50,000 of them in India in the city Bitter, and so ruined the whole nation. These Euseb. l. 4. Hist. opinions I leave, as having less truth and suitableness to the text, than that which was first mentioned.

Obs. 1. That wicked men are of little worth; take a whole city of them, they are of no more account with God than a little hair of the head or beard. Hair in itself is an ornament, but when it groweth burdensome, off it goes, and is rejected as a thing of naught; so inhabitants are a glory to a city, but when they become wicked, they are a burden to it, and to God, he will cut them off, and value them no more than a little hair. Absalom cut off his hair when it was heavy, but he prized it very high, at two hundred shekels, 2 Sam. xiv. 26. God cut off the hair of the head of Jerusalem, it was very heavy, but he prized it not: wicked men, multitudes, millions of them, are not worth a hair, they are inconsiderable, worthless things; all the wicked of the world are but excrements in it, which must be cut off and thrown unto the dunghills: Psal. ix. 17, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." Take the best thing of the wicked, it is of small price, some farthing matter: Prov. x. 20, "The heart of the wicked is little worth;" his clothes, his ornaments, and jewels, his estate, and house, and land, may be of great worth; but himself, his very heart, is of little worth, not accounted of in heaven. But now take the meanest thing of a godly man, it is valued, regarded; "the very hairs of his head are all numbered," Matt. x. 30.

Obs. 2. It is the privilege of Christ to appoint whom and what instruments he pleases to execute his pleasure upon sinners. "Take thee a sharp knife, a razor, and cause it to pass upon thine head and beard." The prophet might not take what instrument he pleaseth, but what Christ appointeth; it was he set apart Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuzaradan, and the Chaldeans, to shave Jerusalem; and therefore the whole work is given to God: Isa. vii. 20, "The Lord shall shave with a razor that is hired by them beyond the river, by the king of Assyria, the head, and the hair of the feet: and it shall also consume the beard:" this is spoken of Sennacherib, and verified also in Nebuchadnezzar. Both these were razors in the hand of God, by which he shaved "the head," the princes and nobles, counsellors were cut off by him; "the beard," the priests and strong men; "the feet," the common people. It is the Lord appoints and sets instruments on work to afflict churches and states: Amos iii. 6, "Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?" there is no razor shaving in a city, but the Lord hath set it on work there. Micah i. 12, "Evil came down from the Lord, unto the gate of Jerusalem;" it came from above, and it came to Jerusalem. Hereupon the prophet, in chap. vi. 9, said to them, "The Lord's voice crieth unto the city, and the man of wisdom shall see thy name; hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it."

Obs. 3. When God hath been long provoked by a people, he comes with sharp and sweeping judgments amongst them; and that is set out by the razor. He had waited much upon them, they went on in their sins, but now God calls for a razor, and that should go to the quick. God would not reap them or lop them; in those cases the stubble and trunk are left; he would shave them, not leave a politic body or church state. That place in Isa. vii. 20 holds out the truth fully; he would spare neither head, beard, nor feet; every condition of people, the honourable, the mean, the lowest, should be shaven. He would not only strip them of their clothes, but shave them, and take away their native beauty; he would fill them with mourning, make them a scorn, cut off their limbs, and destroy their lives; there should be no city, no temple, no king, no priest, no sabbath, no God left them. But hath not God shaven them in Germany, in Ireland? and is he not shaving us now?

Obs. 4. That there is no standing out against God; whatever our number or strength is, his judgments are irresistible. Men here are compared to hairs, his judgment to a razor; can the softest or hardest hair withstand the razor? can any one or all the hairs of the head or beard do it? no, the razor will easily pass through all, as a scythe through grass or corn: hairs are weak things, razors sharp and strong. Pharaoh was the strength of Egypt, but God by the Red sea did shave him, and many thousands more, from off the face of the earth. The great men of the world are no more to God than hairs before the razor; he cuts off the spirit of princes, Psal. lxxvi. 12, he challengeth the briars and thorns of the earth, "Who would set them against me in battle? I would go through them, I would burn them together," Isa. xxvii. 4.

Obs. 5. The judgments and proceedings of God with sinners are not rash, but most carefully weighed. He weighs out the hair, and proportions suitable judgments unto those that were represented by it; the infinitely wise God is exact in his proceedings. Hence you have it in Scripture, that God doth weigh actions, Psal. i. 2, 3; the paths of men, Isa. xxvi. 7; their spirits, Prov. xvi. 2, he examines how they are clogged with sin and guilt. God measured the covetousness of Babylon, which was exceeding great, and he brought answerable judgments upon her; Jer. li. 13, 14, God would send caterpillars to eat up all her wealth. Let God deal with Babylon or Zion, he observes a proportion in his judgments; Jer. xli. 28, speaking of Jacob's seed, he tells them he will correct them in measure. The afflictions of the church seem great, and oft are great, yet never are they without measure: Psal. lxxx. 5, "Thou feedest them with the bread of tears, and givest them tears to drink in great measure."

Obs. 6. There is no escaping of God's judgments for hard-hearted sinners. Here are diversity of judgments; fire, sword, dispersion: if one did not take, then another would overtake them; if the fire did not scorch them, the sword should cut them off; if not, that they should be scattered. 1 Kings xix. 15—17, God bids Elijah anoint Hazael king of Syria, Jehu king of Israel, and Elisha prophet in his room; and tells him there should be no escaping for sinners: if they escaped Hazael's sword, they should die by Jehu's; if not by his, they should by Elisha's; not that he used the sword, but by his prayers, and by his prophecies. In Jer. i. 10, he was set over kingdoms, to root out, pull down, and to destroy: many escape the swords of princes, and are smitten by the swords of prophets. Let not sinners think to delude God; he will meet with them one way, one time or other. Amos ix. 1—3, God comes there in judgment, he stands upon the altar, and bids them smite the lintel of the door, that the posts may shake; this was spoken of Jerusalem, not of Dan and Bethel; God would not at all appear there. And what follows? God would destroy them; there would be fleeing presently. And what saith he? "He that fleeth of them shall not flee away, and he that escapeth of them shall not be delivered;" let them dig to hell, climb up to heaven, hide themselves in Carmel, in the bottom of the sea, God will follow them, find them out, and make them smart; if enemies should carry them away, and show favour to them, God will send a sword, and it shall slay them, ver. 4. See Amos ii. 13—16. Nothing will privilege; not speed, strength, courage, bow, horse, these are good, but in time of judgment they will not secure; not a great house, though of stone, Amos iii. 15; not gods of gold and silver, Isa. ii. 20, 21; not heaps of such treasure, Ezek. vii. 19, "They shall cast their silver in the streets, and their gold shall be removed: their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord;" not horns of the altar, 1 Kings ii. 28, 30, 31; not prayer, Jer. xi. 14; not fasting and sacrifice, Jer. xiv. 12.

Obs. 7. That in great judgments and general destructions, God of his infinite mercy spares some few. Ezekiel must take a few and bind up in his skirts, all must not be destroyed; the fire and sword devoureth many, but the dispersion preserved some, and some few are left in Judah. God is just, and yet when he is in the way of his judgments, he forgets not mercy: a little of the hair shall be preserved, when the rest goes to the fire, sword, and wind. When all flesh had corrupted their ways, and a general flood was brought in, Noah and his family were saved: when Sodom was burnt with fire and brimstone, Lot was bound up in the skirt of God: when Athaliah slew all the seed royal, Joash was hid, and escaped that treachery, that butchery, 2 Kings xi. 1, 2. No storm sinks all ships; no plague, famine, war, eat up all particulars; God will have a number exempt; Isa. i. 9, God left them a small remnant, a few clusters after the vintage. When the cities were to be laid waste, the houses unpeopled, a great forsaking to be in the midst of the land, Isa. vi. 11, 12; in the 13th verse it is said, "but yet in it shall be a tenth;" God would spare a number, though small; he is merciful, hath tender bowels, remembers his covenant, his name; and therefore in his hottest wrath shows some mercy. This made Jeremiah say, Lam. iii. 22, "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed." He and some few more were hid from the common calamities; they met with mercy in the midst of fire and sword. This made Habakkuk pray, Hab. iii. 2, "In wrath remember mercy."

Obs. 8. That the paucity preserved in common calamities are not all precious, truly godly. Here was hair bound up in their skirt, kept from fire, sword, destruction; yet some of that hair, of that number, must be thrown into another fire. Rejucates for the present escape as well as elect vessels; some choice ones may be cut off, and some vile ones may be kept. In the flood all were not naught that were destroyed, nor all good that were saved; there was a wicked Ham in the ark: and Lot's daughters that escaped the fire of Sodom were none of the best; that fire had not purged out their lust: and those who were set at liberty from the brick and clay of Egypt, afterward were destroyed for their unbelief, Jude 5; they were patient in their bondage, preserved in the Red sea, tempted God, murmured in the wilderness, and there were destroyed of serpents, 1 Cor. x. 9. They were murmurers, fornicators, idolaters, unbelievers, that God delivered from the tyranny of Pharaoh, and after perished by the stroke of God. In a storm cedars and oaks are smitten, when bushes and briars are spared; and yet after they are cut up and cast into the fire. Sinners may escape present wrath, but there is wrath to come, Luke iii. 7.

Obs. 9. God may take occasion, from the sin of some, to bring in judgment upon all. He must take of the remnant preserved, and throw into the fire, and out of that fire went forth fire into all the house of Israel. Shechem ravisheth Dinah; from thence the Lord took occasion to bring the sword, by Jacob's sons, upon the Shechemites, who slew their males, spoiled the city, and took their sons and daughters captives, Gen. xxxiv. David sins in numbering the people, and God sent in a plague amongst them for his sin, which slew seventy thousand of them, 2 Sam. xxiv. The people were not innocent; if so, God would not have destroyed them; they were defiled with the contagion of his sin, or under the guilt of others. God may let in a judgment into a family, city, kingdom, upon the sin of some one or few, and when it is in, it may extend to all or most in them: when one house is on fire, all the rest are in danger that are near, and oftentimes do suffer. Haman's discourtesy to David's messengers, his sin against the law of nations, provoked God, and cost the Ammonites and Syrians dear; for God stirred up David's spirit, who warred upon them, and slew many thousands of them, 2 Sam. x.

Ver. 5, 6. Thus saith the Lord God; This is Jerusalem: I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her. And she hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries that are round about her: for they have refused my judgments and my statutes, they have not walked in them.

In the ensuing part of the chapter is the explanation of the types, and in this explanation you have:

I. The subject, or head to be shaven, opened unto you, and that is Jerusalem, ver. 5.

II. God's dealing with Jerusalem, in the same verse.

III. The motives that made him proceed in such a judicial way, ver. 6, 7.

IV. Threatening of judgments, answerable to the types, from ver. 8, to the end.

"This is Jerusalem." It was not Jerusalem literally, but represented Jerusalem; it was a sign of the city that was to be shaven. This head to be shaven is here by the Lord's own mouth pronounced to be Jerusalem, which was not only the head city of Judah, but of the whole world. Things and persons that are eminent among others, are called the heads or chief of them: 1 Sam. xv. 21, they took the chief or head of the things which should have been destroyed; and chap. ix. 22, "He made them sit in the chiefest place;" and for persons, Deut. i. 15, "I took the chief of your tribes," that is, the heads of them; Psal. cx. 6, "the heads over many countries." And so here Jerusalem was the head and principal of all other cities, built upon mount Zion, and had the temple, the prophets, the true worship and presence of God: so Jerusalem, as the head, gave light, influence, and motion to the whole body. "The law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem," Isa. ii. 3; from thence all parts of the body hath instruction and direction.

"I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her." These words have occasioned some to think, that Jerusalem was the heart and centre of the earth, lying in the midst of it; on the south was Africa, on the north Scythia, Armenia, and Pontus, on the east Asia, and on the west Europe; and with these great parts of the world it was compassed about. Hence the Spirit of God also affirms it to be "in the midst of the earth," Psal. lxxiv. 12, and Ezek. xxxviii. 12. And infinite wisdom appeared in it, that so the sound of law and gospel might disperse the better into all parts of the world. But this opinion must not be taken in a mathematical sense, as if it were so in the midst of the earth, as that all other parts should be equidistant from it in their extremes, as the line from the centre; for so it will hardly admit of truth, some quarters of the world being of larger extent than others. "In the midst of the nations and countries" we need not to extend to the whole world, but only to those that were neighbouring thereunto; or if we will have an eye to all nations and countries of the earth, we must expound, in "the midst," among, or in, and the sense then is safe; I have set thee in, or, among, the nations, as head and chief: thus the phrase is used oft in Scripture: Psal. ci. 7, "He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house;" the Hebrew is, in the midst of my house: so Gen. xviii. 24, if there be fifty righteous in the midst of the city, that is, in the city; and Ezek. i. 1, "As I was among the captives;" the Hebrew word is, in the midst of them: so that it frequently signifies, in, or, among. And so in this verse we may take it; or thus, Thou hast chief nations and cities about thee, very rich and noble, as Asia Minor, Egypt, Babylon, &c.; and I have set thee chief in the midst of these chief ones, thy prerogatives exceed theirs, and whatever they can pretend unto, thou canst pretend to more; are they fruitful, rich, honourable, populous, strong? thou goest beyond them even in all these: I have set thee in the midst of them, that they may all behold thy beauty and excellences. Heathens called this city famous, and chief of the eastern cities, well fortified, &c. The psalmist sets it out best, Psal. xlviii. and lxxxvii. where are many eulogies of it; as, "The city of our God," "The mountain of his holiness," "The joy of the whole earth," "The city of the great King," that kings saw and marvelled at; "Founded in the mountains," "Loved of God in a special manner," "Glorious things were spoken thereof;" and that which is above the rest, "God was known in her palaces;" not in the palaces of other cities, and "known for a refuge." Jerusalem was exalted and privileged above all cities and nations, and set on a high hill, that so the truth and worship of the true God might have been held forth to all round about her: but Jerusalem was ungrateful; she honoured not that God who had so honoured her;

and therefore, being "set in the midst of the nations," is brought in here, not for Jerusalem's praise, but for a reproach and aggravation of her ingratitude.

This ingratitude is illustrated in the 6th verse two ways :

1. God gave them his judgments, and they changed them into wickedness.

2. They did it more than the nations and countries about them.

"Changed." The word is from $\text{נָחַ$ and it is feminine, noting Jerusalem's act, which had caused God's judgments to be changed; she made a great and thorough change. The word signifies to exchange one thing for another, and to do it thoroughly: Jer. ii. 11, "My people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit." A great change they had made, in exchanging glory for unprofitables.

"My judgments." The word מִשְׁפָּט notes commands, precepts, laws, rules, ways of God and his worship. These had Jerusalem changed, especially the rites and ordinances of his worship. So the word is taken, Psal. lxxxi. 5; the blowing of the trumpet in the new moon was a mishphat, a rite, an ordinance due to the God of Jacob.

The word statutes is much of the same nature, noting rules, decrees, and ordinances about the worship of God. See Ainsworth on Psal. ii. 7, and Leigh, in his Critica Sacra, of the word חֻק . It is mentioned in the 119th Psalm twenty-two times, and notes the constancy of divine decrees and laws; and therefore is applied to the heavens and waters, which keep their place and course unchangeably, Psal. cxlviii. 6.

"Into wickedness." This is a high expression, I think not in the whole Scripture again: Ezek. vii. 11, "Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness." It is far short of this you have in Rom. i. 23, 25, expressions suitable to this: they changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image, and the truth of God into a lie. And so in Jude, "The grace of our God into wantonness," ver. 4. And Jerusalem changed God's judgments, which are his glory, his truth, his grace, into wickedness; the inventions, superstitions, ceremonies, laws, worship, idols of the gentiles, were taken in, set up, countenanced, and God's judgments, statutes, and worship, thrust out, laid aside.

This they did more than the nations and countries round about them; they dealt worse with God than heathens; and wherein was that? in the refusal of him and his ways: for, "they have refused my judgments and my statutes." The Hebrew word to refuse notes not a bare refusal, but a rejecting, and that with disdain; Hos. iv. 6, they rejected knowledge, and loathed the means of grace; they dealt with God's ordinances and worship contumeliously: Prov. iii. 11, the word is expressed by despising; they made no account of God's statutes and judgments, and so despised and rejected them; they did neither for their worship nor their lives regard his will. Jerusalem having God's statutes, should have so prized them, stuck to and practised them, that thereby she might have drawn the gentiles round about her to the knowledge and worship of the true God, but she sinned more than the gentiles, and justified them in their wickedness. They sinned not out of ignorance and weakness, but wilfully, maliciously.

Obs. 1. That the Lord gives to the sign the name of the thing signified. "This is Jerusalem:" it was only a sign, and not Jerusalem itself; yet God was pleased to call it so; and the Scripture doth frequently speak in that manner. Gen. xli. 26, "The seven good kine are seven years, and the seven good ears are seven years;" they were not the years, though so called, but signs of years: 1 Cor. x. 4, "That Rock was Christ," a sign of Christ, not Christ himself; and chap. xi. 24, "This is my body," not his flesh and blood, as papists would have it, but a sign of it.

Obs. 2. It is an honour for cities to be the head and chief of the regions where they are, especially where the covenant, truth, and church of God is in them. Jerusalem was the head, and God had made good his promise in Deut. xxviii. 13, "The Lord shall make thee the head and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath, if that thou hearken unto the commandments of the Lord thy God." The way for cities to be honourable, only above, and always above, is to hearken unto God, to cleave close to his ways, to exalt him in his worship; but if they will go aside from his word and worship, God will shave them, their honour shall quickly be laid in the dust, they shall be made the tail instead of the head: ver. 43, "The stranger that is within thee shall get up above thee very high; and thou shalt come down very low;" and ver. 44, "He shall be the head, and thou shalt be the tail:" and this you may see fulfilled, Lam. i. 5, "Her adversaries are the chief." The Babylonians had shaved Jerusalem, and brought her low, which made Jeremiah say, "How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary!" ver. 1.

Obs. 3. The Lord sets his church and people among the wicked, and that for special ends. "I have set thee in the midst of the nations;" and God had peculiar ends in it. The nations and country about were full of ignorance, idolatry, and profaneness; God recorded his name at Jerusalem, set his worship there, and them in the midst of the nations, that they might make known the true God, the true religion, the true way of worship; that they might by their holy lives win those that were without, bring them in to serve the God of Israel. And had the Jews been conscientious of their ways, faithful and spiritual in their worship, they might have prevailed much with the nations to have turned from their idols, and other sins, to the living God; at least have convinced them of the evil of their own ways, and the excellency of God's ways. Therefore Moses used this argument to persuade the Jews to keep God's statutes; Deut. iv. 6, "Keep therefore and do them," saith he, "for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people." Examples of cities and nations are convincing and persuasive orators, if they be godly; beacons on a hill, whose light extends far. Great cities have influence into all the counties and countries round about. They came from all places to Jerusalem, from Sheba, 1 Kings x. 1; from Æthiopia, Acts viii. 27; from Parthia, Mesopotamia, Libya, Rome, and many other parts, Acts ii. 9, 10; and what they saw and heard at Jerusalem, that fastened upon them. What is done in great cities is much observed, and goes forth to the ends of the earth; Rev. xvii. 5, "Babylon, the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth."

Obs. 4. Ingratitude is a sin that provokes Heaven itself; it caused God the giver to upbraid Jerusalem the receiver. "I set thee in the midst of the nations;" I made thee the head, put honour upon thee, called thee my city, was thy defence, glory, strength; I gave thee my judgments and statutes: and what hast thou done? Corrupted thyself, corrupted the nation; changed my judgments into wickedness, and rejected them. This troubled the Lord greatly in all ages: Deut. xxxii. 6, "Do ye thus requite the Lord, O foolish people and unwise? is not he thy father that hath bought thee? hath he not made thee?" &c. And notwithstanding all that God had done for them, and was to them, yet they corrupted, bespotted themselves, dealt perversely and crookedly with God: so Isa. i. 2, "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: I have brought up children, and they have rebelled against me;" oxen and asses were more respective of their owners, than they were of their God, and therefore God upbraids them with it. God had done much for that people; his law, prophets, temple, worship, miracles, choicest blessings of heaven and earth, were for them, and yet they were ungrateful; therefore God calls heaven and earth to witness against them how unreasonable they were in their carriage towards the Lord. So in Jer. ii. 12, he puts it higher, "Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, be horribly afraid, very desolate." And why should there be such a change in the heavens? because God's people had made a dreadful change on earth. God had been a fountain of living waters unto them, filled them with comforts of all sorts, made them green and flourishing, and now they had forsaken him for puddle and broken cisterns of their own. Ingratitude troubles heaven and earth. Bernard saith, man's ingratitude troubled Christ more than his cross, nails, whippings, reproaches, yea, his death; for Christ to become man, to suffer all for man, and he to be unthankful, this pierced him to the heart most. And when God doth much for kingdoms and cities, and they prove ungrateful, it puts God into an upbraiding way: Isa. v. 4, I did so and so for my vineyard, oh, "what could have been done more?—I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up," trod down, laid waste; it shall have briers, and no rain shall fall upon it.

Obs. 5. Those who have the name and face of God's people may become worse than heathens. Jerusalem changed God's statutes into wickedness, that was ill; but she did it more than the nations, which was exceeding ill. Hence you find, Ezek. xvi. 46—48, that the sins of Jerusalem exceeded the Samaritans' and Sodomites', "Thou hast not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations: but, as if that were a very little thing, thou wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways:" their sins were inconsiderable to Jerusalem's. And because Sodom's sins being so great, notorious, as that they fetched fire from heaven, and God could not forbear them any longer, it would hardly be received that Jerusalem's sins were worse than Sodom's; the Lord swears to it: "As I live, saith the Lord God, Sodom and her daughters have not done as thou and thy daughters have done." The nations and countries about never sinned so desperately against God, as those who professed his name, and went for his people; and you have the sentence of Heaven for it, Jer. ii. 10, 11, "Pass over the isles of Chittim, and see: and send unto Kedar, and consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing. Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit." The turpitude of their fact is fully set out; it was such as could not be paralleled among heathens. Inquiry was made, the report given in, that the gentiles changed not their gods, they would not alter their laws and worship they had from men; but the Jews parted with their glory, when they would not part with their shame; they let go their religion, which was divine; and, without any just cause, changed God's judgments and statutes into wickedness, into that which neither did nor could profit; they were changelings, chopped away heaven for earth, God for idols, and his worship for men's inventions. This made the Lord say of them, Jer. iii. 5, "Behold, thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldest." What could they do worse, than let the infinite, glorious, wise, most holy, and blessed God, go for idols and idolatrous worship; when the heathens would not let their gods go, that were of base and corruptible materials, made by the hands and art of men, that could neither see, hear, or help them? What could Manasseh do worse than he did? 2 Kings xxi. 11.

Ver. 7, 8. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye multiplied more than the nations that are round about you, and have not walked in my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, neither have done according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you; therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I, even I, am against thee, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee in the sight of the nations.

The 7th verse is of the nature of the 6th, and hath in it motives unto God to proceed in judgment with Jerusalem. First, they observed not the laws of God. Secondly, not the laws of the nations, but multiplied more than they. And, Thirdly, before them unto whom they should have been patterns of piety.

"Because ye multiplied more than the nations." Some expositors refer these words to their mercies, not their sins; and make the sense thus: Because thou hast multiplied in number, in riches, in honour and strength, in victory, in profits, in ordinances, in all blessings; for which ye ought to have been thankful, fruitful, and obedient unto that God who blessed you thus above the nations; but instead of this hast dishonoured God, grown loose, idolatrous, &c.; therefore will I deal accordingly with thee. Take it thus, and you have this note: That prosperity rather renders a people worse than better; they had more mercies than the nations, and more sins than they; as they abounded in God's blessings, so they abounded in ingratitude: Deut. xxxii. 15, "Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked," &c. Hos. xiii. 6.

But others refer this multiplying to their sins; and the sense is this: Because thou hast not satisfied thyself with a little wickedness, but multiplied sins, iniquities, transgressions, and that more than the heathens, that had not thy mercies, nor thy light, therefore will I judge thee. And that they multiplied sin is evident: Ezek. xvi. 25, "Thou hast built thy high place at every head of the way, and hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by, and multiplied thy whoredoms;" she sinned with the Egyptians, Assyrians, Chaldeans, ver. 26, 28, 29.

"The judgments of the nations." The gentiles have their judgments, their laws, rules, and ways of living and worshipping. Some understand here the laws of nature, what men have written in their hearts naturally, according to what you find, Rom. ii. 14, 15; and the Jews that had the laws of God superadded to the law of nature, did not abstain from those sins the nations did; they observed the law the Jews brake.

Others refer it to their laws, decrees, and practice, touching their gods, and the worship of them: they were tenacious of both, and would not alter their worship, nor exchange their gods. It was a maxim among heathens, That no novelty should be indulged in the affairs of religion; and thus they thought it impious to depart from what they had received. When Paul came to Athens, they did and would worship their unknown God; Paul could not prevail with them to exchange a lie for a truth. Not all the miracles Moses did in Egypt prevailed with Pharaoh and the Egyptians to forsake their false gods. So that these words are a reproach to the Jews, who were not so constant as the nations to their gods.

Obs. 1. That God walks not in the way of judgments till men do walk out of the way of his statutes. Because ye have not walked in my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, therefore I will do so and so by you. God's delights are in ways and works of mercy; judgments are his strange works, and strange acts, Isa. xxviii. 21; he is provoked unto them as a bee unto stinging; it is the child's wantonness causes the father to use the rod. David's sin brought the sword to his own house, the plague to the people. When the wickedness of the earth was great, then the windows of heaven were open, and the flood came, Gen. vi.

Obs. 2. When God intends judgments, he usually convinces sinners. Judgments and convictions are not far asunder. God sets their sins before them; they walked not in his statutes, they sinned more than the nations, therefore he would proceed in judgment with them; he convinces them of their sin, to make way for a further conviction, namely, of the equity of his judgments. When the Lord shall convince a sinful people to be guilty, and that of great sins, it stops their mouths, and proclaims the equity of his judgments, which are ever short of the merit of men's iniquities; Ezra ix. 13, "Our God has punished us less than our iniquities."

Obs. 3. That heathens are oft more true to their principles than the people of God. The nations kept their judgments, their gods, their worship; they would not suffer aught to be spoken against their gods. Demetrius and others were in a rage against Paul and his companions for it, Acts xix. They were free from many of those sins which were practised and countenanced among the Jews, who kept neither to the true God, nor to his statutes and judgments. Ahaz is better pleased with an altar from Damascus, than that the Lord had appointed, 2 Kings xvi. Solomon, that excelled in wisdom, showed his folly in this, that he built high places for Chemosh and Molech. And not only a particular man, but the body of the people turned aside from the true God: Judg. ii. 12, "They forsook God, that brought them out of Egypt, and followed the gods of the people that were round about them, they bowed to them, and served Baal and Ashtaroth:" and chap. x. 6, it was an ordinary thing with them: "The children of Israel did evil again in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim, and Ashtaroth, and the gods of Syria, the gods of Zidon, and the gods of Moab, and the gods of the Philistines;" they were not satisfied with one or two false gods, but fetched in the gods of the nations round about. Hence this people are said to go "a whoring from under their God," Hos. iv. 12; his laws, statutes, worship, government would not suffice them, but they would wander, and have strange gods, and strange laws. 2 Chron. xii. 1, "Rehoboam forsook the law of the Lord, and all Israel with him." God's law was exchanged for the laws of men. They kept the statutes of Omri, and brake the statutes of Jehovah, Mic. vi. 16. The Jews were as inconstant to their God, and in his worship, as any nation under heaven. God upbraids them for it, Jer. ii. 36, "Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way?" God had given them a good way, a way of life, and they would not abide in it, but hasten into ways of sin and death; they loved to wander, Jer. xiv. Hath not England been weary of God's ways, wandered to Rome, and other parts, to fetch in somewhat of theirs? Have we not been upon conjunctures of protestants and papists, in doctrine, discipline, and ceremony?

Ver. 8. In the 8th verse is laid down a dreadful threatening; "Behold, I, even I, am against thee;" and the denunciation of judgment runs on to the end of the chapter, with many aggravations. Here the Lord is brought in a just and severe judge, and the chief author of all the judgments which were to come upon them; "I, even I, am." &c. It is doubled, and notes,

1. Evidence, that so they might be persuaded of it. The Jews thought that God would never be against Jerusalem; but to convince them, he tells them, "I, even I, am against thee."

2. Certainty, that whether they believed it or no, they should find it so.

3. Earnestness, to set out the intensiveness of God in this thing. He was serious and real, his heart was in it, he was not words, but weight; "I, even I," &c. that so they might be the more affected.

The Vulgate reads it, to thee, instead of "against thee;" the Hebrew bears both, and the sense abides the same: I, even I, to thee; that is, coming to thee with my judgments; I am hastening towards thee for thy ruin and destruction; and so coming to Jerusalem, is being against it. That phrase in Lev. xxvi. 24, of walking contrary to them, and punishing them, is the expository of this here; God would come to them, come against them, and destroy them; and this should be not in a private way, but in the sight of the nations. It is a sad thing to have God secretly out with one, much worse to have him an open enemy, as God professes he would be unto them all who should see his dealings with them.

"Judgments." Here it is not taken as in the 6th and 7th verses, but notes wrath, vengeance, and punishment to be inflicted upon evil-doers. It is the same word in the Hebrew that notes laws and punishments, and both are called judgments, being from the infinite wisdom, counsel, and judgment of God.

Obs. 1. That it is God who is the great agent in all judgments which befall cities and kingdoms. Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuzaradan, and many thousand fierce bloody soldiers came against Jerusalem, but God was in them, acted and ordered them; they were the rod and staff in his hand, with which he beat Jerusalem; the axe with which he hewed them; the razor wherewith he shaved them; and might have said, It is not we but your God who is against you; he hath commanded us to come forth, to plunder your country, to besiege, take, and burn your city. Though you yielded not obedience to his commands to prevent the judgment, yet we must and will, to execute the judgment appointed by him. Sufferers are apt to look at the next and second causes; not at God, but armies, plagues, famines. Whatever judgments are extant, they are in God's hand, he is the principal actor in them. 2 Chron. xii. 7. God calls the wrath his wrath, and Shishak was to pour it out upon Jerusalem; Shishak was the vial, God put in the wrath, and poured it out at his pleasure. Amos iv. 6, 10. God tells them it was he gave them cleanness of teeth, and sent the pestilence; and it is he breaks out like fire in the house of Joseph, chap. v. 6; and Isa. lxiii. 10, "He fought against them;" it was God in their enemies did it.

Obs. 2. It is a dreadful thing to have God against a city or kingdom. "Behold, I, even I, am against you;" I that have loved you so dearly, that have done so much for you, that have been a friend, a father, a husband, a deliverer, a counsellor, a God of salvation, even I am against you. The word, "Behold," imports so much; where that is prefixed, usually some great, strange, and dreadful thing follows: and so here, could a greater, stranger, or more dreadful thing befall God's people, than to have God against them?

(1.) All in God is against them; all his attributes, his wisdom, holiness, mercy, justice, patience, power, &c. working for their ruin. Jer. xviii. 11, "Behold, saith the Lord, I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you;" God's head and hand was at work against them: and so in Micah ii. 3, "Behold, against this family do I devise an evil;" it was ill with the family of Jacob, when God set his thoughts to work to devise judgments for them. The infinite, wise, and powerful God, when he is once against a people, improves his attributes for their ruin: hence you have it in the word, that God's face is against the wicked, Psal. xxxiv. 16; and set against them, Lev. xxvi. 17; and so his hand is against them, Lam. iii. 3.

(2.) All from God: as, [1.] All the creatures. When the king himself is out with any, all his officers and servants frown; also angels are against a people, when God is against them. When two states fall out they call away their ambassadors; and God calls away his angels when he is wroth with a nation: and because their Lord and Master is wronged by that nation, they take part with him against it, and stand ready to execute his judgments upon it. When Christ was injuriously dealt with, Peter drew in his Master's behalf presently: when God was against Egypt, the destroying angel was quickly felt there. Not only angels, but all inferior creatures, act answerably unto their Lord; when he moves against a people, they do it also. The stars fought against Siserá, Judg. v. 20; the waters against Pharaoh, Exod. xiv. 26; the earth against Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, Numb. xvi. 32; fiery serpents stung the Israelites, Numb. xxi. 6: see Lev. xxvi. 22; Ezek. xxxiv. 28; chap. xiv. 15. Wild beasts God would send amidst them, and he did it; 2 Kings xvii. 24, 25, there were lions, and 2 Kings ii. 24, there were bears, which did devour. Herod was eaten up by worms, Phereicides with vermin. Pliny tells that in Spain they were constrained to forsake their cities, because undermined with conies; one in Thessaly, with moles; and in France many towns were left, because annoyed with frogs, locusts, mice, and wasps. God is the Lord of hosts, and can quickly muster up an army of the creatures against his enemies.

[2.] All ordinances. The word is the saviour of death, 2 Cor. ii. 16: the gospel is hid to them, chap. iv. 3; prayer and fasting witness against them, Isa. lviii. 5; Zech. vii. 5; passover, circumcision, sacrifices, temple, sabbaths, new moons, &c. did them no good, but increased their woes, Isa. i. 11—15; and chap. vi. 9—11, "Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not: make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they should see, hear, understand, be converted, and healed." And why thus? God was against them, he would waste their cities, and make their land desolate. God was against the Jews, his purpose was to root them out; and what did Christ's glorious gospel and treasures of it profit them? As Ahab said of Micahiah, 1 Kings xxii. 8, He prophesied no good unto us; so these proved no ways good unto them.

[3.] When God sets a people he is against, against itself, he divides them. Ephraim is against Manasseh, and Manasseh against Ephraim and both against Judah, Isa. ix. 21. When people will divide from God, God will multiply their divisions; he can and doth mingle a perverse spirit in the midst of a people he is against, Isa. xix. 14; there shall be no agreement, but in the ruin one of another, ver. 2, "I will set the Egyptians against the Egyptians; and they shall fight, brother, neighbour, city, kingdom, each against another."

[4.] All miseries, plagues, judgments, curses, break in quickly upon that people. Levit. xxvi. when God is in march against a people, he will appoint over them terrors, consumptions, burning agues, &c.; and if these do not humble them, he will have seven more judgments for them, ver. 18; and after them seven more, ver. 21; and if they prevailed not, seven more, ver. 24; and seven more after those three sevens, ver. 28: God would multiply their judgments by sevens. And they found it truth what God said, Judg. ii. 15, "Whithersoever they went out, the hand of the Lord was against them for evil, as the Lord had said: and they were greatly distressed;" they met with variety of evils on every side; and that which is worse than all these, spiritual judgments seize upon their hearts, so that either they see not evils coming to fear and prevent them, or profit not by them being come and felt; their great distresses and gracious deliverances did them no good, their hearts were still idolatrous, and "they went a whoring after other gods," ver. 17. Hos. vii. 9, strangers devoured Ephraim's strength, and he knew it not; grey hairs were here and there, and not discerned.

[5.] No refuge is left when God is against a people. Riches will not profit, Prov. xi. 4. Zeph. i. 18, "Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath: but the whole land shall be devoured." Then may they say with David, Psal. cxlii. 4, "Refuge failed me." Will ye flee to cities and sanctuaries? Lev. xxvi. 31, "I will make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries unto desolation." Will ye flee to your own hearts? Ezek. xxii. 14, "Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee?" Will ye return, weep, and pray unto God? Deut. i. 45.

The evidences or discoveries of God's being against a people are these:

First, when God is against a people, they are unspirited, their hearts are despondent within them. Hos. iv. 1, God had a controversy with the land; and chap. vii. 11, "Ephraim also is like a silly dove without heart:" they call to Egypt, they go to Assyria, they had no courage, but were fearful and faint-hearted like doves. When enemies and dangers were at hand, when Jehu's letter came to Samaria, the men of the city "were exceedingly afraid, and said, Two kings were not able to stand before him: how then shall we stand?" 2 Kings x. 4. Their hearts failed them, when man was in apprehension against them: what will men's hearts do when God is against them? His being with men, puts courage and life into them; Josh. i. 9, "Be strong, and of a good courage; be not dismayed, for the Lord thy God is with thee:" and his being against them, daunts and damps all; Isa. xix. 13, when God came against Egypt, the heart of it melted, and the spirits of it failed in the midst thereof.

Second, they are not successful in their great and public undertakings. Deut. xxviii. 29, "Thou shalt not prosper in thy ways: and thou shalt be only oppressed and spoiled evermore;" God blasts their enterprises. Jehoram comes out with a great army against Abijah, he had 800,000 chosen and mighty men of valour; Abijah had only 400,000, half so many, 2 Chron. xiii. 3: and what argument did he use? ver. 12, "Behold, God himself is with us for a captain;" he is not with you, and you shall not prosper; and they did not, but fell in the battle, 500,000 of them; a strange victory, that they should slay 100,000 more than themselves were in number. God was with the one, and against the other, therefore was the success so glorious and great to Judah, and so bloody and shameful to Israel. When God is against a people, he works wonders to ruin them, there is a secret curse upon their counsel, Isa. xix. 3, "I will destroy the counsel of Egypt;" upon their goings out, and whatever they put their hands to, Deut. xxviii. 19, 20. Moses knew that it is God's presence and countenance that makes things successful; God would send an angel with him to drive out the Canaanites, and to plant them in Canaan, but that sufficed not him, he must have God go with him, Exod. xxxiii. 2, 15.

Third, he sets over them such as prove their ruin. Lev. xxvi. 17, "I will set my face against you: and they that hate you shall reign over you;" αἰξίονται, shall persecute you, intimating, that when God is against a people, he gives them persecuting rulers. Rehoboam whipped them with scorpions, 1 Kings xii. 14; Ahaz made Judah naked and distressed the land, 2 Chron. xxviii. 19, 20; Manasseh filled Jerusalem with innocent blood, 2 Kings xxi. 16; and made the people do worse than beathens, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 9: all the kings of Israel were naught, and many of them sore plagues upon the people, and especially Ahab, whom his wife Jezebel stirred up to do wickedly, more than any before him, 1 Kings xxi. 25. When God's face was hid from and against a people, he set such rulers over them as proved roaring lions and ranging bears, Prov. xxviii. 15. And I fear God is in controversy with the christian world at this time, because most princes in it are haters of their people, bringing them under, and tyrannizing over them. But if God will return in mercy, he will give his people favour, and they shall rule over their oppressors," Isa. xiv. 1, 2.

Fourth, judgments awaken not, prevail not to reform, to return to God: Isa. xxvi. 11, "When thy hand is lifted up, they will not see." They saw in a general way that God was angry, but not so as to humble themselves under his mighty hand; they were rather hardened than humbled under the judgments of God: Jer. ii. 30, "In vain have I smitten your children; they received no correction;" Isa. i. 5, "Why should you be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more." God multiplied judgments, and they multiplied revolts; God tried them with plagues, famine, wars, and bondage, but they were stiff-necked, hard-hearted, judgment-proof, and daily worse and worse, and walked contrary to God; they were stubborn, and set light by his judgments. When God is against a people, his judgments are not sanctified, they work not out the filth and mud that is in kingdoms and cities, a wrong construction is made of them.

Fifth, there is a spirit of envy and bitterness against those who are dear to God, and stand most for his ways and worship. They envied God's people, Isa. xxvi. 11; they mocked his messengers, misused his prophets, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. There was a malignant spirit in them in times of the gospel, when they went off from the old way of jewish worship, and were formed into gospel fellowship; there was bitterness of spirit against them: Acts viii. 1. there was a great persecution of the church which was at Jerusalem, and they were all scattered abroad, except the apostles; and quickly after, Herod laid hands upon, and killed James. Chrysostom and Theophylact tell you the reason; because he was a son of thunder, opposed the Jews, the old national way of worship, therefore he was postulatus ad necem, doomed to execution. The Jews petitioned Herod to do it; and the more christianity spread, and churches multiplied in Judea, the more bitter were the Jews against that way; and that was antecedent to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus.

Sixth, he makes that people base and contemptible in the eyes of others; they lose their honour and glory; they were the head whilst God was with them, but they became the tail when he was against them.

Obs. 3. That the Lord will be known by executing of judgments. He will not smite in secret, in a corner of the land or city, but in the midst of them; and so, as his judgments should come abroad, be seen and heard of the nations. The Jews thought God like themselves, Psal. l. 21; because he was silent, they felt him not a revenger, and therefore would make him a partaker in their sins; God would vindicate himself, and execute judgment in the midst of them. The gentiles were blind, deeming judgments to be casual, but God would so deal with Jerusalem, inflict such punishment, as that they should see and say, they were not accidental, but from the God of heaven. So that here the equity and greatness of judgments are held out; they sinned, and grievously, in the midst of the nations, and are punished accordingly in the sight of the nations. This was an addition to the Jews' misery, that their enemies should be witnesses of what they suffered. Ad Scapul. c. 3. Tertullian tells of Claudius Ilermianus, who persecuted the christians bitterly, and the rather, because his wife was turned to that sect, as he called it; he being smitten with the just hand of God, said, Keep it secret, lest the christians rejoice. Nemo sciat, ne forteant clu15 hant.

Ver. 9, 10. And I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like, because of all thine abominations. Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds.

These verses contain further aggravations of Jerusalem's miseries: the 9th verse tells you they should be such as the world had not seen, nor should see: the 10th verse specifies some particulars.

The 9th verse extends to the time past, and to the time future, and falls into examination, whether true in either part.

First, "I will do in thee that which I have not done." Had not God dealt severely with the old world, with Sodom and Gomorrah, with the Egyptians whom he drowned? Yes, he had; but their sins being not so grievous as the Jews', their judgments were not so great. The sorest was that of Sodom, and, Lam. iv. 6, "The punishment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater than the punishment of the sin of Sodom:" that was overthrown in a moment, it was a sharp but short punishment; Jerusalem had severity and length of time, therefore it is added, ver. 9, "They that be slain with the sword are better than they that be slain with hunger," their judgment is easy.

But was not the siege of Samaria as sad a judgment as this executed against Jerusalem? 2 Kings

vi. 28, 29, there the women ate their own children, and suffered great distress through famine.

Ans. The women ate their children, but it came not to that extremity, as that the fathers should eat their sons, and the sons the fathers, as here it was. And,

Secondly, that was not taken as Jerusalem was, and burned, many put to the sword, many carried into captivity.

This part of the verse you see cleared; that which respects the time to come is more difficult: "I will not do any more the like." Did God do his utmost now? did he not do as much or more against Jerusalem and its inhabitants, for putting Christ to death? When Titus besieged Jerusalem, did they not eat their children, one another, die with famine? did not the plague and sword destroy? ran not their blood down the streets, out at the gates, and affected their very enemies? came not the wrath of God upon them to the utmost? 1 Thess. ii. 16; and said not the Lord Christ, Matt. xxiv. 21, that there should be at that time such "tribulation as was not from the beginning of the world, nor ever should be?" how then is it truth in our prophet, that God saith, "I will not do any more the like?"

1. The Hebrew word עַד no more, doth not always signify perpetuity, but some time, a long tract of time, or a considerable space. 2 Kings vi. 23, the heads of Syria came no more into the land of Israel; that was, for a certain time they did not, but yet afterward they came again, as appears in the next verse. So Isa. ii. 4, "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more;" it is spoken of Christ's time; and for some years there was quietness in the world, but after the gospel spread wars were learned and practised again. One place more in Gen. xlv. 29, Joseph fell on his father's neck, and wept on it a good while; it is the same word. So then God would not do so any more, that is, for a good while, a long season, for that age and generation.

2. We do not find that ever there was such a hand of God upon a people, that the fathers should eat their sons in an open, visible way, and the sons the fathers, as there it was. The Scripture mentions not the like again, scarcely any story in the world; and in this particular it may exceed all that ever God had done, or would do. God never would do like that again. No such precedent should be after it; and so that they should be scattered into all parts of the world.

3. Some interpreters conceive the words, "that which I have not done, and whereunto I will do no more the like," to be a usual phrase amongst the Hebrews to set out the greatness of the judgment.

"Because of all thine abominations." The Hebrew word תועבות signifies a hateful thing, such as is loathsome and dangerous. The Septuagint do frequently render it by Βυβλάριον , which is a thing so detestable, as propter fuditatem necno non adversatur, on account of its vileness, every one is opposed to it, a wickedness of which ne fari liceat, it is not lawful to speak, it is so offensive; it is such a thing as a man omnibus sensibus, with all his faculties, abhorreth, that a man endures not patiently to hear, see, or speak of: it points out notorious sins, of all kinds. I shall name some unto you: the counterfeiting of the sexes, men by wearing the women's, and women the men's apparel; this was an abomination unto the Lord, Deut. xxiii. 5; incestuous marriages, adulteries, sodomy, Lev. xviii. 26, 27, he had mentioned the sins, and then calls them abominations; falsehood in weights and measures, Deut. xxv. 14—16; idolatry, as 1 Pet. iv. 3; abominable idolatries, and so odious are idols, that they are called abominations, 2 Chron. xv. 8, Asa put away the abominable idols; the Hebrew is, abominations. Idols are mere abominations; Milcom was the abomination of the Ammonites, Chemosh of Moab, and Molech of Ammon, 1 Kings xi. 5, 7. Idols make nations abominations to God and man; they are a shame, Hos. ix. 10, an accursed thing, Deut. vii. 26. Such abominations as these mentioned, and others, they were guilty of.

Ver. 10. "Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee," &c. Here the dreadfulfulness of God's judgments is in part expressed: fathers should eat their sons, and sons their fathers; not as Pradus would have it, they ate the food of one another, that should have preserved life, and so became the death of each other. It was a real eating; Lam. iv. 10, "The pitiful women have sodden their own children: they were their meat;" and may it be thought their hungry husbands shared not with them in those viands? What was threatened was made good, and certainly the fathers did eat their own children at that time, and the children the parents. If tender mothers did this, much more fathers, qui solent esse teneriores in filios, who are not so tender towards their offspring. So extreme was the famine, that it made them do acts against piety, honesty, humanity, light of nature: necessity breaks all bands. In the Samaritan famine they did eat their children, 2 Kings vi. 29. You may read a lamentable discourse of a mother killing and eating her child for hunger in Joseph. l. 7. Bel. Judaic. c. 8, when Titus besieged Jerusalem; it was Mary the daughter of Eleazar, a noble woman: she boiled one part, and kept the other; some smelling flesh, asked, What was done? she tells the fact, and they went away amazed. In Honorius's time there was such a famine at Rome, that there was a public cry, Set the price of man's flesh.

Obs. 1. When God is become an enemy to a people, he doth unheard-of things, such severity is in his judgments as is not ordinary. Their abominations had made the Lord against them, and therefore he would do as he had not done, send a sharper sword and famine than ever: Lev. xxvi. 30—32, "My soul shall abhor you. And I will make your cities waste, bring your sanctuaries and land into desolation: and your enemies that dwell therein shall be astonished at it." They shall wonder at the severity of God towards his people, and not only inmates, but foreigners shall wonder. Jer. xix. 3, "Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle:" and Jer. xxii. 8, 9, "Nations shall say, wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this great city? Then they shall answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord their God," &c. God's judgments would be so hard and heavy, that the nations should marvel, and be unsatisfied at them, till they should hear how they had dealt with God. Hath not God of late been against Germany, and executed

cause astonishment? Have not men's eyes been twisted out with cords, their skins flayed off alive, their faces planed with chisels, their noses and ears cut off to make hatbands, their mouths gagged, and filthy liquids poured down? have not men been hung up by the hands in the smoke? put into hot ovens, roasted with straw fires? have not divines been cut in pieces, and their limbs thrown to dogs? have not many fed and lived upon the flesh of dead men and women, eaten their own children, killed one another for relief against hunger? Strange judgments God brought upon Germany, and as strange upon Ireland. Hath it not been the land of God's ire, and the people the generation of his wrath; and felt more for so short a time, than Germany or other nations? have not women with child been ravished, then ripped open, the bed of conception viewed, the child taken out, and thrown into the fire? have not the protestant ministers been stripped, bound to trees or posts, their wives and daughters ravished before their faces, then hanged up before them so ravished, cut down half dead, quartered and dismembered? have not many been turned out naked, forced into waters, famished to death under hedges? some have been mortally wounded, their bellies ripped, bowels let out, and left upon dunghills, that they might not be soon out of their misery.

Ver. 11. Wherefore, as I live, saith the Lord God; Surely, because thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and with all thine abominations, therefore will I also diminish thee; neither shall mine eye spare, neither will I have any pity.

In this verse are two further aggravations of Jerusalem's judgments, and the cause of them.

The first aggravation is the inevitableness of them, "Surely I will diminish thee;" and that confirmed by an oath, "As I live, saith the Lord, I will do it."

The second is the disposition of God punishing them, and that is dreadful, "he will neither spare nor pity them;" and then the cause is, their defilement of his sanctuary with their "detestable things and abominations."

"As I live." It is the form of an oath, and is much used in the Old Testament; as in Zeph. ii. 9; Jer. xlvi. 18; xxii. 24; Isa. xlix. 18; Deut. xxxii. 40; Numb. xiv. 21, 28; but it is more in our prophet than in all the Scripture besides, fourteen times I find it. Men are hardly persuaded to believe God in his way of judgments, and therefore being in that way in this prophecy, he swears oft. You have this oath, chap. xiv. 16, 18; xvi. 48; xvii. 19; xviii. 3; xx. 3, 31, 33; xxxiii. 11, 27; xxxiv. 8; xxxv. 6, 11. It is a weighty oath, and imports that which follows is not comminatory, but absolute, without evasion, without revocation; As sure as I live, and am God, it shall be done: Psal. ex. 4, "The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent." A thing is ratified and cannot be altered when it is confirmed by an oath, which is an immutable thing, Heb. vi. Let me not live, let me not be God, if I do not diminish you, but be an idol god, without sense, understanding, or life. The sign of an oath, anciently, was the lifting up the hand to heaven; and this is given to God when he swears: also Deut. xxxii. 40, "I lift up my hand to heaven, and say, I live for ever." This way of swearing hath lately been renewed at our taking the covenant; and it is to be wished that it may be used when there is just occasion of swearing, rather than laying the hand upon a book, and kissing it afterwards. Such a way of taking an oath the Scripture holds not out; and the lawfulness thereof is questioned by many.

"Thou hast defiled my sanctuary." The word קִדְּשׁ notes sometimes a holy place for refuge, and refers to God himself; Isa. viii. 14, "He shall be for a sanctuary;" here it notes the temple, the place of God's worship, from kudash, to separate and consecrate to divine use. The sanctuary or temple was consecrated, ad doctrinam, ad precatorem, et ad cultum divinum, for teaching, for prayer, for the general worship of God; it was only for holy uses. Some divide the temple into the porch, palace, and place of the oracle; others into the court of Israel, Weems. the court of the priests, and the court of God, where the ark and cherubims were, and this they make the sanctuary or place of Jun, Maldon. holiness; for mikdash is, my holiness, as well as, my sanctuary; there the glory of God appeared between the cherubims, and this place they desired.

I shall speak a little of the holiness of places, because there is an opinion in the world, that some places are holy, and that duties done in them are better than done elsewhere. It was the saying of a great prelate, That God heard prayer, because the prayers were in such a place.

Two ways places become holy:

First, by divine presence.

Secondly, by divine institution.

For the first, when God did in a visible extraordinary way manifest himself and his glory in any place, this made it holy; as Matt. xvii. when Christ was transfigured in the mount, and excellent glory appeared; this made the place holy, and the apostle called it "The holy mount," 2 Pet. i. 18. So God's appearing to Moses in the bush, Exod. iii. 5, made that place holy. Such appearances of God are not now.

The second way is, by institution and appointment from God. When the Lord doth depute and consecrate places to holy uses, then are they holy, as the temple was; God appointed the place, the building of the temple, the dedication and consecration thereof. It is only God can make any thing holy; none but he that made the creature, can lift it up to a higher condition than it was set in at first; no man can make persons, things, times, places holy, besides the Lord. Now the temple was by the institution of God so sanctified, that it was a type of Christ, a part of worship, a powerful means of grace, giving acceptance to the persons, and all the duties of worship there done; so that it was a sin for them to worship elsewhere, or to divert the temple to any other use. We have no extraordinary appearance of God to make places holy, nor any consecrated by divine institution to type out Christ, or any spiritual thing, to be a part of worship, a means of grace, making the worshippers and worship more acceptable; and therefore I conceive we have no place holy. It was not the temple, but the synagogues, that resembled our public places of worship, and they were not holy: Matt. x. 17, they scourged in their synagogues; and that was no holy act: it is the judgment of learned ones, that Paul ^{Lapid, Ergens.} had his five whippings, of which he speaks in 2 Cor. xi. 24, in the synagogues. They had the word preached in them, John xviii. 20; Acts xv. 21, as it is in these public places, yet that did not make them holy, and privilege them from common acts of justice. The holiness of places under the law was ceremonial, and Christ hath put an end to such holiness; the difference of places he hath taken away, and no one is more holy than others. John iv. 21, "The hour cometh," saith Christ to the woman, "when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father:" it is true, now there is holiness in these places, the men and their services are more accepted here than any where else; but the hour is at hand, that all such respects shall be taken away, and all places made alike, and you and your services shall be as acceptable in every place of the world, as at Jerusalem. Hence is it that Paul puts men upon praying every where, 1 Tim. ii. 8. Many think their prayers better in such a meeting-place as this, than in their closets, than in the fields; but they are deceived, places now add no efficacy or acceptation to men's prayers. It is rather prayer, ordinances, and so the spiritual presence of God in them, that make places holy; and this is the argument that some stick upon; but upon examination, this will not make the public place of meeting more holy than others; for, Matt. xviii. 20, it is said, "Where two or three are gathered," &c. be it in a ship, a private house, a field, if gathered together in his name, he "is in the midst of them," he is there not for the place but for the people's sake: yet no judicious man accounts all places holy where spiritual duties are doing, or after they are done; and why public places of worship should be so accounted of in time of worship or after, is not discernible to a religious and judicious eye: of old the altar sanctified the gift; it is not so now.

"Hast defiled." In the Vulgate it is, violasti, hast violated, wronged; but the Hebrew word notes more, it is, to render impure; and it is the same word with that which sets out the defilement of Dinah, Gen. xxxiv. 5; a woman may be wronged, and not be defiled; the sanctuary was defiled, polluted, profaned. Sometimes you read of the land's being defiled, as Numb. xxxv. 34; sometimes of the priesthood, Neh. xiii. 29; sometimes of the Lord's holy name being defiled, Ezek. xliii. 7; and here of his sanctuary. We must inquire what it is that defiles the same.

1. Sacrificing elsewhere than God commanded. Lev. xvii. 3, 4, if an ox, lamb, or goat were killed in the camp, or out of it, and not brought to the door of the tabernacle to offer, it was accounted of God bloodshed: they would offer in the fields, and not where God appointed; and this was a defilement, and as great as shedding of blood.

2. When they brought things or persons prohibited; as,

(1.) Unwarrantable sacrifices, any thing corrupt, and not according to rule. Mal. i. 7, 8, "Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar;" it was not unleavened, of fine flour and oil, according to prescription, Lev. vii. 12; it was of rye, barley, or coarse wheat; and this bread, this mincha, polluted God's altar: and so when they offered the blind, sick, and lame for sacrifice, they were corrupt things, Mal. i. 14, and defiled the altar and temple of the Lord.

(2.) Idols. God would not have any idol come in his house; 2 Cor. vi. 16, "What agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" God and Dagon cannot dwell in one house. This was the quarrel here, Jer. vii. 30, "They have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it." The same words you have again in Jer. xxxii. 34. And you shall find there were strange altars set up in God's house: Ahaz brought in the altar of Damascus, 2 Kings xvi. 10, &c; and there were the altars of Manasseh in the court of the Lord's house, 2 Kings xxiii. 12; and the high places on the right hand of the mount of corruption, ver. 13; they did defile also, as the carcasses mentioned in Ezek. xliii. 9, which were the carcasses of Manasseh and Amon, buried in the king's garden close by the wall of the temple.

(3.) When persons were brought in legally unclean. Ezek. xlv. 7, "Ye have brought into my sanctuary strangers, uncircumcised in heart and in flesh, to pollute it."

"With all thy detestable things." The original word notes not offensive things simply, but so offensive as to offend the senses and the mind, and so to offend them, as it causeth an abhorring with execration; and such things are images and idols. 2 Kings xxiii. 24, those that had "familiar spirits, the wizards, the images, the idols, and all the abominations," the word is shikkutzim, all the detestable and execrable things, "did Josiah put away." The Spirit of God speaks of them with detestation: Jer. xi. 13, "Ye have set up altars to that shameful thing, even Baal;" Acts xv. 20, "Pollutions of idols," dungehill gods, so the word gillulim signifies, Ezek. xxii. 3. They are a terror to them that worship them: 1 Kings xv. 13, Maacehah "made an idol," a thing to terrify, the word is; and Psal. cxxxv. 15, "The idols of the nations," it is the grief and torment of the nations. These names express the detestation of God against idols, and should quicken us to the detestation of them; according to that in Deut. vii. 26, "Thou shalt utterly detest and utterly abhor an idol," or any part of it: the original is, in detesting thou shalt detest, and in abhorring thou shalt abhor; noting the great detestation and abhorrence which should be in God's people to idolatry; for it defiles men's consciences, God's worship and sanctuary; therefore the Septuagint renders the word abominations or detestations, in Jer. xxxii. 34, muagurata, pollutions.

"Therefore will I also diminish thee." The Hebrew word is gari which the Vulgate renders, confringere, I will break thee; and then the sense runs thus: My purpose was to have preserved the temple safe from all violation, if so be you had kept it unpolluted; but now, seeing you have defiled it with your detestable things, I must and will break it down, as being no better than a common, profane house. It signifies also to shave, as in Jer. xlviii. 37, "Every beard shall be clipped," or shaven. The Nazarites were holy to the Lord, and if by the sudden death of any they were defiled, their cleansing was by shaving of their heads, Numb. vi. 9. So also was the leper to be cleansed by shaving off his hair, Lev. xiii. 33; xiv. 8. And so here they were defiled, and God would cleanse them by shaving; and so it corresponds with the razor mentioned in the first verse; and both these senses fall in with the word "diminish," which the Hebrew word also denotes, diminucere detrahendo, to diminish by taking from, and so is contrary to javaph, which is to add to a thing. God would not add any more mercies, but take away their mercies, and diminish them: they had diminished his honour, he would diminish their comforts; they had stained his glory, and he would take away their glory, the temple and city. Some render it succidam, I will cut down; God would deal with Jerusalem as an husbandman doth with a barren or rotten tree.

"Neither shall mine eye spare." This kind of expression is much used in this prophecy, more seldom in others. The eye is the index of the mind, the disposition whereof is seen, discerned there as in a looking-glass; anger, joy, love, grief, are inmates, yet visible in the eye, that is the easement they look out at; the hidden things of the heart are revealed by the eye. Pity, sparing, compassion, are affections of the heart and mind, and God, speaking after the manner of men, saith, Mine eye shall not spare; as it is in Isa. xliii. 18, "Their eye shall not spare children," there should be no sign of pity or remorse in them: sparing is given to the eye as the sign of it. From the eye is intelligence given of mercy or severity within. You shall not have the least hint of mercy from mine eye, but evidence of wrath only; and whereas others were wont to be affected with the miseries they beheld, their eye affects their heart, Lam. iii. 51, I will not be at all affected with their miseries: let a great army sit down before them, let famine, plague, sword devour, let all mischiefs be upon them, mine eye shall not affect mine heart, I will not repent.

“I will not have any pity.” What could have been said more dreadful? The Hebrew word רחם signifies to be of a prone, pitiful affection towards any, though they deserve ill. Joel ii. 17, 18, God’s people had sinned greatly, were under sore judgments, deserved utter destruction; but let them fast, pray, and turn, then will the Lord pity them; though they deserve no mercy, yet will he show them mercy. So in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, they were exceeding ill, yet God had compassion on them; it is the same word, and hath a contrary signification to למק which is, to destroy without mercy; and so the word in this place, when it hath אף joined unto it, signifieth as much as, I will not have pity, that is, I will destroy without mercy. 1 Sam. xv. 3, “Smite Amalek, utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not,” that is, have no pity on them; and when God ceaseth to pity a people, it is sad, then no redemption for them, Isa. lxiii. 9; God will deliver them into the hands of their enemies, Zech. xi. 6, he will harden others against them. When God pities not, yet if men will, it is some comfort; but men shall not do it: Jer. xxi. 7, when in Nebuchadnezzar’s hands, he shall not spare, pity, or show mercy; when they should fall down, beg for their lives at the hands of Babylonians, they should find no mercy, only bitter words and bloody deeds. In Amos i. 11, it is said, “Edom cast off all pity, and his anger did tear;” and so God, he cast off all pity, and destruction followed: Jer. xiii. 14, “I will dash them one against another, even the fathers and the sons together: I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them;” and you may see this fulfilled in the Lamentations, chap. ii. 2, “The Lord hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath not pitied;” as a wild beast doth his prey, as a sea doth ships, God left not one, no pity at all: see ver. 17, 21.

Obs. 1. That sin defiles the holy things of God. They defiled not only themselves, but the sanctuary, and worship of God in it. The land of Canaan was holy, and sin defiled that, Jer. xvi. 18; the temple was holy, and sin defiled that, Ezek. xxiii. 38; the altar was holy, and sin polluted that, Mal. i. 7; the sabbaths were holy, and sin profaned them, Neh. xiii. 17; the priesthood and covenant were holy, and sin defiled them, ver. 29; God’s name is holy, and sin pollutes that, Ezek. xx. 39.

Obs. 2. That defilement of God’s worship brings certain and severe judgments. They had defiled his sanctuary with idols, superstitions, polluted bread, blind, lame, corrupt sacrifice, by snuffering unclean and uncircumcised persons to come there; and the prophet brings in the Lord swearing, “As I live, saith the Lord, surely, because thou hast done so, I will therefore diminish thee;” here is the certainty of judgment: “neither shall mine eye spare, neither will I have any pity;” here is the severity of it. God’s worship and the ordinances of it, are his name, Mal. i. 11, 12. Exod. xx. 24, “In all places where I record my name,” that is, where God puts his worship. 1 Kings xiv. 21, Jerusalem is the city that God chose out of all the tribes to put his name in; 1 Kings viii. 29, “My name shall be there.” Hence saith David, Psal. lxxvi. 1, “In Judah is God known; his name is great in Israel.” The gentiles knew not God, they had not his name amongst them, nothing of his worship; no true prayer, and that is his name, Gen. iv. 26; not the seals of the covenant, Matt. xxviii. 19, not the censures of the church, 1 Cor. v. 4, 5, and these are his name. Now God’s name is very precious, and the profaning of it is forbidden in a special manner; Lev. xxii. 31, 32, “Ye shall keep my commandments and do them: I am the Lord. Neither shall ye profane my holy name:”

when they presumptuously break any command of God, say the rabbies, then they profane God’s name. It is the greatest presumption and violation of God’s commands, to corrupt his worship, to mingle our inventions with it; the spirit and the strength of the second command is against all invented worship and idolatry, which is a hating of God, and provokes to jealousy and wrath more than other sins. Ezek. xxiii. 37, 38, they had sinned in murder, adultery, and idolatry, but what went nearest to the heart of God? even the corrupting of his worship, and that is set out with a special emphasis, “This they have done unto me, they have defiled my sanctuary:” to defile it with blood is bad, but with false worship, with idols, and superstitions, is abominable. What makes God reject a people, and count them “the generation of his wrath?” Jer. vii. 29, 30, “They have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it.” Read the 8th of Ezekiel, and see the conclusion, “Therefore will I also deal in fury: mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity; and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them.”

Ver. 12. A third part of thee shall die with the pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee: and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee; and I will scatter a third part into all the winds, and I will draw out a sword after them.

Here is an explication of the type in the first and second verses, with a further aggravation of Jerusalem’s misery, from the variety of punishments:

1. Pestilence.
2. Famine.
3. Sword.
4. Dispersion. Four sore judgments.

“Pestilence.” It is from a word דבר that signifies to speak, and speak out; the pestilence is a speaking thing, it proclaims the wrath of God amongst a people. Drusius fetches it from the same root, but in piel, which is, to decree; showing that the pestilence is a thing decreed in heaven, not casual. Kirker thinks it is called dever, because it keeps order, ^{In Hab. iii. 5. דבר} and spares neither great nor small. The Hebrew root signifies, to destroy, to cut off, and hence may the plague or pestilence have its name. The Septuagint renders it θάνατος, death, for ordinarily it is death; and it is expressed by death, Rev. vi. 8, he sat on the pale horse, killed with sword, hunger, death, and beasts of the earth; it refers to Ezek. xiv. 21, where the pestilence is mentioned. Pestilence may פשע be from a word which signifies to spread, spoil, rush upon, for it doth so; 2 Sam. xxiv. 15, seventy thousand slain in three days; and plague, אפליגיה from πλησσω, to smite, to wound, for it smites suddenly, and wounds mortally; hence it is in Numb. xiv. 12, “I will smite them with the pestilence.” This judgment is very grievous; Psal. xci. 3, it is called “the noisome pestilence,” because it is infectious, contagious; and therefore the French read it, de la peste dangereuse, from the dangerous pestilence, it doth endanger those that come near it; and Mase. hath it, a peste omnium pessima, from the worst pestilence of all; and others, the woful pestilence; it brings a multitude of woes with it to any place or person it comes unto, it is a messenger of woful fears, sorrows, distractions, terrors, and death itself.

“With famine.” Of this sore judgment hath been spoken in the fourth chapter. רעב is, caedere fame, consume with hunger; and the famine here is such a one as burns, withers, dries up a man: when the calor nativus, natural heat, hath nothing able to feed upon, it consumes the humidum radicale, radical moisture, and man quickly perisheth. The Scripture speaks of a three years' famine, 2 Sam. xxi. 1, a seven years' famine, Gen. xlv. 6; what numbers perished then! when famines are mighty, Luke xv. 14, terrible, Lam. v. 10, prevailing, 2 Kings xxv. 3, and destroy not only the branches, but the root, Isa. xiv. 30.

Charab signifies to dry up, to lay waste, to destroy; when chereb, a sword, is derived, for it draws out the blood, dries up the body, lays waste and destroys: Deut. xxxii. 42, it is said to eat flesh; Isa. xxxiv. 6, to drink and be filled with blood. Here it is put for wars, the wars of the Babylonians against Jerusalem, which are called "The sword of the king of Babylon," Ezek. xxi. 19; xxxii. 11. What a judgment the sword of war is, we begin to know and feel; it dries up the blood of kingdoms, it makes them wildernesses, and destroys round about: hence the sword is said to be hurtful, Psal. cxlv. 10, powerful, Job v. 20, oppressive, Jer. xlv. 16, bereaving, Lam. i. 20, to reach to the soul, Jer. iv. 10, to "devour from one end of the land to the other," so that "no flesh shall have peace," Jer. xii. 12.

"I will scatter a third part into all the winds." It is such a scattering as is of dust or chaff before the winds, a fanning of them; God would bring a wind out of the north that should fan them, as corn is fanned, and scatter them abroad, Jer. iv. 12, 13. "I will fan them with a fan," Jer. xv. 7; it is the same word which is here, and notes a great fanning, scattering of them; and complaint is made of such scattering, Psal. xlv. 11, "Thou hast scattered us among the heathen," that was, into the several winds and countries round about; and Zech. vii. 14, "I scattered them with a whirlwind among all the nations whom they knew not." This was a heavy judgment; to be removed from their own country, friends to be scattered several ways, to be with them whose language and manners they knew not, that were cruel, barbarous, haters of God, his worship, people, to be servants and slaves to them, this was a judgment sorer than pestilence, famine, sword, and they had better been cut off in their own land, or in their journey to those places; neither were they in safety there, for God would draw out a sword after them, they should be captives, undergo great hardship, and be daily in jeopardy of their lives; the sword should pursue them, as the phrase is, Jer. xlviii. 2. These judgments were contrary to the blessing of plenty, safety, and peace, promised in Lev. xxvi. 4—6.

Ver. 13. Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them, and I will be comforted: and they shall know that I the Lord have spoken it in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them.

In this verse two ends of divine judgments are held forth:

1. The satisfaction of his own justice; when judgments are fully executed, he "will be comforted."

2. The conviction of his adversaries, "They shall know that I the Lord have spoken."

"Thus shall mine anger be accomplished." Here is mention of anger and fury, which you oft find given to God. But neither these nor other passions are in God, he is not carried by affections as men are; they are neither materially nor formally in God, whose essence is unmixed and immutable. Anger and fury are given to God, when he manifests by his actions that something displeases him, and especially when he punisheth the creature; they are effects from God, not affections in God; Isa. xxvii. 4, "Fury is not in me."

"Be accomplished." The Hebrew is, to finish, to perfect: as in Gen. ii. 2, "God ended his work," he accomplished what he was about; so here, the Septuagint hath it, συντελεσθήσεται, shall be perfected: it notes a progress in God's wrath, which shall not cease in the mid-way, but go on to the highest degree; as men, when they are much incensed, proceed in punishment of delinquents till they be satisfied, they let out their wrath to the full, and so God would do. Formerly God had kept in his wrath, not let it have the reins, nor break over the banks; and if it did get loose at any time, and break out, he quickly called it back, and turned it away, Psal. lxxviii. 38; but now he would stir up all his wrath, and let it out to the full, and accomplish it among them; now plague, famine, sword, dispersion should have their will and power over them, God would inflict what he had conceived and threatened against them.

"I will cause my fury to rest upon them." That is, God would terminate, fasten, settle his wrath upon them, not cease it from them, it should not fleet or move, but abide; they should be a people under fury, a "generation of his wrath," Jer. vii. 29, a "people of his wrath," Isa. x. 6. God would shoot his arrows into them, and they should stick in their sides; whithersoever they went, God's fury should be still upon them. It notes out the continuation of God's anger, which Jeremiah expresseth to the full, chap. vii. 20, "Behold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground; and it shall burn and not be quenched:" neither their tears nor their blood shall put out the fire of divine wrath kindled against them; it should still burn, notwithstanding all means used to quench the same. God would make his wrath abiding wrath; such is that speech in Isa. xxx. 32, "In every place where the grounded staff shall pass, which the Lord shall lay upon him," which the Lord shall cause to rest upon him, is the Hebrew. What is the grounded staff? the wrath of God intended to be fixed, laid in, and laid down for a foundation of ruin, that wrath would God cause to rest upon him, that is, the Assyrian; the mark of the staff should be in their flesh and state for ever.

"I will be comforted." God is "the God of all comfort," 2 Cor. i. 3, yet he saith, he will be comforted; not that God was enfeebled through discomfort, and needed addition of comfort and strength from any creature, but it is spoken after the manner of men: God had mourned over them a long time, expressed his grief by the prophet's threatenings, by lesser judgments inflicted; they had done no good, and now he would ease himself of them and be comforted. Wicked men are a burden to God, and when a burden is taken off, it is ease, it is comfort. Isa. i. you have God brought in much grieved, and complaining of this people, ver. 2—4, &c.; and in ver. 24, he saith, "Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies." Ah! the time is now come, and I am glad of it, that I shall be eased of this great burden, bearing with this rebellious people; I will cast them off, and revenge myself upon them. Revenge is sweet, it is an ease to reproached, provoked spirits; for where is anger, there is grief and desire of revenge, which obtaining, takes away grief and anger, whereby the mind is comforted: therefore God would ease himself by avengement on them. So here, God would accomplish his anger, settle his fury upon them, and be comforted in it; he would execute severe judgments, and approve, yea applaud them being executed.

"In my zeal." These words are oft in the prophet: the Hebrew signifies sometimes zeal, sometimes jealousy; the Septuagint renders it ἐν ζήλῳ μου, in my zeal, not, in my jealousy. Zeal is the intention of all affections; it notes,

1. The earnest love of God for the good of his church and his own glory, Isa. ix. 7.

2. Jealousy, which is with great indignation and grief, Numb. xxv. 11, such as amounts to hatred and enmity, Isa. lix. 17. God was very zealous of the good of his people, and therefore gave them zealous prophets, by whom his zeal was made known. The prophets spake in God's name, delivered their message with authority, power, life; they lifted up their voices, told the people of their sins, reproved them sharply, were very zealous in their prophecies. Hence they were counted factions and fiery spirits, men venting their own opinions and humour; hence their labours were slighted; they were looked upon as contemptible men, not worthy to live, they did so trouble both church and state with the things they delivered; but they shall know, that not men, but God spake; that it was not their zeal, but my zeal; that they have opposed and rejected me in my prophets. If you refer it to jealousy, it notes God's taking them into covenant to be his people; their revolt by idolatry and other sins, and God's jealousy upon it; who growing hot with displeasure, spake sharp and dreadful things against this people, as a jealous husband would do against an adulterous wife.

Obs. 1. That God goes on by degrees in his wrath against a people. He did not accomplish his anger and fury at first, he began with lesser judgments, but at last came up to a perfection. Before he had whipped them with scourges, now he would do it with scorpions; he had formerly done much, vexed them with wars, famine, plague, but never laid waste their city, ruined their temple, scattered them to the four winds, as now he would do: he had in times past corrected them like a father, he would now execute them like a judge: the drops of his wrath had done no good, now they should have the full vials, all the wrath conceived against them should be inflicted, accomplished.

Obs. 2. That wrath let out against a sinful people, oftentimes lies long upon them. "I will cause my fury to rest upon them." They were seventy years under God's displeasure in Babylon. God's wrath hath been upon the Jews that rejected the gospel these 1600 years; they would not be under the blessing of Christ, and they are under the curse of God, his wrath abides upon them. God's anger hath rested upon Germany above twenty years. These kingdoms of Ireland and England are under it: fervent prayer is requisite, that God would remove his wrath, and not let it rest upon us. It is a dreadful thing to have settled plague or war amongst us. The barons' wars in king John's, Henry the third's, and Edward the second's days, made sad times; God's wrath rested then for a long season upon this kingdom, the choicest blood of it was let out, and it brought a deplorable condition. Let us repent and reform, that wrath may not rest upon the kingdom; and let us believe, that wrath may not abide upon us; John iii. 36, "He that believeth not, the wrath of God abideth on him." Man came into the world a child of wrath, an heir of wrath; Christ is a remedy propounded for removal of that wrath: if men believe not, the wrath of God abides still on them, goes along with them, and will eternally sink them.

Obs. 3. God takes pleasure in executing judgment, in accomplishing his wrath, and causing his fury to rest upon impenitent and incurable sinners, he will be comforted in it. Prov. i. 26, "I will laugh at your calamity;" God would bring calamities upon them, just judgments for the setting at nought his counsels, refusing his reproofs, and rejoice in them; for as judgments are satisfaction to divine justice, they are delightful unto God. Isa. xxx. 32, "In every place where the grounded staff shall pass, which the Lord shall lay upon him, it shall be with tabrets and harps." "When God should destroy the Babylonians and Assyrians, it should be with delight, which the tabrets and harps express, which were musical instruments, used in wars and victories, Exod. xv. 20. And when God executed judgment upon spiritual Babylon, it was with joy; therefore the Spirit of God calls for it, Rev. xviii. 20, "Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you and himself on her also;" which was a comfort and ease, a delight to God. Hence judgments in Scripture are termed his pleasure; Isa. xlvi. 10, 11, "I will do all my pleasure: calling a ravenous bird from the east;" and chap. xlvi. 14, "He will do his pleasure on Babylon."

Obs. 4. The word of God may be preached among a people, and they, through ignorance and malice, not know it, nor entertain it. "They shall know that I the Lord have spoken it." They conceived not that it was the word of God which the prophets delivered; they thought them to be no more than other men, and their word human, and therefore slighted it. There was much affected ignorance in them: Isa. xxvii. 11, "It is a people of no understanding;" Jer. iv. 22, "My people is foolish, they have not known me." And as many were blind, so many were malicious against the prophets, and their messages they brought from God: Jer. xlv. 16, 17, "As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee. But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth." Christ came and preached to his own, and they received him not, they neither knew him nor his doctrine, or if they did, they maliciously rejected both.

Obs. 5. That wicked men shall be convinced, and left without excuse. "They shall know that I the Lord have spoken:" they eyed men and not me, they deemed it man's voice, not Heaven's; but they shall find that it was the voice of God amongst them. And what can men say, when God hath spoken, and hath not been hearkened unto? every mouth will then be stopped. They would not know, but they shall know; they would not own my truths, but they shall feel my judgments, and when they are upon them, then will they remember the prophets and their words, which will be as burning coals in their bosoms; then they will see what desperate revolts they have made from God; how they are besieged with his power, and cannot escape the stroke thereof. When men shall see it is the infinite, great, and glorious God that they have slighted, in the prophets, in the ordinances, then they will be struck dumb, and fall under the wrath of that God.

Obs. 6. God will justify his servants in their zealous labours for him. "They shall know that I have spoken it in my zeal." It is God speaks in the prophets; it is his zeal they express. Let men be zealous against sin, the iniquities of the times, they are counted mad, fiery fellows, troublers of Israel, seditious, factions, &c. Paul was a zealous man, and not only Festus a heathen counted him mad, Acts xxvi. 24, but even the christian Corinthians, 2 Cor. v. 13, thought him beside himself. And such conceits had the people about Christ, who was a man of zeal: they thought him too hot, that his zeal was beyond his judgment; Mark iii. 21, they plainly said he was beside himself. Michal scoffed at David as one of the fools for his zeal. Let the world pass what censure it will upon God's ministers, God will justify those who are sincerely zealous, and count their zeal his zeal.

Obs. 7. That the Lord is intense, and will not recall his indignation, when he deals with unfaithful, covenant-breaking persons. As in God's zeal there is intense love towards his church, (when God promises mercy to his people, it is sealed with this, "The zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do it," 2 Kings xix. 31.) so here is intense hatred, wrath against his enemies. Therefore God beats them off from their own inventions in the second command by this consideration, that he is a jealous God, and his jealousy extensive to the fourth generation. And Deut. xxxii. 22, saith God, "A fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains;" and what is the reason of this indignation? it is given in ver. 21, "They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God:" when God is in his jealousy, he speaks dreadful things, and doth answerably. To speak in zeal, is to decree an irrevocable and bloody sentence: hence, Josh. xxiv. 19, "He is a jealous God:" and then follows, "he will not forgive your transgressions:" and Deut. xxix. 20, "The Lord will not spare, his jealousy shall smoke against that man, and all the curses in this book shall lie upon him." What man? the man that breaks covenant with God, going out to false worship, and thereby putting him into jealousy; which, as it is the rage of a man, and makes him cruel in the day of vengeance, so it is the rage of God, and makes him without pity, or mercy: when he executes vengeance, he will then accomplish his wrath, and not spare, pour out all his wrath and vengeance.

Ver. 14. 15. Moreover I will make thee waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee, in the sight of all that pass by. So it shall be a reproach and a taunt, an instruction and an astonishment unto the nations that are round about thee, when I shall execute judgments in thee in anger and in fury and in furious rebukes. I the Lord have spoken it.

In ver. 14, are two judgments more laid down, desolation and reproach; this last is aggravated from the extent of it, "to the nations round about," and "all that pass by."

In the 15th you have the repetition of the last judgment, and the ends of both annexed; which are,

First, for information.

Secondly, for astonishment.

"I will make thee waste." That is, Jerusalem, with the villages and all the land adjacent. Judah was a fruitful land, Isa. v. 1, "the glory of all lands, flowing with milk and honey," Ezek. xx. 6. Moses calls it a good land, a land of brooks, waters, fountains, deeps that spring out of valleys and hills; a land of wheat and barley, vines, fig-trees, pomegranates; a land of oil, olives, and honey; a land where nothing was lacking, the stones of it were iron, and in the hills were brass, Deut. viii. 7—9. It was the Lord's land Hos. ix. 3, Immanuel's, Isa. viii. 8, a land that God cared for, and watched over all the year long, Deut. xi. 12. Egypt was an inconsiderable land to this, ver. 10; that was profane, this was the holy land, Zech. ii. 12, the pleasant land, chap. vii. 14; it was well built, well tilled, and greatly peopled. Yet this land must be laid waste; they should be in ariditate, a state of drought, like a river dried up, that if you look for water in it, there is none; so if you look for a temple, worship, or ordinance, &c. in Jerusalem, there is none: their cities and habitations are burnt, their gardens unfenced, their trees cut down, their vines undressed, their fields untilled, and all made a wilderness, a land of briars and thorns, Isa. vii. 24. And this was fulfilled, as you may see in Neh. ii. 17. Lam. i. 4, "The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts;" see chap. ii. 2, 3; v. 18; and the adversary's hand was upon all her pleasant things, chap. i. 10. Hence the church complains, Isa. lxiv. 10, 11, "Thy holy cities are a wilderness, Zion is a wilderness, Jerusalem a desolation. Our holy and beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, is burned up with fire, and all our pleasant things are laid waste." See here the truth of divine threats, and the mischief of sin; it so exasperates God, that he turns a fruitful land, even his own land, into barrenness, saltness, "for the wickedness of them that dwell therein," Psal. cvii. 34.

"A reproach among the nations." God would make them not only for a waste, but also for a reproach. הרף is simply to reproach, to disgrace; and that is not all they should have, but they should be for a taunt also, and that is more, גרובה from giddleph, to blaspheme, revile; and so it is used, Matt. xxvii. 39, for Matthew wrote his Vide de Dieu. in Matt. xxvii. Gospel in Hebrew, where it is said, they reviled Christ and wagged their heads: so should this people be reproached and reviled, have bitter taunts and sarcasms thrown at them; Jer. xxiv. 9, they shall be "removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse." Hence grew those reproaches and imprecations, Let it be with thee, as it was with Zedekiah, his family and followers; and Jer. xxxix. 22, the curse in the captivity was, "The Lord make thee like Zedekiah, and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire." This judgment was very sore; reproaches and taunts are bitter things, piercing deep, scarce any thing afflicts an ingenuous spirit more than they do. Zedekiah feared nothing more than reproach and mocking; Jer. xxxviii. 19, "I am afraid of the Jews, that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me:" it was a sad thing to be stripped of all their cities, the land to be laid waste, but much more to be exposed to scorn, yea, publicly of all; and that by the appointment of the Judge, even God, whom they took to be their friend; and that to the nations they had hated, and held tributary many years; this was exceedingly pungent, especially they being the top and glory of all nations. It was fulfilled, Lam. ii. 15—17, "All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth? All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash their teeth: they say, We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it. The Lord hath done that which he had devised; he hath fulfilled his word."

“An instruction.” The Vulgate is, exemplum, example; this act of God upon Jerusalem exposed so to reproach, should be an example to the heathen. The Hebrew is מַצֵּר from יָצַר to bind, to discipline, to instruct. The judgments of God upon his people are bonds, to bind up heathens from their sins; they are reproofs unto them, being guilty of great sins; they are instructions, to teach them to repent of their sins: because the Jews by their holy lives did not excite the nations to inquire after and serve the true God, therefore their judgments shall be their instructions, teach them to fear and forsake their idolatry. They could reason thus: If God spared not the holy city, the holy people, the holy land, when they fell to idolatry, uncleanness, and other vile sins, how will he spare us, if we be found in the same ways? His judgments are exceeding dreadful; we will take warning; their sufferings shall be our safety. If judgments were to be instructions to heathens, and wrought upon them, shall they not much more be so to christians? The ruins of Germany, the blood of Ireland, the breaches of England, let them be instructions unto us. Let us all say with Isaiah, chap. xxvi. 8, 9, “In the way of thy judgments, O Lord, have we waited for thee: the desire of our soul is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee: with my soul have I desired thee in the night, yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early: for when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.” Heathen inhabitants will do it, and shall not christians? It is seasonable wisdom to learn by the blows of others.

“An astonishment.” Not for stupifying and hardening, which sometimes is the end and fruit of judgments, but for admiration. God would so deal with Jerusalem and her inhabitants, that the nations round about should be astonished at his dealings; God would “make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations,” Jer. xxv. 9; yea, the plagues of the city should be such, that “every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and hiss,” chap. xix. 9; yea, many nations should say, “Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this great city?” Jer. xxii. 8. Deut. xxix. 22—24, God saith, the plagues of that land should be such, as that it should be like Sodom and Gomorrah; so great, so strange, that all nations should say, “Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this land? what meaneth the heat of this great anger?” God might have done thus with this great city, with this pleasant land; but he hath spared us, and we have cause to be as much astonished at his mercies, as they were at his judgments. Let us fear and reform, lest our sweet mercies be turned into astonishing judgments.

“When I shall execute judgments in thee in anger and in fury and in furious rebukes.” There is mention of executing judgment in ver. 8, 10, and here in this verse with addition of “anger, fury, and furious rebukes.” The prophet may seem too repetitions and verbose, but it is otherwise; repetitions of the same thing serve to confirm the truth of the matter, to show the speed of the event, and to excite the minds of those the things concern; all which fail in here. The prophet prophesying against the Jews at Jerusalem, their city and state, and threatening destruction to all, himself keeping in Babylon, conceived that they would not believe what he said, and fear what he threatened, neither be affected with what he delivered: to prevent these evils, he repeats the thing oft, and strengthens it with variety of words, that so his doctrine might be the more weighty, the sooner believed, they awakened, and the judgment that was at hand feared.

“In furious rebukes.” The Hebrew is, in rebukes of heat. Pradus observes, that jacach notes rebuking before witness; and God would do it before the nations; and these rebukes were not to cure, but to destroy.

“I the Lord have spoken it.” Lest they might think the prophet and his prophecy might die together, and come to nothing, the Lord tells them, it was himself spake, and that the prophecy should take place, whatever became of the prophet; because it was from him who was the living God, and would see it fulfilled at Jerusalem, though uttered in Babylon.

Ver. 16. When I shall send upon them the evil arrows of famine, which shall be for their destruction, and which I will send to destroy you: and I will increase the famine upon you, and will break your staff of bread.

I have spoken of “famine” and “breaking the staff of bread” in chap. iv. 16. Only I shall open unto you that expression, “The arrows of famine:” they are either the arrows that bring famine, or the arrows that famine brings. The arrows that bring famine, are great droughts, palmer-worms, locusts, canker-worms, caterpillars, thunder, lightning, winds, storms, immoderate rains, great hails, long frosts, murrains, transportations of commodities, monopolizing, hoarding up of creatures, wars, &c. Many of these are shot down from heaven by God, and all are sent from God, and cause famine; and they are called arrows, for that they do to the corn, cattle, fruits, and state where they are, what arrows do to the bodies of man or beast, wound, disquiet, consume; hence, when mention is made of a famine in Habakkuk’s days, ch. iii. the Lord is said “to march through the land in indignation,” ver. 12, and his bow to be made quite naked, ver. 9; then did God shoot amongst them the arrows of famine.

The arrows famine brings, are leanness, faintness, sickness, loathsomeness, frettings, fears of death, longings for death, gnawings of the stomach, pinching of the wind got into the bowels, eating of their own flesh, thirsting and burning heat, &c.; these are arrows that famine brings, and kill like arrows shot into the liver, which wounding deeply, pain greatly, and kill quickly. And in this sense I rather take it here, because the judgment spoken of concerning the Jews, who were to be besieged, if it be taken in the other sense, would have been a judgment to the besiegers, who lay in the field, and were not so well fortified against those arrows as they within; it is therefore meant of the arrows famine brought upon them chiefly, not excluding the arrows which brought that famine, namely, war. And these arrows were prepared in Moses’s days: Deut. xxxii. 23, “I will heap mischiefs upon them: I will spend mine arrows upon them;” and what arrows? “They shall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter destruction,” ver. 24. Famine is like a multitude of hot coals in a man’s bowels and bones, that cause grievous pain, even “bitter destruction:” and therefore they are called here, “the evil arrows of famine,” because they bring many evils, and at last a miserable death. This Jeremiah acknowledges made good, Lam. iii. 12, 13, speaking in the person of the church and state; “He hath bent his bow, and set me as a mark for the arrow. He hath caused the arrows of his quiver to enter into my reins.”

Ver. 17. So will I send upon you famine and evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee; and pes- tilence and blood shall pass through thee; and I will bring the sword upon thee. I the Lord have spoken it.

Here is a repetition of the former judgment, only one is new, and that is, "evil beasts." Some would have it meant of the Chaldeans, that were like evil beasts, that with their horns, teeth, heels, and hoofs, should toss, gore, rend, and devour them: others understand it literally, for evil and wild beasts, lions, bears, &c. which were threatened, Deut. xxxii. 24. "I will send the teeth of beasts upon them, with the poison of serpents of the dust:" Lev. xxvi. 22, "I will send wild beasts which shall rob you of your children, destroy your cattle, and make you few in number; and your high ways shall be desolate." See the truth of it, 2 Kings xvii. 25: lions were sent that slew them, they feared not God. But this was past, and our prophet speaks of that which was to come. Know then, that as God sent lions to destroy them there, so he could send lions to destroy them in Babylon. Besides, those eastern countries were not without lions; Daniel was put into the lions' den; and certainly there were lions, and other evil beasts, to make good what was threatened, whensoever divine pleasure would.

"I the Lord have spoken it." They looked at Ezekiel as a mere man, and whatever he threatened, yet it could do little, and therefore were like to regard neither him nor his prophecy. To prevent this, and to add the greater weight to the prophecy, the Lord takes all upon himself, and saith, It is not Ezekiel, but I that am Jehovah, who gave being to all creatures, and will give being to my word, it is "I the Lord have spoken it." Here the Lord subscribes his own name, acknowledges all his, and that is enough to make all authentic. This Lord, who is dreadful in threatenings, mighty and faithful in execution of threats, let all the world fear and give glory unto, before he cause darkness.

CHAPTER VI.

Ver. 1—7. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, set thy face toward the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them, and say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys; Behold, I, even I, will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your high places. And your altars shall be desolate, and your images shall be broken; and I will cast down your slain men before your idols. And I will lay the dead carcasses of the children of Israel before their idols; and I will scatter your bones round about your altars. In all your dwelling-places the cities shall be laid waste, and the high places shall be desolate; that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down, and your works may be abolished. And the slain shall fall in the midst of you, and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

In this chapter you have,

I. A command to prophesy, in the two first verses.

II. The prophecy itself; in which are three things:

1. A threatening of desolation to the land of Judea, the idols, altars, and men thereof, in ver. 3—7.

2. A promise of mercy unto them in their scattered condition, ver. 8—10. Some should escape the judgments, repent of their evil ways, and know the Lord.

3. A prefiguration of the grief they should have for the judgments to come upon them; which are repeated, ver. 11—14.

Junius observes this prophecy to have been on the sabbath day, the one and twentieth of the fifth month, in the sixth year of their captivity; and on the twenty-eighth day of the same month, the prophecy in the next chapter; and on the fifth day of the sixth month, the vision in the eighth chapter.

God honoured his own day, with giving out his word by revelations and visions; that day they rested from their labour, and were fittest to hear, see, and receive divine things. It was now above a year since Ezekiel had his first vision; for that was in the fifth day of the fourth month, and fifth year of the captivity, this in the sixth year and fifth month.

The prophets had not all communicated to them at once, but by degrees, as infinite wisdom saw best; and the church understands not all at once what they wrote, but now a little, and then a little, as it pleases God to let in light.

Ver. 2. "Set thy face toward the mountains of Israel." Turn thee unto them, speak boldly and freely, prophesy their destruction. The mountains of Israel were divers: there was mount Ebal, and mount Gerizim, Deut. xxvii. 12, 13; mount Carmel, 1 Kings xviii. 19; mount Horeb, 1 Kings xix. 8; mount Zemaraim, 2 Chron. xiii. 4; mount Gilead, Cant. iv. 1; mount Ephraim, Josh. xvii. 15; mount Naphtali, and mount Judah, Josh. xx. 7; mount Hermon, 1 Chron. v. 23; mount Lebanon, Judg. iii. 3; mount Tabor, Judg. iv. 6; mount Bethel, Josh. xvi. 1; mount Moriah, 2 Chron. iii. 1; mount Zion, Psal. cxxv. 1; mount Olivet, Luke xix. 37, which is called the mount of corruption, 2 Kings xxiii. 13, because Solomon had built there high places for Ashtoreth, Chemosh, and Milcom; and not only in that, but divers other of these mountains, were altars and images, which provoked the Lord; and therefore he bids the prophet to prophesy against them.

He speaks to the mountains, hills, rivers, and valleys, to hear the word of the Lord. This kind of speaking sets out the weightiness of the prophecy, the vehemency of affection, and seemed to convince the Jews of their insensibleness and incurableness; they were so hardened in sin, that there was as much hope of doing good to these creatures, as to them by the word.

Here is a prosopopeia, attribution of sense to dumb creatures, which is frequent in the Scriptures; Deut. xxxii. 1, "Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth." So Jer. ii. 12; Isa. i. 2. Hence the earth is said to tremble, the hills to move at the wrath of God, Psal. xviii. 7; lxxvi. 8; cxiv. 7; winds and seas to obey, Matt. viii. 27. All creatures are more ready to obey the will of their Creator, than man is. Apostrophes are therefore oft made from the sensible and rational creatures, to those that are void of both; to set out the stupidity of man, and his unworthiness of the word. The Lord passes by the masters, and looks to the servants, neglects men, and speaks to the mountains, that so he might provoke them to consider.

"To the rivers." The Vulgate is, rupibus, to the rocks. קַנְיֹת in the Hebrew doth signify channels.

Isa. viii. 7, "The king of Assyria shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks:"

Psal. xvi. 15. 2 Sam. xxii. 16, "The channels of the sea appeared." It signifies also the waters that run in the channels: Job vi. 15, "As the stream of brooks they pass away;" and Psal. cxxvi. 4, "As the streams in the south." Hence it is rendered rivers, Joel iii. 18; Ezek. xxxv. 8, from נַחַל which signifies to contain and corroborate, and both these the channels do; they contain the waters, keep them within their banks, and strengthen them being kept together, so that they run with force, and bear burdeus.

The Septuagint hath it vánaiz, which notes thickets and woody places which use to be about waters.

"Valleys." By the water-sides, and in the valleys, they provoked God. Jer. xlix. 4, "Wherefore gloriest thou in the valleys?" they trusted in their flowing and fat valleys. Isa. lvii. 5, they inflamed themselves "with idols under every green tree, slaying the children in the valleys, under the elifts of the rocks." And Jer. xxxii. 35, "They built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto Molech;" and this valley was afterward called, "The valley of slaughter," Jer. xix. 6; and the reason is given, Jer. vii. 32, 33: they had slain their children there, and God punished them with a great slaughter there, and defiled the place with their blood, which they had formerly defiled with their sin.

"A sword upon you." That is, the Assyrians, armed with instruments of war; they should come and lay all waste, break down altars, cut down groves, dig down hills, dry up their channels, and let out their waters.

"The high places." They are first mentioned in Leviticus, chap. xxvi. 30. They were mountains or 2 Chron. i. 3. hills where the people worshipped, taken from the practice of heathens, who chose out pleasant places, woody hills and recesses, where they built chapels, temples, and altars to their gods. Numb. xxii. 41, "Balak brought Balaam into the high places of Baal," where there was a temple or chapel for the worship of Baal; and therefore, in the next chapter, he bids him make seven altars, that they might worship their god Baal there. Heathens had many such places; Dent.

xii. 2, 3, "Ye shall utterly destroy all the places, wherein the nations served their gods, upon the high mountains, the hills, and under every green tree; ye shall overthrow their altars, break their pillars, burn their groves with fire, hew down the graven images of their gods, and destroy the names of them out of that place." God would not have his people to worship him in any heathenish ways, or with heathenish rites; but they built themselves "high places, images, and groves, on every high hill, and under every green tree," 1 Kings xiv. 23. Jeroboam "made an house of high places," 1 Kings xii. 13. They were to sacrifice in the tabernacle: when they had special and prophetic warrant, they might sacrifice any where: and after the ark was taken, which had stood at Shiloh three hundred and forty three years, and was movable from place to place, then it was lawful for the people to offer in the high places. Before the temple was built, notwithstanding the destruction of the high places threatened by Moses, Lev. xxvi. 30; by Amos, chap. vii. 9; by Hosea, chap. x. 8, and other prophets; many of God's people sacrificed in the high places, under trees, and elsewhere: as Gideon, Judg. vi. 19; Samuel, 1 Sam. ix. 19; David, 2 Sam. xxiv. 25; Solomon, 1 Kings iii. 4; Manoah, Judg. xiii. 19; Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 31, 32, &c. God accepted their sacrifices, and winked at this error; but their sacrificing afterward in the high places, did bitterly provoke God, and the complaint was, that the high places were not taken away, 1 Kings xxii. 43; xv. 14. They continued till Hezekiah's days, who removed them, 2 Kings xviii. 4; but Josiah utterly destroyed them out of the land, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3. Yet those kings that came after, restored them again. It is said of Jehoahaz, "He did evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his fathers had done," 2 Kings xxiii. 22.

Ver. 4. "Your images shall be broken." Hebrew הַמַּצֵּבִים the sun images. הַחֶמֶד is a name given to the sun, Job xxx. 28, from חָמַד calere, to be hot, because of the great heat thereof, and chammunim is sun images. Hence Jupiter Ammon, who had a famous temple in Africa, wherein was the image of the sun, as A. Lapid. in Lev. xxvi. 30, hath it; and Macrobius shows, that Macrobius, lib. 1. Saturn. c. 25. Jupiter and the sun were the same. The idolatrous Jews were accustomed to worship the sun; 2 Kings xxiii. 5, they "burned incense to the sun:" and because the heathens Origi. l. 2. Metam. were wont to worship the sun under the figure of a chariot and four horses, it is said, the kings of Judah gave horses and chariots to the sun, ver. 11. The rabbies think these were living horses, which drew a chariot daily toward the east, and some sitting in it did salute the sun in the king's name; others more probably conceive these horses and chariots were portrayed effigies, set up at the entering in at the house of the Lord, in honour of the sun, and so set above their altars, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4. Buxtorf and Junius call them, subtilites statuar, statues that stood abroad, and were exposed to the sun. Aben Ezra thinks they were houses or chapels, made for the worship of the sun. I conceive they were images set up for that purpose; you have mention made of them in Isa. xxvii. 9; xvii. 8. Some think they were little courts wherein were altars and fire preserved upon them, in honour to the sun. Calvin thinks them so called from their warmth, ab æstu, because idolaters run after them, as adulterers do after whores: others from Deool. on Lev. xxxiv. 30. chemah, furor, madness, because they are carried with fury to that service. Vid. Buxtorf in Chammim. Isa. lvii. 5, "Inflaming yourselves with idols."

"I will cast down the slain men." This seemeth a strange speech; slain men are not standing, need not casting down. The Hebrew is הַמַּצֵּבִים which the Vulgate renders, infectos vestros, your slain men; they are slain men that fall down to idols, that serve other gods, men appointed to be slain; or confossos vestros, your wounded men; for shadal is perforare, to stab through, and it is probable that many being wounded by the Chaldeans, would flee out of Jerusalem to the hills, altars, groves, and idols, for safety, and there the Lord would destroy them before the idols; their enemies should find them out, and make an end of them: Hos. x. 8, "They shall say to the mountains, Cover us, and to the hills, Fall on us;" they were in great fear, distress, and hid themselves, yet that prevented not their death. Jer. xii. 12, "The spoilers are come up upon all high places through the wilderness: for the sword of the Lord shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other end of the land, and no flesh shall have peace;" they should find no favour at their altars, in sight of their idols. Idolaters conceit, that the gods, in honour of whom they set up their altars and images, will relieve them in distresses, and turn aside evil from them; but it should not be, they should find no mercy;

Sennacherib was slain before Nisroch his god, Isa. xxxvii. 38.

It is also in the 5th and 6th verses.
 "Before their idols." לְהַלְלֵם dung-hill gods, excrementitious deities, from לֶמְסֵם dung; so it is rendered in 1 Kings xiv. 10, even man's dung, which is most loathsome.

This name is put upon idols, to show how they do stink in the nostrils of God, and make the worshippers of them filthy, stinking creatures; they are like swine, that feed upon, and wallow in dung. Idols defile the soul and body both; for usually spiritual uncleanness and bodily do go together. Idolatry and adultery are companions, Jer. v. 7, 8, they worship other gods, and neigh after their neighbours' wives. Idols do defile and cause defilement, Ezek. xxii. 3, "The city maketh idols against herself, to defile herself."

Ver. 5. "I will lay the dead carcasses of the children of Israel," &c. They should want burial, be exposed to open shame, their altars be defiled with blood and bones. Josiah polluted the altar with the bones and carcasses of dead men, 2 Kings xxiii. 16, 20; and Jeremiah tells of the bones of kings, princes, priests, prophets, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, that should be taken out of their graves, be spread before the sun, moon, and host of heaven, whom they worshipped, and not to be buried; but should be for dung upon the face of the earth. They had served dung-hill idols, and God would make them dung; yea, in the place where they had so sinned, should they suffer this heavy judgment, even before the idols. The Jews used to bury the bones of their kings with gold, silver, costly garments, crowns, sceptres, and arms: prophets, and other chief men, had some precious things buried with them. Josephus tells that Hyrcanus took out of David's sepulchre six thousand talents.

Curtius tells of Alexander the Great, that hearing there was much wealth in Cyrus's sepulchre, he commanded it to be opened, but found none. The Chaldeans, being covetous, would search their sepulchres for wealth, scatter the bones of the dead in disgrace, and leave them as dung upon the face of the earth. This judgment Moses had foretold them of, Lev. xxvi. 30, "I will cut down your images, and cast your carcasses upon the carcasses of your idols;" their worship seemed holy to themselves, but God would pollute it with their own carcasses. That which is of great account among men, is an abomination unto God.

Ver. 6. "In all your dwelling-places the cities shall be laid waste," &c. Here is the extent of the judgment, to all their cities, wherever they dwelt: all their cities were defiled with idols and idolatrous worship: Jer. xi. 13, "According to the number of thy cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal."

Superstition and idolatry are spreading things, they quickly get into all the cities of a kingdom, and streets of cities, and head of every high way, Ezek. xvi. 25. Therefore all the cities of Judah are threatened, Jer. i. 15; and ix. 11, "I will make Jerusalem heaps, a den of dragons; and the cities of Judah desolate, without an inhabitant."

Obs. 1. The first observation is, That where idols and false worship are got into a church or state, they are not easily got out again. Their cities must be destroyed, that their altars and idols may be broken and cease. After the calves were up at Dan and Bethel, the prophets could never get them down till the sword came: the high places stood many hundred years, and were not fully put down till Josiah's days, and quickly after they were up again. Hath not antichrist and his abettors brought in false worship, tyrannical government, into the church, and held it in many hundred years? What ado hath there been among us, to pluck up popery and pre-lacy, which are not yet fully done!

Obs. 2. See what it is that ruins cities; altars, idols, false worship, mixtures of man's inventions with the Lord's pure ordinances. These are great cannon, that batter cities; these are gunpowder, that blow them up; these bring the Lord of hosts to war against them. It was the calves that wounded Israel, and laid the cities thereof waste. Hos. x. 5, "The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of the calves of Beth-aven." Hos. xiii. 2, 3, they had images and idols, kissed the calves; therefore they should be as the morning cloud, the early dew, as chaff and smoke: ver. 9, "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself;" thine own idols have wrought and brought thy destruction. Isa. x. 11, Samaria and her idols were destroyed, and such destruction is threatened to Jerusalem and her idols. And Abijah knew that the calves would ruin Jeroboam and his great army; and therefore saith, 2 Chron. xiii. 8, "With you are the golden calves."

Obs. 3. Idolatry and false worship do so provoke God, that he will destroy cities, kingdoms, churches, but he will have them out. Their cities and high places must be laid waste, that their altars and idols, their corrupt worship, might be taken away. Sins of this nature make God jealous, furious, clothe himself with vengeance, and do terrible things: Jer. ii. 11, Israel had taken in other gods, and it follows in the 15th verse, "The young lions roared upon him, and made his land waste: his cities are burned without inhabitant;" God looked upon them as already burned. You have the indignation of God against idolaters and idolatrous places fully set out in the 13th of Deuteronomy, from the 12th verse to the end. If the men of a city did fall to idolatry, the men and cattle must be all destroyed with the edge of the sword, the city and all in it burned with fire, and never be built again; and they must not meddle with any accursed thing: when this is done, God will turn from the fierceness of his anger. Nothing kindles God's wrath more than forsaking of and corrupting his worship. Hath not popery and popish inventions cost the christian world much blood, and the ruin of many places? Babylon must be destroyed for her whoredom; and, Rev. xiv. 9, 10, "If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone," &c. God is severe against false worship and worshippers. God will lay waste all places and persons rather than not have men's works out of his worship.

Obs. 4. That men love to have somewhat of their own in worship; they are not content with what the infinitely wise God commends unto them, but will be adding. Here is much of man's mentioned; your high places, your altars, your idols, your images, and works. The second commandment, Exod. xx. 4, shows that man is prone to be meddling and making something in worship, till he mar all. The people quickly forgot God and made a calf, when Moses was in the mount; and their hearts ever hankered after heathenish gods, rites, and ceremonies. Psal. cvi. 29, "They provoked him to anger with their inventions:" they were given to changing, and adding of their own, and their additions provoked God: and why so? they were taken more with their own, than with the Lord's; "they went a whoring with their own inventions," ver. 39, they pleased and delighted them, as adulterers are more delighted with their whores than their wives; but they are defiling delights, they were defiled with their own works.

Obs. 5. God is not pleased with any thing in worship which is not his own; he must prescribe what way and wherewith he will be worshipped. It is not altars, high places, appointed and made by men, not any of their works, that are acceptable to him, not the works of their hands, nor of their heads; no devices of man, nor his vestures, gestures, ceremonies, services; they all have in them aliquid fœcis et terræ, something of dross and earth, they are like their authors. That which pleases God must come from God, be set up by him and carry unto him. That which he appoints, he approves, it is pure; that which man brings, he abhors, it is spurious, pollutes his ordinances, frustrates his commands, Matt. xv. 6; therefore such plants God will pluck up, such works he will break down.

Obs. 6. That judgments cause idolaters to know the true God from the false. When God's hand is upon the mountains, hills, valleys, cities, high places, altars, and their slain fallen, then shall they know that I am the Lord, Jehovah; not an idol god, but the true, the living God, that have being of myself, that give being to my promises and threats, that take being from others: you would not believe my prophets, but you shall know there was truth in their threats, and power in me to make them good.

Ver. 8—10. Yet will I leave a remnant, that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations, when ye shall be scattered through the countries. And they that escape of you shall remember me among the nations whither they shall be carried captives, because I am broken with their whorish heart, which hath departed from me, and with their eyes, which go a whoring after their idols: and they shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations. And they shall know that I am the Lord, and that I have not said in vain that I would do this evil unto them.

The eighth verse is of the nature of the third verse in the fifth chapter, where the prophet was bid to bind up a few hairs in his skirts: and here God would leave a remnant, the sword and dispersion should not devour all.

Obs. God's wrath is never so hot against his people, but he will show mercy to some. God would bring a sweeping judgment, lay mountains, hills, rivers, valleys, cities, high places, altars, idols, images, waste and desolate; yet he would leave a remnant, preserve some, when in the midst of their enemies, amongst Babylonians and other nations.

In the fifth chapter, ver. 12, God would "scatter them, and draw out a sword after them." It was great wrath to be driven out of their country, to be in banishment, which lawyers call a civil death, because men in it are divided from their friends, liberties, and comforts, which sweeten their lives; but to have the sword at their heels, added to the weight of wrath, threatens all their lives; yet notwithstanding this condition, God reserved some from the sword in their banishment. They might upon this severe prophecy think, What will become of the church, shall all perish, and God's faithfulness fail? No, God would have a care of that, a remnant he would save. Storms may be so terrible and lasting, that the church may be brought low, not be visible, yet it shall never be extinct. When the prophets were cut off by Jezebel, there were a hundred hid in caves by Obadiah, 1 Kings xviii. 4. When Elijah thought himself alone, and his life at the stake too, the Lord told him there were seven thousand in Israel lay dormant, "which had not bowed their knees to Baal," 1 Kings xix. 18. When Herod "slew all the children in Bethlehem, and all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under," yet Christ escaped, he was preserved: and as in that storm God preserved the Head, so in every storm he will preserve the body. At the massacre in France, all the protestants were not cut off, and the wars of Ireland have not devoured all. The church shall never cease being, the gates of hell shall never prevail against it.

Ver. 9. "And they that escape of you shall remember me," &c. In this verse is the fruit of divine mercy towards them:

First, "They shall remember me."

Secondly, "Loathe themselves for the evils they have committed."

Thirdly, the ground of both these, "Because I am broken with their whorish heart and whorish eyes."

Fourthly, the place where they should do it, "Among the nations."

"Remember me." They shall know then that I am God, infinitely differing from the gods that they have chosen: that my worship is spiritual, and admits not mixtures of men: they shall remember my holiness, that I hate all false ways of worship; my justice, that I have not done any wrong to them in ruining their country and temple, and scattering them in all quarters; they shall remember my bounty and love to them, and how they forgot me and abused all; they shall remember my mercy in preserving them from the pestilence, the famine, the sword, and their taunting adversaries; and say, We all deserved to have been destroyed and rooted out for ever; but the Lord is gracious, hath had compassion on us and spared our lives; we will therefore repent of our ways, return to him, trust in him, and give glory to his name: all which are implied in the word "remember." So it is used, Psal. cxxxvii.

1, there are remembrance and weeping joined together; Psal. xxii. 27, there are remembrance and turning; Psal. xx. 7, remembrance is there for trusting; Psal. lxxiii. 5, 6, praising and remembering go together: and when men fall to idolatry, they are said to forget God, Judg. iii. 7; implying that remembering of God is to worship him his own way, and so to glorify his name.

"Broken with their whorish heart." The Vulgate reads it actively, I have broken their heart. The word is passive נִשְׁבַּרְתִּי I am broken. Here is great difference, and the Vulgate is corrupt; and the Greek mistakes, which reads it, ὀμωροσά τῆ καρδία ἀβρῶν, I have sworn to their hearts; the ground of which error is, they took it to be נִשְׁבַּרְתִּי for נִשְׁבַּרְתִּי: Some would have it, I have bought their whorish hearts, that were for idols and any thing but me; because the word is twice or thrice in the Scripture used in that sense: Gen. xli. 57, "All countries came into Egypt to Joseph for to buy corn." Hishbar, ad frangendum. Montanus reads it: and chap. xlii. 6, Joseph "sold to all the people of the land."

faciebat, fran-

and so in the 5th verse: but the common sense of the word is, to break, and it is truly rendered, "I am broken with their whorish heart."

God had taken this people to be his, as a man takes a woman to be his wife; but they had whorish hearts, and went out from God to idols; they had a "spirit of whoredoms" in them, that "caused them to err, and go a whoring from under their God," Hos. iv. 12; ix. 1. They were not content with God's love, his ordinances, his worship; but they would try what the gods of the heathen were, what their way and worship was, prostitute themselves to them; and this troubled the sight of God, afflicted his soul, brake his heart, as a man's is by the whorish acts of his wife. We say, a man or woman break much, that have much trouble, jealousy, care, sorrow. God was troubled with, jealous of, careful and sorrowful for, his people above all others, and this even brake the heart of God. Their courses grieved him exceedingly. Great grief vexeth the heart, and lieth like a mighty weight upon it: hence that in Amos ii. 13, "Behold, I am pressed under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves;" the grief God took at their courses was as a great load upon his spirit. God's eye beheld their courses, and his eye affected, yea, afflicted his heart, Lam. iii. 51: the Vulgate reads it, Oculus meus deprædatus est animam meam, Hath taken away the virtue, spirit, and life of my heart.

"Whorish heart." A heart hankering after idols, pleading for them, delighting in them, and prostituting itself unto them. This people was much addicted unto this sin, which is oft expressed by the name of whoredoms and whoring, Lev. xx. 5; xvii. 7; Judg. ii. 17. This sin is so called,

First, because it is a breach of covenant, as whoredom is. God marries his people to himself, he is for them, and they should be for him only, Exod. xx. 23. He is a husband to them, Jer. ii. 2; Hos. ii. 19; and now to leave him for idols, is to deal treacherously with him, Jer. iii. 9, 20; Deut. xxxi. 16.

Secondly, it is a pleasing sin, as whoredom is. Hence all Israel is said to go a whoring after Gideon's ephod, Judg. viii. 27; and Isa. lxvi. 3, "Their soul delighteth in their abominations;" they please their senses, give some satisfaction to blind consciences, help on their devotions, as they conceit, which affects much.

Thirdly, it is a defiling sin. Whoredom is a defiling sin, and so is idolatry, and all false worship: Ezek. xxii. 3, Jerusalem "maketh idols against herself to defile herself." Acts xv. 20, they are called ἀσχημάρτα, pollutions: and they pollute the persons and places where they are, Jer. iii. 9. As pure worship sanctifies, so false worship pollutes: Rev. xiv. 4, "They were not defiled with women," not with false worship, with the whore of Babylon, or any of her inventions; but were virgins that kept themselves chaste, not going out from God to the corruptions of any.

Fourthly, it hardens, stupifies, makes impudent, Prov. vii. 13; and so idolatry produces such effects. Hence the Jews which were given to it are called "impudent children," Ezek. ii. 4, "hard-hearted," Ezek. iii. 7; "sottish children," Jer. iv. 22. Jezebel stirred up Ahab to idolatry, 1 Kings xxi. 25, 26; they were both idolaters, they were hard-hearted, impudently wicked, bloody and cruel; Naboth and the prophets were slain by them.

Fifthly, it inflames, and idolatry doth so; Isa. lvii. 5, "Inflaming yourselves with idols, slaying the children in the valleys."

Jer. ii. 20, it is called playing the harlot.

It is evil when the heart follows the eye, worse when the eye follows the heart; this notes habitual evil, the other but occasional. Their eyes, as well as their hearts, went a whoring; they looked, and lusted; their eyes were "eyes full of adultery," 2 Pet. ii. 14. Ahaz saw the altar at Damascus, and he must presently have such a one up at Jerusalem, 2 Kings xvi. 10. Men follow "the sight of their eyes," Eccl. xi. 9; "the lust of their eyes," as John calls it, 1 John ii. 16; and sensual men are led by the eye in point of worship, as in point of women; Ahaz was; but men's eyes and hearts are ill factors for worship: Numb. xv. 39, "Remember all the commandments of the Lord, and do them; and that ye seek not after your own heart, and your own eyes, after which ye use to go a whoring." The eyes are the spies of the body, they give information to the heart, that lusts, whoredom is committed, and God is provoked to jealousy. The eyes are called whorish, because they are internumcii adulterii et idololatriæ, the assistants of adultery and idolatry; they dislike, forsake the beauty of God's worship, truth, ordinances, and spy beauty in corruption, in false worship, superstition, idolatry, men's additions; they see a decorum in them, are pleased with them, and draw the heart to them.

"They shall loathe themselves." The Vulgate reads it, displicebunt sibi met, they shall displease themselves; Calvin, pudeficent, they shall be ashamed; Junius, fastidium erunt sibi ipsis, they shall be a loathing to themselves. The Hebrew hath more in it: Nakottu, ingemiscunt, saith Montanus; they shall so sigh and groan, that נָפְתוּ ingemiscere.

you shall see it in their faces: Shindler, offensi sunt in faciebus suis ad mala, when they saw what they had done, it was offensive to them, and they smote themselves upon the face for grief. The word notes a cutting; when a man is so ashamed that he dares not behold God or man, he is like a man cut down. So it is used, Job x. 1, "My soul is weary of my life;" it is the same word, and rendered in the margin, cut off: his sorrow was piercing, and cutting. Such should be the condition of those here, their idolatry and other evils should be carnifices qui corda eorum discerperent, executioners which rend their hearts. The meaning is, they shall have much shame, sorrow, and breaking of heart, for their sins.

Ver. 10. "And they shall know that I am the Lord," &c. They shall know experimentally, that I speak and threaten not in vain, punish not unjustly, but order all things for my glory and their good.

Obs. 1. God's people escaping destruction in common calamities, are mindful of God, though they suffer much hardship. As here, they had lost all, their very liberty, and were captives; yet being preserved by God among the gentiles, they should remember God; that is, repent, return, and trust in God, honour him, praise him, and worship him the right way. Psal. lxxxviii. 34, 35, "When he slew them, then they sought him: and they returned and inquired early after God; and remembered that God was their rock, and the high God their redeemer:" when death devoured some, and mercy delivered others, then their hearts were affected, and God seriously thought upon. Never is the heart in a better frame towards God, than when it hath been in the jaws of death, and is set at liberty from the king of terrors. David made the sweetest psalms when he had the greatest deliverances, Psal. xviii. xvi. ciii. and many others; which made him say, "Thou liftest me up from the gates of death, that I may show forth all thy praise in the gates of the daughter of Zion," Psal. ix. 13, 14. God brings his people into trouble, that he may deliver them, and that they may remember him. Psal. l. 15, "I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me;" that is, effectually, not in a low, faint, formal degree. Such great deliverances as give life, should cause those they concern to look strongly and live wholly unto God, to glorify him in all things, to remember him at all times, and to show forth all his praises.

Obs. 2. That God is not tied to any persons, places, or times, to show mercy; but on whom he will, where he will, and when he will, he showeth mercy. These persons were idolaters in the holy land, met with sore judgments there, were driven forth into Babylon, a polluted, idolatrous, heathenish place; there the lives of some of them are preserved, they being under heavy pressures from God and man; yet they are brought to know God, to loathe themselves and their former ways. These were times wherein they had no sacrificing, little or no help for their souls, but lay in darkness, and notwithstanding all this, God showed mercy: neither their sins, nor the sins of the place, both which were great, nor the time of wrath they were under, (for so it is called, Isa. liv. 8,) could obstruct the free grace of God; but some he spares, some he touches with the lively sense of their sins, and puts into a state of grace in the midst of enemies, of sins, and of judgments. God could show mercy in Babylon as well as Zion. Let the holy land, holy city, holy temple, holy altar, holy sacrifices, and all the holy things be laid waste, and persons be brought to the greatest improbabilities of finding mercy, be as great sinners as any living, as these were, and in Babylon; yet God is free, can, will, doth show mercy even to such, in such a place, and at such a time, when his wrath is pouring out. Manasseh was a great sinner, a murderer, an idolater, a sorcerer, carried into Babylon, and, in the eye of all, in a hopeless condition; yet there God visits him, his Spirit breathes and blows upon him, he humbles his soul greatly, prays effectually, is returned to Jerusalem, and knows the God of his fathers, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11—13. Nothing could keep off God from showing mercy. God took Abraham, the father of the faithful, from Ur of Chaldea; he found favour among idolaters, and God showed mercy to his posterity, even in that land. When "all flesh had corrupted its ways," yet mercy was shown to Noah, Gen. vi. Yea, those that put Christ to death had their hearts pricked, Acts ii. 37. To the gentiles that had lived in abominable idolatries, God "granted repentance unto life," Acts xi. 18. There is nothing in man, in any place or time, that can impede God from showing mercy; that is an act of his will, nothing in us moves him to it, nothing in us hinders him from it: "I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion," Rom. ix. 15.

Obs. 3. That often God shows the choicest mercy, when he hath cause to execute the sharpest judgment. "They shall remember me, because I am broken with their whorish hearts." Had they broken God's heart, he had cause to have broken their bones, and destroyed them utterly; but the Lord would deal graciously with them, and instead of destruction, cause them to remember him, to loathe themselves, and to come in to fear and serve him. They would not fear, remember, and honour God in Zion, where they had the prophets, the ordinances of God, and mercies of all sorts, but provoked God to plague them; and when they were ripe for destruction, and nothing to be expected but severity, even then doth God deal graciously with them. Isa. lvii.

17, 18, saith God, "For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him: I hid me, and was wroth, and he went on frowardly in the way of his heart;" he adds sin to sin, in a presumptuous manner; and what could be looked for now but destruction? Doth the great and glorious God smite, and doth man sin more? Yes, he doth, and God sees it; and what then? "I have seen his ways, and will heal him;" not wound him more, not destroy him, but "I will heal him: I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him and to his mourners." Isa. xliii. 24, 25, "Thou hast made me to serve with thy sins, thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities;" and what then? "I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins." God's thoughts are not as man's; that which is argument of death in man's apprehension, is argument of mercy and life in God's. David knew it, and therefore presseth God with an argument, which might have undone him in the judgment of reason; "O Lord, pardon mine iniquity; for it is great," Psal. xxv. 11. God might have said, Therefore will I not pardon thee, because thy sin is great. I have suffered much by thee, by thy murder and adultery, and thinkest thou that I will pardon such great sins? Is this an argument to come to me withal? I have as great wrath as thou hast sins. Thou art a man of death for what thou hast done; thou shouldst die by the law for thy murder, and die for thy adultery, and thou hast given the sentence thyself, "The man that hath done this shall surely die," and bound it thou hast with an oath, "as the Lord liveth." 2 Sam. xii. 5; and therefore die thou must, thou shalt. Such language as this might David have looked for; but he hears of pardon, and that from the mouth of a prophet: and when he moved God with the argument of the greatness of his sins, he did it in the judgment of faith, knowing it would be much for the honour of God, to pardon great sins: that he was as ready to show mercy, as his sins had made him ripe for judgment. Hos. ii. 13, 14, Israel followed Baalim, and forgot God. Had he not now cause to destroy her? It was God's way to destroy such, Psal. lxxiii. 27. Yet it follows, "Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her." Because she had forgotten God, God would remember her; because she had been drawn away by idols, God would allure her from idols; because she had vexed God, he would comfort her: here God lets out choice mercy, when he had cause to execute severe wrath. When Peter had denied Christ thrice, and forsook him and the knowledge of him, Matt. xxvi. 72, 74, was there not cause that Christ should have renounced him, smitten him with some great judgment, and made him an example for self-confiders and Christ-deniers to the end of the world? Surely Christ had cause enough, and the opportunity for it was fair before him; but Christ turned and looked upon Peter, and instead of ruining him, raises him.

Obs. 4. False worship doth most afflict God. "I am broken with their whorish heart." Their idolatries, superstitions, and corruptions did not simply displease or grieve God; but oppressed, afflicted, broke the heart of God. Great injuries enter deep, work strongly, eat up the spirits of any they are done unto; and what greater wrong can be done to God, than to set at nought his counsels, to forsake his worship, to withdraw from his government, and to proclaim to the world, that there are better ways than his, and better gods than himself? Those that are idolatrous, and worship God a false way, they do so by God; therefore, Jer. iii. 5, it is said of them, that they did speak and do evil as they could. Men cannot do more to break God, than to worship idols, wrong gods, or the true God a wrong way. Such sins break God's covenant; Deut. xxxi. 16, "This people will go a whoring after other gods, forsake me, and break my covenant;" they break God's silence, Jer. ii. 12, "Be astonished, O ye heavens," &c.; they break God's patience, Isa. xliii. 24, "Thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities;" and here they break even God himself, "I am broken with," &c. The heart should be only for God and his ways, as the wife should be for the husband and his commands; and when God sees the heart, which is his by creation, by command, by purchase, and by desert, to be after false ways, base inventions, and giving that honour to them which is only due unto himself, this pricks him at the heart, and is taken extremely evil; it makes God's soul to abhor a people, Lev. xxvi. 30, to loathe Zion, Jer. xiv. 19. Bring any thing to one that hath an antipathy against it, and that thing afflicts him grievously, it makes him fear, sweat, faint, and sometimes swoon away. God hath a true antipathy, and great, against all false ways of worship; when any therefore is brought near him, it is that puts the Lord more to it than any thing. Lev. xxvi. 11, "I will set my tabernacle among you; and my soul shall not abhor you;" that is, I will delight in you, while my tabernacle and ordinances are with you: Amos v. 26, 27, but when the "tabernacle of Moloch" is amongst them, when they set up ways of their own, then God abhors them, and will send judgments upon them. Let not us retain any thing that tends that way, no names, no ceremonies, no gestures.

Obs. 5. The works of men in God's worship steal away the hearts of the worshippers. They had idols, altars, groves, images, and high places; and whatever pretences they had to colour over things with, their hearts went a whoring after these, and departed from God. There is much, yea all in false worship, that suits with carnal hearts; therefore that which is of God, being spiritual, above the reach of flesh, yea contrary to corruption, it is burdensome and neglected; and that which is of men, being suitable unto man, is closed with. In popery you see how their hearts are taken with that which is from popes, prelates, councils; their music, vestments, perfumes, pictures, images, &c. have their hearts; and let them pretend they do help their devotion with these, help up their hearts more to God; it is not so, these steal away their hearts from God; they are more delighted with these, than with the pure worship of God. Be they idols or images made use of in worship, it is all one; that distinction will not heal a papist's idolatry, nor fetch back his whorish heart to God; for the Hebrew word עֵבֶד is in Scripture used promiscuously for both, and put for an image, Isa. xlv. 9, 10; and imagery superstition draws away the heart from God as well as idolatry.

Were not men affected lately with innovations, and that so much, that the ordinances of God were laid by? What the heart affects, that goes up, what it slights, that goes down; as in Isa. xxix. 13, when their hearts were removed far from God, then the precepts of men had interest in God's worship, and what men commended to them their hearts advanced.

Obs. 6. That being in pure worship, is being with God. While they kept to God's ordinances, and were hearty in them, they were with God; but when they corrupted them, then they departed from God.

Obs. 7. That men's eyes are instruments of great evil. They had whorish eyes, they were the inlets of idolatrous and sinful motions, which firing, inflamed the heart after idols. No sense doth more misc mischief to the soul than the eye; it is an imperial ranging sense, and fetches in, far and near, matter of danger into the bosom: Prov. xvii. 24, "The eyes of a fool are at the end of the earth." The Scripture makes mention of "a mocking eye," Prov. xxx. 17; "an offensive eye," Matt. v. 29; "a beamish eye," Matt. vii. 3; "an evil eye," Prov. xxiii. 6; "a lofty eye," Psal. cxxxi. 1; "a wanton eye," Isa. iii. 16; "a painted eye," Ezek. xxiii. 40; "adulterous eyes," 2 Pet. ii. 14; and here, "whorish eyes;" they are the windows at which sin creeps in. The prince of darkness conveys many works of darkness by the eyes. The serpent deceived Eve by the eye, Gen. iii. 6. Achan saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold, and so was snared, Josh. vii. 21. Samson saw a harlot, and was taken with her, Judg. xvi. 1. It is the colour of the wine invites the drunkard to excess, Prov. xxiii. 31. Ahab saw Naboth's vineyard laid commodiously for him, and so was set on work to covet it, 1 Kings xxi. 2.

The eyes open the doors first and soonest to let idols into the heart; and when they are in, the heart sets the eyes on work to delight in them; Ezek. xviii. 6, they lift up their eyes to behold idols; they were delectable things to them, Isa. xlv. 9. Great use doth Satan make of the eye, by corruption that is within us, and the creature that is without. Job knew it, and therefore makes a covenant with his eyes, and would not only not see, but not think of a maid, Job xxxi. 1; and if he did see any object that pleased and stirred corruption, he would not let his heart walk after his eye, ver. 7. David would not "set any wicked thing before his eyes," Psal. ci. 3; he prays unto God to "turn away his eyes from beholding vanity," Psal. cxix. 37; and, "Mine eyes are ever towards the Lord," Psal. xxv. 15. And not only should we have care of our eyes, but of our hearts also; for such as our hearts are, such will our eyes and other senses be: if the heart be whorish, the eyes will be whorish; if the heart be covetous, the hand will be covetous; if the heart be froward, the tongue will be froward: therefore Solomon adviseth to "keep the heart with all diligence," Prov. iv. 23.

Obs. 8. That true penitents have their hearts affected for their sins, and loathe themselves for the evils of their ways. "They shall remember me," whom they have broken with their sins, be affected with it, "and loathe themselves for the evils they have committed in all their abominations." Repentance is not a sudden or slight sorrow, but that which goes deep and enters into the heart, as the word here imports; such sorrow as should make them loathe themselves, sigh and groan, smite, yea cut their faces. The Scripture expressions touching repentance and godly sorrow are of like nature, and show the heart is deeply wounded therein, Zechar. xiii. 10.

It is set out by mourning as for an only son, and being in bitterness as for the loss of a first-born. It is drawing of water and pouring it out before the Lord, 1 Sam. vii. 6; it is the breaking of the heart, contrition of the spirit, Psal. xxxiv. 18; the rending of the heart, Joel ii. 13; ploughing up of the fallow ground, Jer. iv. 3; travailing in child-birth, Isa. xxvi. 17; pricking of the heart, Acts ii. 37.

All which evidences that repentance is a heart business: it works strongly upon that, and brings it up to loathing. When the heart is truly penitent, what it before loved and delighted in, it loathes and abhors. The voice of Ephraim repenting, is, Hos. xiv. 8, "What have I to do any more with idols;" I now loathe them, will not lift mine eyes or hands unto them, nor speak a word for them, nor think of them. Jer. xxxi. 19, "After that I was turned, I repented; I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth;" I had sinned in my former days with idols, false worship, satisfied my lusts, but I am now confounded with the shame and reproach of them; now I loathe them, and cannot endure them. Isa. xxxi. 7, when they are turned unto God, "in that day every man shall cast away his idols of silver, and his idols of gold:" they cannot stand before repentance, no more than Dagon before the ark. After God had scourged and purged them with the Babylonish captivity, it is observed that they could never abide idols more, nor would suffer any to come up unto the temple. When Caius Caligula sent his statue to Petronius, president of Judea, to honour it with a place in the temple, the Jews professed they would die rather than behold that abomination in the temple; if that came there, they would not come there; if that lived, they would die. This is the nature of true repentance, that whatever errors, false worship, ways, lusts, things it delighted in before, now it loathes as dung, as filth, and abhors as pestilential and deadly. The Jews repenting, cursed their idols, and their own madness in running a whoring after them.

First, their loathing themselves. It is a hard thing to bring a man to self-loathing; every man loves, exalts himself, and labours to be somebody in the world. Diotrophes affects pre-eminence, but true repentance will make the greatest loathe himself. Repentance sees what black, defiled creatures they are: Ezek. xx. 43, "Ye shall remember your ways, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight." A repentant eye sees matter enough of self-abhorrence. When Job, chap. vii. 5, saw his sores, filth, and worms in his flesh, he loathed himself; but not so much as when he saw the sins of his heart, chap. xlii. 6; then he abhorred himself, and all which had excellency in it before, he thought fit to be buried under dust and ashes.

Secondly, "For the evils which they have committed." Not for the evils which their sins had deserved, or God had inflicted, did they loathe themselves, but for the evil of their own ways; so that they did mourn for sin as sin; not for the evil of sin, but for the evil in sin; which is the contrariety of it to God's will, the offence of divine Majesty, its burdening God himself, breach of union between him and their souls, its violation of his law: it pollutes the soul, hardens the heart, turns the gospel of Christ, all mercies, and means of grace, to our hurt, and is a foundation of eternal ruin. It was the evil of sin, and not of punishment, that David prayed against, 2 Sam. xxiv. 10—17; Psal. li. 2.

Thirdly, it is impartial and universal: "They shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations." It is not one or two, but all, comes into question when the heart is in a penitent way: Ezek. xx. 43, "Then shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight, for all your evils that ye have committed." Sins, great or small, in any place, with any person, or thing, but especially of worship, come into, fall under, censure, and are abhorred. Manasseh, when he was humbled in Babylon, he loathed his practices in Zion, and took away all the altars that he had built in the moant of the house of the Lord, and in Jerusalem, and cast them out of the city, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 15.

Let us look back, see the evil of our ways, especially in worship, and loathe ourselves for the evil of them all; that we have defiled God's name, ordinances, ourselves, with altars, crucifixes, cringes, conformity to the impositions, innovations of men, subscriptions, oaths of implicit obedience, supporting of a false and tyrannical government in the church of Christ, have been contented under a dull, formal way of worship, &c. Ezek. xliii. 11, "If they be ashamed of all that they have done, show them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof." Shame for false, corrupt worship opens a door for sight, and entrance, of true and pure worship.

On ver. 10, Obs. 1. That before men are afflicted and humbled for their sin, they refuse and slight the word of God. Let his prophets come and preach powerfully and terribly unto them, lay God's judgments before them, they mind it not, at least tremble not; but they shall know they have refused my word and messengers: the time is coming they shall be in Babylon, be sorely afflicted, and then they shall know, as for the precedent time, their hearts were stout against God, his truth, his servants, and they were secure. "Who hath believed our report?" saith Isaiah, chap. liii. 1; and chap. xlix. 4, "I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought;" his hearers slighted his prophecies. So in Zech. vii. 11, 12, "They refused to hearken, and pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear. Yea, they made their hearts as an adamant stone, lest they should hear the law, and the words which the Lord of hosts hath sent in his spirit by the former prophets."

Obs. 2. That a heart under affliction, broken for sin, and loathing itself for its own sins, will give due honour to the word of God, submit to it, acknowledge him and his prophets. "Then shall they know," &c. That is, when they have smarted in the captivity, been cut to the heart for their sins, loathed themselves for all the evils of them, even then shall they know. Afflictions opens men's eyes, blows beget brains, and men come to see their ingratitude towards God, their abuse, neglect, contempt of means, what great loss they have made thereby; and so mourn for each, prize the word, tremble at threatenings, close with promises, subject to commands, honour the Lord and his prophets.

The truest penitent doth most abhor himself, his lusts, his errors, his own ways; and the more abhorrence of these, the more complacency in truth, and the God of truth. Such a one understands the dealings of God, acknowledges the majesty of God in his ordinances, the equity of God in his judgments, the mercies of God in his deliverances, the faithfulness of God in his word, and his infinite love in Christ.

Obs. 3. The Lord will not leave his word (whatever it be) unaccomplished. "They shall know that I have not said in vain I would do this evil," that I would afflict them. A word is in vain when it is not fulfilled, inefficaciously fulfilled, or unseasonably fulfilled: none of all these befall the word of God, threats or promises. Isa. lv. 11, "The word that is gone forth of my mouth shall not return to me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it:" if God give out a word for wars, for destruction of cities, kingdoms, churches, for carrying into captivity, that word shall take place, and be effectual. Zech. i. 6, "My words and my statutes, did they not take hold of your fathers?" they overtook them, and arrested them.

Ver. 11—14. Thus saith the Lord God; Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas for all the evil abominations of the house of

What God doth in the world he doth to truth his word. The providences now, especially, are accomplishments of the word of God in prophecies and promises.

Israel! for they shall fall by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence. He that is far off shall die of the pestilence; and he that is near shall fall by the sword; and he that remaineth and is besieged shall die by the famine: thus will I accomplish my fury upon them. Then shall ye know that I am the Lord, when their slain men shall be among their idols round about their altars, upon every high hill, in all the tops of the mountains, and under every green tree, and under every thick oak, the place where they did offer sweet savour to all their idols. So will I stretch out my hand upon them, and make the land desolate, yea, more desolate than the wilderness toward Diblath, in all their habitations: and they shall know that I am the Lord.

Here is the third part of the prophecy, which sets out the great grief they should have for the sore judgments of God upon them; which judgments are again mentioned, "sword, famine, pestilence, desolation."

In the 11th verse their grief is set out by symbolical expressions, as, smiting with the hand, stamping with the foot, and crying, Alas. And the cause of these:

First, their sins.

Secondly, their punishments.

"Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot."

Such gestures have been used in contrary cases; as well in great joy, as in great grief; Ezek. xxv. 6, "Because thou hast clapped thine hands, and stamped with the feet, and rejoiced in heart with all thy despite against the land of Israel." It is spoken of Ammon, who used those gestures in an insulting way against the Jews; but in this place, these gestures declare their unspeakable grief for their sins and judgments, and were usual in case of sorrow. Jer. xxxi. 19, the prophet brings in Ephraim repenting, and that is a declaration of it, "I smote upon my thigh, and was ashamed;" and when God would bring terror upon his people he bids the prophet smite upon his thigh, Ezek. xxi. 12. Sometimes in their grief they did smite upon their thigh, sometimes the breast, sometimes the other hand; so Balak did, Numb. xxiv. 10, "smote his hands together;" sometimes the head. Homer bath it often, πεπληγέτο μῆροῦ, He smote on his thigh. And Tully mentions, among other kinds of mourning, their smiting of the cheeks, their breast, their thigh, their head.

"Stamp with thy foot." In cases of great and sudden grief, men use to stamp upon the earth.

Homer, speaking of Iras, about drawing of teeth, saith, λακτιζον ποδὶ γαίαν. He stamped the earth with his foot. And Cicero in Bruto saith, Nulla pedum supplotio. There was no stamping with the feet.

"Alas." In Hebrew, אָה The Septuagint and Theodotian render it Euge, Well done! and make it a note of rejoicing and exulting, because idols were destroyed, and God's judgments executed. But it is upon mistake of Ach for Houch, which is Euge, but Ach is always a note of grief; and that exposition of theirs suits not with the subject matter, which is sin and judgment. It is well rendered by Jerom, Heu, and by our translation, "Alas," a word constantly used to note grief. Josh. vii. 7, Israel fell before Ai; Joshua rent his clothes, fell on the earth, and cried, "Alas, O Lord God," &c. Joel i. 15; Amos v. 16; Rev. xviii. 10; in cases of great sorrow, they used this word.

These outward signs of sorrow are commended, that the people might be awakened out of their security, that they might be more affected with the calamities that were coming, and their sins that hastened such calamities upon them. Words are transient, and leave little impression, but visible signs work more strongly, affect more deeply, and draw the spirits of beholders into a sympathy.

Obs. God would have those who are his to mourn for the sins and judgments that are coming upon a land and people for them. The prophet must "smite with the hand, stamp with the foot, and say, Alas for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel," and for their calamities! Some do mourn for calamities, few for the sins of the people; but here their sins come in first, and afflict the prophet's spirit most, the judgments afterwards: Psal. exix. 136, "Rivers of water run down mine eyes, because they keep not thy law." And ver. 158, "I beheld the transgressors, and was grieved." It is safe to do it: Ezek. ix. 4, "Go through Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and cry for all the abominations." 1 Cor. v. 2, the apostle blamed them that they did not mourn for the incestuous Corinthians.

Ver. 12. Of these sore judgments hath been formerly spoken in the fifth chapter, that there is no escaping them, and of God's accomplishing his fury; he would bear no longer, but utterly destroy them.

On ver. 13, Obs. 1. That God doth often punish men where they sin. Their slain should be among their altars, idols, in the place where they offered their sweet savour. Sennacherib was slain in the house of his god Nisroch, as he was worshipping, Isa. xxxvii. 38.

Obs. 2. That idolatry and false worship is costly. They offer sweet savour every where to all their idols; they think nothing too much for their false way. The sweet incense was very costly, and only for God's use, not their own houses; yet their idols shall have it. Men will part with much this way; Isa. xli. 6, "They lavish gold out of the bag," &c.

Ver. 14. "Wilderness toward Diblath." Some make it to be the same with Riblah, in 2 Kings xxv. 6, and Jer. xxxix. 5; mentioned also in Numb. xxxiv. 14. This may well be, because of the likeness of ד and ד in the Hebrew tongue. And Jerom conceives it is the same with Riblah, which was a city in the land of Hamath, where Pharaoh put Jehoahaz in bonds, 2 Kings xxiii. 33; in the borders of the Moabites near the wilderness, spoken of in Deut. viii. 15; a great and fearful wilderness, full of fiery serpents and scorpions, where was drought and no water. God would make their land not only desolate, and desolate like this wilderness, but more desolate.

"I will stretch out my hand upon them." There is difference between God's stretching out his hand to a people, and upon a people. The first notes invitation to repentance; Isa. lxx. 2, "I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people." The second notes smiting, punishing, destroying; Isa. v. 25, "The anger of the Lord is kindled against his people, and he hath stretched forth his hand against them, and hath smitten them;" Jer. li. 25, "Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain; and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee," &c. "Upon" and "against" notes the same thing; when God's hand is upon a land or people, it is against them, and so the phrase oft runs; Jer. xv. 6, "Thou art gone backward: therefore will I stretch out my hand against thee, and destroy thee;" see Exod. iii. 20.

The sins of the people lay waste the land; they fell to idolatry, and so God stretched out his hand upon the land and laid it waste.

This people were so degenerate, corrup'ed, besotted with their own ways, that they understood little of God's; they fell to the sins of the nations, and those sins in a special manner stupify. All sin doth it, but idolatry and false worship most; hence, Jer. x. 14, speaking of such sinners, he saith, "Every man is brutish in his knowledge." Idolaters know not God, how he is provoked by their ways, what foolish doing it is to go out from God; therefore in this chapter it is four times, "They shall know that I am the Lord," ver. 7, 10, 13, 14.

CHAPTER VII.

Ver. 1—4. Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Also, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord God unto the land of Israel; An end, the end is come upon the four corners of the land. Now is the end come upon thee, and I will send mine anger upon thee, and will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense upon thee all thine abominations. And mine eye shall not spare thee, neither will I have pity: but I will recompense thy ways upon thee, and thine abominations shall be in the midst of thee: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

This chapter, as the former, is prophetic of the destruction of the Jews, and of their land.

1. In it is a denunciation of their total ruin, in ver. 2, 3, 5—7, 10—13.

II. In the rest of the chapter is a declaration of their calamities, and the causes thereof.

Of the first verse hath been formerly spoken, and likewise of "the son of man;" and most things in these verses. In the second verse, the prophet is in general acquainted with the mind of God towards Israel, and in the two next more specially.

Ver. 2. "Also, thou son of man." The Hebrew is, וְאַתָּה בְּנֵי אָדָם And thou, O son of man: here is a nominative case absolute, without reference to any thing. The like you have Psal. xli. 12, "As for me, thou upholdest me in mine integrity." The Hebrew is, And I, in the nominative, thou upholdest me: Ego in integritate supportasti me. Zeel. vii. 5, "Did ye at all fast unto me, even to me?" this last me is ego: Jejunasti mihi ego, saith the original. Eccles. ii. 15, "As it happeneth to the fool, so it happeneth even to me," Secundum eventum stulti etiam ego eveniet mihi. Such hebraisms you have, 1 Sam. xxv. 24; Gen. xxvii. 24; and in Isa. xi. 10; Psal. xi. 4, you have nominative cases put absolute, as "thou" here in the text; and it serves to quicken up the prophet's spirit, and to put him into a readiness of prophesying; And thou, Ezekiel, attend, prophesy.

"Unto the land of Israel," or, concerning the land of Israel. It is not spoken of all the tribes: ten were gone long before into captivity; but, by a synecdoche, of the tribe of Judah, which yet remained undestroyed.

"An end, the end is come." The word end is doubled, and mentioned again in the third verse. "Now is the end," repeated in ver. 6, "An end is come, the end is come." These repetitions are not in vain; they set out, first, the zeal, intention, and speed of the speaker: secondly, the evidence, certainty, and weight of the thing spoken of: thirdly, they serve to make the deeper impression.

End notes destruction, yea, a general destruction: Gen. vi. 13, "The end of all flesh is come;" God would bring a flood upon the whole earth, take away all flesh; and this is called the end of all. So here, God had dealt mercifully with them formerly, but now he would be severe, and make an end of them.

"Upon the four corners of the land." Hebrew is, wings, which metaphorically expresses the parts of the land. Wings are extensive things, and the parts of Judea that extended from Jerusalem, east, west, north, south, are called the wings or corners thereof; and the end should come, not only upon the extreme parts of the land, but the whole land; upon all their cities, habitations, and quarters, from one end to the other. What our prophet calls here the four corners or wings of the land, Christ calls, Matt. xxiv. 31, "the four winds;" they shall gather his elect from the four winds or quarters of the world.

Obs. 1. That kingdoms and churches have their periods. They may continue for some hundreds of years, but at length they expire. The kingdom and church of Judah flourished many years; from Saul their first king to Zedekiah their last, were 480 years; but then you see an end is come, the end is come: an end of the state, an end of their church, an end of all comforts, of all glory and greatness. The Assyrian, Persian, Grecian, and Roman monarchies had their ends, their glory was laid in the dust, after it had dazzled the world's eyes a few years. Wisdom, strength, greatness, riches, were found in them; but neither any, nor all of these, preserved them from seeing corruption. The seven famous churches in Asia are gone, and since that time many other churches and kingdoms have been ruined. Is not an end coming, if not come, upon many kingdoms at this day? let Germany, Denmark, Ireland, speak. No state, no church, no condition under the sun, is everlasting; all have their changes and their ends: Psal. cxix. 96, "I have seen an end of all perfection; but thy commandment is exceeding broad." There is nothing in the world so firm, perfect, lasting, but it is subject to corruption. Kingdoms are subject to wars, plagues, famines, treacheries, which ruin them; churches are subject to errors, heresies, schisms, corruptions, profaneness, which ruin them. And all other things have principles of destruction in themselves, which bring them to an end within the compass of a few years. "But thy commandment is exceeding broad," it goeth beyond the term of these perishing things; it is not for a hundred or thousand years, and so to expire, but it abides for ever.

Obs. 2. God will premonish before he doth punish a sinful people; he comes not upon them unwarned; he tells them beforehand what they must look for. If a general destruction be decreed, ready to be executed, he will hint it to his prophets, they shall declare it to the people; that those that are the Lord's may be awakened, brought to repentance, and secured from eternal ruin, if not the temporal, and that the rest may be convinced of their own evil ways, and may justify the proceedings of the Lord.

Ver. 3. "Now is the end come upon thee." They having the common sickness of mankind in them, to put off judgments, and the day of evil, when threatened, as if there were no such thing, or at a great distance; the Lord brings the judgment home to them, and cuts off all their shifts. Now is the end upon thee, now is the final destruction; and for thee, not for others that live among the nations; not for thy posterity that comes after thee; not for the tribes who are carried away; but for thee that art secure and fearest not. "Now is the end," it is very nigh: some years were to pass before the end came; it was now the sixth year of their captivity, and Zedekiah, that succeeded Jehoiachin, was upon the sixth year of his reign at Jerusalem; and the ninth year, the tenth month, began this final destruction, 2 Kings xxv. 1. Then came Nebuchadnezzar with all his forces into the land, and besieged Jerusalem, and in the eleventh year, the fourth and fifth months, it was accomplished, ver. 2—4, 8—10. So that here were three or four years before this end came, five and upwards before it was fulfilled, yet it is said, "Now is the end come upon thee."

Things future in Scripture are spoken of as present or past. Isa. i. 8, "The daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard;" chap. xxiv. 10, 11, "The city of confusion is broken down: every house is shut up, that no man may come in. There is a crying for wine in the streets:" this is spoken as present, and it was yet to come. Chap. xlii. 22, "This is a people robbed and spoiled;" Rev. xviii. 2, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils;" John iii. 18, "He that believeth not is condemned already:" these scriptures speak of things as past, and were then to come. The Lord useth to speak so in his word, of things future sometimes as present, sometimes as past, because with him is no difference of times, and for that they are as certainly to take place, as if they were doing, or done.

God looks not upon time as we do. That which is future we think to be at a great distance; that which is to come, two, three, seven, twenty, or a hundred years hence, that we apprehend very remote, and it hath little influence upon us; but God looks upon things at little and great distances as present. "Now is the end come upon thee." Seventy years he calls a present little moment, Isa. liv. 7, 8. And 1 Pet. iv. 7, "The end of all things is at hand;" 1 John ii. 18, "It is the last time:" it is about one thousand six hundred years since the Spirit of God spake thus by Peter and John, and yet the end of all things is not come, the last hour is not out. Times future are present with God, and so propounded to us that they might work the more strongly upon us, cause us to fear God more, to be sober and watch unto prayer.

"I will send mine anger upon thee." God had formerly dealt sparingly with them, now and then chastised them with rods; now he would be more severe, and chasten them with scorpions: he had kept in his wrath formerly, but now he would send it forth in strength; they should not have gentle corrections, but terrible judgments; he would send out wrath and not mercy. Anger here is put for the effects of anger, punishments, judgments, by a metonymy of the efficient.

"Will judge thee according to thy ways." Judging is sometimes put for sentencing of persons or things: Rom. ii. 16, "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men," that is, pass a sentence upon them: sometimes for punishing; Heb. xiii. 4, "Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge," that is, punish. And so here, "I will judge thee:" first, I will punish, and lest it may be thought God in his anger should exceed measure in punishing, it is added,

"According to thy ways;" not according to my ways, but thine, which in the judgment of any, or all, must be equal; look, what thou hast done and deserved by it, that thou shalt have. The word "ways" is metaphorical, and notes men's manners, actions, courses of life: Prov. xxi. 2, "Every way of a man is right in his own eyes; so Psal. i. 1, 6,

Men's own devices, Judg. ii. 19, custom, Jer. x. 2, and in this place, their actions and conversations, are called ways; because their affections, the feet of the soul, are in them, and they lead unto some place, as ways do; all actions have a tendency to heaven or hell. This phrase is expounded by that in Hos. iv. 9, "I will punish them for their ways;" they have done evil and shall suffer for it.

"And will recompense upon thee all thine abominations." The Hebrew is, I will give, or put upon thee, &c. The Vulgate is, I will put against thee all; and others have it, I will repose or turn back upon thee all thine abominations: hitherto thou hast put them upon me, and I have borne them; now I will return them, and lay them upon thyself. God would now reward them for their abominations: Hos. iv. 9, "I will punish them for their ways, and reward them their doings;" their reward should return upon their own head, Obad. 15.

Obs. 1. God's judgments prevent sinners' expectations, they are nearer men than they conceive. "Now is the end come;" the prophet in Babylon sees it, but they at Jerusalem apprehended it not, none would believe that destruction should come upon Jerusalem, Lam. iv. 12. "Ye put far away the evil day." Amos vi. 3; they put it far from their thoughts, and hearts; if it came at all, they looked upon it as coming in after-generations, and not in theirs. Ezek. xii. 22, it was come to a proverb in Israel, "The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth;" ver. 27, "The vision that he seeth is for many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off." They grew secure, feared not the threatenings put upon them at a great distance, and, what lay in them, nulled the prophecies; and therefore, in ver. 28, God saith, "There shall none of my words be prolonged any more;" God would hasten the punishment of them, and they should suddenly overtake them. Isa. xxix. 1, "Woe to Ariel, to Ariel, the city where David dwelt!" Ariel is Jerusalem, so called, because there was the mountain, temple, and altar of God: so it is Ezek. xliii. 15, "The altar shall be four cubits;" the Hebrew is, Harel, the mountain of God, where the temple and altar was; but the word is Ariel, not Harel, and signifies the lion of God, not because Jerusalem was in the form of a lion, but for that it was a strong city, thought to be impregnable, and God threatens ruin against it. And Isa. xxix. 5, "It shall be at an instant suddenly," when men have no thoughts thereof; it should be as sudden as thunder, earthquakes, and tempests are, ver. 6; Hab. ii. 7, "Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee?" yes, they should, the northern army was upon them before they looked for them; they cried, Peace, peace, and when it is so, then "sudden destruction" is at hand, 1 Thess. v. 3. The old world was secure "until the day that Noe entered into the ark," Luke xvii. 27, and then the flood came presently and destroyed them all; they believed neither Noah's preaching, nor his preparations for himself and children. So in Sodom, they were not awakened out of their security till the fire and brimstone was felt, Gen. xix. 28, 29. Agag thought the bitterness of death past, when he was going to execution, 1 Sam. xv. 32. While Belshazzar is drinking healths, God sends a hand to write a sentence of death against him and his kingdom, Dan. v. 4, 5, 30. "In a morning shall the king of Israel utterly be cut off;" ere he can get out of his bed God would let out his blood, Hos. x. 15. Whatever men think, the Judge and judgment is at the door, it is near. Germany, Denmark, Ireland, England, did not think that such sad, bloody, destroying judgments were so near as now they find them. Let us not be secure, but fear, pass the time of our sojourning here in fear, remembering Solomon's happiness, Prov. xxviii. 14, "Happy is the man that feareth always;" and Job's practice, "The thing which I greatly feared is come upon me," Job iii. 25. Let God's judgments come sooner or later, it is duty, wisdom in us to fear, to prepare for them: it is folly to sleep when thieves are about the house, and may prove death to do it when a fire is kindled in the habitation.

Obs. 2. No people sinning grievously against God are exempted from desolating judgments. This people was God's people more peculiarly than any people in the world besides, Deut. vii. 6; "A people near unto God," Psal. cxlviii. 14; "Wise and understanding," Deut. iv. 6. They were "the redeemed" ones, Isa. lxii. 12; "the holy people," Dan. viii. 24; that knew God's name, Isa. lii. 6; that had God's law in their hearts, Isa. li. 7; that were "blessed above all," Deut. vii. 14. They had the holy land, the temple, worship, ordinance, oracles of God, the prophets, and presence of God, only. All the world besides lay in darkness, were without God; but these were "his strength, his glory," Psal. lxxviii. 61; as dear to him as "the apple of his eye," Zech. ii. 8. Yet when these people sinned and rebelled against God, destructive judgments came upon them; "An end is come upon thee;" upon thee Jerusalem, upon thee my people. They were honoured with many titles, were God's church; yet when they sinned against God, cast off his yoke, none of them, not all their privileges, would protect them from desolation.

Obs. 3. God's judgments are God's messengers sent forth at his pleasure. "I will send mine anger upon thee." God hath the command of judgments, as any man hath of his servants: the centurion had not so much power over his soldiers, as the Lord hath over punishments, calamities, and ruins of kingdoms; be they public or private judgments, they are at the beck of the Lord. What was the anger and judgment here? the sending of Nebuchadnezzar with his hasty and bitter Chaldeans to destroy the Jewish nation. God had that king and all his forces at command, to send out of Babylon about his service, to make war upon his people that were idolatrous. God hath his "four sore judgments" to send upon a land when he pleases, Ezek. xiv. 21. He can send hornets among people to sting them to death, Deut. vii. 20. If he do but "hiss for the fly of Egypt, and for the bee of Assyria, they shall come," and do their office, Isa. vii. 18, 19. If God call for any evil upon kingdoms, cities, churches, families, persons, they come presently, and accomplish the message they are sent for. When God spake by Moses, and said, Let there be frogs, flies, lice, murrain, hail, locusts, blood, darkness, death, they came immediately. God hath called for a sword upon most part of the christian world; and is it not at work? Doth it not eat flesh and drink blood? May we not say, "O thou sword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? put up thyself into thy scabbard, rest, and be still. How can it be quiet, seeing the Lord hath given it a charge against Ashkelon, and against the sea-shore? there hath he appointed it," Jer. xlviii. 6, 7.

God hath command of wars, gives charge to the sword against Ireland, England, other places, there hath he appointed it; and how can it be quiet? no, till God's will and work be accomplished, there is no quiet.

Obs. 4. God's proceedings with a guilty nation are just and equal, his judgments are without reproof. "I will judge thee according to thy ways;" not as I will, but as thou hast done; not after my ways, or the ways of other people, but after thine own ways. How just is it that a man should reap what he sows! If men have the law pass upon them according to the nature and merit of their facts, what wrong is done to any? who hath cause to complain of the judge? God knows the nature and merits of a nation's sins, and proceeds in his judgments accordingly. He is a righteous Judge, and no man hath just cause to complain; he stops the mouth of iniquity: Lam. iii. 39, "Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?" he should not do it. It is just and equal, that if a man sin against God, he should suffer from God; if God bear his sins, he must bear God's punishments. Let kingdoms suffer dreadful things from heaven, wars, famine, pestilence, whatever is destructive, God is to be justified by all; he deals with you according to your ways: let the severest critic, let Satan himself, God's greatest enemy, examine his judgments upon kingdoms, churches, together with their sins, and he shall justify God, and pronounce him clear, equal, righteous. In his ways, God deals not otherwise with men than their ways require; Zech. i. 6, "According to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath the Lord dealt with us:" therefore justify God and be patient.

Obs. 5. It is men's own ways which bring ruin upon them. "I will judge thee according to thy ways," thy ways bring my judgments. Prov. i. 31, "They shall eat of the fruit of their own ways, and be filled with their own devices." What fruit do men's sinful ways bring forth? even sour and bitter fruit, guilt, fears, sorrows, afflictions, ruin; upon such fruit they must feed, with such fruit they shall be filled. Hos. xiii. 9, "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself:" Israel's sins were her wounds, they were the plague, famine, and sword, that ruined them. The iniquities of a kingdom are the deaths of a kingdom, their sins will find them out, Numb. xxxii. 23; they are like blood-hounds, that hunt out the authors of them, and seize upon them: hence, Isa. lix. 12, it is said, "Our transgressions are with us," to weary us, to wound us, to destroy us: men cannot shake off the sins they have committed, they will follow them, seize upon them, hold them fast; Prov. v. 22, "His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the cords of his sins;" he shall die without instruction. Wicked men's sins may take others, and sometimes do, but they certainly take themselves; they twist cords to bind, but it is themselves; it is to make themselves burnt sacrifices for hell.

Obs. 6. When God comes in judgment upon a nation, he will deal thoroughly with it, visit for all sins. "I will recompense upon thee all thine abominations." God took notice of what was done in the dark, in the light, upon mountains, in valleys, under every green tree; no idols, false worship, inventions of theirs, but the Lord observed them, reserved them in mind, and rendered unto them answerable for them. Before, he had dealt with them for some, now he would deal with them for all their abominations, and bring them as an insupportable burden upon them.

Ver. 4. "And mine eye shall not spare," &c. Much is said in the sacred Scriptures of the great and tender mercies of the Lord, and many patterns of his mercies are to be found therein; and the sinners in Zion conceited God to be all mercy, sinned securely, and feared no judgments. Upon this great abuse of divine mercy, saith the Lord, "Mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity;" you shall find me all justice, consuming fire, without any sparing or pitying; judgment after judgment shall come upon you, till you are destroyed: you think to go on in your sinful ways, and find me merciful, but I am provoked, and you shall feel me dreadful; nothing shall prevail to draw me to any remorse or pity, the consideration you are my people, not reproach of heathens round about you, not your prayers, tears, sufferings, blood, not that you are Abraham's and David's posterity, not the dishonour my name shall have by you: I am now hardened against you, and will punish you openly according to your abominations; you shalt have great punishments in the midst of you, which will evidence the greatness of your sins, and cause you to acknowledge me to be a just God. Of the words in this verse have been spoken, chap. v. 11, and ver. 8, and chap. vi. 7, and in the preceding verse of this chapter.

Ver. 5—9. Thus saith the Lord God; An evil, an only evil, behold, is come. An end is come, the end is come: it watcheth for thee; behold, it is come. The morning is come unto thee, O thou that dwellest in the land: the time is come, the day of trouble is near, and not the sounding again of the mountains. Now will I shortly pour out my fury upon thee, and accomplish mine anger upon thee: and I will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense thee for all thine abominations. And mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: I will recompense thee according to thy ways and thine abominations that are in the midst of thee; and ye shall know that I am the Lord that smiteth.

Something I shall open in these verses, not much. In the 5th, "An only evil." Evil befell them before, but none like this, none so great, so destructive to the Jewish church and state. It hath reference to that in chap. v. 9, "I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like:" no such extreme and deadly destruction shall befall thee; I have one evil now left for thee, which shall be without all comparison; there shall need none after this to make a full ruin of thee. God hath evils to do his will at once, and so it may be called "an only evil." 1 Sam. xxvi. 8, saith Abishai to David, "Let me smite Saul with the spear even to the earth at once, and I will not smite him the second time."

At once; it is the same word with אֶחָד only in this verse: he would utterly slay Saul at one stroke, and God with one judgment would utterly destroy the Jews. Such a phrase you have in Nahum i. 9, "He will make an utter end; affliction shall not rise up the second time." God would bring such a judgment upon Nineveh, that at once it should be destroyed, a second affliction should not be needful, the evil of that day should be sufficient. The Chaldee reads it otherwise, evil after evil; showing the succession of evils that should follow one after another, till they were destroyed; as wave follows wave, one cloud another, &c. so affliction should come after affliction. Sins go linked together, and so do afflictions; Lev. xxvi. 18, 21, 24, 28, they go by sevens. God can at one judgment at once destroy sinners, kingdoms, cities; he can at pleasure bring many, one after another, destroy by degrees, be a moth, rottenness, a lion to Israel and Judah, Hosea v. We should take heed how we offend such a God.

Ver. 6. "It watcheth for thee." Thou thoughtest judgment slept, but it is awake, and waits for, or against thee. Thou thoughtest it a dead thing, but it is alive, and making haste towards thee. The Hebrew word signifies to be weary, as if judgment were weary with staying יָרָה so long, or God weary with deterring it: now there should be no more delay. It notes also to excite a man asleep, one dead, as in 2 Kings iv. 31, "The child is not awaked," that is, not raised from the dead. So here, God had threatened them by his prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, others, many years, and they thought the prophets' words wind, because nothing was done; at least that such a judgment would not befall them in these days, as they had foretold, Ezek. xii. 22, 27; as if the judgment they spake of was asleep, or as a thing dead: therefore it is said, it lives, is awake, and watcheth as a thief to spoil, as a lion for a prey. And hereby is pointed out the suddenness of its coming, and intention of God to destroy them.

This verse, the former, and that which follows, are full of divine rhetoric: asyneton, anadiplosis, epanalepsis, metaphoraes, paronomasia, apostrophe, and others, are evident in them. The Scripture hath as great elegance as any authors whatsoever.

Obs. 1. In case of people's security, repetition of the same thing is necessary. They were fearless of judgments, secure of their estates, put far off the evil day, and see how the Lord doubles and trebles his threats, "An evil, an only evil, an end, the end is come, is come, is come, is come, is come, is come," six times; and further, "behold, behold it is come;" the several expressions of the season, the morning, the time, the day of trouble, and then it watcheth, is come, is near. Why doth the Spirit of God repeat all these? even to awaken them out of their security, to convince them, as of the certainty, so the suddenness, of the judgment, and to make the greater and deeper impression upon them. Things once spoken pass away, but being iterated, are like to take some hold of men's ears and affections. This prophet is very repetitious of threats and judgments, and presseth them frequently; they were near final destruction, and therefore the Spirit of God urgeth such things oft in the mouth of this prophet, that so no means being left unattempted, he might awaken all and gain some. Christ pronounces the same words eight times in one chapter, "Woe unto you," scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites," Matt. xxiii. 13, 14, 15, 16, 23, 25, 27, 29, to affect them with the imminency of their danger, and others with the evil of their ways.

Obs. 2. God's judgments may seem to linger, but they do not slumber. Wicked men God bears with, and forbears long, even so long, that they think his judgments are laid to sleep, or dead; as in 2 Pet. iii. 4, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation;" there is no Christ to reign or judge; the flood is dried up, and the fire to consume the world is not yet kindled; but, ver. 10, "The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat:" chap. ii. 3, "Whose judgment lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not." God's judgments, what-er sinners think, are awake, and hastening to their ruin. That which the wicked call a lingering and slumbering judgment, God's Spirit calls, in ver. 1, "Swift destruction;" it will be upon them before they see their doings, or repent of their sin: Rev. vi. 2, 4, 8, you shall find that judgments come riding in, they make haste.

Obs. 3. That God keeps judgment quiet till he please. It may watch, but cannot walk, or work, till he seal a commission. God hath variety of judgments, creatures in a readiness to do him service; he hath angels, stars, winds, waters, sword, famine, pestilence, &c. but no one still till he say, Go; they watch to hear his voice, to do his will; they move not at the call of man, their motion is only at the appointment of their great Creator. If he bid Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuzaradan, with thousands of Babylonians, to arise, and hasten to the ruin of Jerusalem, they are watchful, swift, and active to execute his commands. All creatures are God's army, and have cause sufficient to watch for the ruin of man, because man's sin hath subjected them to ruin, and imbondaged them to corruption. But here is the wisdom, power, and mercy of God, he keeps all in their banks, and without warrant from the great General, the Lord of hosts, no attempt is made against any.

"The morning is come unto thee." That they might be affected, he tells them, the day is broke, the morning is come, and the day of trouble beginneth. He would have them be no longer in the dark, but to look abroad to see how providences were working to fulfil prophecies. The original word is diversely rendered, it comes from מצב maturare, mane surgere, and signifies matutinum quid, some morning, some early thing. Exusu Chaldeo, and A Lapide, interpret it primum germen, the first bud that is upon any tree, the early, the morning bud; and so the sense is, Judgments are budding, breaking forth, appearing, and as near as spring and summer are when a tree buds and blossoms; or, as the word is, The morning is come; you have thought judgment slept, that it was still evening, not past midnight, but the morning is come; judgment not only watcheth, but is rising, risen, coming forth, and it will be early upon thee.

The Septuagint implies there was a connexion and series of evils coming upon them: Aquila hath it προσκόπησιν, prospectiorem, as if the evil they had foreseen and feared were now coming upon them: the Chaldee, coronam, diadema, so the word is used in Isa. xxviii. 5; and because it notes royal power, it is thought the king of Babylon is here meant: the Vulgate is, constritio, breaking into pieces, grinding to dust, is come upon thee: Maldonat, contractio, besieging is come, and thou must be in a narrow compass: Slindler, revolutio ad te, Nebuchadnezzar shall return, compass thee about as a crown, and carry thee into captivity.

"The day of trouble is near." The Hebrew word notes great trouble, vexation, with tumult and destruction; היום חמשה or a day of sore trouble. You may hear the prophet Isaiah describing such a day, chap. xxii. 5, "It is a day of trouble, and of treading down, and of perplexity by the Lord God of hosts in the valley of vision, breaking down the walls, and of crying to the mountains." God hath days of trouble for kingdoms, and when they come there is great distress and great destruction: 2 Chron. xv. 5, 6, "In those times there was no peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in, but great vexations were upon all the inhabitants of the countries. And nation was destroyed of nation, and city of city; for God did vex them with all adversity:" This was a time or day of trouble for Israel. In Scripture is mentioned a day of calamity, Psal. xviii. 18; a day of wrath, Job xx. 28; a day of battle, Psal. cxl. 7; a day of vengeance, Jer. xlv. 10; a day of evil, Prov. xvi. 4; of rebuke, Hos. v. 9; of slaughter, Jer. xii. 3; of burning, Mal. iv. 1; of destruction, Job xxi. 30; and all these may be in a day of trouble.

You shall find many of them together in Zeph. i. 14—17, where he speaks of the day that Ezekiel doth: "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord: the mighty man shall cry there bitterly. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, a day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers. And I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men," &c.

"Not the sounding again of the mountains." The land of Israel was full of mountains; Psal. cxxv. 2, "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem;" and Judah was a "hill country," Luke i. 35. About these hills were their vines planted, and it was a land of vines, Deut. viii. 8; Isa. vii. 23; and at their vintage, when they gathered their grapes, they had many labourers, who to sweeten and facilitate their pains, made great shoutings, Isa. xvi. 10, which made the mountains to echo and resound; but now there should be no joyful sound, but the rattling of arms, noise of chariots, neighing of horses, cry of soldiers, these should be heard in the mountains. Or thus: upon the hills and mountains they had their idols and altars, chap. vi. 13; and where idolaters sacrificed, there they had their music, songs, and dances, which made the mountains to ring, and were as the glory of them; but now, there should be a day of slaughter, and dreadful clamour of enemies should be in the mountains; the glory of them stained with the blood of men slain: there should be groaning, mourning, howling, shrieking of men and women wounded and wronged. Or thus: You think all threats empty sounds, as an echo from a mountain, which presently vanisheth; but you shall find the day of trouble no echo work, it will be real, and make you in the bitterness of your spirits cry to rocks and mountains, and seek to hide yourselves in the cliffs of them.

Ver. 8. The 8th verse hath formerly been opened, only you have pouring out of fury, for accomplishing fury, chap. v. 13; and it is the same for substance. God would not hold in his fury any longer, he would give full scope unto it, freely, fully, strongly would he proceed in his fury against them, all which are included in the word "pour out."

So for the ninth verse, "I am the Lord that smiteth." You think it is the Chaldeans, the second cause, but ye shall know that it is the Lord himself.

Ver. 10, 11. Behold the day, behold, it is come: the morning is gone forth; the rod hath blossomed, pride hath budded. Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness: none of them shall remain, nor of their multitude, nor of any of theirs: neither shall there be wailing for them.

In these verses he goes on to show the approach and extent of their ruin; it was at hand, and none of them should remain; and likewise the causes thereof, pride and violence. Of "morning" was spoken in ver. 7, but I must open something here, for the words are difficult.

"The rod hath blossomed." By rod, sundry interpreters understand Nebuchadnezzar, whom they conceive so called, Jer. i. 11; and that in Isa. x. 5, "O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger," refers not only to Sennacherib, but also to Nebuchadnezzar.

A rod in the Scripture sense denotes,

Some think he alludes to the practice of the Jews, who executed delinquents in the morning, according to that in Jer. xxi. 12, and Ps. cxl. 8, God would early bring the sword upon them; and there is an emphasis in the word מוציא that morning, which was the most observable and deplorable morning that ever they had. Such a morning was Sodom's, when fire and brimstone rained upon it, Gen. xix. 23, 24; such a morning was the king of Israel's, Hos. x. 15.

La sentence du mot, in the margin of the French.

Non glorie montium, Vulgate. Non reperimus montium, Arton. Non Echus montium, Jun.

First, power, strength; Psal. ii. 9, "A rod of iron."

Secondly, afflictions, heavy judgments; Psal. lxxxix. 32, "I will visit their transgression with the rod."

Thirdly, rigid and harsh government; Isa. xiv. 5, "The Lord hath broken the staff," or rod, "of the wicked," that is, their rigorous and cruel government. Nebuchadnezzar had great strength, sorely afflicted the land of Judah, he was an iron rod that brake them in pieces, and ruled them rigidly in Babylon; Jehoiakim was kept thirty-seven years in prison, Jer. lii. 31. "The rod blossometh;" that is, was in a readiness to come and smite Jerusalem. After blossoming comes fruit, and the fruit that this rod bare was fruit unto death.

"Pride hath budded." This king and people lifted up themselves above others, and prided themselves in their greatness, strength, riches, and victories. Jer. i. 31, God saith of Babylon, "I am against thee, O thou most proud." The Hebrew is, I am against thee, pride. These Babylonians were pride itself. In Dan. iv. 30, you may hear the king priding himself in this language, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?"

Both king and people were proud, and their pride budded forth and appeared to all when they put out Zedekiah's eyes, slew his sons before his face, and said, "Sing us one of the songs of Zion," Psal. cxxxvii. 3.

Others by rod understand the state of Judah and Jerusalem. So the word rod is used in Scripture; Jer. xlviii. 17, "How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod!" that is, the state and dignity of Moab; and thus we may understand it.

The word for rod signifies a tribe, as כנה in Numb. i. 4, 16, 21; either because they grew out of the stock of Jacob, as branches do out of a tree, or because the names of the twelve tribes were written upon rods, Numb. xvii. 2. And the word being hammatteh, the tribe, "the rod" carries me to conceive it is meant of Judah rather than of Nebuchadnezzar. And the sense runs in a continued allegory: Judah is compared to a tree that blossoms, buds, and brings forth its fruit: it had blossomed or flourished; so the word is, Psal. xc. 6; and now the fruit was growing ripe, their sins were great, the measure of them almost full, and punishment grew near and weighty.

The sins mentioned are, I. "Pride." That pride, so the Hebrew is; there was eminency in it, Judah was grown very proud: Jer. xliii. 9, "I will mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem." And where- in appeared this great pride? ver. 10.

"They refuse to hear God's words, they walk in the imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods, to serve them and to worship them." The proud men told Jeremiah he spake falsely, Jer. xliii. 25.

This sin reigned among men and women also; Isa. iii. 16, "The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet." They had great bravery, tinkling ornaments, cauls, round moon tires, chains, bracelets, mufflers, bonnets, leg-ornaments, headbands, rings, ear-rings, nose-jewels, changeable suits of apparel, mantles, crisping pins, glasses, fine lincn, hoods, and veils. They were clothed with pride; their children carried themselves proudly against the ancients, and the base against the honourable. So great and general was the pride of Jerusalem, that it made the prophet weep in secret places, Jer. xliii. 17. Their pride budded and blossomed, so that the prophet's eye seeing it, affected his heart, fetched rivers of tears from him, seeing their destruction now at hand.

The Septuagint renders this place of our prophet thus, Injury hath risen up. Pride is an injurious thing to God and man, it rises up against him, and thrusts him out of his worship, ordinances, and ways; it disquiets kingdoms, and the meek of the earth; it is injury itself.

"Buds;" that is, puts forth, is green and growing. As a tree, Cant. vii. 12, puts out buds in every part of it in the spring, so as a fowl puts out feathers all over; so did Judah's pride bud forth in all ranks and conditions of people.

2. The other sin is "violence." The Vulgate translates it, iniquity; the Greeks, unrighteousness; others, rapine, injury; but the Hebrew is emphatical, that violence, that iniquity, &c. It signifies open wrong; as Mercer observes upon Gen. vi. 11. This sin was in strength among this people. Isa. lix. 6, "Their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands;" they oppress the poor, they rob and spoil them, and that openly; the act, even the things they have taken from them are in their hands. Amos iii. 10, "They know not to do right, who store up violence and robbery in their palaces;" the rulers and great men that dwelt in palaces, they oppressed, they robbed, and stored up what they got in their palaces, that it was known to all, and cried out of by the prophet. Micah iii. 1-3, he tells you of the heads' and princes' doings, who above others should have seen to the execution of justice; and they were the men who plucked off the skin from the people, and their flesh from their bones; they flayed, brake, chopped them in pieces as for the pot. The peoples' estates and livelihoods were as their skin, flesh, bones unto them; but the great ones wrung them from the people, and did live upon the spoil; "They ate the bread of wickedness, and drank the wine of violence," Prov. iv. 17. And this sin staid not in the heads, but descended to the body, the people generally; they that were rich oppressed the poor; Amos viii. 4, they swallowed up the needy; they made the ephah small, and the shckel great; they falsified the balances: sold the poor for silver, and the needy for shoes, ver. 5, 6; men endured with immortal souls worth all the world, they sold for old shoes; and filled the land with violence, Ezek. viii. 17.

"Risen up into a rod of wickedness." The phrase imports thus much, That their injustice and oppression had prepared and brought forth judgment.

A rod of wickedness, that is, a rod, the fruit of wickedness; out of their great sins hath sprung up this rod; or thus, a rod of wickedness; that is, a rod to correct and punish wickedness withal. In both senses it may be called a rod of wickedness, both because it buds from wickedness, and serves to beat wickedness. If we refer violence to Nebuchadnezzar, then the meaning is, God will raise up him to be the rod of his anger, to beat the Jews for their iniquity; he shall rise up into a rod of wickedness. If we refer it to the Jews, then the meaning is, their own wickedness is risen up into a rod, into judgment, and that rod will be their ruin. Such a phrase there is in Prov. xiv. 3, "In the mouth of the foolish is a rod of pride;" that is, the proud speeches in the mouths of fools offend others, proyoake God, produce shame, trouble, danger to themselves, and so their own sin is a rod to themselves.

The rulers were
xxxiii. 14

Obs. 1. That pride is a forerunner of destruction. Judgment, utter ruin, was coming upon them; but pride had budded; they were grown exceeding proud and haughty, their pride testified to their faces, as the phrase is; Hos. v. 5, "Therefore shall Israel and Ephraim fall in their iniquity, Judah also shall fall with them."

Is Israel proud? so is Judah; must Israel fall? so must Judah. Pride struts before, and ruin follows at the heels; Prov. xvi. 18, "Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall." Haman was haughty, he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone, he will have the blood and bones of all the Jews to satisfy his pride, Esth. iii. 6; and quickly after he was hanged, chap. vii. 10. Before the worms did eat Herod, his heart was swollen with pride, Acts xii. 23. Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. iv. 30, 31. David in the pride of his heart numbers the people, and the plague sweeps away seventy thousand of them presently after. Absalom, Adonijah, aspire, but destruction was their end. Pride affects to go before, but it is before a fall, before destruction. If you find pride in the premises, you shall certainly find destruction in the conclusion. Pride preceded the grand fall of our first parents; they would "be as gods, knowing good and evil," Gen. iii. 5. And pride preceded the angels' fall in heaven, some gather from that in 1 Tim. iii. 6. It was so from the beginning, and will be a truth to the end, Luke xiv. 11, "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted;" be they particular persons, cities, or kingdoms, if they exalt themselves through pride, God will throw them down. Jer. l. 29, 30, "Babylon hath been proud against the Lord, against the Holy One of Israel," and therefore she should be ruined. I believe the kingdoms that are ruining now, have been proud against the Lord and his worship; they have provoked God with that sin, and he will plague them with his judgments. God threatened Jerusalem for this sin; Jer. xiii. 9, "I will mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem." And how, you may see in Isa. iii. 24, "Instead of sweet smell there shall be stink; and instead of a girdle a rent; and instead of well set hair baldness; and instead of a stomacher a girding of sackcloth; and burning instead of beauty;" thus God would mar it, Isa. xxiii. 9, "The Lord of hosts hath purposed to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honourable of the earth;" he hath purposed, and is powerful to do it.

Obs. 2. The ruin of persons and kingdoms is from themselves. "Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness;" their own injustice, oppression, and iniquities brought forth that which was their destruction, a rod of wickedness. David's sin was a rod to himself, 2 Sam. xii. 9—11. Thou hast killed Uriah, defiled Bathsheba; now therefore the sword shall never depart from thine house; I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own bowels: the sin and rod grew out of one stock. Men's sins prove their rods. Joseph's brethren sinned in Canaan, and their sin was a rod to them in Egypt, Gen. xlii. 21. Judas's treason became the halter that hanged him, Matt. xxvii. 5. Adam's eating the forbidden fruit prepared birch for his own back, and all ours; the world is whipped with the rod of his sin. Sin in the Scripture is called a burden, weight, Gal. vi. 5. it is that which sinks into misery, thorns, briars, Heb. vi. 8; it pinks and scratches, Nahum i. 10; it is a sting, 1 Cor. xv. 56, it is that brings terrible pangs and pains to all; a snare, Psal. ix. 16, and that will take him who makes and sets it; and here a rod, that caused fear, smart, wounds, death. The tree bears a helve for the axe that cuts itself down; the garment breeds the moth that devours it; and Judah planted the rod which brake itself in pieces; while Judah is sinning, God's wrath is growing, Nebuchadnezzar is coming, the rod of his indignation. It was Israel's idolatry that ruined her, Hos. xiii. 1; and Judah's injustice, oppression, that ruined her, Jer. v. 1; Isa. v. 7.

"None of them shall remain." God would make a general destruction, yet not so general as not any to escape. We know divers did, and some returned, who had seen the glory of the former temple. "Shall remain" is not in the original, it is only, none of them; a defective speech, and refers to the rod of wickedness, and may thus be supplied: None of them shall go unpunished; they have all sinned, and shall one way or other smart, all of them. And so they did, though all of them were not carried away, or cut off.

"Nor of their multitude." The Hebrew הָעַם he'amm is, tumult, sound, or company making a noise; where there is a great number, there is tumultuousness. Let their number be never so great, none of them shall escape the rod; if it destroy them not, it shall wound them; if not wound them, it shall afflict them.

Others interpret it of their wealth. None of their wealth: that is, none of it shall do them good, or go unpunished.

"Nor of any of theirs." The Hebrew מִמֶּנּוּ minenu is considerable two ways; either from hem, and that doubled, mehomem, of them, of them; and then the sense is, None of them, I say, none of them that have thus sinned, dishonoured me before the nations, shall go unpunished. Or thus, None of them, of them, none of their seed, none come from such a race, shall escape the smart of that rod which is now growing up. All their posterity were not quite ruined, but they all smarted.

Or the Hebrew may be considerable from הָעַם which is, to make a noise. And then the meaning is, None of those men that make a noise shall go unbeaten with this rod: none of the great men that, with their honour, wealth, train, make such stirs in the city and land; none of them that think themselves through their greatness exempt from all courts, all accounts, all corrections, shall be free from the strokes of this rod: be they never so great; be they priests, prophets, nobles, princes, kings, they shall come under the lash. Neither multitude, riches, nor greatness, will privilege sinners when the rod comes. The old world's multitude, Damascus' riches, Jerusalem's sons of pride, men of noise, could not protect them from the wrath of God or man.

"Neither shall there be wailing for them." Though men of quality, yet shall not their friends bewail them in any solemn manner. The destructions, miseries, fears, through power and insolency of the enemy, shall be such, that they shall not dare to lament the dead openly, nor much mind their death. Jeremiah speaks of this evil, chap. xvi. 4; xxv. 33. Their slain should be so many, death so common, that they should lie unburied, unbemoaned.

Ver. 12, 13. The time is come, the day draweth near: let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn: for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof. For the seller shall not return to that which is sold, although they were yet alive: for the vision is touching the whole multitude thereof, which shall not return; neither shall any strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life.

In these two verses our prophet sets down what the condition of their temporal estates should be, subject to spoil and loss. If the buyer bought a great pennyworth, he should have little cause to rejoice; it should be suddenly taken from him, house, land, cattle, goods; the time was even at hand. And so if the seller had sold his estate not for half the worth, and parted with his inheritance which was dear to him, he should not mourn; had he not taken a little for the present, within a few days, he should have had nothing, all should have been taken from him, and he separated from his inheritance. Judgment is coming, and so dreadful, that there shall be no leisure to look at what is sold or bought.

 המון The Hebrew word will bear it, upon all the wealth thereof; and some interpreters so read it: hamon signifies plenty of riches, and also of other things.

Jerusalem and Judah were rich, wealthy places: Psalm lxxvi. 12, “Thou broughtest us into a wealthy place;” and there they became great, waxed rich, Jer. v. 27; and gloried in their riches, Jer. ix. 23. But God’s wrath was upon their riches; he would bring the Chaldeans upon them, plunder and spoil them of all, and neither buyer or seller should have any advantage.

“Upon all the multitude thereof.” Upon all; not any one condition singled out, but upon all; upon sellers, upon buyers, upon poor, upon rich; all that are in Jerusalem and Judea, of what condition soever, wrath is come upon them, they shall be spoiled and carried captive.

“For the seller shall not return to that which is sold.” To understand these words, we must have recourse to the year of jubilee:

Wherein first they were to sound trumpets, Lev. xxv. 10, 13.

Secondly, to proclaim and give liberty to all that were restrained.

Thirdly, to release all lands and tenements; and those that had sold or mortgaged them, were to return and enjoy them. To this last our prophet speaks, and certifies them, that their condition should be such, that when the joyful year of jubilee should come for releasing of lands, and inhabiting of what was sold, the seller should have no benefit by that year; they should be carried into a strange land, and lose that privilege; they should die there, or be detained that they could not come; or if they did get away, they should find their possession in their hands that would not regard the jubilean law. This was great comfort to poor men, and those who were necessitated to sell their estates, that at such a time they would come in freely again; but this hope is here taken away.

“Although they were yet alive.” Though their life were yet in the living, so is the Hebrew. If sorrow, exile, miseries did not consume them, but they should live to the year of jubilee, it should be no advantage to them.

Quest. But why did Jeremiah purchase land after this time? In Jer. xxxii. you shall find he bought land. In the tenth year of Zedekiah, when Jerusalem was besieged, when himself was in prison, ver. 2, he bought, Hanameel sold; subscribed and sealed the evidences, which Baruch put into an earthen vessel, and hid for many days.

Ans. 1. The right of redemption belonged to him; he being the nearest kinsman, was to do it; see Lev. xxv. 24; Ruth iv. 1. But there were wars in the land, and when wars are awake, the laws do sleep.

2. He had special warrant for it, ver. 8; he saith, “Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord,” that Hanameel came to him, and bade him buy his field. He knew that it came from God, and it had been sin in him not to have done it.

3. He purchased this land by faith, knowing that the captivity should not exceed seventy years, and that there should be a repossession of houses, fields, and vineyards after the captivity, ver. 15, and believed that the holy seed should return. Ezekiel spake of those present in Jerusalem that should be carried away, perish, and not return.

“For the vision is touching the multitude thereof, which shall not return.” These words must be cautiously observed. The multitude’s returning must not here be understood; but, the vision shall not return. The Hebrew is, The vision to the multitude thereof shall not return, or, the vision shall not return to the multitude thereof. There is no “which” in the Hebrew, which makes the doubt in the English, and alters the sense. The vision shall not return; that is, the prophetic threatening I have had touching the besieging and destroying of Jerusalem, and the whole land, shall not be in vain; the prophecy denounced against them shall not return void, be without success; it shall not be recalled, but stand firm; not be reiterated, once shall suffice. By that time the truth of this prophecy is executed, and weight of it fallen upon you, there will be no thought of possessions, or place of inheriting lands.

Some read it, The vision to all the wealth, making the sense to be a threatening of their estates to be plundered and spoiled, which they trusted so much unto. This is supposed in the other; for the prophecy taking hold upon them, their estates could not be safe.

“Neither shall any strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life.” The Hebrew is, A man in his iniquity of his life shall not strengthen; or thus, A man shall not strengthen himself whose life is in his iniquity; it is so in the margin. Not comfort, saith the Vulgate; where there is comfort, there is some strengthening. Men have thoughts to strengthen themselves in their wicked ways; but it shall not be; not their counsels, not their multitudes, not their riches, not their privileges, not their confederacies with others, not their military preparations, not their serving of false gods, nothing shall strengthen them against the Chaldeans, to withstand them. The iniquity of their lives is stronger to ruin them, than all the strength they have besides can make to defend them. It is not their art, policy, power, that shall deliver them from the judgment decreed and threatened. Sometimes men’s iniquities, their malice, violence, blasphemies, stubbornness, make others forbear them, and lose their right rather than they will meddle with them. But here it shall not be so; the greater their iniquities, the rather, the sooner would God punish them. Or thus: You have heard many threats and heavy judgments against the city and land, but you are secure, you repent not, you go on justifying your ways, thinking all well, that we the prophets are liars, that there is no danger of fear; but you shall know that your ways are sinful, and will not afford comfort or strength to stand it out in the evil day. No man ever got strength by, or in, iniquity.

Obs. 1. That the things of this life are little to be valued. We should not be solicitous about them; for the time may come that wrath may be upon them, and what are they then? worthless, comfortless, vexing things. It vexed many of them that their estates should fall into Chaldeans’ hands; and the price of desirable things was abated; the buyer was not to rejoice, nor the seller to mourn, for neither the one nor the other had got or lost much; and whatever they had should come to nothing. If men magnify temporals, and exalt the price of them, God will vilify them, and make them at a low rate. All the wealth of Judah and Jerusalem was now to be a prey to the adversary; yea, their gardens, orchards, vineyards, lands, houses, wives, children, and whatever was considerable amongst them, should be taken from them. Now there was no terra firma in that kingdom; all things were movable and upon the wing, and little cause had they to laugh or weep for those things. The like is our condition at this present time, all uncertain, much in the enemy's hand; therefore, as the apostle, 1 Cor. vii. 29, "Let them that have wives be as though they had none; they that weep, as though they wept not; they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not." Now let men's hearts be off from all; so look upon all conditions, all possessions, as uncertain, as nothing; as taken from you, as departing from them. Let your thoughts be upon "the inheritance that is incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, which is reserved in heaven," 1 Pet. i. 4.

Obs. 2. Covetous men are glad of good bargains. Though wrath be upon them, they look at the gains, not the wrath. Necessity, danger, made men sell all, and covetousness made others buy all; and because they had much for a little, they rejoiced; but little cause had they, for the wrath of God was upon all they bought. Covetousness is watchful for advantages of gain, but blind in discerning wrath accompanying that gain. Achan's covetousness caused him to take the garment, the shekels of silver, and wedge of gold, Josh. vii.; but it blinded him so, that he saw not the cursedness of them, nor the stony death that followed them. In Lot's days there was buying and selling, till the fire consumed what was bought and sold, together with the buyer and seller, Luke xvii. 28, 29. Covetousness is greedy of its prey, even when death is in it: it will buy houses when fire is kindled in them, and land when the curse of God is upon it. Beware, therefore, of this sin, saith he, Luke xii. 15, "for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth;" his death and his destruction may be in them; they cannot add to his life, or the true comfort of it, but they may take away from it; Jam. v. 3, the rust of their gold and silver shall witness against them, and eat their flesh as fire.

Obs. 3. God's wrath sometimes is so hot, that it takes away not only the present comfort, but even the future hope of temporal things: they should have no benefit of the year of jubilee when it came, they should not return again, although they should suffer much, and long; be alive at a time when men's hopes were wont to be fully answered for their lands and houses, yet they should be without hope. They dealt hypocritically with God, they were "an hypocritical nation," Isa. x. 6; "And the hypocrite's hope shall perish, be cut off, be a spider's web," Job viii. 13, 14. They grow great and green, but God hath judgments to cut them down; they are fastened to the walls of the house, as the spider's web, but God hath a besom of destruction to sweep them away. Whatever wicked men's hopes are of greatness here, and happiness hereafter, yet God in his wrath can, and oft doth, blast them altogether; Job xiv. 19, "Thou wastest away the things which grow out of the dust of the earth; and thou destroyest the hope of man."

Obs. 4. The judgments decreed, and given forth by the ministers of God, shall certainly take place. The vision shall not return without its accomplishment, efficacy, and fruit. God foreknows all emergencies, oppositions, events, and nothing can withstand, or finally impede the execution of his decrees and threats; he is wise in appointing them, faithful to perform them, and mighty in the execution of them; Isa. lxiii. 13, "I will work, and who shall let it." When God hath not promised, or threatened, none can let his working: much less when the word is gone forth of his mouth, and himself is engaged to make it good. See Isa. lv. 11, "My word shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please." God will see to it constantly, that it be so: and seeing it is so, and God now working in his judgments, "let all the earth fear the Lord; let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him, for he spake, and it was done," Psal. xxxiii. 8, 9.

Obs. 5. Men's sins do not strengthen them, but weaken them. "No man shall strengthen himself in the iniquity of his life." There is no strength comes in by sin; it deprives us of our strength, it blinds the mind, prejudices the strength of reason, it wounds the spirit, brings guilt on the conscience, which accusing, causeth despondency, and makes ashamed; it adds weight to all afflictions, fills with fears, and so produceth discouragements; it keeps out the comfort and benefit of the ordinances, makes God out with us, all creatures against us, brings a curse upon our undertakings, subjects us to the curse of the law, and sentence of condemnation: any of these will weaken the heart of a sinner, much more all. In Ezek. xvi. 8, Jeru-lem's sins are reckoned up; and ver. 30, "How weak is thine heart, seeing thou doest all these things!" They do not strengthen, but sink thee: innocency, righteousness, strengths, Prov. xxviii. 1.

Obs. 6. Sin is the life of a wicked man, as blood is the life of all flesh, Lev. xvii. 14. It maintains and strengthens the life. So iniquity is the life of all sinful flesh; wicked men live upon wicked ways; it is pasture to a fool to do wickedly, Prov. x. 23. There is a life of sin in the soul, and things of iniquity maintain that life. Christ lives in and by the Father, John vi. 57; a godly man lives in Christ, 2 Tim. iii. 12; and a wicked man lives in sin, delights in it, feeds upon it: 1 Tim. v. 6, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead."

Obs. 7. When God comes in judgment, there is nothing can strengthen or secure a sinful people against the punishment of their iniquity; no power, no policy, no privilege, no wealth. Jerusalem had as much to plead as any place in the world, and those people had the choicest privileges of all others. Amos iii. 2, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities." They were known above others; none had so many miracles, special providences, blessings, truths, prophets, ordinances; none were seated better, oftener delivered, honoured with such titles, as they were; and no people sinned as they sinned: their sins exceeded the heathen's, Ezek. v. 6. And now neither their privileges nor their sins could exempt them from, or relieve them under, their sufferings. Their iniquities hastened the enemies; sharpened their swords, and armed them with severity to their utter destruction. There is nothing in creatures in the ways of wickedness to help in the day of wrath, Amos ii. 13—16.

Ver. 14. They have blown the trumpet, even to make all ready; but none goeth to the battle: for my wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

In this verse is set down one of the most grievous calamities that could befall them, namely, despondency of mind. They were called upon to battl, but none had a heart to go forth to it; and the cause is given, "My wrath is upon them all."

Some conceive these words to be spoken ironically, and read them thus: Blow the trumpet, let all be in a readiness; O ye Jews, call forth, call together your strong soldiers, let all arm, and hasten to meet the enemy; he is come into your quarters, ready to assault you in your cities. Where are you? Why do you not appear in the open fields, or stand upon your guard to defend your country and cities? you are cowardly, spiritless men.

"There is none goeth to the battle." Such ironies and sarcasms the Scripture sometimes hath; Isa. viii. 9, "Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces;" Isa. xxi. 5, "Arise, ye princes, and anoint the shield."

Belsazzar and his nobles were voluptuous; the Medes were coming to his destruction, undermining the walls of Babylon, and here the Spirit of God upbraided him and his princes for their effeminacy and cowardliness.

We may take them literally, "They have blown the trumpet," given public notice to city and country to make ready for war; but none stirs, none goes forth, they are without spirit. The first mention of trumpets we find in Scripture, is Exod. xix. 16, and there they were used at the giving and promulgation of the law; and to this day in many places laws are proclaimed with the sound of trumpets. They were also used to proclaim fasts, and convocate solemn assemblies; Joel ii. 15, "Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly;" and solemn feasts, Psal. lxxxix. 3; in worship, 2 Chron. v. 12, 13; in the journeying of their camps, Numb. x. 2, for then the cloud that used to be over them removed, Numb. ix. 22; then Moses prayed, Numb. x. 35, and then the trumpet sounded, ver. 5, 6. It was also used to warn the people against the danger of war, Ezek. xxxiii. 3; and in their wars, Josh. vi. 9. Here they blow the trumpet to warn them of the danger, to quicken them up to prepare against it; there was loud sounding, and vehement crying, Arm, arm, arm, and none went out to the battle; they wanted not men, means, munition, horse, chariots, spears; shields they had, but hearts they had not; no courage to fight with their adversaries, to stand for religion, their country, liberty, or lives.

Obs. 1. That when God is wroth, all preparations and attempts are in vain. They blow the trumpet, make ready for war, and none stirs to go forth; and what is the reason? the wrath of God is upon the whole multitude. God was not with them to counsel, to encourage them, to prosper their attempts, and so nothing came of all.

Obs. 2. Human endeavours sink, when they are not seconded by God. Economical and political affairs fall to the earth, when they are not upheld by Heaven; Psal. cxxvii. 1, "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it." It is not man and wife can build up a family without God; this the elders knew that said to Boaz, Ruth iv. 11, "The Lord make the woman that is come into thine house like Rachel and like Leah, which two did build the house of Israel." So, "except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." Let cities, states, kingdoms have many watchmen, let them be faithful and industrious, yet if God watch not more than they do, more than they, all is lost. Cities have been suddenly surprised, kingdoms overrun, notwithstanding all the art, vigilance, and industry of men. It is not the counsils, militia, magistracy, ministry of a city or kingdom that can secure them, if God's wrath be upon them.

2. That it is a dreadful evil when the heart and spirit of a people is taken away. Here was danger calling to arm and go forth; but none went forth, they were heartless, unspirited men.

It is a great mercy, among other necessities to war, to have men of valour; if there be money, arms, skill, men, and not courage, all is nothing. When Goliath defied the armies of Israel, 1 Sam. xvii. 10, 11, they were dismayed, their hearts failed within them; and had not God put courage into David, all Israel had lain under the reproach of one Philistine.

It is observable in Scripture, that in Judah were many valiant men, 2 Sam. xxiv. 9. There were five hundred thousand such in David's days; in Abijah's days there was an army of four hundred thousand valiant chosen men, 2 Chron. xiii. 3; in Asa's days was an army of five hundred and eighty thousand out of Judah and Benjamin, and "all these were mighty men of valour," 2 Chron. xiv. 2; in Ahaz' days were a hundred and twenty thousand valiant men of Judah slain in one day, 2 Chron. xxviii. 6. The men of Judah were famous for their valour, yet now there were no valiant men left, there were none had hearts to go forth and give the enemy battle. The promise was, that one of them "should chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight," Deut. xxxii. 30. The meaning is, they should mightily prevail in battle; this was in case they provoked not God against them. And therefore it follows; "except their Rock had sold them, and the Lord had shut them up;" if it were come to that, then they should be faint-hearted and feeble. And so was it now, God their Rock was against them; he had sold them into the hands of the Chaldeans, and shut up their spirits, and the strong were become as tow, Isa. i. 31. They were heartless, headless, armless, none durst oppose the stout and proud adversary. God hath variety of ways to frustrate the endeavours of men; and one among other, and of the saddest nature, is, to unspirit men. It is a wonderful judgment, when the wisdom of the wise doth perish, when the understanding of the prudent is hid, Isa. xxix. 14. And it is as heavy, strange a judgment, when the mettle and courage of valiant soldiers in time of need is not to be found.

The Germans were a warlike people, and Lavat observes, that after the council of Constance their spirits failed them; there they dealt unfaithfully with Huss, and after, cruelly and shamefully they put him to death; and attempting to bring the Bohemians to the old way of worship, they were easily overcome, and sometimes fled at the sight of their enemies.

Obs. 3. Apprehension of divine wrath discerned and approaching, dispirits strong men. There were without doubt many strong men in Judah as at other times, but they were without spirit. Their sins had stirred up God to bring the northern force upon them, Nebuchadnezzar with all his forces. They were now entering their land, ready to sit down before Jerusalem, and they saw now the sad threats of the prophet's fulfilling, God even fighting against them, and this sunk their guilty hearts; Deut. xxxii. 25, "Terror within shall destroy the young man;" the young men that are full of blood, spirits, lively, even terror within shall destroy them. Their guilt will not only dispirit them, but take away their life; Job xv. 20, "The wicked man travaileth with pain all his days;" he hath prickings, stings within; and ver. 24, "Trouble and anguish shall make him afraid; they shall prevail against him, as a king ready to the battle." There is power in these to destroy a sinner, as in a king armed, attended with a multitude of soldiers, to ruin his wounded, his flying adversaries. Jeremiah knew the power of divine wrath, and therefore prays, chap. xvii. 17, "Be not a terror unto me; thou art my hope in the day of evil:" he feared lest he that was his hope should be his terror. The day of evil awakens sleepy, guilty, dead works, and then God, before trusted in, becomes dreadful. Look well to your hearts and consciences, get off the guilt upon them, and get out the filth in them: Heb. ix. 14, "The blood of Christ doth purge the conscience from dead works;" that is, all sins, and all guilt which works death, and binds over to death. But that is not all, they lie as dead things in the soul, and upon occasion revive, have their resurrection, and slay us anew.

Ver. 15. The sword is without, and the pestilence and the famine within: he that is in the field shall die with the sword; and he that is in the city, famine and pestilence shall devour him.

Of sword, famine, pestilence I have formerly spoken. God hath these judgments in his hand, and can let them out when and where he pleases; and when God's public judgments are abroad, there is no safety for sinners in their cities, or in the fields; God will pursue them though they flee, and slay them though they be never so stout. He will not only scare them with these, but he will destroy them by these.

Ver. 16—19. But they that escape of them shall escape, and shall be on the mountains like doves of the valleys, all of them mourning, every one for his iniquity. All hands shall be feeble, and all knees shall be weak as water. They shall also gird themselves with sackcloth, and horror shall cover them; and shame shall be upon all faces, and baldness upon all their heads. They shall cast their silver in the streets, and their gold shall be removed: their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord: they shall not satisfy their souls, neither fill their bowels: because it is the stumblingblock of their iniquity.

Sundry calamities are set down before, he persists in the addition of more; every verse hath its peculiar calamity. In ver. 16, is contained their flight; in ver. 17, their feebleness; in ver. 18, their sorrow and shame, and in ver. 19, the insufficiency of the creature to help in the time of trouble.

I begin with ver. 16. It is misery to be in danger, especially of life, and to be put to flee for it, as these were, when the enemy came to their walls and gates. Some fled and escaped "to the mountains." The original is, their escapers shall escape: those I have appointed to famine, sword, pestilence, shall be consumed by them; but those I have appointed to escape, they shall escape, and get to the mountains, where they "shall be like doves of the valleys."

The Hebrew root, whence doves ינה כיוני comes, signifies to prey upon, to oppress, circumvent, make sad; and the dove is subject to prey, oppression, circumvention, and mourning, as much as any fowl.

Hence two things in the dove are aimed at, fearfulness and mourning.

First, the dove is a trembling, fearful creature, any little noise makes it fly: Hos. xi. 11, "They shall tremble as a dove." The sight of the hawk, the noise of her bells, or wings, doth multiply fears in a dove: and so should those Jews that escaped be full of fears, fly to rocks and mountains as doves, for fear of hawks, and dare not stir. They should hide themselves there, and be afraid to speak, to groan out their grief, lest they should be discovered, and die for it.

Second, it is a mourning creature; Isa. xxxviii. 14, "I did mourn as a dove," saith Hezekiah. And Isa. lix. 11, "We mourn sore like doves."

Doves sit solitary, and mourn when they have lost their young, their mates, or are wounded by any means; yea, it is their nature as to tremble, so to mourn. And so should these Jews sit and mourn; they should have no joy of their lives; their losses, the place they should be in, yea, the thought of life, should be matter of mourning unto them.

"Of the valleys." There were not doves of mountains, and doves of valleys; but they are so called, either because they did oft feed and appear there; as fowls of the air are so called, because they are oft in the air, or for that being pursued by fowlers, they fled to the valleys and hid themselves there, not enduring to be in open places; or because they did breed in the holes of rocks, which were towards the valleys. In Job you have mention of "cliffs of the valleys," Job xxx. 6. Or because they mourned in the valleys, there they made a mourning or doleful noise.

"All of them mourning, every man for his iniquity." Here is the cause of their calamity, viz. "their iniquity;" this was a serpent in the bosom, and gave them no rest. Had there been no enemies at their gates, at their heels, their own sins besieged, pursued them.

Obs. 1. In common calamities, when danger is abroad, those that have escaped, and got hiding places, think not themselves secure. These were in the mountains, in the holes of the rocks, and yet as fearful as doves, trembling that the Babylonians were so nigh, fearing discovery and death every moment. A spirit of fear seizes upon sinners at such times, that imprisons reason, and holds them in bondage.

They are fallen into the hands of divine judgments, which are dreadful; those who were like lions before, were as silly doves, Jer. xlviii. 28.

Obs. 2. That the fruit of sin is sorrow: "all of them mourning, every one for his iniquity." Before they sported in their sins, now they should sigh for them; their consciences were asleep through custom of sinning, God's judgments had now awakened them, and they brought their sins so to mind, that they wept and sorrowed sorely for them. They had gone on in their idolatrous, oppressing, and provoking ways long; they saw no cause to be sorry, all was well with them; but when trouble came, their sins appeared, their souls were sad and filled with apprehensions, that drew bitter tears from them.

What is the fruit of wantonness, whoredom? Prov. v. 11, Solomon tells you that such a sinner "shall mourn at the last, when his flesh and his body are consumed." That of Job is suitable for him; "his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn," chap. xiv. 22. Eve's sin had sorrow, and sorrow multiplied, greatly multiplied, Gen. iii. 16. God told them, Lev. xxvi. 14, 16, that if they sinned they should have "sorrow of heart," and Deut. xxviii. 65, "sorrow of mind." And they had that plentifully: Isa. lxx. 14, "Ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit." Sin causes howling and mourning; David, when he had sinned, it made him to roar, Psal. xxxii. 3: only his terrors were penitential, these unprofitable; showed their misery, but made no way to mercy.

This sorrow was the fruit of sin: godly sorrow is the fruit of the Spirit: that looks at the punishment, which removed, the guilt and filth of sin still abides;

this at the sin, and would have that destroyed, though the judgments never be taken away, Hos. xiv. 2.

This changes the mind, not that it is godly sorrow; the prophet's sermons could not draw tears from them while there was hope, God's judgments did it when it was too late.

Ver. 17. "All hands shall be feeble." Fear made them flee, and fear made them feeble. Where great fear falls upon any, there the hands grow weak, and are not able to do their office; the spirits retire to the heart, to relieve that, lest life should fail, and thereupon the hands become weak. The trumpet was blown, all called upon to make ready, but none went out to battle: and why? their hands were feeble, they could not hold and handle their weapons to defend themselves; their knees were feeble, they could not flee to save themselves.

There is a treble feebleness of hands: one natural, as when a man hath naturally a weakness, lameness in his hands. There is one accidental, as when a man's hands are by some stroke, fall, wound, made feeble; but such feebleness is not here meant. And there is a metaphorical weakness, which ariseth from despondency of mind through fear and fearful apprehensions.

In this sense we are to take it, and so it is oft used in the Scripture, Jer. vi. 24, the report of the northern forces was come to them, and what then? "Our hands wax feeble: anguish hath taken hold of us." Jer. l. 43; 2 Sam. iv. 1; Job iv. 3; Ezek. xxi. 7; Isa. xlii. 7; Jer. xlvii. 3; in all these places is mention of weakness, feebleness of hands, which is to be taken in the metaphorical sense: their hands were not able to do what they should, and formerly could have done, and here, when they had most need of their hands, they had least use of them,

"All knees shall be weak as water." These words are in chap. xxi. 7. The same they are here; and the original is, shall go into water, or flow with water.

Some interpret it of sweating; but in great pains, not in fears, do the lower parts of the body sweat. I take the sense to lie in this, That their knees should be as water, which is a fluid and weak thing: their legs should not be serviceable unto them. It is a proverbial kind of speech, "weak as water," and when applying to any thing, or part of man, sets out great feebleness; they would attempt to flee, and fear would loosen the joints of their knees, so that they should have no strength, nor stand them in any stead; and it was not the knees of some few or aged, but all knees, even of youth, and the stoutest ones; Isa. xl. 30, "Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall." Their knees and legs should fail them; as waters are driven this way and that way with the winds, so should they with their fears.

Obs. 1. That human strength is not to be confided in. Let a state have multitudes of men, and all those men of arms, men of legs, of great strength; in a time of most need and use of such, their hands may become feeble, and their knees be weak as water, they may prove unserviceable altogether to the state where they are. Strong men have fainted in the day of adversity, been without hearts when they have come to battle; Isa. xxxiii. 7, "Their valiant ones shall cry without: the ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly." When Sennacherib was before Jerusalem, their valiant ones were so afraid that they cried: the Hebrew word some interpret, their seers, that is, their prophets; others, their soldiers that were their watchmen; their hearts melted, and tears flowed from them: and those that were sent to treat with Sennacherib, now when they should have been fullest of courage, they had none; they made good what Abishai said, 2 Sam. xvii. 10, "He that is valiant, whose heart is as the heart of a lion, shall utterly melt;" their hearts melted away, and their hands became feeble, and knees weak. God cares not for the arms or legs of men, Psal. xxxvii. 17; cxlvii. 10. He brake the arms of Pharaoh, and caused "the sword to fall out of his hands," Ezek. xxx. 22. He loosed the joints of Belshazzar's loins, and made his knees war one against the other, Dan. v. 6. So Nineveh's heart melted, and knees knocked together, Nah. ii. 10. Let none confide in an arm of flesh; see Jer. xv. 5; and Isa. xxxi. 1—3, they sent to Egypt for help, and relied too much upon horses, men, chariots, because they were many and strong, and looked not to the Holy One of Israel; whereupon the Lord tells them, that "the Egyptians are men, and not God, and their horse's flesh, and not spirit;" and when he should stretch out his hand, both the helper and helped should fall and fail together.

Obs. 2. That true valour lies not in a natural boldness, or habits gotten by man's industry. We conceive that if men have spirits, and, by their actions and experience in the world, have acquired strength to their spirits, so that they are resolute, fearless, we conceive they are the valiant men; but we are mistaken. Natural abilities, and habits purchased with our endeavours, are quickly separated. Their hands were feeble, their knees weak, because their hearts and all in them failed. Kings, chief captains, great, rich, mighty men, feared and hid themselves in dens and rocks, Rev. vi. 15. True valour is the gift of God; that greatens men's spirits, and lifts them up above fears. Moses feared not the wrath of the king, Heb. xi. 27; he had more than his natural courage, or acquired habits, he had a principle of grace given, continued, preserved, and that made him truly valorous.

The truest valour is ever in a gracious heart that fears God, and so all other fears are swallowed up; that enjoys God, and hath divine influence to uphold it in all conditions. Josh. i. 5, 6, 9, "I will be with thee; be strong and of a good courage, be not afraid nor dismayed, for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest;" his courage and strength, was upon divine promise and presence.

Ver. 18. "They shall also gird themselves with sackcloth." The first mention we have of sackcloth is in Gen. xxxvii. 34, where Jacob, upon the misapprehension of Joseph's death, put sackcloth upon his loins. This was a mark of great misery and sorrow. When the famine was in Samaria, and death ready to eat up them that had nothing to eat, "the king had sackcloth within upon his flesh;" under his royal garments, next his skin, was coarse rough sackcloth, 2 Kings vi. 30. When Ahab, king of Israel, had beaten and sore distressed the Assyrians, they put on sackcloth, and sued to him for pardon and the life of Benhadad, 1 Kings xx. 32; testifying hereby their misery, sorrow, humility. And it is sometimes joined with other signs of sorrow: as Esth. iv. 1, when the writings were sealed and sent out by Haman for destruction of the Jews, "Mordecai rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth with ashes," that is, he sprinkled the sackcloth with ashes, and then put it on. So in Neh. ix. 1, you have sackcloth and earth joined together; this was at a fast, and they were tokens of godly sorrow: they professed they were not worthy of any good clothes, sackcloth was too good for them, only somewhat they must have to cover their nakedness: and they had earth upon them, intimating they deserved to be buried alive. But frequently sackcloth set out their common sorrow for calamities, and so it is here; they should be miserable, mourning people, not for a few days, but many years. If they escaped death, thy y should be girt with sackcloth. Job xvi. 15, "I have sewed sackcloth upon my skin;" there was now no removing of it, he continued in his doleful condition; God's hand was upon him, and his sackcloth abode with him as a thing sewed to him.

"Horror shall cover them." The word for "horror" notes great trembling that comes from fear; Job xxi. 6, "I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold of my flesh." It is such trembling as in earthquakes; Job ix. 6, "Which shaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble." Such a horror or trembling should be upon them as should hazard their beings, lives, wits. Isa. xxi. 4, "Fearfulness affrighted me;" it is the same word with our prophet's; and affrightments are dangerous, and sometimes deadly, and probably the meaning here for it was such horror as should cover them, oppress them, and hide them from the living.

But there is another sense of the word "cover." "Horror shall cover them," that is, compass them about; so the word "cover" is used, Job xxi. 26, "The worms shall cover them;" and Psal. cix. 29, "Let them cover themselves with their own confusion." Psal. xlv. 19; Lam. iii. 43, in these places covering notes compassing; and Jonah ii. 5, compassing is the same with covering; "The waters compassed me about," they did compass and cover him. And here horror did cover them as a garment, and beset, compass every part of them; neither hands, arms, body, nor legs were free.

"Shame shall be upon all faces." Shame is the blushing of the face upon the sight, hearing, apprehension, or doing of something unseemly, dishonest, or filthy, as Rom. vi. 21; Luke xiv. 9; 2 Cor. iv. 2; Phil. iii. 19. Shame notes two things:

1. Disappointment. Psal. cxix. 16, "Let me not be ashamed of my hope."

2. Confusion, Psalm xxxv. 4. Job vi. 20, "They were confounded because they had hoped; they came thither, and were ashamed." And here disappointment and confusion were upon their faces, their expectations were disappointed, and hopes confounded.

Shame was upon their faces, that they could not look up to God whom they had provoked against them. This shaming of sinners is expressed in the word divers ways: "They shall be clothed with shame," Job viii. 22; that is the garment they shall wear: be put to shame, Psal. xlv. 7; brought to shame, Psal. lxxi. 24; have their faces filled with shame, Psal. lxxxiii. 16; lie down in shame, Jer. iii. 25; be covered with shame, Obad. 10; bear it, Ezek. xvi. 52; be consumed with it, Jer. xx. 18. All these were made good upon these Jews; they were clothed, put to, and filled with shame; they bare their shame upon their faces, lay down in it, were covered and consumed with it.

"Baldness upon all their heads." Their miseries and griefs should be so great, that they should pluck off the hair of their heads and beards, though it were against rule, Deut. xiv. 1. God provided for the comeliness of their heads and faces, yet in their sorrows they would disfigure themselves as the heathens did, and add to their own misery.

They deformed themselves, Jer. xlvii. 5; xlviii. 37; Micah i. 16; Amos viii. 10; Isa. xv. 2. Hair was an ornament, and baldness a reproach; 2 Kings ii. 23, "Go up, thou bald head."

It was said in the 11th verse, there should be no wailing for them, and here is mention of sackcloth and baldness, signs of common and great sorrow. There was no public wailing and solemn mourning at their burials; but privately they bewailed their friends, mourned for the evils upon them; or some few did appear that were not considerable.

It is questionable whether baldness were upon all their heads; did all tear off their hair, and make themselves unsightly? Doubtless many of them did, and all had cause to do it. The prophet speaks not what every one should do, but what their condition required; their calamity was such as called for all signs of sorrow, sackcloth, horror, shame, baldness.

Obs. The equity of God's dealing with sinners. He punisheth them in the thing wherein they have sinned; they had ruffled it in their silks, scarlets, and fine lincn; now God brought them to sackcloth made of hair and coarse materials, that was as harsh to their flesh as the other was delightful. The scarlet men were brought to dunghills, Lam. iv. 5; they that were confident themselves of their strength, now trembled; they that were proud of their beauty, had haughty eyes, painted faces, &c. now were filled with shame; and they that gloried in their hair, now were made bald; here was the just hand of God. Isa. iii. 24, "Instead of sweet smell there shall be stink; and instead of a girdle a rent; and instead of well-set hair baldness; and instead of a stomacher a girding of sackcloth; and burning instead of beauty." Wherein they sinned, there God smote them. Psal. lxxviii. 21, "God shall wound the hairy scalp of such an one as goeth on still in his trespasses." They gloried in their hair then, as too many do now, and God would wound them in that, their hairy scalps should suffer; the Hebrew is, the crowns of hair walking in its own wickedness. The hair holds forth the pride and vanity of the master thereof, and God would wound it, and the head that bare it. The word for wound, Museu, and Moller, interpret, shall make bloody, or dip in blood; they have oft powdered their hair, to dry and sweeten it, and God would dye it in their own blood.

Ver. 19. "They shall cast their silver in the streets." That which had been much desired, was gotten with great pains, they should throw into the open streets for any to take up. They were flying for their lives, and their bags of silver were burdensome; or they were faint with fainting, so that silver would not relieve, or purchase relief for them; and therefore they must throw it into the streets as dung and filth: there was an insufficiency in the creature to advantage them in this great distress, and thereupon despairing, they threw away that they had formerly so prized, so laboured for, and safely kept a long time. When seamen are in storms and hazard of their lives, they will throw overboard things precious; and this was the case here. By silver and gold understand not only coin, but plate, and all things made thereof.

"Their gold shall be removed." The Hebrew is, for a removal, the Chaldeans shall take it away and carry it into Babylon. לנהר נדה off; so much the original root signifies, to carry it far from the place where it was: they had hoarded it up in Zion, and now it should be carried to Babylon. The Vulgate reads it, their gold shall be for a dunghill, their great In sterquilium.

heaps of gold made dunghills; and the word doth something countenance it, which signifies separation on account of pollution. Their gold was the gold of their covetousness and oppression, polluted with idolatry, and so matter fit to be separated from them to the dunghill: that which had lain so long by them, and was thought should never be stirred, that shall be for removal; either themselves shall throw it out upon, or hide it in the earth, or dunghill, or the barbarous enemies shall carry it into far countries.

"Their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them." They had conceits of and confidence in their riches, that they would benefit them one way or other: if Chaldeans came, they would hire them to be gone; if they took the city, they would buy out their lives and liberties; they dreamed that money could do any thing with any sort of men, but it was otherwise. If by gold and silver we understand their gold and silver gods, they hoped for help from them; but they being without life, had neither counsel, power, nor any blessing for them.

"They shall not satisfy their souls, neither fill their bowels." Such shall be the famine and want of bread, that all their wealth shall not purchase bread enough to relieve and satisfy them; though they have houses full of all wealth, yet their bellies shall have want, and souls faint for hunger. Soul here is put for the appetitive virtue, as in Matt. vi. 25, "Take no care for the life, what ye shall eat or drink;" the word is, for the soul, that is, for the appetite, God will provide. Here they took care for their bellies and appetites, and had little or nothing.

"Because it is the stumblingblock of their iniquity." They had no use or benefit of their estates, when they had most need of them; and why? here is the cause, they were the stumblingblocks of their iniquity. By iniquity, some expositors understand punishment; and then the sense is, that their silver and gold were the occasion of these sad judgments which fell upon them: their wars, firing of the city and temple, and their leading into captivity. The former translation hath it, "For this ruin is for their iniquity;" it renders stumblingblock ruin, and shows the cause, "it is for their iniquity," and so iniquity is taken properly for sin, not punishment. They had sinned, and this ruin or judgment of casting away their silver and gold, of finding no help, of being hungry and unsatisfied, was upon them for their sin.

This sense is truth; but the Hebrew being thus, because it hath been the stumblingblock of your iniquity, it leads to this sense, that their wealth was the matter and occasion of their sin; their silver, gold, and great estates occasioned them to sin more fully and more foully, and therefore these judgments came upon them; their estates bred their sins, and brought their judgments.

That wealth is the occasion and fuel of sin appears thus: Rich men in Scripture are set out as apt to trust in their estates, to be high-minded, 1 Tim. vi. 17; to glory in what they have, Jer. ix. 23. They are liberal to their own backs and bellies, but hard-hearted to the poor, Luke xvi. 19, 20, &c. They answer roughly, Prov. xviii. 23. They scorn others, Psal. cxliii. 4. They are covetous, deceitful, having treasures of wickedness in their houses, Micah vi. 10. They oppress the poor, corrupt justice, and fill all with violence, ver. 12. They keep back the wages of servants and labourers: they live in pleasures, wantonly, securely, James v. 4, 5. They little mind Christ and his ways, John vii. 48; Matt. xix. 23, 24; when Christ calls, they have their yokes of oxen, which draw them so fast from Christ, that all his sweet invitations prevail not. They are prone to, and prodigal in, false, idolatrous worship, Isa. xlii. 6. What wickedness doth not wealth prompt men unto? Jer. v. 27, 28, "They are waxen rich," and what then? "they are waxen fat, and shine," their faces, their apparel glitters; but it follows, "they overpass the deeds of the wicked;" the richer they are, the worse they do; their riches are fuel to their lusts, and cause them to act with more heat and strength. Hence Christ calls them unrighteous mammon, Luke xvi. 9, 13. Riches are men's mammons, gods that open the door wide for, and strongly entice to, unrighteous and wicked things; therefore wealth is called wickedness, Psal. lii. 7; speaking of a wicked rich man, "he strengthened himself in his wickedness." In the margin, it is substance, and notes wealth gotten by a man's labour. Wealth gotten most honestly hath somewhat in it, which, through our weakness and corruption, may draw us to wickedness, and therefore here it falls under that notion.

Obs. 1. That the creatures which promise the most help, and raise expectation highest in times of trouble, can do little or nothing for us. "Their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord;" things precious and powerful can do nothing for the owners in the day of distress, Zeph. i. 18; Prov. xi. 4. They cannot deliver, they cannot profit in the day of man's jealousy; wealth will not profit them, much less in the day of God's wrath.

But it is said, Eccles. vii. 12, "Money is a defence;" and chap. x. 19, "Money answereth all things." Money may defend from poverty, human wrongs, but not from sickness, death, or the wrath of God; and it may answer for all our debts to men, but not for our debts to Heaven. It is not the fruit of your body can answer for the sin of your soul, Micah vi. 7, much less the fruit of your purse.

The profit men labour for in their health, will not profit in the days of God's wrath. Judas's thirty pieces could not still one throb of his conscience. Herod's royal robes, sceptre, crown, greatness, could not protect him from the teeth of a few feeble worms; nor all Jerusalem's gold and silver, the Jews from the fury of the Medes, Isa. xlii. 17, 18. It is not all your wealth can keep the plague out of the city, or secure your lives when it is come.

In a famine, is not one loaf of bread more satisfying than all the gold of the earth? Silver and gold are not eatable; green herbs are more serviceable in such a case than they are. Let the counsel of God's Spirit therefore prevail with you, Prov. xxiii. 4, 5, "Labour not to be rich; cease from thine own wisdom. Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not? for riches certainly make themselves wings, they fly away as an eagle toward heaven." Here are three arguments against it.

- (1.) It is human wisdom, not divine, to do so.
- (2.) They are inconsiderable things, they have no being in them, they are not sufficient to help and deliver you in your straits.
- (3.) They are uncertain things, they make wings to themselves and fly away; they are like birds in the nest, that seem to dwell there, but presently their feathers grow, and they are gone; and their wings are eagle's wings, they fly swiftly, strongly from you—a fire in a night, &c. Therefore set not your hearts to get riches; or if they be gotten, set not your hearts upon them.

Obs. 2. That wealth in the day of God's wrath, when he deals with sinners, is so far from advantaging, that it prejudiceeth and wounds. "They shall cast their silver in the streets," &c.; they found it did them hurt. In prosperity they plead prerogative, and must have their will; and in adversity they have their prerogative above others, but it is a prerogative of woes. If any suffer, go into captivity, they do it first, Amos vi. 7. Nebuzaradan took the rich and fat ones with him, and left the poor that had nothing, to dress the vineyards, and possess the land, Jer. xxxix. 10; these had the privilege of safety, when others had a prerogative of misery. The wealth of these men did multiply their woes.

- (1.) One wound to them was, that they had not believed the prophet's threatening the ruin of their estates.

(2.) That they had gotten their estates by unlawful means.

(3.) That they had done little good, but much hurt by them.

(4.) That they were disappointed now, and could not bribe the Chaldeans with all their estates to spare them; they regarded not gold, Isa. xiii. 17. Hence the Chaldee renders that in Prov. xi. 4, "Riches profit not," a lie profits not. Riches are lying and deceitful things, they disappoint, and this wounded them.

(5.) They were so smitten with fear, distraction, and blindness, that they saw not what to do with their wealth, but threw it away; they do not carry it away.

(6.) That what they had laboured hard for, kept with difficulty, prized so high, must now in a moment be parted with and thrown away.

(7.) That all opportunities were now lost of doing good to their friends or others with their estates.

(8.) That they should be exposed to more shame, scorn, misery, and be more sensible of the same, than those that never had any estates; like one that hath warm clothes, and being stripped of them, is more affected with the cold than beggars that feel it every day.

(9.) That they had not sought the eternal good of their souls with their estates, but sinned with them, and made way for a dreadful account.

(10.) And lastly, that their lives were in the greater danger the more wealthy they were. Riches invite enemies to plunder, Jer. xlix. 31. Fat cattle are nearest the slaughter: wealthy men are called fat men, they are filled and fatted with their great estates, and the wrath of God came first upon them, Psa. lxxviii. 31; Judg. iii. 29. It was their gold that caused the Jews' bellies to be ripped, when the Romans took Jerusalem.

Obs. 3. Note here the folly of covetousness; men tainted with that sin lay up wealth for they know not whom, for their enemies. The Jews were a covetous people, Micah ii. 2; Isa. lvii. 17. They were generally given to covetousness, even great and small, Jer. vi. 13; viii. 10. Their eyes and hearts were for nought but covetousness, Jer. xxii. 17; wealth was the only object of their eyes, and idol of their hearts. They had treasures, but God could give them away to spoilers, Jer. xv. 13; yea, "all their treasures," Jer. xvii. 3. Little did these covetous Jews think that the Babylonians should be enriched with their labours, wealth, and treasures: they had vexed their heads, hearts, and hands to get houses and vineyards, banks of silver and gold, and now mere strangers, men their souls hated, must possess their desirable things, and fill their pockets with their treasures. This misery is upon all men, that they cannot foresee who shall enjoy what they get; and therefore it should prevail with men to labour less for the creature, seeing they work for they know not whom; it may be a Babylonian, some bloody cavalier, idolatrous papist, or bitter enemy to God and his saints, some one he never saw, exchanged a word with, had any reference unto; and what thou hast been twenty or thirty years in gathering, he shall possess in one hour. David, Psal. xxxix. 6, brands this practice with vanity and disquietment of spirit: "Surely every man disquiets himself in vain;" and why? "He heareth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them," who shall be owner and take them into his custody. Solomon upon this ground hated his labour in pursuit of the creature, because he knew not whether the man that came after him should be a wise man or a fool, Eccl. ii. 18, 19. You know neither the man nor his qualities who shall come after you, and why will you disquiet yourselves for you know not whom, wise men or fools, saints or devils? You will say it is for your children. If so, they are either godly or ungodly; if godly, they have wealth enough, God is their portion, he will bless their endeavours, and provide sufficiencies; if ungodly, a little is enough, if not too much for them. But you are not sure to leave your estates to your children, nor to keep them yourselves; remember thieves and robbers are in the land, and if you labour all day for thieves at night, what folly will this be!

Obs. 4. Abuse of our estates defiles them, and brings the wrath of God upon them. Their silver and gold they had hoarded up and confided in, maintained their pride, lusts, and idolatry with, that must be separated as an unclean thing. Lev. xiv. 55, the leprosy defiled garments, houses; and sin defiles persons, whole estates. When men divert their estates otherwise and to other ends than God hath appointed them, they wrong the creature, imbondage it to their own lusts; they defile it, and bring the curse of God upon it. Isa. xxiv. 5, 6, "The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate;" their sin defiled the land and fruit of it, and brought the curse of God upon all. When Adam and Eve put the fruit of the tree to another use than God appointed, they then brought the curse upon themselves and the whole earth, Jer. xv. 13, "Thy substance and thy treasures will I give to the spoil, and that for all thy sins." If you would not have your substance defiled and cursed, take heed of abusing it.

(1.) Acknowledge all you have to be the Lord's. You are stewards, not owners; Hos. ii. 9, God calls it his corn and wine, &c. Not only receive them as from God, but acknowledge them to be the Lord's.

(2.) Labour to see much of God in your estates. Most look at the outside, the glass, the galley-pot, not at what is within. God is in the creatures, Rom. i. 20.

(3.) Make use of all truths you hear about the insufficiency and emptiness of the creatures: say, Here is much silver, gold, bread, but I live not by these, but the blessing of God; these are nothing without him.

(4.) Work up your hearts nearer to God by them. Estates should be as ladders and mountains; when you are on them you go up towards heaven, and when at the top you are nearest heaven.

(5.) Have your eyes ever upon something better than your estates, unto which make your estates serviceable.

(6.) Lay out your estates for God, his worship, cause, the public, the spiritual good of your families and friends, and relief of the poor. It is Christ's direction, Lay not up treasures, but lay out; give and it shall be given you, &c.

(7.) Meditate oft upon that scripture, Come, "give account of thy stewardship," Luke xvi. 2, as you do of your silver and gold.

Ver. 20—22. As for the beauty of his ornament, he set it in majesty; but they made the images of their abominations and of their detestable things therein; therefore have I set it far from them. And I will give it into the hands of the strangers for a prey, and to the wicked of the earth for a spoil; and they shall pollute it. My face will I turn also from them, and they shall pollute my secret place: for the robbers shall enter into it, and defile it.

In these verses comes the temple into consideration, and the calamity which befell them in regard thereof, with the cause of it. The temple here is described,

I. By its appellation; it is "his ornament."

II. By its qualification; it is beautiful.

III. From its end, set for majesty; or from the manner, set in majesty.

IV. The author; "He set it."

V. The calamities which befell it; and these are,

1. Rejection, or separation of it; "I have set it far from them."

2. Tradition of it into hands of others: and they are set out to be,

(1.) "Strangers."

(2.) "The wicked of the earth," ver. 21.

3. Depredation; it shall be "for a prey," and "for a spoil," ver. 21.

4. Profanation; "they shall pollute it," ver. 21.

5. Aversion, and that of the face of God; ver. 22. "My face will I turn also from them."

6. Contamination of the holy of holies; "They shall pollute my secret place."

The cause of all these evils is set down in ver. 20, "They made the images of their abominations and of their detestable things therein."

"As for the beauty of his ornament, he set it in majesty." Some expositors interpret these words, not of the temple, but of their silver, gold, jewels, and such like precious things, with which they were decked as a bride, for which they should have been dutiful and thankful; but they abused all to idolatry, pride, and service of their lusts, and so provoked God to take all from them.

Others expound them only of the temple, to whose judgment I incline, and that upon these considerations:

First, it is said, "He set it," which takes off the connexion of this verse with the former. Had it been meant of their gold, silver, &c. it should have run plurally, They cast their silver in the streets, they shall not be satisfied; and so, they set the beauty of their ornament for pride; whereas it is "he set," not the people, but God.

And if it be urged, He set their gold, silver, the beauty and ornament of his people, in majesty, or for excellency, it suits not with what follows, "they made images of their abominations and detestable things therein;" it should have been thereof, if that had been the sense; but it is therein, agreeable with the original, and so choice expositors render it.

Secondly, those words in the 21st verse refer more properly to the temple, than to their silver and gold; holy things are subject to pollution more than common. Some, to help this, interpret the word for pollute, to kill, and make the sense, they shall kill ^{אֶת} their captives; and so refer it to the men, not their wealth; or if to wealth, then they render it vilify, they shall vilify their silver and gold which they have made their beauty and ornament. But I see no cause why the sense of the word should be changed in this verse, when it is taken for polluting in the next verse, "they shall pollute my secret place."

Thirdly, in this 22nd verse, he speaks of the secret place, the holy of holies, which was in the temple; and hence to me is an argument that he spake of the temple.

"The beauty of his ornament." These words are a metaphorical description of the temple, whereby it is likened to a beautiful garment which becomes the party that wears it, or to any precious thing that adorns the body. Exod. xxxiii. 4, "No man did put on him his ornaments;" that is, his chief apparel, and other precious things which might adorn the body. Ornaments were choice things, 2 Sam. i. 24; Judg. viii. 26; the Hebrew word signifies choice robes, silken veils, costly chains, crowns, &c. Whatever excellency may be fastened to the body or garments of a man, such an ornament was the temple, to God, and to the Jews.

First, to God. It was his "dwelling-place," Psal. lxxiv. 7, and no mean one. Isa. lx. 7, he calls it the "house of his glory;" so great was the glory of it, that in comparison thereof the second temple was nothing, Hag. ii. 3. There multitudes of his people met, prayed; whence it is named "an house of prayer," Isa. lvi. 7. There they sang praises, Psal. cl. 1; and God there "inhabited the praises of Israel," Psal. xxii. 3. There they sacrificed, 2 Chron. xi. 16, and it was an house of sacrifice. Thither did kings bring presents unto the Lord, Psal. lxxviii. 29; kings did honour the place, and garnished the temple with great gifts: Selencus king of Asia, of his own revenues, bare all the costs belonging to the service of the sacrifice, 2 Macc. iii. 2, 3. By his worship there he was distinguished and made known from all false gods. There the saints desired to dwell, to behold the Lord's beauty, Psal. xxvii. 4, and see his power, Psal. lxxiii. 2. There "every one speaks of his glory," Psal. xxix. 9. The earth is full of the glory of God, but the temple is fuller; there is the chief and brightest glory, glory that affects every eye, heart, and tongue. All these are ornaments and honour to God.

Secondly, to the Jews. If we should look at the structure only, it was one of the stateliest and most magnificent buildings that ever the world had; there were one hundred and fifty thousand workmen employed about it, 1 Kings v. 15, 16, and seven years in building, chap. vi. 37, 38. The apostles wondered at the goodly stones and glory of the second temple, Luke xxi. 5, which were inconsiderable to those of the first, Hag. ii. 3. In this respect it was a great ornament to Jerusalem and the Jewish nation. But it was "the house of the great God," Ezra v. 8; the house "called by his name," Jer. vii. 11. There he made his people joyful, and accepted their offerings, Isa. lvi. 7. There they had "a fatness," Psal. xxxvi. 8, "loving-kindness," Psal. xlviii. 9, help in their distresses, Psal. xx. 2. In Ezek. xxiv. 21, 25, you have these expressions: it is called "their strength," "the excellency of their strength," "the desire of their eyes," "that which their souls pitied," (lest it should be destroyed,) "their glory," "the joy of their glory;" all which show the temple was an ornament to them.

"The beauty of his ornament." The temple was beautiful, Isa. lxix. 11, "Our holy and beautiful house is burned up with fire." There was a material beauty in it, as you may read, 1 Kings vi. and 2 Chron. iii. 6, 8, "He garnished the house with precious stones for beauty; and the gold was gold of Parvaim: and he overlaid it with fine gold," which made it glorious. There was a spiritual beauty in it; Psal. xevi. 6, "Strength and beauty are in his sanctuary;" there was "the beauty of holiness," Psal. xxix. 2; there was beautiful order, beautiful worship, beautiful ordinances, and a mostauteous God, Psal. xxvii. 4, whose glorious presence and lovely truths drew the eyes and hearts of the godly there: Isa. ii. 3, "Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and he will teach us of his ways." Hence Zion the mount, where the temple was, is called "the perfection," or universality, "of beauty," Psal. l. 2: there was all beauty.

"He set it in majesty." In magnificent pomp; or for majesty, glory, and excellency. God set the temple among the Jews, that it might be their glory, excellency, and make them glorious and excellent among all nations. Isa. lx. 15, is the same word, and it is rendered "an excellency;" it might well be, for so it is rendered thrice in one verse, Exod. xxviii. 2, "Thou shalt make holy garments for Aaron, for glory and for beauty."

Or, he set it into majesty, into excellency. The majesty and excellency of the temple was not only the stateliness of the structure, the strength, and situation of it on a hill; but in that it was sanctified and bare God's name, 1 Kings ix. 7; viii. 29. It was a type of Christ and the church, a part of their worship; in it their gifts and sacrifices were sanctified and accepted, Matt. xxiii. 19; "Fire came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifice," 2 Chron. vii. 1. There was the "ark of the covenant," a sign of God's presence, 1 Kings viii. 6. In it were glorious visions of God, Isa. vi. 1. It was filled with glory, 2 Chron. vii. 1. The people prayed towards the same, 1 Kings viii. 38. The eye and heart of God was there perpetually, 1 Kings ix. 3. It was "exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries," 1 Chron. xxii. 5. In these and such things consisted the majesty, glory, and excellency of the temple; and therefore it is called "their excellency," Ezek. xxiv. 21; "the excellency of Jacob," Amos vi. 8.

Vide Dros. in locum. Some refer it to the holy land, to their own habitations, to the city. If these, any, or all of them were "the excellency of Jacob," much more the temple, Psal. xlvii. 4. The temple and worship of it distinguished them from and made them excel all others.

"But they made the images of their abominations and of their detestable things therein." Here is the cause of all their miseries: God had dealt bountifully with them, set his ornaments amongst them, put glory upon them, and distinguished them from all nations; but they forgot God, proved ungrateful, and polluted their glory, even the temple, with superstition and idolatry. These words, "abominations and detestable things," have been opened before.

"Therefore have I set it far from them." Here is one part of their calamity. God had set the temple amongst them, a divine ornament, for his own honour, their good and glory; but they corrupted themselves, dishonoured God, and defiled his worship, his holy place, with their own inventions, abominations, and detestable things; and "therefore have I set it far from them?" or, as the Hebrew is, I have made it to them an unclean thing, or given it to them for separation: it shall now be for their reproach, rejection, and destruction: it shall be taken from them, and destroyed out of my sight as a polluted thing.

Obs. 1. The chief ornaments and glory of a people are, the ordinances of God, and his presence. The temple where God manifested himself, and the divine ordinances that were to be performed, were their beauty, their glory; Zech. ii. 5, "I will be the glory in the midst of her," meaning Jerusalem. Other things may be some ornament to a people, as riches, peace, liberty; cities well built, peopled, and fortified; arts and sciences, wise counsellors, strong soldiers, just judges, good laws, prudent governors, these adorn a people; but their chief ornament is true religion and the divine presence. The gentiles had those fore-mentioned ornaments; yet, because they had not the true God, and true worship of his, amongst them, they were unlovely, accounted of as dogs, Matt. xv. 26; an unhappy, a hopeless people; Eph. ii. 12, "Without Christ, without God." David tells you what people is happy; even "that people whose God is the Lord." Not those that have a false god and false worship among them; but they who have Jehovah, his temple and ordinances, with them. Moses knew that the presence of God and his ordinances were the honour and chief ornament of a nation, and therefore makes a challenge, Deut. iv. 7, "What nation is there so great, who hath God so nigh unto them as the Lord our God is." God was nigh them in the pillar of fire, in the cloud, in the tabernacle, in the ark, and other ordinances, and no nation under heaven had God so near them, and gloriously amongst them, as the Jews had. No nation, though ever so wise, wealthy, or honourable, had such statutes and righteous judgments as they had. Moses tells God that his presence would be an argument they had found favour in his sight, and were a people "separated from all people on the earth," Exod. xxxiii. 16.

Divine ordinances and God in them is the glory of any people, Jer. ii. 11; Psal. cvi. 20. Therefore when the ark was taken, which was a symbol of God's being amongst them, and before which they worshipped, Phineas's wife said, "The glory is departed from Israel," 1 Sam. iv. 22. But when God manifests his presence with a people, then are they glorious, Isa. lix. 21: he speaks of his covenant with them, and Spirit upon them; and chap. lx. 1, 2, he saith, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. Darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee;" others had darkness, but the people where God and his ways were, had light and glory. When the new Jerusalem comes down from heaven, she is said to have the glory of God, Rev. xxi. 10, 11. Pray that the new Jerusalem may come among us, that so "glory may dwell in our land," Psal. lxxxv. 9.

Obs. 2. It belongs to God to appoint worship, and the beauty of it. He set the ornament and beauty of it; not Moses in the tabernacle, nor Solomon in the temple, might prescribe any substantial or ceremonial worship. Exod. xxxv. 10, "Every wise-hearted among you shall come, and make all that the Lord hath commanded: not what I have commanded, but what the Lord hath commanded: though they were wise, yet they might not do aught after their own hearts or heads, no, not Solomon, the wisest of men: 2 Chron. iii. 3, "He was instructed for the building of the house of God;" the Hebrew is, founded; he had a סמך foundation laid in him by the Spirit of God, before he laid the foundation of the temple, or did any of the work thereof.

What God appoints is an ornament, hath beauty, is for glory; but let men set up aught in the worship of God, it hath no beauty, but blackness, no holiness, but iniquity; and God must be worshipped "in the beauty of holiness," 1 Chron. xvi. 29, not in the blackness of iniquity. Men think that ceremonies do become the worship of God, that pictures, altars, golden vessels do make it glorious; but all is deformity which God hath not set up, and set up for glory.

Obs. 3. The people to whom God vouchsafeth his presence, his ordinances, they are his glory above all others. In 1 Cor. xi. 7, it is said "the woman is the glory of the man," especially when she is adorned with many jewels, and more virtues. The church is compared to a bride, Isa. lxi. 10; lxiii. 5; and when she is decked with God's ordinances, and beautified with the graces of his Spirit, how doth he rejoice over her, delight in her, what a glory is she unto him! The church is God's glory, Isa. iv. 5, as the wife is man's; and being under covert-baron, he will protect her, and esteem her as his glory. Hence he calls his people his peculiar treasure, Exod. xix. 5; his portion, Deut. xxxii. 9; his jewels, Mal. iii. 17; his anointed, Psal. cv. 15; a holy temple, the habitation of God, Eph. ii. 21, 22; the fulness of God, the body of Christ, chap. i. 23. And Christ calls the church his love, his sister, his spouse, a garden enclosed, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed, Cant. iv. 10, 12; the fairest among women, chap. v. 9; fair as the moon, clear as the sun, chap. vi. 10; and pleasant for delights, chap. vii. 6. The church is very beautiful and glorious, "a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of her God," Isa. lxiii. 3. The world hath base and low thoughts of the church and people of God, but they are his glory, and glory in his hand.

Obs. 4. That images in the places of God's worship are unwarrantable and sinful. Here God complains, that they made images, and set them in the temple: the Hebrew signifies an image, פסל shape of things corporeal, or incorporeal, and it is the same with that in Gen. i. 27, "God created man in his own image;" and this word includes all images; 2 Kings xi. 18, they brake Baal's images: be they images of creatures, or Creator, they may not come into the place where God hath set his name, and meets his people. The cherubims were by divine appointment, Exod. xxv. 18, others were forbidden, Exod. xx. 4, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image." The Targum hath the same word which is here; and if no images may be made for holy places and uses, they may not be brought into them, being made.

Protrept. ad Gent. Clemens Alexandrinus calls it a deceitful art to make pictures, and saith we are forbidden to exercise it. The emperor Adrian commanded temples to be made in all cities without images, bare temples without such ornaments; whence came the proverb, Adriani templum, The temple of Adrian. When the gentiles built them bare temples, and when Adrian made such temples, it was conceived they were for Christ: the gentiles demanding of the christians why they had no known images, it was answered, What image shall be made to God, when man himself is God's image. Ambrose saith, Our church knoweth no such thing as pictures. Jerom. upon Ezek. iv. saith, We worship one image only, and that is Christ, the express image of the Father; no other image ought to be in the assemblies but Christ, and what he appoints. It was a canon of the Eliberine council about the time of Concil. Elib. Constantine the Great. It is our mind that pictures ought not to be in the church, lest that which is worshipped should be painted on the walls. There is great danger in them, as you may read at large in the homily of the Peril of Idolatry; and bitter contention they caused among the eastern and western christians heretofore, and still great strife and offence is between papists, Lutherans, and others, about them. The Lord convince all of their unlawfulness, throw out all such abominations and detestable things.

Obs. 5. Such is the corruption of man, that he is ungrateful for, and abusive of, the choicest of mercies. God had set his temple and pure worship amongst them in such beauty, for glory to them, and to himself; but they, forgetting what a high favour this was, instead of honouring God in his temple, and preserving his worship entire and pure, bring in the images of their abominations, their detestable things, and so blemish their beauty, defile their ornament, and stain their glory. It was wicked to corrupt themselves with strange marriages, Ezra. x. 2; by dealing treacherously with their lawful wives, Mal. ii. 15, 16; by making a calf to worship, Exod. xxxii. 7, 8; but worse to bring their detestable things into the temple, into God's presence and ordinances. When they made the calf, Moses was in the mount receiving instructions for worship, yet they had no place fixed for worship, nor the way of worship clearly opened unto them; but when God had set his temple in Zion, they had a fixed place, a settled way of worship, and the most glorious beautiful worship in the world; yet they corrupt themselves herein. The majesty of God's presence there, his glory, his commands did not awe them, they were not content with what his infinite wisdom had prescribed, the abomination and detestableness of their images was not seen; but they being blinded with their own conceits, and hardened with their sins, proceeded to corrupt God's worship. Zephaniah saith of them, that they "corrupted all their doings," chap. iii. 7. Even when they had to do with God in matters of religion and their salvation, even there they were corrupters, "a corrupt spring," Prov. xxv. 26.

Obs. 6. The church's unthankfulness for choice mercies, causeth upbraiding "butts" from God. He set his temple, the greatest ornament and blessing they could have, but they made the images, &c. Nothing exasperates God more than wretched unkindness after great mercies. Psal. cvi. he reckons up God's great mercies to them, and they being ungrateful, ever and anon comes in a "but," ver. 7, 14, 25, 43. He did deliver them, do great things for them; but they provoked him, lusted, murmured. Ingratitude is a kicking the benefactor; Deut. xxxii. 15, "Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked." The Scripture hath observable expressions touching this sin; Deut. xxxii. 6, 7, "Do you thus requite the Lord, O foolish people and unwise? Is not he thy Father that hath bought thee? hath he not made thee and established thee?" How did they requite the Lord? they corrupted and spotted themselves with the sins of the times and places. They were a perverse people towards God, and therefore saith Moses, "Do ye thus requite?" &c. It is folly and madness in you. Isa. v. 2. God repeats the kindnesses vouchsafed the house of Israel; and ver. 3, he calls the "inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah," to judge between him and his vineyard. God refers it to men to judge how kind and bountiful he had been, how base and ungrateful they; and therefore he would break down the wall thereof, and lay it waste. In such a case as this he was willing to be judged by men; they could not but see the great wrong done to God, and justify him in righting himself. Ingratitude makes the author worse, and the Benefactor angry and wary.

Angry; for God denounces six woes against them in the chapter afterwards.

Wary; he would take heed how he bestowed his choice mercies upon such people; others that would be more fruitful and thankful should have them; Matt. xxi. 43, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof;" not their own fruits, but such as Christ and the gospel appointed.

This sin was so prodigious, that Lycurgus would make no law against it; but God hath made a law; Psal. ix. 17, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." Ingratitude is the greatest and worst forgetfulness: Judas forgot the kindness and bounty of Christ, he betrayed him, and therefore was turned into hell.

Ver. 21. "And I will give it into the hands of strangers for a prey," &c. They had sinned shamefully, and God would punish them severely. Strangers, that is, Chaldeans, should come and have temple, city, them, and all they had in their hands; and God, whom they flattered themselves in, thought still to be their friend, their help, even he would give all into their hands.

These Chaldeans he calls the "wicked of the earth." David calls such, "men of the world," Psal. xvii. 14; "men of the earth," Psal. x. 18; that is, base and vile men, as it is in Job: children of base men, viler than the earth, fit for any cruel and bloody designs. The Septuagint hath it, τοῖς λοιποῖς τῆς γῆς, the plagues of the earth.

The king of Babylon and his cursed crew went up and down in the world plundering nations, shaking kingdoms, and laying all waste, Isa. xiv. 16, 17. They were the pests and vipers of the earth, and into their hands must the Jews, God's own people, fall; they must spoil the temple, have all the ornaments, vessels, and treasures in it, all the pictures of silver and gold.

"They shall pollute it." The temple was a holy place, the habitation of the holy God, had in much reverence by all sorts of people; but now they should see it not regarded as a thing consecrated to God; now heathens, unreinforced ones, should enter it, which was against law, Ezek. xlv. 7. Now their blood should be spilt in it, now it should be made a prison, a stews, the Jews had polluted it with images, and these barbarians should pollute it many other ways.

Obs. 1. The abuse of spiritual mercies causeth God to take them away. Jer. xi. 15, their lewdness caused the holy flesh to pass from them: they had the temple, the beauty and worship of it for their glory, to make them glorious within, as well as glorious without; but they abused their mercies, polluted God's ordinances, and therefore he removed the temple far from them.

He took it away. The Lord had set his name at Shiloh, pitched his tabernacle there, Josh. xviii. 1; and they abused his name and worship, as you may see, Psal. lxxviii. 58: then "he was wroth, and greatly abhorred Israel: he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, and delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand," ver. 59—61; which some interpret of the ark taken by the Philistines, 1 Sam. iv. 11. And in Jer. vii: when they lived loosely, and blessed themselves with their carnal confidence in the temple, and worship of it, ver. 4. 9—11. God sends them to Shiloh, and bids them search and see what he did there for the wickedness of his people, and threatens to do so by them, even destroy their temple, worship, them and their seed. They sinned in special things, and God punished them in that wherein they sinned: they pollute the temple, and God causes the Chaldeans to pollute it; they confide in the temple, and God lays it waste: they make an idol of it, and set it near their hearts, and God removes it far off: they look upon it as clean, as their glory, and God removes it as vomit, as a polluted, loathsome thing.

Obs. 2. It is a dreadful thing when God gives up a church, a state, either or both, to the wills of wicked men.

Ver. 21. "I will give it into the hands," &c. I have set it far from them. If evil come to the gates of Jerusalem, and doors of the temple, it is from the Lord, Micah i. 12; and it is very grievous when God judges kingdoms and churches.

1. They fall into the hands of men, strangers they know not, the wicked of the earth, such as neither fear God nor regard men, bulls, lions, dogs, Psal. xxii. 12, 13, 16.

2. They are for a prey and spoil; their names, estates, habitations, chastity, children, limbs, consciences, lives, are preyed upon. They "eat up God's people as they eat bread," Psal. xiv. 4; they make them "meat unto the fowls of heaven, and beasts of the earth;" they crush their bones, and shed their blood like water, Psal. lxxix. 2, 3.

3. Profaning and polluting of holy things. "They shall pollute it." God's holy name is blasphemed; Psal. lxxix. 10, "Where is their God?" why doth he not now help them? they have prayed, fasted, hoped in him, made their boast of him, why comes he not to help them? All holy things are defiled, and therefore Asaph, in Psal. lxxix. 1, made upon the destruction of Jerusalem, cries out, "O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance; thy holy temple have they defiled." This came first, and struck deepest into the heart of this holy man, that heathenish, idolatrous, bloody, profane persons should come and pollute the holy ordinances of God. The church laments this as a dreadful evil; Lam. i. 10, "The adversary hath spread out his hand upon all her pleasant things; for she hath seen that the heathen entered into her sanctuary, whom thou didst command that they should not enter into thy congregation."

4. Removal of all true worship, divine ordinances. "I will set it far from them." Now they should be without God, the means to know him, and way to worship him; now God would have no oblation, incense, new moons, sabbaths, solemn feasts, or any worship at Jerusalem; there only was he known, worshipped; and now temple, ordinances, and all must down, be taken away, and God be unknown, unworshipped in the world; no public place for him left. Isaiah, foreseeing this, saith, chap. xlii. 22, "This is a people robbed and spoiled;" and hereupon having a special query to make, he calls for attention; "Who among you will give ear to this, and hearken for the time to come," ver. 23, and make use of it? will any of you do it? Then thus, Jacob is spoiled; but "who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers?" was not Jacob the beloved of God, his excellency, his glory? &c. "did not the Lord, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law. Therefore he hath poured upon him the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle; and it hath set him on fire round about, yet he knew not: and it burned him, yet he laid it not to heart," ver. 24, 25. And is it not so with England? We had need to cry with David, Psal. lxxix. 8, 9, "O remember not against us former iniquities: let thy tender mercies speedily prevent us: for we are brought very low. Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name: and deliver us, and purge away our sins, for thy name's sake."

Ver. 22. "My face will I turn also from them, and they shall pollute my secret place," &c. This verse is a continuation of their calamities, and hath in it two grievous ones.

1. The aversion of God's face.

2. The pollution of the secret place.

Concerning the first, it is questionable from whom he would turn his face, from the Chaldeans, or from the Jews. Some carry it, from the Chaldeans, and so the sense is this: though they be a barbarous people, and do unheard-of things, pollute my holy place, sack my holy city, burn all to the ground, slay and carry captive my people; yet I will turn my face from them. I will not restrain them at all, but let them go on freely and fully in such ways, and take no notice of any thing done against me or my worship.

Others, to whom I incline, expound it of the Jews, that God would turn his face from them: and then the meaning is, that God would afford them neither his presence, counsel, comfort, nor deliverance; but he would leave them to shift for themselves, and take no further care of them. God's face in the Scripture signifies,

1. His presence. Psal. li. 11, "Cast me not away from thy presence;" the Hebrew is, from thy face.

2. Counsel. 2 Sam. xxi. 1, "David inquired of the Lord;" Hebrew, sought the face of the Lord, that is, sought counsel of him.

3. Comfort. Psal. lxxix. 17, "Hide not thy face from thy servant, for I am in trouble;" shine upon me, and comfort me. So Psal. xxxi. 16, "Make thy face to shine upon thy servant;" that is, favour, comfort, make him glad.

4. Deliverance. Psal. xliii. 1, "How long wilt thou hide thy face from me?" that is, deny to deliver me.

There is mention of hiding his face, turning away his face, and setting his face against. The first befalls the godly, Psal. lxxxviii. 14, and xxx. 7. The other two the wicked, as here in our prophet: they were a wicked generation, and God turned his face away from them, and set his "face against them," Ezek. xv. 7.

"They shall pollute my secret place." That is, the sanctum sanctorum, the most holy place, where the ark was, which had the two tables of stone, 1 Kings viii. 9. Into this only came the high priest, and but once in the year, and that upon the day of expiation; in which day he expiated the sins of the whole year by blood, for blood and incense he carried in with him, Heb. ix. 7. And some think the smoke of the incense darkened the holy place, because no man can see God and live.

At first it was filled with a cloud, and God was in that cloud, 1 Kings viii. 10, 12. God's nature is invisible, and inaccessible; but in the cloud and smoke he did manifest his glorious presence to the high priest, who consulted with the Lord for the good of the people. The Septuagint renders it, my visitation, because there God and the high priest visited one another. It is observed in histories, that Pompey went into this secret place, and being asked what he saw, said, a cloud, and hereupon it was given out, that the Jews were cloud worshippers. One Heliodorus also thrust into this holiest of places, who afterwards was struck with madness.

"Robbers shall enter into it." The Septuagint hath it, they shall enter without restraint, without any keeping them back: Theodotus, plagues shall enter, men that will be a plague, infecting and destroying all. The Hebrew notes such robbers as do make a violent entrance into the houses and possessions of others.

Your margins express it, "burglars;" and burglary, in the acceptance of law, is a felonious entering into another man's house wherein some person is, or into a church in the night time, with intent to steal, or do some felonious act there, albeit the act be not done. But in the natural signification of the word, burglary is a robbing of a house, whether by night or day; and these Chaldeans were burglars, men that should break into the sanctuary, and secret place.

Ezek. xviii. 10, there is the same word, and it is joined with blood; "If he beget a son that is a robber, a shedder of blood," a house-breaker, a murderer, which shows there is violence joined with it, which regards not laws and rights.

Obs. That judgments succeed one another upon a guilty people. "Also I will turn away my face." He had spoken of sad judgments, some, eleven or twelve, and yet he comes in with more: there was a succession of sins, and answerably, a succession of judgments.

Obs. 2. They are a miserable people from whom God turns his face. Where his face is, there is happiness. When Aaron and the priest prayed for a blessing upon the people, Numb. vi. 25, 26, this was the chief petition of it, "The Lord make his face shine upon thee: The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee;" intimating that if they had these, no comforts or blessings would be wanting; Psal. xlii. 2, 3, the destruction of the Canaanites, the implantation of the Israelites, and their salvation, is attributed to the "light of God's countenance," as well as to his "right hand and arm;" because if they have God's face and favour, they shall have his hand and arm to do any thing for them. Therefore Asaph, in Psal. lxxx. three times prays thus; "Cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved," ver. 3, 7, 19. He knew if God's face were towards them, God's power would work for them, and they should have salvation of all sorts; salvation from enemies, which there he speaks of, and from errors; Psal. lxxvii. 1, 2, if God's face did but shine upon them, then his way would be known upon earth; if not, they should mistake and fall into errors and foul ways. Prov. xvi. 15, "In the light of the king's countenance is life;" much more in the light of God's countenance is life, the life of kingdoms, churches, families; which Daniel knew, and therefore prayed, chap. ix. 17, that God would make his face to shine upon the sanctuary which was desolate; the turning his face to them would quickly re-edify it, as the turning it from them had made it desolate. When the Lord doth turn away his face, nothing but misery attends a people. Gen. iv. 14, saith Cain, "From thy face shall I be hid;" thy favour will not be towards me, no shine shall I have, but all shade: and what then? "I shall be a vagabond in the earth," and far death by every one that meeteth me. When God takes away his face from any, the face of calamity and destruction is towards them, nay, destruction is upon them. No sooner doth God turn away from a nation, but destruction steps into that nation: Dent. xxxi. 17, "I will hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall befall them; so that they will say in that day, Are not these evils come upon us, because our God is not among us?" where you may see that God's hiding his face is departing from them, and his departing lets in all miseries. When God is gone, nothing is left but sin and judgment, and they make fearful work in all places.

If God would pity people under destruction, it were something: but he will not pity them then, nor hear their groans, receive their prayers, nor mind their tears, wounds, blood, death. Jer. xviii. 17, "I will show them the back, and not the face." And when? "in the day of their calamity," when they are in their greatest distresses, necessities, without counsel, help, comfort, even at the height of misery, I will not vouchsafe them one look, but go away from them in fury, leave them without hope, my back shall be toward them, and not my face. See Jer. xiv. 12.

Obs. 3. When the holy God goes away from his holy places, then profane, polluting wretches come into them. I will turn away my face, and robbers shall pollute my secret place. Thither should they come, whither none but the holy God and high priest were to come. And whereas before it was filled with a cloud, with incense, with glory, and the presence of God; now it should be filled with burglars, idolaters, oaths, and all profaneness, which could not but affect the Jews, that were so zealous of preserving the temple unpolluted by strangers. Acts xxi. 27, 28, a great stir was made against Paul by the Jews, because he had brought Greeks into the temple, and polluted it. And when the Jews were under the Roman emperors, they obtained of them, that none, no not a Roman, should enter into the temple under pain of death; yet themselves polluted it with false worship, drove

Joseph. l. 7. de Bell. c. 4. and in his 5th book of Antiq. c. 14. he saith, "Capitale erat Gentili ingreui Templum."

God out of it, and of the holiest of holies, and made way for the worst of men to come in and defile the same.

Ver. 23. Make a chain: for the land is full of bloody crimes, and the city is full of violence.

In this verse is another calamity, and the cause of it laid down. The calamity is a chain; the cause, blood, or violence.

"Make a chain." "Trouble," saith the Septuagint: "a conclusion," the Vulgate; the Hebrew is, רֶמֶס, and so it is rendered in 1 Kings vi. 21, chains, and so the rabbies take it here. We may extend it to a rope, a withe, a chain, any thing that a man may be bound with.

A chain is an emblem of bondage; Nahum iii. 10, "Her great ones shall be bound in chains." See Psal. cvii. 10; Acts xii. 6. And Jer. xxviii. 13, 14, the yoke of iron that the prophet was to make, noted the imbandaging of the nations unto Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon.

Whether by the "chain" be prefigured the siege of Jerusalem, as some interpret it, or leading into captivity, as others will have it, bondage is included in both. Some think the Lord here alludes to malefactors, that in chains answered at the bar of justice, as Paul did, Acts xxvi. 29. They had freely and fully run out in vicious courses, but now they were to answer it to God, who was set in judgment, and sentencing them to suffer heavy things. This also notes bondage, which is the sense of the prophet.

In a chain four things are considerable.

1. It is burdensome, heavy. 1 Kings xii. 10, "Thy father made our yoke heavy." And yokes, chains, fetters about necks, arms, legs, are grievous: when Peter was bound with two chains, Acts xii. 6, it was troublesome unto him; and so was the condition of these Jews, the siege, their captivity was very burdensome; therefore, Lam. iii. 7, the church saith, "He hath made my chain heavy." She calls her bondage a chain, and a heavy one.

2. It is restrictive, a man's liberty of going and doing is taken away by a chain. Acts xxi. 33, when Paul was bound with chains, whither could he go, what could he do; and bondage by a siege, captivity, imprisonment, sickness, or otherwise, is a restraint of a man, which are threatened here. "Jehoahaz was put in bands at Riblah, that he might not reign in Jerusalem," 2 Kings xxiii. 33.

3. Reproachful. 2 Tim. i. 16, "Onesiphorus was not ashamed of my chain." There is shame and reproach attending chains, and therefore Paul at the bar, when he wished Agrippa and others were such as he was, excepted his bonds, as reproachful things, Acts xxvi. 29. This is threatened here, and was made good; Jer. xxxix. 7, Zedekiah had his eyes put out, and was bound with two brassen chains; and so the thing he feared came upon him, mocking and reproach, Jer. xxxviii. 19. And not only he, but all of them should be for "a curse, and an astonishment, and an hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations," Jer. xxix. 19.

4. Tendency to further punishment. Paul was bound, Acts xxi. 33, "with two chains;" and Acts xxiv. 27, two years he lay in bonds; and to what end? that he might come to judgment, and have further punishment; and he was to that purpose brought before Agrippa and Festus, Acts xxvi. 29; and that in bonds: they tend to other and sorer judgments. Hence the devils are said to be "in chains of darkness reserved unto judgment," 2 Pet. ii. 4; Jude 6; they have not their full damnation, they are semi-damnati, half condemned, and kept in chains for the rest. And here God would chain up these Jews with bondage, and reserve them in bondage to further punishment, even eternal destruction: Job xxi. 30, "The wicked is reserved to the day of destruction, they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath."

"The land is full of bloody crimes." The Hebrew is, the judgment of bloods; they gave out unjust sentences that had power, and condemned the innocent; guilty men were spared, and the good suffered. 2 Kings xxi. 16, Manasseh filled Jerusalem with innocent blood; Athaliah slew all the royal seed, 2 Kings xi. 1; Naboth is falsely condemned and stoned to death, 1 Kings xxi. 13; Zechariah is slain by an unjust sentence, 2 Chron. xxiv. 21; Joash the king was slain by his servants, ver. 25. Hence it is said, Isa. lix. 3, that their "hands are defiled with blood;" that they are "full of blood," Isa. i. 15; and here, that "the land is full of bloody crimes;" Ezek. xxii. 6, every prince in Israel to his power did shed blood.

By "bloody crimes" some understand heinous sins, capital offences, such as deserved death, and the shedding of men's blood; as, idolatry, Deut. xiii. 6, 9; blasphemy, Lev. xxiv. 16; witchery, sorcery, Lev. xx. 27; bestiality, Lev. xx. 15, 16; sodomy, ver. 13; adultery, ver. 10; rapes, Deut. xxii. 25; false witnessing, to take away a man's life, Deut. xix. 16, 18, 19, 21; stealing any man, woman, or child, Exod. xxi. 16. These, with murder and treason, were bloody sins. So that the meaning may be, the land was so full of these crimes, that it could not escape severe punishment: Hosea iv. 2, "By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery, they break out, and blood cometheth blood. Therefore shall the land mourn." &c.

"The city is full of violence." This holy city was now so corrupted, that whereas God and men expected justice and righteousness at Jerusalem above all places in the world, there was violence; yea, a fulness of violence.

By violence, understand whatever was contrary to justice and equity; as fraud in bargaining, thefts, oppression, usury, withholding of rights and wages from the owners thereof, pillaging men of their estates, &c.: Ezek. xxii. 7, "In thee," that is, Jerusalem, "have they set light by father and mother; oppressed the stranger; vexed the fatherless and the widow."

That blood and violence, the sparing of the guilty, and condemning of the innocent, do bring lands and cities into bondage; such sins put them into chains, which are burdensome, reproachful, restrictive, and tending to further miseries: Ezek. xii. 19, "They shall eat their bread with carefulness, and drink their water with astonishment, that her land may be desolate from all that is therein, because of the violence of all them that dwell therein." It is spoken of

Jerusalem, Ezek. xxii. 4, "Thou art become guilty in thy blood that thou hast shed; and hast defiled thyself in thine idols which thou hast made; and thou hast caused thy days to draw near, and art come even unto thy years: therefore have I made thee a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries." Jerusalem's sins brought reproaching chains upon her, which grieved and much vexed her, ver. 5. Zeph. iii. 1, "Woe to her that is filthy and polluted, to the oppressing city!" And why woe to her? which includes all miseries, all judgments; "her princes within her are roaring lions; her judges are evening wolves," ver. 3; they suck the blood, eat the flesh, and gnaw the bones of the people, and therefore woe to them! Jer. vi. 6-8, "flew ye down trees, and east a mount against Jerusalem: this is the city to be visited; she is wholly oppression in the midst of her. As a fountain casteth out her waters, so she casteth out her wickedness: violence and spoil is heard in her; before me continually is grief and wounds. Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee; lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited." She refused instruction, and was made desolate. Let us be instructed, now we look to have our chains broken, &c. Jer. xxii. 15, 16, when Josiah "judged the cause of the poor and needy, then it was well with him" and the land; but when Jehoiakim's eyes and heart were for covetousness, blood, oppression, violence, then God threatened that he should be cast out, and "buried with the burial of an ass," ver. 17, 19. Isa. x. 1-3, "Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed; to turn aside the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless! And what will ye do in the day of visitation? to whom will ye flee for help? and where will ye leave your glory?" Let magistrates, judges, men in place, take heed what decrees they make, what sentences they pronounce in judgment; they may make our chain heavy, &c. Let people pray earnestly that God would assist them, guide them by his Spirit, that they may judge righteous judgment, execute justice upon delinquents, and keep the land from blood and violence. Of Edom it is said, "For thy violence against thy brother Jacob shame shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever," Obad. 10.

24. Wherefore I will bring the worst of the heathen, and they shall possess their houses: I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease; and their holy places shall be defiled.

In this verse he shows what instruments God would use, and they were the Chaldeans, whose title is, "The worst of the heathen;" and they should,

1. Possess their houses.
2. Destroy the pomp of the Jews, &c.
3. Defile the holy places, and so lay waste both civil and ecclesiastical state.

"Worst of the heathen." The root whence the word "worst" comes, signifies to be wicked, to be a malignant, to do evil; Jer. iv. 22, "They are wise to do evil." The Septuagint renders it here, The wicked of the heathen: and it is the same word which is given to the devil, 1 John iii. 12, "Of that wicked one," the great malignant of heaven and earth. The Chaldeans are here called the worst of nations, or heathens, as the Hebrew is. Their wickedness appears in these things: they were a peevish people, they robbed Job of his camels, and slew his servants, Job i. 17; they were great sorcerers, Dan. ii. 2, 10; great oppressors, Isa. xiv. 4, 17; very cruel, therefore compared to lions, Isa. v. 29; to a razor, Isa. vii. 20; to cockatrices and serpents, Jer. viii. 17; they were idolatrous, Ezek. xxiii. 14; a bitter and hasty nation, Hab. i. 6; terrible and dreadful, ver. 7; all for violence and spoil, ver. 9; they were drunkards, Hab. ii. 15; proud and unsufferably covetous, ver. 5. And Ezek. xxiii. 25, See Deut. xxviii. 49-51. it is said, they shall deal furiously with thee; they shall take away thy nose, and thine ears, and deal hatefully with thee, ver. 29; they shall stone them, despatch them with swords, and burn up their houses with fire, ver. 47. These were the worst of nations, or the worst of that nation should come.

"They shall possess their houses." These wicked and merciless wretches, sparing neither man, woman, nor child, should take all into their possession.

The word for "possess" hath a contrary signification: to inherit, possess, יָרַשׁ Dent. iv. 1, and to disinherit, dispossess, Zech. ix. 4, "The Lord will east her out," it is the same root; and you have both significations יָרַשׁ in one verse, Josh. xxiii. 5, "The Lord shall drive them from out of your sight; and ye shall possess the land;" it is the same root for driving out and for possessing. This is rare, and for the learned to observe, that a word signifies contrary things.

Its frequent signification is to possess by hereditary right, to succeed; but it is used sometimes more largely, to possess any way, as in 1 Kings xxi. 15; Deut. ii. 24, Ahab took possession of Naboth's vineyard, and Moses of the king of Heshbon's land, which was not by succession. And so it is to be taken in this place; they should come in by force, and possess their habitations. And there is something more in this phrase; possessing notes continuance of habitation in their hands, as being their own: 1 Cor. vii. 30, Let them that buy be as if they possessed not. Possessors look upon things as their own, and to continue with them. Here by the Chaldeans' possessing their houses, is closely pointed out the seventy years' captivity, all which time the land and habitations left should be in the Chaldeans' power.

"I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease." Whatever lifts up, and causes the spirits of men to swell, it is pomp; so the word is used, Jer. xii. 5, "In the swelling of Jordan," when the waters increased, and made the river swell over its banks, which Jordan always did in harvest time, Josh. iii. 15.

"Strong," or potent, men: whence great ones are called potentates. Their riches, attendance, honours, places, alliances, and the like, do make them proud, stately, self-confident; but their pomp, power, magnificence, excellency, shall all cease and come to nothing. It is not their arms or armour, their big looks, insolent speeches, rich attire, honourable titles, or any thing wherein they glory, that shall advantage them; be it their soldiery, their strong and stout men, their pomp shall cease, I will crush their crests, and bring them low. Pintus understands it of Zedekiah and the nobles of Jerusalem.

"Their holy places shall be defiled." The holy places were the court, the temple, and the holiest of all. Some refer these words to persons, and not to places, and read them thus: They shall see profaned, defiled, that which sanctify them: noting, the priests who sanctified the people by their offerings and prayers for them, they should not be regarded

ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ,
i. e. plus mauvais, in the French.

as priests of the highest God; but because they had dealt deceitfully with the people, corrupted the covenant of Levi, therefore they should be slain as other persons, or led into captivity with them.

Others read the words thus: They shall inherit their holy places, the Chaldeans shall come and take possession of them, because it is said here, Theod. Lavat. "their holy places," and not mine. It is conceived by some that these were chapels, or oratories, which they had made in several places in or near to their houses, and consecrated to God.

Obs. 1. That God can use the worst of men to accomplish his holy designs, and execute his righteous judgments. The Chaldeans he brings to afflict, chain, and take captive the Jews. Wicked men have wicked ends, answerable principles, and mediums to attain those ends, Isa. x. 7; but they are as staves and rods in the hand of God, with which he corrects hypocritical nations, ver. 5, 6. They are God's sword, God's hand, Psal. xvii, 13, 14; and he knows how to use both to effect his own pleasure, and to execute judgments upon sinners, and that without sin. Hath not God brought in, and set on work the worst men among us? What miscreants, blasphemers, plagues, vermin, what Egyptians, Chaldeans, and bloody, merciless wretches, have we doing mischief in this land! men that justify Chaldeans, that are skilful to shed blood, to cheat a nation of its God and religion, to betray and undo kingdoms. Many wonder such vile wretches should live and have a being upon the earth; many are troubled that God uses such filth and scum to do him any service; but we must know that there is use of thistles, scorpions, and serpents, and God would not use such men if there were not good to be done by them: Isa. x. 12, "It shall come to pass, that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks."

Obs. 2. That houses, lands, and good things of this world, we should not much seek after, seeing they may fall into the hands of the worst men. "I will bring the worst of the heathen, and they shall possess their houses." All they had gotten fell into the hands of the Chaldeans.

Obs. 3. That no external excellency or pomp is to be confided in. God will make the pomp of the strong to cease; policy, power, riches, honours, strength of armies, are not pillars of brass to confide in; they are glass, metal, soon broken, and blown away by the breath of the Lord, when he is in a way of wrath. Nebuchadnezzar was a proud tyrant, that with his plundering "made the world as a wilderness," Isa. xiv. 17; that exceeded most princes of the world in greatness, in kingdoms, tributary princes, honour, strength of soldiers, &c. See, in ver. 11, what is said of him, "Thy pomp is brought down to the grave;" ver. 12, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations!" So for Egypt, that abounded in horses, Isa. xxxi. 1, and trusted in their strength; Ezek. xxx. 18, "The pomp of her strength shall cease in her;" and chap. xxxii. 12, "By the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall." They shall spoil the pomp of Egypt, and all the multitude thereof shall be destroyed; God would destroy them with a great destruction, and then mercy should come in; then "neither the foot of man nor beast should trouble them any more;" then would the Lord "make their waters deep, and make their rivers run like oil," ver. 13, 14.

Neither Babylonish nor Egyptian pomp endure long. God makes "the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and lays low the haughtiness of the terrible," Isa. xiii. 11.

This God hath done lately before Victory at York, our eyes, he hath made the pomp of 2nd July, 1644. the strong to cease. There were the potentates of the earth; honours, riches, strength, arms, horses, and whatever might make them pompous, was with them; great hopes and hearts they had; they looked for the day, and thought not only the north but the south should be theirs; not York, but London, yea England, to be theirs; but they are disappointed, their honour is laid in the dust, their pomp ceaseth. We may say, according to that in Zech. xi. 2, 3, "Howl, fir tree; for the cedar is fallen; because the mighty is spoiled: howl, O ye oaks of Bashan; for the forest of the vintage is come down;" their strength and comforts are abated. "There is a voice of the howling of the shepherds," (that is, princes which should feed and seek the good of the people,) "for their glory is spoiled, a voice of the roaring of young lions; for the pride of Jordan is spoiled."

The ceasing of their pomp should be the beginning of our praise: Psal. cxviii. 1, "O sing unto the Lord a new song; for he hath done marvellous things: his right hand, and his holy arm, hath gotten him the victory." We may sing with Moses, Exod. xv. 6, 7, "Thy right hand, O Lord, is become glorious in power: thy right hand, O Lord, hath dashed in pieces the enemy. And in the greatness of thine excellency thou hast overthrown them that rose up against thee: thou sentest forth thy wrath, which consumed them as stubble;" and with David, Psal. cxxxvi. 1—4, "O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever," &c.: and Psal. cvii. 8, "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"

Obs. 4. Unspiritual worship pleases not God, neither profits the worshippers. They had the temple, ordinances of it, appeared oft before God, brought their sacrifices; but God threatens them, and all their worship; their civil estate, and ecclesiastical also, should be ruined. God in worship looks at the hearts and spirits of men; if they be absent from, but half or in part, in the worship, God regards it not. Their oblations are vain oblations, Isa. i. 13. Their fasts and prayers are a trouble, a weariness to God, ver. 14. And he tells them that he had mouth-ness and heart-farness, lip-labour and heart-dishonour, Isa. xxix. 13; yea, Ezek. xxxiii. 31, he had mouth-love, mouth-worship, when their silver and gold had heart-love, heart-worship. It is the heart is the principal thing in God's eye; "My son, give me thine heart," Prov. xxiii. 26. If that be not given him in worship, nothing is given, nothing is accepted that we think given. David therefore prays, Psal. cxix. 80, "Let my heart be sound in thy statutes; that I be not ashamed." If a man have a deceitful spirit, a rotten heart, he will be ashamed when he shall find that all his prayers, fasts, services, shall be thrown back as dung in his face. Cain gave the fruit of the earth, not the fruit of his heart, and it was not accepted; neither do they gain ought at God's hands who worship him carnally; 1 Tim. iv. 8, "Bodily exercise profiteth little."

Obs. 5. Men are apt to rest in outside worship, and bless themselves for it. They cried, "The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord," &c. Jer. vii. 4. They looked at the temple and worship of it, and hence concluded safety to themselves; they thought it not probable that ever destruction should come to them, their city, state, and church; they looked upon their temple as a glorious thing, and that worship therein would secure them from all; but God oft threatens the defilement, removal, and destruction of it, from this 20th verse to the 25th. The Pharisee went up to the temple, he fasted, prayed, gave tithes of all, and in such outside services did he rest. Men now have their chapels and chaplains, and think that by the prayers of the one, and holiness of the other, they shall be fitted for heaven.

Ver. 25. Destruction cometh; and they shall seek peace, and there shall be none.

He told them before, that the worst of the heathen should come, and now, that destruction was coming; and annexeth a new calamity, their vain expectation, and real disappointment of peace.

"Destruction." The Septuagint is quite out in rendering it mercy, propitiation cometh. Others ἐξομαρτίνωσιν read it thus, a strait grief cometh. The Hebrew signifies more, a breaking, a cutting off: so the word is used, Isa. xxxviii. 12. The Chaldee hath it, precision or forecutting. Piscator, caesor, the cutter up, the destroyer, or man of destruction, cometh: and he proves it must be taken so, because it is joined with a verb masculine: and so the sense is, Nebuchadnezzar the destroyer, the man that cuts down nations, that breaks kingdoms in pieces, is coming upon you, even Nebuchadnezzar, who is destruction itself.

"They shall seek peace." God had threatened by his prophets the utter ruin of Jerusalem, which they would not believe. The false prophets suggested the contrary, they cried "Peace, peace," Jer. viii. 11; Ezek. xiii. 10; seduced the people, so that they feared not: they considered the strength of their situation, tower, temple, soldiers, and what these prophets had said, and would not believe that enemies should come within their gates, Lam. iv. 12; but when the enemy was come, they sought for peace and safety, but found it not. Ezek. xxxviii. 22. They excused Zedekiah that he brake with Nebuchadnezzar in the point of tribute: they tendered silver and gold to buy a peace, and that would not do it, Isa. xlii. 17; Ezek. vii. 19. They conceived that men come far could not lie long before their walls and gates, but that they would be consumed, or glad to retire with shame, so they should be safe; or if things came to the worst, that the city must be yielded, yet it should be upon good and honourable terms, at least with security of life and liberty. But neither their money, their policy, their prayers, or aught else, could prevail for peace or safety; they had found them perfidious, and would hearken to no terms of peace; the Chaldeans were cockatrices, and would not be charmed, Jer. viii. 17. Therefore it is said, ver. 15, "We looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health, and behold, trouble!"

Some refer this seeking of peace, to God: they should in their straits, at the destruction by Nebuchadnezzar, cry to God, make many fasts and prayers in the time of the siege, and seek for peace with God, whom they had offended with their grievous sins, and he would not hear them, peace they should not find, Jer. xiv. 12; Ezek. xiv. 17, 18.

Obs. 1. That wicked men in time of divine judgments, when they come upon them, are peaceless. Destruction cometh, and they should seek peace; they had neither peace within, nor peace without; wars were in their gates, and wars in their hearts; their own consciences did accuse, smite, condemn them. Common calamities roused their sleepy consciences; they saw themselves in ill case from Nebuchadnezzar, in worse by reason of God; the one threatening their lives, the other their souls; so that which way soever they looked, peace they saw none, the winds of affliction stirred the waves of their corruption; Isa. lvii. 20, "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." When the great winds are abroad, the sea hath no rest, it cannot rest, it rages, and throws up and out mire and dirt: so when great and death-threatening calamities are abroad, wicked men rest not, they cannot rest, they are "mire," Isa. x. 6; and their expressions are miry; and what is the conclusion? "There is no peace to the wicked, saith the Lord." They may say they have peace, others may confirm their assertion, but God saith they have none; nothing of that which is included within the sweet name of peace is to be found in them. You may find Satan there, a hellish conscience there, sinful lusts there, fears, sorrows, terrors there, but no peace there. "The way of peace they know not; and there is no judgment in their goings: they have made them crooked paths; who-soever goeth therein shall not know peace," Isa. lix. 8.

Obs. 2. Great necessities and straits cause sinners to seek for that they formerly neglected, violated, viz. peace with God, and peace with man. Zedekiah, these Jews, had broken the covenant made with Nebuchadnezzar, they provoked God, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 12, 13; and now when destruction was upon them, they seek peace from heaven and earth: in their prosperity they regarded neither God nor man, but when both were against them, then they sue, they seek for peace at their hands. When Herod's displeasure was upon the Tyrians and Sidonians, they sought for peace at his hands, Acts xiii. 20; and Hos. v. 15, "In their affliction they will seek me early," and earnestly too; Jer. xi. 14, they cry in their trouble; and, saith the Lord, "I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble."

Obs. 3. That states may seek too late for peace with God and man; they may defer so long, that their seeking may be in vain, their endeavours frustrated, and hopes disappointed. "They shall seek peace, and there shall be none;" neither God nor man will give in any peace.

The date of mercy was out, and the door of hope shut, therefore, Jer. xiii. 12. God tells them the spoilers were come, the sword devouring, and no flesh should have peace, neither young nor old, though they sought it earnestly. Instead of peace, they should be in travail as one with child; their hands should be upon their loins, their faces pale, and cry out, "Alas! for that day," Jer. xxx. 5, 6. The time was come, that God had taken peace from the land; Jer. xvi. 5, "I have taken away my peace from this people, even loving-kindness and mercies." God had taken it away, and now it was too late for them to seek after it, too hard for them to bring back, or any friend they had. If they looked that Jeremiah, who was a prophet, acquainted with and interested in God, should do it, he was forbidden to pray for them; Jer. xiv. 11, "Pray not for this people for their good." If he prayed against them, God would hear him, but not if for them; it would be sin in him so to do. If they looked for others, that they had better thoughts of than Jeremiah, God tells them that if they had as good men as Noah, Daniel, and Job, who were acquainted with great afflictions, could pray very powerfully, and being precious men, righteous, perfect, desirable, as God's testimony is of them, yet they should not help them with their prayers at all. Ezek. xiv. 14. Nay, if they should set upon fasting and praying themselves, God would not hear, or give in any peace; Jer. xiv. 12. "When they fast, I will not hear their cry; and when they offer burnt-offering and an oblation, I will not accept them: but I will consume them." They beg peace, I will send the sword; they ask bread, I will send a famine; they desire health, I will bring the pestilence: and these shall consume them.

It is dreadful when any come too late unto God; then instead of mercy they meet with judgments. Hence Jer. viii. 15, "We looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health, and behold trouble!" When it will be thus with a land, see Ezek. xiv. 13; Prov. i. 24, &c.; Matt. xxiii. 37, 38.

Ver. 26. Mischief shall come upon mischief, and rumour shall be upon rumour; then shall they seek a vision of the prophet; but the law shall perish from the priest, and counsel from the ancients.

Here is more woe yet discovered, not single, but multiplied woes, one mischief at the heels of another; no sooner shall one be over, but they shall hear of another; one mischief in the morning, and presently news of another before noontide or evening, and after that, another by midnight, and so they were never free from feeling and fearing miseries.

News they should have of the Chaldeans coming with fury and for spoil, beset they should be with mischiefs, and when they looked for comfort and counsel from the prophets, priests, and ancients, there should be no vision, no law, no counsel. Those who had holpen them in former times should now fail them.

"Mischief." Contrition, trouble, woe. This word mischief sometimes notes sin, as Psal. xxxvi. 4; exl. 2; Acts xiii. 10; sometimes an ill accident befalling one, 2 Kings vii. 9, "If we tarry till the morning light, some mischief will come upon us;" sometimes judgment, Isa. xlviii. 11, "Mischief shall fall upon thee; and thou shalt not be able to put it off;" the stroke of God shall come unavoidably. They were a people "set on mischief," Exod. xxxii. 22, set upon sinning, and God told them he would be set upon punishing; Dent. xxxii. 23, "I will heap mischiefs upon them;" which here, in the text, were coming one after another, and crowding in upon them.

Mischief upon mischief notes multiplicity and coherence of judgments, sword, plague, famine, and those evils which attend them, which are not a few. Job xix. 12, you have a like phrase, "His troops came together;" there was a multiplicity of calamities, troops and coherency, they came together.

"Rumour shall be upon rumour." The news shall be brought them of the Chaldeans' coming from several quarters, and by several messengers, to their city; their ears shall be filled with tidings and reports of their drawing near. It is conceived the Jews had their scouts and spies abroad that watched on the tops of the mountains, and places suspected, and when any danger appeared, they gave notice thereof, and so rumour was upon rumour. One brought news that the king of Babylon was in arms such a day with so many thousands; a second, that he had marched so far; a third, that he had invaded the borders of their land; a fourth, that he had taken some towns, put most to the sword, and burnt the towns, &c.; another, that they would presently be at the gates of Jerusalem.

"Then shall they seek a vision of the prophet." Finding no peace, seeing mischiefs multiply, and hearing sad rumours from all parts, they had one refuge left, and that they make use of, viz. they seek to the prophet for a vision. Surely, thought they, we shall have some good tidings from heaven when we have none from earth; the prophet will help us, when all others fail us; in our great straits we shall have some counsel or comfort.

But either there was no vision, or such as was in no stead to them. The false prophets had nothing to say, the true they hated, and what they said would not be believed, or practised; Jer. xxxviii. 14, &c. Zedekiah speaks to Jeremiah for a vision; he knows the mind of the Lord, tells him what he must do to save himself and the city, yield up himself into the hand of the king of Babylon's princes, and then he should live, and the city be unburnt; this vision was sad, not entertained, and so as none. Zedekiah and the rest would have had a vision, ver. 27, that is, a word of God by the prophet to have freed them from the misery and straits they were in, and there was no such vision.

"But the law shall perish from the priest." And the law shall perish, many read it so, noting out a further degree of their misery. Prophecy shall not only fail them, which is extraordinary, but even that which was ordinary, the preaching and expounding of the law, the priests should have no sound or true knowledge of it.

Read it, But the law, &c. the sense will not much differ. They look for visions from prophets, but they shall not have the law from priests, vision and preaching both shall fail them.

This phrase, To perish from, is a hebraism, and noteth not abolition, but absence; the law should not be dissolved, lost, but taken from those priests, they should be without the law. Take some places where you have the like speeches: Psal. cxlii. 4, "Refuge failed me;" the Hebrew is, perished from me, I was without refuge. Amos ii. 14, "Flight shall perish from the swift;" power of flying shall be absent. And Joel i. 5, "Howl, all ye drinkers of wine, because of the new wine; for it is cut off from your mouth;" that is, there is none for you. And so here, "The law shall perish from the priest;" that is, the sound knowledge and true interpretation of the law shall be absent from them, their lips shall preserve no knowledge.

"Counsel from the ancients." Elders: some refer these to church officers; the עֲלֵמֵי Isa. xxxviii. 2, "Elders of the priests." prophets were to teach them, the priests, to offer sacrifices, and the elders to order and discipline them, which required wisdom and counsel.

Others refer them to state elders, in which sense the word is frequently used, Gen. i. 7; Exod. xvii. 5; Psal. cv. 22, and is there translated "senators." Take it in which sense you will, counsel should perish from them, they should not be able to advise for the welfare of church or state.

Obs. 1. When a people is under divine displeasure, there is a succession of evils for them, mischief after mischief; they may not expect a few, but many. Saul, after he had sinned in sacrificing, rejected God; Samuel tells him that his kingdom should not continue, 1 Sam. xiii. 14. Then three companies of spoilers came, mischief from the Philistines, ver. 17, 18. Then had they no smith in all Israel, ver. 19. After, chap. xv. 23, he hears God had rejected him from being king, that he had rent the kingdom from him, ver. 28. After this he was troubled with "an evil spirit from the Lord," chap. xvi. 14. In chap. xvii. 10, Goliath defies the armies of Israel. Chap. xviii. 7, 8, David is magnified above Saul, which vexed him to the heart, and filled him with fear, ver. 29. He is disappointed of David, whom he attempts to kill, chap. xix. He distrusts his servants, and complains of their unfaithfulness, chap. xxii. The Philistines invade his land, being in pursuit of David, chap. xxiii. David and Abishai came upon Saul sleeping, and could have killed him, chap. xxvi. Being sore distressed, he seeketh to the witch of Endor; when God was departed, no answer by prophets, and the Philistines were upon him: the witch raises the devil, who tells him of nothing but his own and Israel's ruin, chap. xxviii. 19. These tidings struck him half dead, ver. 20. After this, his sons are slain, his army is routed, and he and his armour-bearer kill themselves, chap. xxxi. Here mischief followed upon mischief.

Pharaoh had ten plagues one after another: and in the Revelation you read of seven trumpets, seven vials; they came not single, but by sevens, and brought in mischief after mischief, and judgment after judgment. Jer. li. 31, 32, "One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to show the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end, and that the passages are stopped, and the reeds they have burned with fire, and the men of war are allrighted."

Many evils and troubles do befall states and churches when they are under God's wrath. Deut. xxxi. 17, "Then my anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall befall them; so that they will say in that day, Are not these evils come upon us, because our God is not among us."

When God is in a way of revenge, he is continually at his work, so that one misery is but the messenger of another: and here is the misery of the wicked, they shall perish rather a hundred times over, than go unpunished.

Obs. 2. God proceeds by degrees and steps to severity of judgments. Though people be exceeding guilty, deserve as much wrath as is in all the vials of God, yet he pours not out all his wrath at once, mischief comes after mischief, and rumour after rumour. First, some drops of a vial, then some little streams, after that the strength. God hath clemency in him, moderating his punishments; if little ones will prevail with sinners, he will withhold the greater; sometimes, though he see no amendment in the creature, his own goodness, bowels, and compassion do cause him to forbear. Psal. lxxviii. 38, "He did not stir up all his wrath:" he had cause to have done it; they flattered with him, lied unto him, their heart was not right, they brake covenant, ver. 36, 37, and yet he stirred not up all his wrath; he kindled not the fire so hot as utterly to consume them. Nay, that wrath which was up, and coming out, he turned away; and why? he was full of compassion, and remembered they were but flesh. Yet, because they were a stubborn people, profited neither by mercies nor judgments, but fell to idolatry, it is said, ver. 59, "he greatly abhorred Israel;" and then the consuming fire was kindled, ver. 63. At first God's wrath is little, Psal. ii. 12; "I was but a little displeas'd," Zech. i. 15: but if sin grow, God's wrath grows; as Ahab's cloud, at first little as a hand, but quickly it covered the face of heaven, it was black with clouds and winds, and there was a great rain. How little soever God's wrath be in the rise, it can suddenly cover the face of heaven, and cause a great rain, a rain of "fire and brimstone, an horrible tempest," Psal. xi. 6. God hath great wrath, and fierceness of wrath, 2 Kings xxiii. 26. He hath a little finger, a hand, an arm, and loins to be heavy upon sinners. He begins with the little finger; if that do good he will stop, if not, you shall feel his hand, his arm, and weight of his loins. He hath wrath reserved, Nahum i. 2; "wrath to come," 1 Thess. i. 10.

Obs. 3. Wicked men in great straits will sue to them for help, whom before they hated. They could seek for a vision from the prophet now they were in extremities, and they run from prophet to prophet to get some counsel and comfort. The false prophets, who had been countenanced by them, had deceived them, the true were hateful to them; Jeremiah, Zephaniah, Baruch were left, and now they sue unto them for visions. See Jer. xxxvii. 17, and xxxviii. 14, 27, and xlii. 1—3. There the king, princes, and people, being distressed, seek to Jeremiah; yet he was cursed by them, chap. xv. 10, beaten and put into prison, chap. xxxvii. 15. Ahab sends for and consults with Micaiah, whom he hated, when he was to go out to war, and in a strait what would be the issue of it, 1 Kings xxii. 8. When the plagues were upon Pharaoh, then he sends for Moses and Aaron, Exod. viii. 8, 25, and ix. 27, and x. 8, 16, 21; he sends for them in haste, and in the night, chap. xii. 31; seven times he did it. Prophets are precious in times of trouble; when men's liberties, estates, and lives are in question, then they are glad to have help from prophets; their counsel, prayers, holiness, they think may do them good. Abimelech took away Abraham's wife; but what said God to him? Gen. xx. 7, "Restore the man his wife; for he is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live; if not, thou shalt surely die, and all that are thine."

Take heed how you abuse and ill-treat the prophets; the time may come you may have need of them, and be glad to hide yourselves under their wings, ask their counsels, importune their prayers.

Obs. 4. They that will not hear God's servants when they are at ease, shall not have help from them in time of their distress. They refused to hearken to Jeremiah, chap. xlv. 16, "As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee;" and now they seek unto him for a vision, and there is none for them, or that which afflicted them more than if they had none. It is just with God to withhold visions from the prophets, when people desire them who slighted them when God gave them. If people stop their ears, and will not hear, God will stop the prophets' mouths, they shall not speak. Lam. ii. 9, "Her prophets find no vision from the Lord:" they sought to the prophets, the prophets to the Lord, but neither found any vision, night and darkness was upon them, and there was "no answer of God," Micah iii. 6, 7.

Obs. 5. That it is a dreadful evil when God takes away the signs of his presence. Visions among the prophets, the law soundly interpreted by the priests, and reasonable counsel from the elders, were evident tokens of God's presence amongst them: when these failed, they were demonstrations of his absence. Here they should all perish, from the prophet, the priest, and the ancient; now they should neither have extraordinary nor ordinary help, as it was with Saul, 1 Sam. xxviii. 15. God answered him neither by prophets nor by dreams, which was an argument he was departed, and hereupon he was in great distress. Micah was troubled greatly when the Danites took away his idols, Judg. xviii. 23, 24; he thought that a great evil, that the signs of his gods' presence were gone; but how much greater evil is it, when the signs of the true God's presence are taken away! 1 Sam. iv. when the Philistines had routed the Israelites, and taken the ark, and a Benjamite brought news of it to the city, "and all the city cried out," ver. 13; great and small were afflicted at this, that the ark, the pledge of divine presence, was gone; and Eli was not so much affected at the death of his two sons, as at the taking of the ark; when he heard that was gone, he could live no longer, he fell backward, ver. 18, brake his neck, and died. So Phinehas's wife upon this occasion falls into travail, and names her child Iehabod, ver. 21, which is, Where is the glory? the ark is gone, God is gone, Israel hath now no more glory. So here, the tokens of God's being among them were removing, vision failing, the law perishing, &c.; and where these go away, it is night; ignorance comes in, errors increase, and all woes are at hand. While God is present by his word and ministers, what evils soever fall out, there is relief in the word and ordinances against them, thence arguments are fetched patiently to bear them; but if they be gone, that evil may sink the heart without others; and when seas of vinegar, and floods of bitter water, compass you about, you have no oil to allay them, nor sugar to sweeten them.

Obs. 6. That truths are not confined to any sort of men, not to prophets, priests, or ministers, in these or any days; the prophets should be without vision, the law should perish from the priests, and counsel from the elders. It was a conceit of old that this rank of men should not be without knowledge and truth: Jer. xviii. 18, "Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah; for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet. Come, and let us smite him with the tongue," &c.; let us accuse him to be a false prophet, get him silenced, imprisoned, put to death. All in authority in the church, the prophets, the priests, the elders, are against him, and you need not fear if he be taken out of the way; though a priest, a prophet, full of wisdom and counsel, there will be others as good as he, more mild and sweet; it will be no considerable loss, for the law shall not perish from the priest.

They were possessed with this apprehension, that truth, knowledge, counsel, and the Spirit of God, were peculiar to them, and should not be removed from them; but the Lord confutes them, and confounds their conceit; there shall be no vision, no law, no counsel. Aaron had neither vision nor law when he said, "These be thy gods, O Israel," Exod. xxxii. 4. Ahab had four hundred prophets, but no vision amongst them. Had there been a council of these priests and prophets gathered to counsel and determine for the good of the church, what canons and conclusions would they have made! The papists and some others stick much to councils, and challenge knowledge, truth, and God's Spirit to be amongst them; they are the representative church, and where should light and counsel be, if not amongst them? Let them and all consider that the Lord is not tied to men, that truth is not the inheritance of priests, prophets, popes, councils, more than others: "The law shall perish from the priests." And Mark xiv. 53, there was a grand council, "the high priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests, and the elders, and the scribes;" and, ver. 64, you have the result of this council: they all vote Christ to be a blasphemer, and condemn him to be guilty of death, wherupon he was spit on, buffeted, and greatly abused. If a whole council have condemned Christ the Head, it is like they have condemned many of the members since.

The great council of Nice had erred in point of ministers' marriage, if Papinutius had not prevented. That of Arminium held rebaptization of those heretics had baptized. That of Constance denied one of the elements in the supper of the Lord to the people. God is not tied to counsels, to prophets, or priests, but is free to be where he please, and to impart truth to whom he please, and to as few as he please: Ubi tres, sunt ecclesia est, licet laici fuerint, Where there are three persons they constitute a church, though they be of the laity, said Tertulian long since: and if they be a ^{Tertulian in Exhort. ad Castitatem.} church, they may have truth amongst them, and more given in unto them, as well as others.

Obs. 7. God gives vision, law, counsel, and takes them away at his pleasure; he creates light and darkness. They shall seek vision of the prophets, and there shall be none. Prophets could not prophesy at pleasure; but when God gave in visions, then they gave out light. Nathan had no vision, no word from heaven, to encourage David to build; he had one to take him off, 2 Sam. vii. Neither had the priests the knowledge of the law always, Hos. iv. 6; Mal. ii. 8; neither is counsel always with the ancient, Isa. xxix. 14. You that have vision, the law and gospel, the counsel of the ancient, how soon God may remove it is a secret; the light was extinguishing lately, there were many extinguishers, jesuitical, prelatical, and others. Be not unthankful for the light you have, sin not against light by disgracing that as new light which suits not with your spirits; it was in the womb of the Scriptures, though not brought forth till of late. If you spurn at any light, any truths of God, you may lose what you have: if you receive not the truth with love, "God will send you strong delusions." If you hate those that bring you light, you are in darkness, notwithstanding all the light that shines amongst you; 1 John ii. 9, 10, "He that saith he is in the light, and hates his brother, is in darkness even until now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him." Let me say to you as Isaiah, chap. ii. 5, "O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord;" and as Christ to the people, "Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you." John xii. 35. Acts xxvi. 19, Paul was not disobedient to the heavenly visions he had; be not you, but walk in the light and warmth of them, and then see what a blessing you shall have: 1 John i. 7, "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Obs. 8. Those who will not do what they know, shall not know what to do. Zedekiah and the rest would not do what they knew; Jeremiah bade them go forth, yield themselves, and it should be well with them and the city; but they did it not, and quickly after they knew not what to do, no vision, no law, no counsel; in a strait, and knew not which way to turn them. Adam knew what to do, but did it not, and presently after his head is in the thicket, and he knows not what to do. Saul knew that he should not offer sacrifice, that he should have slain Agag, spared neither man nor beast, he did it not; and how oft he was in straits, and knew not what to do, you may observe in the story, especially in that famous place, 1 Sam. xxviii. 15, when the witch had raised the devil in Samuel's likeness and mantle, he tells him why he had called him; I know not what to do, but

Ver. 27. The king shall mourn, and the prince shall be clothed with desolation, and the hands of the people of the land shall be troubled: I will do unto them after their way, and according to their deserts will I judge them; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

Having spoken of the ecclesiastical estate in the former verse, in this he comes to the civil estate, and shows that the judgments should light upon all sorts, king, prince, and people; mourning, desolation, and trouble shall be upon them. He names the subjects of misery, and the miseries: then he lays down the causes; the efficient, God; the material and meritorious, their ways, deserts; then the end of all these judgments, That they may know, &c.

"The king shall mourn." Hebrew is אֲנָח, the word being in hithpael, notes continuation of mourning; some therefore render it. He shall pine away, or kill himself with mourning; it is mourning with sighing, and sighs are wasting; and surely Zedekiah had cause of constant mourning, even to his death: he lost the kingdom, his sons, and his eyes at once, which were dear things unto him; and some observe, when the word is referred to men, it notes mourning for dear things.

"The prince:" that is, princes, the singular number for the plural, as prophet for prophets.

"Shall be clothed with desolation." It is metaphorical, from garments, which do cover and compass about; so desolation should compass the princes and nobles on every side. The word notes such desolation as breeds amazement in the beholders; which was here when they saw the city, the temple, the kingdom laid waste, all things in them desolated; they were clothed with desolation, and amazed at so strange a garment upon them.

"The hands of the people of the land shall be troubled." When the people should see their king mourning, their nobles desolate, no heart or spirit in them for the church and state, for their liberties or lives, their hearts and hands were troubled.

But he expresses it by their "hands," because it was more visible by them, and set out the greatness of their misery: they had no hands, through fear and faintness, to follow their callings; no hands to take up arms to defend themselves; no hands to lift up in prayer.

"According to their deserts." The Hebrew is, According to their judgments: they have made ill judgments of persons and things, and deserve my judgments for them, and answerably I will deal with them. They have oppressed, they shall be oppressed; they have not heard the cry of others, they shall not be heard crying; they have rejected me, and they shall be rejected by me; they have killed, and they shall be killed; they have spoiled, and they shall be spoiled. And so that of Christ, in Matt. vii. 2. is made good, "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." In the 3rd, 4th, 8th, and 9th verses of this chapter hath been spoken of judging and recompensing them according to their ways.

Obs. 1. That God hath times for kings and courtiers to mourn in. Greatness exempts not from God's hand; if great ones sin, they shall smart for their sins: "the king shall mourn," &c. God takes off royal robes and puts sackcloth upon kings' loins that sin against him; heavy judgments he brings upon kings. Zedekiah's sins were great:

First, he was false, a thing too incident to kings; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13, he violated the oath he had taken.

Secondly, idolatrous. Heathenish idolatry was practised in his days; ver. 14, the temple and worship of it were polluted.

Thirdly, trusted to and sent for Egyptians to help him, Jer. xxxvii. 7; he would not hearken to God's counsel, to the true prophets, to those who advised him well, Jer. xxxvi. 25; xxxvii. 2, but to false prophets and wicked counsellors.

Fourthly, he hated, imprisoned, and persecuted the prophets, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16; Jer. xxxvii. 21.

Fifthly, unjust and cruel. "Let Jeremiah be put to death," say the princes, Jer. xxxviii. 4. "Then Zedekiah said, Behold, he is in your hand; the king is not he that can do any thing against you," &c. ver. 5. He was overpowered by the princes, and durst not displease them, but it cost dear at last.

Look upon other kings, they had their sins and their sorrows. Rehoboam hearkens to ill counsel, oppresses his people, and loses ten tribes at once for it. Jeroboam, upon wicked advice, sets up calves, restrains the people from the true worship at Jerusalem, and God sends him a dreadful message by Ahijah, 1 Kings xiv. 6, &c. Ahab did not execute justice upon Benhadad, a man appointed to death; and therefore saith the prophet, "Thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people," 1 Kings xx. 42. The court was very wicked then; Jezebel had the greatest power in it; she stirred up Ahab to work wickedness, she set the elders and nobles to work, to accuse and stone Naboth to death; but there was a time of mourning for them, 1 Kings xxi. 23, 24, 27. Ahaz was wicked, and the worse for his afflictions; but God had a sad day for him, when he lost one hundred and twenty thousand valiant men in one day, and had two hundred thousand women carried away captives, 2 Chron. xxviii. Asa, who was a good king, yet is branded with trusting in an arm of flesh, 2 Chron. xvi. 7, with oppression of some of the people, ver. 10; and therefore Hanani tells him he should have wars; and besides he was greatly diseased in his feet, ver. 9, 12. Manasseh was the great oppressing king, he shed and filled Jerusalem with innocent blood, 2 Kings xxi. 16; and as he found times to shed blood, so God found times to have him in the thorns, in fetters, in captivity, in mourning and humbling himself. Oppression is the common sin of princes; because they have greatness and power in their hands, they think it is warrantable for them to do what they list,

"Ephraim loveth to oppress," Hos. xii. 7. The king of Bashan, the great ones that were strong and fat, that had horns and hoofs, they oppressed the poor, and crushed the needy, "a man and his house, a man and his heritage," Micah ii. 2; Naboth and his vineyard went both at once. Hence the princes of Jerusalem are called, "roaring lions," Zeph. iii. 3; they are greedy of their prey, they scare, scatter, and devour the flock: but God will hunt these lions, and judge these men of the earth, Psal. x. 18, whose trade is oppression, and hath promised a time when his princes shall oppress no more; Ezek. xlv. 8, "My princes shall no more oppress." Either this prophecy is not fulfilled, or the oppressed in these days are not God's people, or the princes who oppress are not God's princes; and if so, say to the oppressing kings and queens of the earth, "Humble yourselves, sit down: for your principalities shall come down, even the crown of your glory," Jer. xiii. 18. See Acts xii. 23; Rev. vi. 15.

Obs. 2. That God hath apparel for princes and nobles; and what is it? desolation. "The prince shall be clothed with desolation." God had an eye to the clothing of the great ones, and their sin about the same, and fits garments for them, such as they were not formerly used to. Great ones sin in their variety of garments; they have many lie spoiling by them, when the nakedness of others is seen for want of clothes: therefore God threatens to take away their changeable suits of apparel, Isa. iii. 22. They sin in the strangeness of them, they will have strange fashions; therefore, Zeph. i. 8, God threatens to "punish the princes, and the king's children, and all such as are clothed with strange apparel." The Jews had peculiar garments appointed them, Numb. xv. 38; Deut. xxii. 12; but they fetched in foreign garments, made after the manner of the heathens and nations about them. The courtiers and great ones then, as now, affected strange and costly apparel, were prodigal of their estates that way, had their chests and wardrobes filled with rich garments, which at pleasure they put on, to draw respect from men, but wrath from God; who clothed himself with vengeance, Isa. lix. 17, that he might clothe them with desolation; which was a strange garment, never put upon their backs before; an unchangeable garment, which lasted to their death. God stripped them by the Chaldeans of their proud attire, rich suits, yea of all they had, and clothed them with desolation; hence, Lam. iv. 5, "They that did feed delicately are desolate in the streets; they that were brought up in scarlet embrace dunghills."

Obs. 3. Wheresoever is a generality of sinning, there shall be a generality of suffering. "The king shall mourn, and the prince shall be clothed with desolation, and the hands of the people of the land shall be troubled." The whole nation was rebellious, Ezek. ii. 3; from the greatest to the least they were guilty, Jer. vi. 13, and therefore they should die from the least to the greatest, Jer. xlv. 12. God is impartial in his judgments; he will not spare kings, princes, nobles, people; but if their hearts, heads, hands be joined in wickedness, they shall be joined in punishment. All flesh had corrupted its ways, Gen. vi. 12, and all flesh was drowned in the floods of God's wrath, Gen. vii. 21. The Sodomites were all guilty, and none escaped the vengeance of eternal fire, Jude 7. And here, having all sinned, the wrath of God seized upon them all. Isa. lxx. 12, Ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not."

Obs. 4. That God smites sinners in that they have much offend'd with, and should stand them in most stead in times of affliction. "The hands of the people," &c. They had sinned with their hands several ways; in making idols, Isa. ii. 8; Hos. xiv. 3; in shedding blood, Isa. lix. 3; in acts of violence, ver. 6; they did evil "with both hands earnestly," Micah vii. 3; even princes and judges had covetous hands. God therefore smites them in their hands; and whereas they should have been serviceable unto them, now in their distress they were troubled, faint, useless. Before they had hands for the queen of heaven, Jer. xlv. 25; but now they had none for the God of heaven. They had hands for the service of Egyptians and Assyrians, Lam. v. 6; but now they had none to serve themselves in their personal callings, or military affairs.

Obs. 5. The Lord observes the ways and works of all. No church, no state, no person, but whatever they do comes under divine cognizance; their ways and deserts are known to the Lord. Some are so profane and atheistical, that they think God sees, regards not the things done here below: Psal. xciv. 5—7, they break in pieces God's people, afflict his heritage, slay, murder widows and fatherless ones; yet say, The Lord shall neither see nor regard it. And in Psal. x. 11, he saith, "God hath forgotten, he hideth his face, he will never see it." And not only God's actual seeing, but his power of seeing and knowing things here is denied; Job xxii. 13, "How doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud?" Some have confidence to say God sees no sin in his children, and others blush not to say he sees not the sins of and in the wicked; and so God shall see no sin at all, they make him an unseeing and unknowing God. David calls this brutishness: Psal. xciv. 8—11, "He that formed the eye, shall he not see? He that teacheth man knowledge, shall not he know?" Yes, saith he, "the Lord knoweth the thoughts of men," and that their thoughts are vanity. What is most remote from man's eye and knowledge, that God knows exactly and afar off, Psal. cxxxix. 2; and denounceth a woe to men of such thoughts and practices, Isa. xxix. 15, "Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?" God seeth them, God knoweth them, and pronounceth a dreadful woe against them. Because men's lives do proclaim that they believe not God's omniscieny, therefore God professeth it openly, Isa. lxvi. 18, "I observed their works and their thoughts." He had known all within and without, and therefore they should be consumed. God's eye is upon all our ways and works: let us every day do as God did, review them, and see that they be good.

Obs. 6. God in his judgments will proceed with sinners according to their ways and deserts. Job xxxiv. 10—12, Elihu proves there that God will not do wickedly, nor pervert judgment; and why? "For the work of a man shall he render unto him, and cause every man to find according to his ways." God is most just, and therefore takes notice of all thoughts, counsels, projects, attempts, and actions, that so he may deal answerably with men; Jer. xxxii. 19, "His eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men, to give every one according to his ways."

That in Rev. xviii. 6, seems to cross this truth; when God will judge Babylon, she must have double punishment, her cup must be doubled. God doth not command here that Babylon should be twice punished for the same sin; that were not according to the rules of divine justice. Double here hath reference to Babylon's dealings with the church: she did greatly afflict Zion, and now God would have Babylon to have double affliction to that: Babylon did unjustly in oppressing Zion; Zion should do righteously in destroying Babylon. And observe the word double, "double unto her double according to her works." If she had twice as many strokes and judgments, twice as much blood shed, as Zion had, it is according to her works, she deserves it, and nothing can be too much for her: therefore, Jer. li. 49, "As Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall, so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth." The Babylonian empire was a little world to Israel, and called itself the universal empire; and Babylon said she was the queen and the only city of all others, Isa. xlvii. 7, 8, the golden city, Isa. xiv. 4; but now when God would punish Babylon for her bloodiness against Zion, not only should Babylon's children that dwelt in her be destroyed, but all her subjects in her great territories should be slain for her sake, or together with her; which sets out the greatness of her punishment suitable to her deserts, and is well called double, for the death of one Israelite deserves the death of two Babylonians.

Obs. 7. They that will not know God in the way of his mercies, shall know him in the way of his judgments. God had walked in paths of mercy amongst this people many years, and they minded not God, honoured him not in the midst of mercies, but fed according to their pastures, and forgot God; therefore he brought heavy judgments upon them, and saith, "They shall know that I am the Lord." This phrase is used above fifty times in this prophet, and assures us that God will be known, and that amidst his enemies; and with an experimental knowledge, for that is the meaning of the words, not a literal and brain knowledge. Isa. xxvi. 11, "When thy hand is lifted up, they will not see; but they shall see;" they will not see to fear, to repent; but they shall see; that is, have experience of the strength of his hand to their shame and destruction.

The phrase of, knowing I am the Lord, sometimes refers to mercies, as Exod. vi. 6, 7; God would bring them out from the burdens and bondage of Egypt, take them for his people, and then they should know him to be the Lord. So in Exod. xvi. 12; 1 Kings xx. 28, God would give them manna, deliver up enemies into their hands, and they should know, &c. that is, have experience of his mercy, truth, and loving-kindness. Sometimes, and mostly, it refers to divine judgment, especially in this our prophet. God would bring in the Chaldeans with the sword, and those grievous calamities which attend it, and they should know that he was the Lord; that is, they should have real experience of his authority, and power over them, they should feel the bitter fruits of his displeasure in them.

CHAPTER VIII.

Ver. 1. And it came to pass in the sixth year, in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I sat in mine house, and the elders of Judah sat before me, that the hand of the Lord God fell there upon me.

In this and the three next chapters you have the grievous sins, and answerable punishments, of the Jews at Jerusalem laid down, with some other things considerable.

This eighth chapter hath three things in it:

I. An introduction to a new vision, ver. 1.

II. The vision itself, from ver. 2—17.

III. A declaration of God's severe dealings with them, ver. 18.

In the introduction to this vision you have these particulars.

1. The time exactly set down when it was, in the sixth year, the sixth month, the fifth day.

2. The place where it was, as he sat in his house.

3. The persons before whom it was, "The elders of Judah sat before me."

4. The cause of it, "The hand of the Lord God fell there upon me."

For the time, it was now the sixth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, and in the sixth month.

The Jews' first month is Nisan, the second Jiar, the third Sivan, the fourth Thanuz, the fifth Ab, and the sixth Elul, and answereth to that which is called August. The fifth day of this month had he this vision, which Junius saith was the sabbath day, which was a day fitting for visions of God. It was now a year, two months, and upwards, since he had his first vision.

"As I sat in mine house." Having been now six years in captivity, the prophet and others had hired, or builded themselves, houses. This was a house of some capaciousness, the elders of Judah sat before him in it; that is, the chief of those that were brought with Jehoiachin into Babylon, 2 Kings xxiv. 12. And why they should come and sit there is inquirable. It was not to catch advantages against the prophet, as some fancy; not to consult of their civil affairs in Babylon, others were more fit for such things than prophets; but it was to hear of the prophet what the Lord intended to do with Jerusalem and the Jews there, what the meaning of the types and visions he had was, whether he had any word of their returning from that condition they were in. Or they came to see if he had any word to speak unto them, being the sabbath day: for on those days it was ordinary for the people to go to the prophets, 2 Kings iv. 23; and Ezekiel sat composed, and disposed to speak the word of God to those who came to him.

"The hand of the Lord God fell there upon me." The powerful operation of the Spirit of Christ seized upon him, and was as a hand carrying him on to that work he was appointed unto; he had a mighty impulse of the Spirit, and was as a man rapt out of himself, wholly acted by the Spirit. See chap. i. 3, where hath been spoken of the hand of the Lord.

Obs. 1. That the Lord takes special notice of the times in which he gives out truths and visions to prophets and people, he keeps an exact account of those years, months, and days. "In the sixth year, the sixth month, and fifth day," &c. So in the first chapter, "In the thirtieth year, the fourth month, the fifth day," the word of the Lord came unto him. You have the time mentioned in chap. xx. 1, "The seventh year, in the fifth month, the tenth day of the month." So in chap. xxvi. 1; xxix. 1; xxxi. 1; xxxii. 1; xl. 1; in these places, there is special notice and account set down of the time wherein God gave out his truth and visions to the prophet, and by him to the people. In chap. xxiv. 1—3, the year, month, day, and name of the day, are written down when Jerusalem was besieged, and a parable put into the prophet's mouth. And not only was it thus in Ezekiel's, but also in other prophets' days, Zech. i. 1; vii. 1; Hag. i. 1; ii. 1, 10. Whatever men's thoughts are of truths, when they are tendered unto them, the Lord looks upon it as a work of great concernment, and registers the time when it is done: In such a year, the city, land, had fasts every month, and the prophets preached such truths and texts unto them: such a month they had a thanksgiving day, and the text was, &c.

Especially in times of affliction, God takes notice what truths are commended by the prophets unto men, and therefore the time in Ezekiel is more particularized than any where else, because many were now in captivity, the rest were coming; and of all truths, those will cost dearest that are preached unto us in our afflictions and not improved.

Obs. 2. That great ones in times of affliction will seek unto the prophets, and prize vision when it is rare. The elders came to his house, sat there expecting some word from him. Ezekiel was a priest and a prophet, chap. i. 3; and priests did teach as well as sacrifice: 2 Chron. xv. 3, "Israel was without a teaching priest;" see Lev. x. 8—11. And Mal. ii. 7, "The priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth."

These elders, the princes and chief ones, were come to seek it at Ezekiel's mouth. Now they were in captivity, now priests and prophets were scarce; and now great ones, that before little regarded the prophets and priests, that mocked them, despised and misused them, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, now they get to Ezekiel's house, wait upon him, and long to hear a word from him.

Afflictions abate the pride of great men's spirits, remove prejudice, awaken conscience, convince of sin, God's greatness and authority over the highest, the shortness of life, of judgment, and that eternal condition which is coming; and when it is so with great ones, they will be glad to go to a poor prophet's house, and hear a word from him. Jeroboam, when his son was sick, sends to Ahijah the prophet, to know what should become of him, 1 Kings xiv. 2, 3. Naaman in his leprosy goeth to the prophet Elisha for help, 2 Kings v. See Isa. xxxvii. 2; Jer. xxxvii. 3; there you shall find great ones, even the greatest, seeking to the prophets in their troubles.

Obs. 3. Meeting in private houses to enjoy God's ordinances, is ancient and warrantable. The elders came to the prophet's house, sat there to hear the word of the Lord; this was above two thousand years ago, therefore ancient; and the prophet taught them in private: they worshipped God in a house, they kept the sabbath there, and therefore not unlawful. This was frequent in Christ's and the apostles' days. Luke x. 38, 39, in Martha's house Christ preached. Acts xx. 7, the disciples met every first day, in houses and chambers; and when they were so met, Paul preached to them. And Acts ii. 46, they brake bread from house to house; that is, privately, in opposition to the public, saith De Dieu. And Acts v. 42, "In every house they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ;" in Cornelius's house they did it, Acts x. 33, 34; in the jailor's house they did it, Acts xvi. 32. The high priests cried out of such meetings, and thought the temple and synagogues, which were allowed by authority, were sufficient. But this would not suffice the apostles, they preached in public to convert the Jews, in private to strengthen the christians; they would not be tied to places, when Christ by his doctrine and practice had warranted them to preach and worship any where.

In Tertullian's time such meetings were counted Tertull. in Apo- factious and schismatical: but he vindicates the same, saying, We are the same congregated, and together, as we are asunder, we hurt, we grieve none. When good and godly men meet together, it is no conventicle, but a court. They are a conventicle, a faction, that, in hatred of good men, meet and plot against them, pretending they are the cause of all evils and disturbances.

In the prelates' days there was much rigour and severity used against godly meetings of this nature, more than ever we read of formerly. It can hardly be shown in Scripture, that ever any met together in private to worship the Lord, were surprised, molested, taken, or imprisoned. For their public preaching they were frequently questioned, and suffered; it is not so evident that they did for their private meetings. These they had in Babylon without imputation or molestation; and shall not Zion be as indulgent to her children as Babylon was to her enemies? If not, Babylon will rise up in judgment against such sons of Zion.

Obs. 4. God honours holy meetings, though they be private. The hand of the Lord fell there, and then, upon the prophet. Where two or three meet together in a sacred manner, God will be in the midst of them, Matt. xviii. 20; he will be president of that meeting, and powerful in it, not only show his presence and power in an ordinary way, but many times extraordinarily, as at this time. John xx. 19, when the disciples were assembled in private, "Jesus stood in the midst of them, and said, Peace be unto you;" and so in ver. 26, when they were met in private Christ came amongst them; he honoured their meetings in a special manner with his presence, blessing, and miracles. The world hath prejudice against such meetings, speaks ill and attempts the ruin of them; but Christ thinks honourably of them, puts honour upon, and manifests his acceptance of them. Acts ii. 1—4, when the apostles were got together in a house, the cloven tongues of fire sat upon each of them, and they were filled with the Holy Spirit. Acts x. 44, while Peter was preaching in Cornelius's house, the Holy Ghost fell upon them. And you will scarcely find such visible signs of God's presence in public as were then in private.

I speak not this to disparage public meetings, God is in the solemn assemblies, there his glory and power is seen; but to take off that odium which is in the hearts of many against all private meetings.

Obs. 5. Those who wait upon God in the ways of his worship are not losers by it. The elders came to the prophet, sat there, expected something from him, and they had more than ordinary; they beheld the hand of God upon the prophet, and were made witnesses of that vision he had, and partakers of the same.

The people that flocked after Christ into the field, had the word, and besides that, the loaves and fishes, John vi. When the disciples were met together to worship the Lord the first day of the week, Christ came to them, breathed upon, and gave them the Holy Ghost, John xx. 19, 22. Paul seeks God in prayer, Acts ix. 11, and continued in it, "Behold he prayeth," he was at it night and day; and Ananias was sent to him to help him to his sight, and to the Holy Ghost, so that he might see men, and how to save men. Old Simeon, and old Anna the prophetess, they came into the temple to serve the Lord, and at that time Christ is brought in, whom they see, and magnify God for, Luke ii. In Acts xvi. 13, you read how Paul left the city and went to a river-side, where women did usually meet to pray; thither many were come, and to them Paul preaches; Lydia's heart is opened, and Christ left in, who was before a stranger unto her; and besides this, she was baptized, and gained the company of the choicest apostles, ver. 14, 15. Cornelius, Acts x. fasts and prays, and he hath an angel sent to him, to assure him that all was accepted in heaven; and to help him to the speech of an apostle, whom hearing, he received the Holy Ghost, ver. 44. Men lose not, but gain greatly, by waiting upon God in his ordinances. If they have not what they expect sometimes, they have more than they look for at other times. "Blessed is the man that heareth me," saith Christ, Prov. viii. 34, "watching daily at my gates, waiting at the posts of my doors." They are blessed already, and unexpected blessings are waiting for them.

Obs. 6. That former operations and impressions of the Spirit suffice not the holiest of men, when new services are to be done. Ezekiel was a holy prophet, he had the hand of God, the virtue of the Spirit, falling upon him before, chap. i. 3, entering into him, chap. ii. 2, strongly upon him, chap. iii. 14; and yet all this was not sufficient; there was new work for him, new visions to be seen and given out, and the hand of the Lord fell anew upon him.

New employments must have new influences: new trials must have new strength; if we trust to antecedent receipts, we shall miscarry. Peter failed when he came to encounter with a new trial; he leaned upon what he had, and looked not up for more. Paul stood, when buffeted by a messenger of Satan; and why? being conscious of his own weakness, and insufficiency of what he had received, he sought to God, who told him, "My grace is sufficient for thee;" not the graces I have given thee, but the grace I have to give thee. If a messenger of Satan molest thee, be too strong for thee, I have a messenger, even my Spirit of grace, that shall come and comfort thee, that is stronger than all, and shall uphold thee. Paul had experience of this, and therefore counsels Timothy, 2 Tim. ii. 1, to "be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus." Though he had unfeigned faith, knew the Scripture from a child, had a gift given him by the laying on of Paul's hands: yet he must not be strong in these, but in the grace of Christ, see his strength lie there. Former impressions of Christ's Spirit wear out, and received virtue is soon spent: we must look for new influences, impressions, and operations of the hand of Christ, else all will be too little. Cant. iv. 16, "Awake, O north wind; and come, thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out." "And Samson called unto the Lord, and said, O Lord God, remember me, I pray thee, and strengthen me, I pray thee, only this once," Judg. xvi. 28.

Ver. 2. Then I beheld, and lo a likeness as the appearance of fire: from the appearance of his loins even downward, fire; and from his loins even upward, as the appearance of brightness, as the colour of amber.

Our prophet being in an ecstasy, the Lord Jesus Christ appears unto him as a man, and is described,

1. Generally, and that is by a likeness of fire: he seemed to him to be a man of fire, or as the appearance of fire.

11. More particularly; and,

1. From his loins downward, and the appearance thereof was as fire.

2. From his loins upward, the appearance whereof was,

(1.) As brightness:

(2.) As the colour of amber.

Christ being presented here as a man of fire, it is worthy consideration to examine the grounds of it.

The Jews had sinned exceedingly, provoked God by their idolatry to great jealousy, and being now resolved upon their destruction, he gives out a fiery vision of Christ unto the prophet, which appearance was suitable to the work now intended.

Appearances in fire have been formerly. Christ appeared to Moses in a flame of fire, Exod. iii. 2; the angel there, interpreters make to be Christ: and God led the Jews in the wilderness by a pillar of fire, Exod. xiii. 21; and he was in that pillar, Exod. xiv. 24.

Christ is likened to fire,

1. It is a shining, glorious thing; so Christ is glorious: John i. 14, "We beheld his glory, the glory as," &c. And, Titus ii. 13, his appearing will be glorious, and so glorious as to lighten the world. When men come to judgment, they come with some glory and majesty.

2. He is likened to fire, to set out his knowledge and discovery of things. Fire is of a discovering nature, and makes manifest; Rev. i. 14, Christ's eyes are like a flame of fire, they see into every place; and here Christ discovers to the prophet the sins of Jerusalem, the hidden abominations there.

3. To show the active virtue which is in Christ. Fire is alive and purging thing, separating dross from the precious metals; and Christ is of infinite virtue, he distinguisheth between the precious and the vile: Mal. iii. 2, "He is like a refiner's fire," exceeding active and discretive, he burns with zeal and jealousy.

4. The severe punishment he would inflict upon this people. Fire notes revenge, destruction: Psal. xviii. 8, "Fire out of his mouth devoured." Isa. lxvi. 15, 16, fire there notes severe punishment and utter destruction; and Christ now would make a final end of this sinful people, he would be a fire unquenchable. If they looked to him upwards, they should find him a fire, he would plead with his Father for their destruction. If they looked downwards, they should see him kindling a consuming fire amongst them. The law was given in fire, Deut. iv. 33; v. 4, and therefore called a fiery law; and Christ appears in fire when he comes to revenge the breaches of the law.

In chap. i. 27, Christ's appearance from his loins upward and downward is the same; here, downwards he appears as fire, upwards, as brightness: fire noting his anger, brightness his clemency, as some conceive.

The word for brightness notes such וְהָיָה brightness as is from the morning, the firmament, the sun; therefore some render it, As the appearance of the bright sun. Take the sun when in it's greatest lustre and glory, such was the appearance of Christ upward, and may note the glory of Christ in execution of judgment, in giving out his threatenings to the prophets against sinners.

"As the colour of amber." Of this hath been spoken, chap. i. 4, 27. The Hebrew, chasmat, signifies a coal intensely hot; and such as a coal is, at the height of its heat, in a fiery furnace, such was the appearance of Christ: at this time he was in a way of wrath, and giving out threats against this people, and filled with the fire of zeal and jealousy for the Lord.

Obs. If the appearance of Christ be fiery and glorious, the presence of him will be so much more: Appearances are not perfect expressions of that they resemble. The appearance of fire upon the tabernacle, Numb. ix. 15, had not that virtue and glory in it which real fire had; if real, it would have consumed the tabernacle. The appearance of lightning, Dan. x. 6, is not so glorious as lightning itself; and what the prophet saw here of Christ was appearance only, little to that which is in Christ.

When Christ shall really be seen, not in visions, but as he is, he will be very glorious. Mark xiii. 26, when Christ comes, it will be "with great power and glory," great, refers to glory as well as power: Matt. xxiv. 30, there it is "with power and great glory." And if you demand how great, even so great as cannot be greater: Matt. xvi. 27, "He shall come in the glory of his Father," and no glory can exceed that.

Ver. 3. And he put forth the form of an hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north; where was the seat of the image of jealousy, which provoketh to jealousy.

In the former verse you had Christ's person described; in this are his actions commended to us, which are these:

I. The putting forth of his hand.

II. The employment thereof, by it he took our prophet by a lock.

III. The lifting him up between heaven and earth by his Spirit.

IV. The bringing him to Jerusalem; where is considerable,

1. The manner of his bringing; "in the visions of God."

2. The special place; he was brought "to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north."

3. The nature of this place; it was the seat of an image, which is described,

(1.) From its name; an "image of jealousy."

(2.) From the effect; it "provoketh to jealousy."

"He put forth the form of an hand." He that appeared like fire, that had such brightness, and was so glorious, he put forth his hand; sent out his hand, is the original. Not a real hand, but the form or likeness of a hand. It was the likeness and appearance of a man that he saw, and such was the hand here; not a substantial, fleshy hand.

"And took me by a lock of mine head." By the hair, the word signifies, that which grows out of the head and flourisheth there, as grass out of the ground, or boughs out of a tree.

"The spirit lifted me up between," &c. It was said the hand took hold of him; did not the hand lift him up? if not, to what end took it hold? That hand was the Holy Spirit of Christ, which in these visions of Ezekiel is oft called a hand, chap. i. 3, and iii. 14. The Spirit that lifted him up is called "the hand of the Lord," because Christ by his Spirit doth whatever the hand of man can do.

"And brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem." The prophet thought himself like a bird or an angel flying through the air, and carried to Jerusalem. This was no real elevation or corporeal transportation of the prophet to Jerusalem, as will appear thus:

1. It is said it was "the form of a hand," the likeness of one, not a hand itself.

2. Had he been really taken up by a lock, it would have been exceeding grievous and tormenting to him, if not deadly.

3. He saith he was brought "in the visions of God to Jerusalem," not in the reality of his person; all was done as he sat in his house, and the elders of Judah before him. The ancients say, it was in his spirit, not in his body, that he was translated, a mental, not an ocular vision.

Our prophet being in a rapture, or ecstasy, seemed as a man dead, and had secret things revealed unto him, which he calls "visions of God." Whether these were to his spirit in the body, or called out of it, is uncertain. 2 Cor. xii. 1, 2, when Paul had his revelation and visions, whether it was in the body or out of it himself could not tell. Visions they both had, and they were visions of God, not delusions of Satan, who can be a lying spirit in the hearts and mouths of false prophets, 1 Kings xxii. 22. Nor were they fancies of their own; for when men are in divine raptures, there is a cessation of all sensible and natural actions; nature contributes nothing thereunto. In some diseases there is a stilling of all nature's organs and operations, as when deliquium animæ, a fainting, seizeth upon any; but there is nothing then offered to the soul, as here. Such visions had our prophet as were clear, and without all doubt he knew them to be visions of God.

"The door of the inner gate." The temple was yet standing, and had two courts; one called the outer court, Rev. xi. 2, which was the place whither the Israelites assembled Mead on Rev. for divine exercise; and an inner court, 1 Kings vi. 36, which was the priests' court, 2 Chron. iv. 9. The other was the great court, and called Solomon's porch, saith Maldonat. Into this court was Ezekiel brought, and set at the door going into the inner court.

"That looketh toward the north." In the courts about the temple there were gates and doors towards the four quarters of the world; which included this mystery, that in due time the partition-wall should be broken down, that stood between Jews and gentiles, and all sorts from all parts should come in to the true worship of the true God; came they from east or west, south or north, there should be a door open to let them in. At this north gate was the image seated that the prophet did first see.

"Image of jealousy." Two things are to be opened here:

1. What this image was.

2. Why called an image of jealousy.

1. It is doubted amongst the learned what image this should be. The most agree it was the image of Baal. It is true that Josiah had taken away Baal and his altars, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4; but Jehoiakim, and Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah had restored them again, as is gathered from 2 Kings xxiii. 37; xxiv. 9, 19; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14.

2. Why called the image of jealousy. The heathens had no idols or gods of that name, nor is it so called in reference unto them; but,

(1.) From the wicked zeal of Ahaz, who, as you read, 2 Kings xvi. 10, sent the pattern of an altar at Damascus to Urijah, who set it up for the honour of Baal at the north gate of the inner court; and to this altar did Ahaz bring the altar of the Lord, ver. 14: here was his zeal for Baal.

(2.) Because it provoked God to jealousy. When God saw his own altar and word to be so abused, subjected to Baal, that his people went a whoring from him to that shameful thing, he would bear no longer, but was jealous for his honour, discovers to the prophet their great sin, and his jealousy burning now against them.

This image made the people forsake their God, commit spiritual adultery, Jer. vii. 30, and God would recompense it now unto them.

It was seated at the gate northward; because that way was the most frequent passage to the temple, the ascent being not so steep and difficult as other sides of the hill, on which the temple stood, and for that sacrifices came mostly from that side.

Obs. I. The Spirit is the agent of Christ, by which he doth his works. He put forth his hand, and took hold of me. The hand of a man is that which doth immediately take hold of a thing; so the Spirit being the immediate agent which Christ useth, is called a hand, and doth whatever the Lord Christ will have done. If he would have men walk in his statutes, keep his judgments, he puts his Spirit into men, and by it causeth them to do so, Ezek. xxxvi. 27; that is the hand which overacts them. If he would have young or old prophesy, it is done by his Spirit, Joel ii. 28. And the prophets gave out what the Spirit gave in to them, Zech. vii. 12. If the Lord Christ would not have Paul preach in Asia, the Holy Ghost forbids him; if he would go into Bithynia, the Spirit suffers him not, Acts xvi. 6, 7; if he should preach, the Spirit presseth him in his spirit, Acts xviii. 5. It is Christ's Spirit that mortifies our corruptions, Rom. viii. 13, that helps us to pray, ver. 25. It is the Spirit works all graces in us, Gal. v. 22, 23. It is not by might nor power, but by the Spirit, Christ doth all, Zech. iv. 6.

Obs. 2. That holy men must be lifted up out of themselves, and above themselves, if they would participate of divine things. The Spirit lifted up the prophet between earth and heaven. Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 4, was caught up into paradise, where he heard the unspeakable words; the Spirit of God had lifted him up above himself and all worldly things, and then God spake such things to him as he never heard. Rev. i. 10, John was in the Spirit when he had those great and glorious revelations; he was in the Spirit, that is, in the hand of the Spirit, and by the power thereof lifted up, and carried above and out of himself. There was not only a pressure of the Spirit, but a comprehension; the Spirit comprehended him; he was in a manner all Spirit; and the more spiritual any is, the more fit for converse with God, and to have visions of God. "The natural man receiveth not the things of God," 1 Cor. ii. 14; it is not flesh and blood that reveals, receives, and judges of them: men must be lifted up by the Spirit from the earth, their earthly dispositions and affections, before they are fit for divine excellency. Those who have left the earth as Paul did, they have their conversations in heaven as he had, they are fitted to know and partake of the great mysteries of Christ. Self is the great let to divine things; therefore apostles were usually rapt out of themselves when they had their visions.

Obs. 3. Christ by his Spirit makes known to the prophet the sins of men; the Spirit showed him the image of jealousy, and the abominations the people committed at Jerusalem. Ezekiel was in Babylon, and yet by the help of the Spirit he comes to see and know the doings of sinners at Jerusalem. When they should hear Ezekiel had prophesied or reached of their sins particularly, they would wonder who had informed him of them; as now, when ministers preach conscientiously, and meet with the particular sins of men and women, they think some or other have informed them, told tales of them, when it is only the Spirit of God hath directed them. A godly minister was charged to be a conjurer, because he told men in his preaching of the particular things they did. It is the Spirit helps in studying, and in preaching. The Spirit convinces the world of sin, John xvi. 9; and the ministers of the sins of the world, that so they may abhor those sins, and denounce the judgments of God against them.

Obs. 4. Wicked men are wise, and take their advantages to promote their superstitions. They set their image of jealousy at the inner gate northward; that way was the greatest concourse of people, and so the advantage great for their worshipping of or before this image. Men are "wise to do evil," Jer. iv. 22; they set up altars in all the streets of Jerusalem, to burn incense to Baal, that shameful thing, Jer. xi. 13; they could not suffer any street to be without an altar; they were wise and zealous to promote sin. Jeroboam feared lest the people should go from him, and therefore, in his witty wickedness to prevent it, sets up the calves at Dan and Bethel, 1 Kings xii. 29. The papists have had repute for such wisdom; they had their crosses in highways, and in public places where people most frequented.

Obs. 5. When images go up, then the worship of God goes down. Ahaz set up Baal, and brought the altar of the Lord to it; Baal was regarded, and the true God and his worship neglected, 2 Kings xvi. 14. Men are zealous for their own inventions, and jealous lest they should suffer.

Obs. 6. Superstition and idolatry are provoking sins, they provoke God, who is a God of patience, to jealousy; Dent. xxxii. 16, "They provoked him to jealousy with strange gods," strange inventions. Sins of this nature are called "provocations," Ncn. ix. 18, great provocations. No sins provoke God more than idolatry and false worship.

(1.) It is a breaking of covenant with God, who had taken people in to be his, as a husband doth a wife; and when she breaks covenant, forsakes the guide of her youth, and is for others, this provokes the husband more than any thing besides.

(2.) Because it is a giving God's honour and glory to idols. Aquinas saith, Nos adoramus adoratione latine inagmen Christi. Parte 3. q. 25. a. 3. Tom 1. Controv. 7. l. 2. c. 23. We adore the image of Christ with divine worship. Bellarmine with many others acknowledge that the image of Christ may in some kind be honoured cultu latine. When God's glory is given to creatures, this provokes "the eyes of his glory," as it is Isa. iii. 8; and he will not endure that his glory and praise be given to another, Isa. xlii. 8.

(3.) They that are guilty this way hate God, Exod. xx. 5. Being provoked therefore, and the spirit of jealousy kindled in him, he will not put it up, he will not spare; according to that in Prov. vi. 34, "Jealousy is the rage of a man; therefore he will not spare in the day of vengeance;" and Cant. viii. 6, "Jealousy is cruel as the grave," no mercy will be shown. God will "stir up jealousy, and prevail against his enemies," Isa. xlii. 13, devour whole lands by the fire of his jealousy, Zeph. iii. 8.

Ver. 4. And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel was there, according to the vision that I saw in the plain.

Our prophet being visionally brought to Jerusalem, Christ by his Spirit shows him glory, which is set forth,

- I. Absolutely; the glory of God.
- II. Relatively; the God of Israel.
- III. The place; there at the inner gate.

The glory of God, that is, the glorious God, was there manifesting his glory to him in some visible way.

IV. The manner; according to the vision he had seen.

In chap. iii. 23, the prophet saith, he "arose and went forth into the plain; and, behold, the glory of the Lord stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar." He had twice before seen the glory of God, and now here again he sees it.

There is nothing difficult in the words; one thing is considerable in them, why the prophet had now a third time the glory of God presented to him.

1. To keep his heart in a humble and reverential frame, that whatever God revealed to him about the utter ruin of the Jewish nation, he should not stick at it, decline the revealing of it, because he saw that God was a glorious and dreadful God.

2. To let him see what unspeakable wrong the Jews had done him, to forsake the glorious God, to serve base, shameful, dunghill idols; this made God complain, Jer. ii. 11, "They have changed their glory for that which doth not profit," the God of Israel for the gods of the nations.

3. To kindle the zeal of the prophet. When he had seen God so glorious once, twice, or thrice, and also what they had done to this God; this could not but fire his spirit, and make him burning with zeal, in justifying God, and denouncing threatenings against such idolaters.

4. To let the prophet see that he was going away from his sanctuary, and from his people: and therefore it is said, "the glory of the God of Israel was there," there at the inner gate looking northward, where the image which provoked so much was; not that the glorious God would have communion with the image; but to evidence, that seeing they had brought in a false god, the true God would leave them.

5. To confirm the prophet in the truth of this prophecy, and make way for the high esteem of it in after-ages, being brought in with so many glorious visions.

“God of Israel.” Jacob’s name being changed to “Israel,” Gen. xxxii. 28, in time the Jews came to be called “Israelites,” Exod. ix. 7, “The children of Israel,” Exod. xix. 3. And God taking them for his people, is frequently styled “the God of Israel,” Exod. v. 1; Josh. vii. 19. And he is so styled here to put them in mind of two things:

1. The covenant that he made with their fathers, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Moses, Deut. xxix. 12, 13. God took them to be his people, and became their God.

2. The great things he had done for Israel above all other people. None of the nations had such a God as their God was. The nations’ gods were impotent, impure, perishing gods, but the God of Israel was the Lord of hosts; Jer. vii. 3, “Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel.” He had all power, command of all creatures, and could do enough for them. He was “the Holy One of Israel,” Isa. v. 19, and would not endure iniquity in Jacob and Israel; “the Strength of Israel,” 1 Sam. xv. 29, and never failed, and did wonderful things for them; he brought them out of Egypt, &c. Micah vi. 4; he had known them above all families of the earth, Amos iii. 2.

Obs. 1. That the true God, the God of Israel, is a glorious God; he is a glorious essence, and essential glory. Psal. xxix. 3, he is “the God of glory,” and Psal. xxiv. 7, 9, 10, he is thrice called “the King of glory.” Not only hath he glory to dispose of to others, but he is a King all of glory, and glorious excellences: his attributes are glory, his omnipotence, omniscience, eternity, immutability, wisdom, justice, mercy, holiness, are his glory; Exod. xv. 11, he is “glorious in holiness.” It is said of Aaron, he had garments for glory, Exod. xxviii. 2. God’s attributes are his garments for glory; and how glorious is God, who hath so many glorious garments on him! There is nothing in God, or about him, but it is glorious: his eyes are eyes of glory, Isa. iii. 8; his right hand is glorious, Exod. xv. 6; his arm is glorious, Isa. lxiii. 12; his majesty is glorious, Psal. cxlv. 5; his work is glorious, exi. 3; his works of creation, providence, redemption are so; his name is glorious, 1 Chron. xxix. 13; his glory is so bright, so great, that it fills the earth, Isa. vi. 3; his Spirit is glory, 1 Pet. iv. 14; his Son is the Lord of glory, 1 Cor. ii. 8. God is not only glorious, or glory, but excellent glory, 2 Pet. i. 17; it exceeds the glory of the sun, the glory of all kings, of all angels and glorious ones, of the whole creation, yea, the comprehensions of all intelligent creatures; it is so excellent, that none but God himself can measure it.

Let us give glory to the God of Israel who is so glorious, acknowledge what he hath done, magnify his name, multiply his praises: where praises dwell, God dwells; Psal. xxii. 3, “He inhabits the praises of Israel.” He is the God of Israel, dwells there, to counsel, comfort, deliver, sanctify, and save them: they praise him, and he is there to give in daily new matter of praise.

Obs. 2. Sight of the glory of God is a great privilege, it is not for every one to see. Ezekiel saw it; not all in Babylon, not all the elders who were in the house with him. Ungracious, unbelieving spirits see not divine glory; John i. 14, “We beheld his glory,” not others; we that received of his fullness, of his graces, we had the favour and the power to behold his glory. Many saw Christ’s miracles, but not his glory held out by them, John ii. 11. When the water was turned into wine, Christ manifested his glory, which the disciples saw, not others: they believed; and Christ told Martha, if she believed, she should “see the glory of God,” John xi. 40. Faith is the eye of the soul, and God shows his glory in Christ to that eye.

Obs. 3. That whithersoever God calls a man, he can show him his glory. At the river Chebar he had seen it, in the plain also, and now at Jerusalem, which abounded with idolatry.

Ver. 5, 6. Then said he unto me, Son of man, lift up thine eyes now the way toward the north. So I lifted up mine eyes the way toward the north, and behold northward at the gate of the altar this image of jealousy in the entry. He said furthermore unto me, Son of man, seest thou what they do? even the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here, that I should go far off from my sanctuary? but turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations.

In these and the following verses are gradually set out the great abominations of the Jews at Jerusalem. Their wickedness was not positive only, but superlative, of the highest nature. Besides the appellation, “son of man,” the fifth verse hath in it,

I. Christ’s commandment, “Lift up thine eyes.”

II. The prophet’s obedience, “So I lifted up mine eyes.”

III. The thing seen, “The image of jealousy.”

IV. The place where, “At the gate of the altar in the entry.”

“Lift up thine eyes.” This phrase imports a thorough view, an exact notice of things. Gen. xlii. 10, “Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld all the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered every where;” he diligently considered the place and commodities of it. Isa. xlix. 18, “Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold;” that is, consider well how all that gather against thee shall be for thy good. The lifting up of the eyes notes a distinct and fuller observation of things: and so here, Ezekiel, be not remiss and careless in the viewing of things, but lift up thine eyes, open them fully, observe exactly what is before thee. This you must take to be meant of the eyes of his mind, not his body; for he was in an ecstasy in the spirit at Jerusalem, not in the flesh.

“At the gate of the altar.” No gate was so called originally; but after Ahaz had corrupted the worship of God by his altar from Damascus, fixed an altar by that gate, and brought the Lord’s altar thither, 2 Kings xvi. 14, it is conceived hereupon this gate was called the altar-gate; there was an altar for Baal, and a misplaced altar for God.

Obs. 1. If we will rightly discern the corruption in worship, distinguish between what is human and what is divine, we must set the eyes of our minds to work, they must be lift up, be open, and intent to the thing. There is great difference between the external view and judgment of the flesh, and between the internal view and judgment of the spirit. This Baalitical altar, doubtless, was glorious outwardly, as false worship is, (Jeroboam’s calves were golden ones, 1 Kings xii. 28,) and affected the eyes, stole away the hearts, of many; but it was loathsome to the eye of a judicious, considering mind; God’s worship was hindered, defiled by it, his jealousy provoked, and their ruin procured by it.

The popish religion is pompous, and to carnal eyes hath beauty in it; but to those that lift up the eyes of their mind, and well consider, it is superstitious, idolatrous, and abominable. Some have called the ceremonies used lately in our worship innocent: but those who examined them well, found them injurious, the seed of contention, snares to conscience, and flies in our precious ointment. John vii. 24, "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment;" see exactly into things, let the eyes be lift up, and so shall you pass a more judicious sentence.

How pompous was our worship become lately, but since eyes have been lift up, the vanity, corruption, and superstition thereof have appeared.

Obs. 2. They may safely observe, examine, the nature and sinfulness of false worship, who have a call unto it. The Lord Christ bids Ezekiel "behold the image of jealousy;" see what the people did there. The prophet did not willingly lift up his eyes, but at command, and being lawfully called to it, there was no danger of being seduced, of bowing to Baal, of countenancing false worship: God keeps those who are in the way he sets them. Had the prophet, out of curiosity and desire to see this altar, this image, gone to Jerusalem, he might have been insnared; as too many of our nation by going to Rome, having no better ground than an itching desire to see and know what is done there. Romish worship hath inveigled them, jesuitical charms bewitched them, and lost they have both truth and innocency; their consciences have been defiled, and their judgments prejudiced against those ways they were formerly acquainted with. If the spirits of some have been heightened against those abominations by the sight of them, this is matter for wonder, not for imitation. It is not safe entering into the lions' den because one Daniel was kept safe there; where one hath been preserved, scores have been corrupted, and many of them insensibly. Philosophers say, an egg wrapped up in salt loses the good meat which was in it, the shell remaining whole: and so when young ones travel into those brackish countries, and live amongst those who are salted with popery, they lose the good savour they had of true religion, and only the shell remains whole.

Obs. 3. See here the tractableness, the obediential frame of the prophet's spirit. Christ commands him to lift up his eyes, and so he lift up his eyes, he doubted not, disputed not, he lingered not; but the word being given out, immediately he obeys, his spirit was set towards, and suitable to, the will of Christ. He might have stuck and said, It is an abominable idol, an accursed thing that provokes thee to jealousy, mine eyes shall never see that which so pollutes thy worship, and is so contrary to thy glory; but he presently submits, and fulfils the will of Christ, which is very acceptable unto him. Moses's delays made God angry, Exod. iv. 14; and it is the great shift of Satan to keep men off from obeying the will and voice of God by delays. He doth not tell men the commands in Scripture are not the commands of God, but he causeth delays, and so impedes, retards the execution of divine commands; so that God is hearkened unto months and years after the command is gone forth: such obedience is not so precious and acceptable. David knew it, and therefore saith, Psal. cxix. 60, "I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments." A lazy, lingering spirit is a provoking spirit. David made haste and ran when God commanded, which greatly pleased God. Abraham is bidden to leave his country, and go to an uncertain place he knew not whither; he did it presently, and it is twice recorded in Scripture, Gen. xii. 1, 4; Acts vii. 3, 4.

Ver. 6. He said furthermore unto me, Son of man, seest thou what they do? even the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here, that I should go far off from my sanctuary? but turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations.

This verse needs little opening. It is probable that some of the Jews were worshipping before that idol Baal, whereupon the Lord being moved, asketh our prophet whether he did not see what they did, even such things as would cause him to depart from them, and to leave them to the spoil of enemies. They intended not to drive God out of the sanctuary, but that was the sequel and fruit of their abominations.

"That I should go far off from my sanctuary." The Hebrew runs thus; To go far from the sanctuary; not, I should go: and so some refer it to the people that worshipped Baal; and so those who pervert, corrupt the worship of God, go from the sanctuary; they go from God, and have nothing to do with him. But I conceive it refers to God, who would leave the sanctuary, because of the pollutions and corruptions in it.

Obs. 1. That where God's pure worship is, there is his presence. God had given them pure ordinances in the temple, and there he was; 2 Kings xix. 15, he dwelt "between the cherubims." They were upon the ark of the covenant in the sanctuary, where God manifested himself, and gave out oracles to those who sought him; hereupon David, Psal. xxvii. 4, desired to "dwell in the house of the Lord, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple;" there he saw the beautiful face of God, and heard his sweet voice. God is in his own ordinances, when the temple is measured out, and the holy city built, according to God's mind; and then the name shall be Jehovah-shammah. "The Lord is there," Ezek. xlvi. 35; and the churches, whilst golden candlesticks, Christ is in the midst of them.

Obs. 2. Corruptions, abominations in worship, cause the Lord to leave his people, to depart from his sanctuary. They brought in heathenish altars, set up Baal, and removed God's altar out of its place; and hereupon God forsakes his dwelling-place, his presence, protection, counsel, countenance, blessings, are all withdrawn from them. And woe is to that people when God goeth out of the sanctuary! if outward calamities do not ruin them, spiritual judgments undo them. But see the mischief of false worship, men's additions and mixtures with the pure ordinances of the Lord; they are as smoke to God's eyes, vinegar and gall to his taste, abominations to his Spirit; if they must go into his house, he will go out of it: when the ark comes in, Dagon goes down; and when Dagon comes in, the ark goes out. In Christ's time the temple was a den of thieves, and Jehovah was not amongst them. It is needful therefore to stand, contend for pure ordinances and divine worship.

Obs. 3. Men may have ordinances, and forms of worship, without God in them. They had the sanctuary, altars, sacrifices, when God was gone from them, yea, far from them; as they had corrupt ordinances, so powerless ordinances, there was nothing of God, Christ, or his Spirit in them. When God is out of the sanctuary, it matters not who is there, or what is done there, all is to little purpose: 1 Kings xix. 11, 12, there was a wind, an earthquake, a fire, but God was in neither of them; and let there be priests and Levites, sacrifice and incense, preaching and praying, God is not in them.

Obs. 4. There are degrees of sins; abominations great, and greater: sins of ignorance are of a low nature, sins of knowledge higher; the more of the head and heart is in a sin, the worse, the greater, it is; knowledge and will do edify sin much. David's murder, Peter's denial of Christ, were sins more heinous than others which they committed.

Obs. 5. God discovers sins by degrees, not all at once; he had shown him great abominations, and Christ bids him turn, and he should see greater abominations. Sins are not all committed at once, nor all discovered at once, they grow by degrees, and are discovered by degrees. Abominations in kingdoms and churches lie wrapt up in the mantle of secrecy and darkness, but God hath his times to discover and make them known to the sons of men. Hosea ii. 10, "Now will I discover her lewdness." Ephraim had sinned, added abomination to abomination, lewdness to lewdness, and they had been covered up for a season, but now the discovering time was come, several murders and adulteries were brought to light. Ephraim and Samaria's sins were made known when Israel was to be healed, Hosea vii. 1. When God would come and cover the wounds of his own people, then the wickedness of their enemies is laid open. It is evident in our days God hath been upon healing England, and the sins of many have been discovered.

Estates and churches are like bodies full of gross and noxious humours, stir them a little, and they appear, to the danger of the whole.

Ver. 7—12. And he brought me to the door of the court; and when I looked, behold a hole in the wall. Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall; and when I had digged in the wall, behold a door. And he said unto me, Go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here. So I went in and saw; and behold every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel, portrayed upon the wall round about. And there stood before them seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel, and in the midst of them stood Jaazaniah the son of Shaphan, with every man his censor in his hand; and a thick cloud of incense went up. Then said he unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, The Lord seeth us not; the Lord hath forsaken the earth.

These verses contain the second part of the prophet's new vision: where,

I. You have a new discovery of more idolatry in ver. 7, 8, 9, and beginning of ver. 10.

II. A description of it, in ver. 10, 11.

III. The ground of all their vile practices, ver. 12, "They say, The Lord seeth not."

I shall open what hath any difficulty, and so give you the observations.

"The door of the court." Another door than that in ver. 3. It was the door of the Levites' or priests' court, into which none might come that were not of the tribe of Levi; and herein the sin of the priests and people is aggravated, that the priests suffered any to come in there who should not, and that the people durst venture into that holy place, or bring their abominations so near the Lord.

"Dig in the wall, and, behold, a door." The door of the court being shut, he spies a hole, and upon command, digging in that, finds another door about the gates of the wall, "chambers," Ezek. xl. 10, for the door-keepers and Levites, who had their weekly courses of administration, 1 Chron. xxiii. 28; Luke i. 8. And it is likely this door in the wall was a back-door, by which the priests, Levites, and others, entered into their chambers and chapels of imagery, secretly; and our prophet entering in at this door, sees their gross and brutish idolatry.

There they had pictured upon the walls the forms of all things which creep, and of beasts. God had forbidden the Jews to make themselves any images, but now they not only had images, set them in private, but also in public and holy places, and those of the basest sort; crocodiles, cats, moles, beetles, which creatures the Egyptians worshipped, they had portrayed there.

"Abominable beasts." The Hebrew is, of animal abomination. No creatures of God are abominable in themselves; some prohibited by the law were unclean for such and such uses, but yet good in themselves; the picturing of them and others made them abominable. And I conceive abomination refers rather to the form of the creature which they worshipped, than to the creature itself, and may be read thus, Every form of creeping thing, and of beast, is abomination; and secondarily, the creatures abominable, for their form's sake, which were worshipped.

"Seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel." In Numb. xi. 16, God bids Moses gather seventy of the elders together; which done, he joined them with Moses, to help him to bear the burden of the people; these seventy made a standing senate, or their sanhedrim. There were six out of every tribe, which amounted to seventy-two, but were called the seventy; as in Luke x. 1, they are called the seventy disciples, but in the Syriac it is seventy-two. These met in a great court near the sanctuary, called Synedrion, from their sitting there; and this was the great council, to which were admitted those that were wise, afraid to sin, meek and able. Their qualifications are set down, Exod. xviii. 21; Deut. i. 13. And to these, hard and weighty matters were brought to judge of, as defection of tribes, false prophets, war, and such like. Now this council, these seventy, were so degenerate, that they were become idolaters, and offered incense to idols.

Some think they were all priests, because every man was with his censor in his hand; but then it should have been seventy men of the tribe of Levi, not of the ancients of Israel; and besides, it is known that the sanhedrim consisted not all of priests, but some out of every tribe.

"In the midst of them stood Jaazaniah the son of Shaphan." Who this Jaazaniah was is uncertain. Deodate, in his notes upon the place, is mistaken; he saith the name is no where else mentioned, whereas you shall find it twice more, in 2 Kings xxv. 23; Jer. xxxv. 3. There were divers Jaazaniahs; this in the prophet is said to be the son of Shaphan, who, it is probable, was that Shaphan the scribe in Josiah's days, 2 Kings xxii. 12, grandfather or uncle to Gedaliah, whom the king of Babylon left governor in Judea, Jer. xl. 5, 11; so that Gedaliah and Jaazaniah were near of kin, of great place, whether a priest, or some chief ruler. He stood in the midst of the seventy, as being principal; for the chief in wisdom they set over the rest of the sanhedrim, and called him nasi, the prince, they sitting in the form of a half moon before him, or about him. His name signifies hearkening of, or to, the Lord, whom, had he remembered, he would not have been found in such service.

cense; that is, the smoke of the incense was so thick, that it seemed a cloud.

Incense or perfume was made of sweet and costly things, and was a token of worship, yea, chief worship, saith Calvin. Anciently they burnt sweet wood, and with the smoke thereof worshipped their gods. It is like the heathens learned it from Moses, who was appointed of God to burn incense to him, Exod. xxv. 6; xxx. 7, 8. The entrails of beasts boiled, or roasted, the heathens did burn unto their gods at first, but afterwards used incense. Tully saith, that to the statues set up for Caius Marius they burned frankincense or incense, and wax candles, which were in honour thereof. In the primitive times, when they forced the christians to idolatry, they would have them throw a little frankincense into the fire, which was a token of worship.

Obs. 1. That idolaters oftentimes act closely, and cover up their works from the eyes of the world. They had their imagery in chambers and secret places, it was walled up, and unobvious to most eyes. Some covers and pretences such persons always have for their superstitious and idolatries: they cover them with their good intentions, great devotion, religion of their forefathers, such as have some pomp and state; there are in them such objects as help their memories and affections. There is, say they, some truth, some good, and the rest may be borne with; those that worship so, prosper, and are at ease in their way, they meet not with those temptations and troubles others do.

Obs. 2. Such ways of wickedness cannot be carried so close, but there will be some espial of them. Let them make walls to cover them up, yet Providence will order it so, that there will be a hole in the wall, some crevice to look through at and discern their doings; the mystery of iniquity could not work so closely, but it was discerned.

Peter Soave found a hole in the walls of Rome, and discovered the pope's practices to hinder reformation of errors in the council of Trent. The secret plottings and conveyances to bring in popery amongst us by Jesuits and others, were espied, detected, and in due time disappointed.

Obs. 3. To find out exactly the great evils and abominations in states and churches, much pains must be taken. The prophet must dig, and dig in the wall. Their idolatry was fortified and walled up, and clear knowledge of it could not be attained without great toil.

The popish idolatry hath been so walled up by Romish champions, that it cost our worthies and prophets, Whitaker, Reynolds, Perkins, Amess, and others, much digging to discover the ill-favouredness of their imagery. Their strong arguments are answered, and popery hath a black face. And not only in this particular must there be digging to find out the mischief thereof, but also in others. It hath cost this parliament digging to find out the evil in pre-lacy and malignancy in the land.

Obs. 4. Such is the force of superstition and idolatry, that men engaged therein go further, and grow worse. They were not content with the image of jealousy, but they had forms of creeping things and abominable beasts to worship: they multiplied abominations, Ezek. xvi. 51, and had painted gods upon the wall round about, or, as the Hebrew is, about and about, double ranks of gods; superstition knows no end. We were of late in this kingdom got into the paths of superstition, and walked daily further and further therein; they had gotten all gods but the true God.

Obs. 5. Idolatry is a grievous sin, it is abomination, and the Lord therefore calls the prophet to see what they did, that he might be a witness of so great and grievous a sin as that was: and the grievousness of it lies in this;

(1.) That they had forsaken the true God.

(2.) Had changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into the forms of creeping things, beasts abominable.

(3.) That they had brought them into the holy place, even where God's holy ordinances ought to be.

(4.) That they had driven God out of his holy place.

(5.) That the chief men were drawn away, and offered incense to those dunghill gods.

(6.) That they said, "The Lord seeth us not."

(7.) That they looked for help from those helpless gods.

Obs. 6. Note here, that idolatry infatuates wise men. The ancients of Israel were become idolaters; those that were the counsellors and judges, that should have maintained the true worship of God, encouraged others by their counsel and example not to cleave to false worship, but to the true and living God, that should have punished idolaters with death according to the law of Moses, even they become brutish, they worship forms of creeping things; they disclaim the infinite, glorious, great, holy, and wise God, even the God of Israel, and adore bats, moles, &c.: a just hand of God upon men, to whom, because they receive not the truth with the love of it, or the love of the truth, God sends strong delusions, that they believe lies.

Obs. 7. There is consent in wickedness and false worship. Seventy of them are of one mind; they take censurers, and offer incense to base dunghill gods; all the people break off their ear-rings to make a calf. Psal. lxxxiii. 5, "They have consulted together with one consent;" the Hebrew is, with one heart; "and are confederate against thee;" hearty consultation, and hearty confederation against God and his worship. Rev. xiii. 3, "And all the world wondered after the beast, and worshipped the dragon."

Obs. 8. See the cunning of idolaters. The priests, that most usually are first in such ways, they draw in the great ones to countenance their ways, they let them offer incense with their own hands, which was a violence to the priesthood; and they do all in darkness, that so objections may be prevented, some great mysticalness be conceited to be in those ways, which may breed reverence and esteem of them in the hearts of lower persons.

Obs. 9. Idolatrous and superstitious persons are expensive to maintain their worship. Here was much incense burnt to their idols, "a thick cloud went up." In Exod. xxxii. 3, where their idolatry first began after their coming out of Egypt, how prodigal were they of their jewels and ear-rings to make a false god! Egyptian jewels given them for adoration, they make an object of adoration. And when they had made them golden and silver gods, of which God complains, Ezek. xvi. 17, their prodigality ceased not there, but they were at daily charges to honour and maintain them: they decked the high places with garments of divers colours, they covered the gods with brodered garments, they bestowed oil, incense, fine flower, and honey, upon them; yea, they sacrificed their sons and daughters unto them, Ezek. xvi. 18—20.

The papists are profuse in their superstitious worship; the churches of some saints are so stuffed with vowed presents and memories, that they are fain to hang their cloisters and churchyards with them.

It is the nature of idolatry and adultery to be prodigal. If adulterers think nothing too much for their harlots, idolaters think nothing too much for their false worship.

Obs. 10. God appeals to man in a case of great ingratitude and wrong done unto him. They were unthankful for all the great things God had done, they gave that honour which was due unto the Divine Majesty unto images and idols, whereupon saith God to Ezekiel, "Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of Israel do?" Judge thou of it; should not they, being aged, lifted up to honour, invested with power, prevent and punish such sins in a church and state as here are committed? should not they counsel and lead others by their example to serve me, the only true and living God? should it not be so? I appeal to thee to make judgment of it. But they do otherwise; are not the ancients become idolaters? have they not chambers of imagery? are there not censers in their hands? seest thou not the smoke of the incense going up? What thinkest thou, are not these worthy of death themselves for these sins, who should put others to death for the like? Speak thy mind, I appeal to thee in this case; the injury is so notorious, thou canst not but condemn them, and justify me. It is frequent in Scripture for God in such cases to appeal to man and other creatures, Isa. v. 3; Jer. ii. 12; Dent. xxxii. 1. Appeals are relief to the hearts of those that are wronged and grieved, and God in this case deals after the manner of men.

Obs. 11. False worship is a work of darkness. Idolaters have corners, chambers, dark places; these seventy were in the dark, and did the works of darkness. Idolatry is called a "work of the flesh," Gal. v. 19, 20, and all works of the flesh are darkness.

The heathens had their opertanea et tenebrosa sacra, occult and dark worship.

Truth loves the light, but error and iniquity, darkness; John iii. 20, evil-doers hate the light, they hide up themselves and their ways. These seventy had power in their hand, yet durst not justify their works openly, but carried all closely; but how close soever sinners are, God sees them. Those words,

"In the chambers of his imagery," some render it,

Iavater. Calvin. in the secret of their own imaginations; which shows, that whatever are the thoughts, workings, and imaginations of men's hearts, the Lord sees them, and can discover them.

They had idols in their chambers, and idols in their hearts. Idolaters have strong thoughts in their hearts of the ways they are in, of some mystery and excellency in them, which the vulgar know not; but let men be ignorant of them, the Lord sees them. Isa. xxix. 15, men think to hide their counsels, thoughts, practices from the Lord, but he sees the deceitfulness of their hearts, the wickedness in them; and because they carry things close, he searches, he tries them what they are, Jer. xvii. 9, 10.

Obs. 12. That atheism, unbelief, and pride, are the causes of men's going out from God, and falling to idolatrous and other sinful, vile practices; for they say, "The Lord seeth us not, he hath forsaken the earth." Atheism denies his presence, infidelity his assistance, and pride carries them out for help elsewhere, and tacitly lays the blame upon God: He hath left the caring of us, we are in the midst of dangers, and must seek for protection from some deity or other. And if it be a sin, he may thank himself: if he had not forsaken us we would not have forsaken him, chosen any other; but we are necessitated to it. Here is the pride of idolaters; and in Jer. xviii. 15, all these are included in one word, "Because my people hath forgotten me, they have burned incense to vanity." They forgot God, and hereupon became atheistical, unbelieving, and proud.

Ver. 13, 14. He said also unto me, Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do. Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the Lord's house which was toward the north; and, behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz.

Here you have a third part of the prophet's new vision, containing yet greater abominations than before; which is set out,

I. From the place, "The door of the gate of the Lord's house." It was the priests' court, and at the entrance into the Lord's house, and the nearer they sinned to the Lord's house, the greater was the wickedness.

II. The nature of the abomination, "Women sat there weeping for Tammuz." It was not according to law for any to be in that court, at that gate, but priests only. Now here were women, and women sitting and weeping, and that for Tammuz; which were greater abominations than what were before.

What or who this Tammuz was, must be opened unto you; the word is not mentioned elsewhere.

Some rabbies say this Tammuz was a hollow idol, with eyes of lead under which they used to put fire, and the heat melting the leaden eyes, the idol seemed to weep, and so moving compassion in the women, they became co-weepers with it; but the text saith not the idol wept, but that the women wept. Shindler saith the idols had their prophets, and this Tammuz was one of the idolatrous prophets, whom the king slew. In honour of him was set up an idol, so called from his name, or because on the first day of the month Thamuz they did celebrate his festivity: the seventeenth day of this month they fasted for the breach of the tables of the law, and on the first, feasted, and brake the law itself most abominably.

The Vulgate translation reads it, Adonis, and many interpreters so carry it. Adonis was son of Cinarus, king of Cyprus, a great lover of pleasures, chiefly of garden delights; whence arose the proverb, Adonidis horti, the gardens of Adonis, which were curious and choice, but soon fading away.

This Adonis was a great lover of Venus, and being unhappily slain by a boar, great lamentation was made for him; and the rather because he had a sweet voice, and delighted men and women with his singing, from whence his name seems to be given him; and by the lovers of music amongst them he was accounted for a god, and yearly solemnities instituted for him, in which were the weepings of women.

Lucian in his Dialogues saith, that yearly in memory of Adonis's death by a boar, they did beat themselves and weep; after which, they sacrificed to Adonis as dead; and a day after, they, thinking him alive, shaved their heads, and those women who would not do it, were to prostitute their bodies to all strangers for a day, and the gain gotten was given in sacrifice to Venus.

Plutarch saith, women did bring to the solemnities of Adonis images like dead bodies, and, wailing, sang funeral verses.

Maternus Firmicus tells us that an image was put in a bed, bewailed by many; and they having satisfied themselves with weeping, a light was brought in, and the faces of all that wept were anointed, and these words softly pronounced, Trust in the god, he will deliver us from our miseries; and so they unbed the idol with much joy.

Others make Tammuz to be Osiris, husband, brother, or son of Isis, (for authors vary about it,) and king of Ptolem Dic- tionaria. In verbo Apis. Plat. de Isid. et Orind.

Egypt, the same with Apis or Serapis, who, coming into Egypt, and teaching them civility, and how to dress vines, was chosen their king; and having governed them well, at his death was honoured as a god under the form of a black ox. Suidas saith, he was an Egyptian god, worshipped for the moon's sake. The Egyptians called this god Tammuz, or Ammuz, which signifieth in their language, hidden, because the sacred things of this idol were covered and secret.

Ludovicus Vives, in his notes upon August. de Civ. Dei, l. 1. c. 10. tells us, that Osiris was torn in pieces by his brother Typhon; (which some say was for his whoredom with Isis, wife of Typhon, and all his members thrown into Nilus;) this fact greatly afflicted Isis, who with much search and labour got the dispersed members of Osiris again, which caused great joy in her. Hereupon she appointed a set time for seeking of Osiris, with weeping and howling.

Some affirm, Isis buried Osiris's members, being found, in a fenny island near Memphis, which she called Sfix, whither went certain mired persons at set times to mourn and weep: and a goodly ox appearing unto them, they thought it Osiris, whereupon the Egyptians adore an ox for their god, and call it Apis Osiris: this idol being brought to the temple, was their Tammuz. Junius fetches it from a root which signifies to burn, inflame, and thinks thereby is meant the god of the Phœnicians, which is the god of harvest and hot weather; but we may add also, that his worshippers were inflamed with lust and heat, with the fire of concupiscence, they forgot all bounds of modesty. He conceives it to be the same with Osiris (which signifies blessed, or enlightening all things) and with Adonis.

"Women sat there." These women were the she-priests of Isis, and did wear linen garments, and performed many of their wretched rites in waven houses, of which you read, 2 Kings xxiii. 7; the word "hangings" in the Hebrew is houses; women that lived in filthy houses, did weave those houses, or tents, to cover the lewdness of other women when they came to honour Tammuz. There dwelt near to this idol, youths, the servants of Tammuz, which were for all naughtiness; and now at the temple was practised sodomy and all uncleanness; there were houses of sodomites by the house of the Lord.

"Weeping for Tammuz." For his death, many tears were bestowed upon this idol; and being the same with Adonis, is etymologized thus. The lord or god of sorrow. And Theocritus calls him the god honoured with tears; and also the god worthy of threefold love, which they expressed not only in their tears, but in the vilest adoration.

Obs. 1. That when men leave the true God and his worship, they fall upon, and fetch in, any gods; inventions and abominations are increased. If they have gods of their own making, that sufficeth not, but they will have gods other nations have made; therefore it is said, "Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations."

The Jews, after once they fell to idolatry, were not contented with one or two gods, but had a multiplicity of gods. Baal-peor, of the Moabites, Numb. xxv. 3. Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zidonians, 1 Kings xi. 5. Chemosh, the god of the Moabites, 1 Kings xi. 33. Milcom, the abomination of the Ammonites, 2 Kings xxiii. 13. Molech, the abomination of Ammon,

1 Kings xi. 7. Baal-zelub, the god of Ekron, 2 Kings i. 2. Baal, 1 Kings xvi. 31. The gods of Syria, and the gods of the Philistines, Judg. x. 6. The gods of the children of Seir, 2 Chron. xxv. 14. The gods of Damascus, 2 Chron. xxviii. 23. These, with other gods, they had, yet were not content with them, but sought after more, the gods of Edom, 2 Chron. xxv. 20.

The Romans had a temple called Pantheon, wherein they worshipped all gods; only the God of Israel they had not, neither would have, because he must be worshipped alone, and they would not reject all their other gods for one.

Thus is it with Rome; they are not satisfied and settled in their old way, but still multiply saints, orders of friars, Jesuits, articles of faith, and an infinity of intricate dumb ceremonies.

Obs. 2. That false worship and filthiness do usually go together, spiritual and corporal whoredom, idolatry and adultery. These she-servants of Isis wept for Tammuz, but were wanton, lewd with the men that looked to this idol. Houses for all uncleanness were near the temple, and this idol.

Obs. 3. Idolatry spreads unto both sexes; not only men are drawn away to that sin, but the women also, they sat before Tammuz. Idolaters fetch in many gods, he-gods and she-gods; Ashtoreth was a goddess, and the Grecians think Tammuz or Osiris was not a man, but their goddess Ceres; and these gods or goddesses draw persons of all sorts and sexes unto them: Jer. xlv. 9, their wives are taxed for their idolatry.

Obs. 4. Women could weep for Tammuz, Osiris, who for his filthiness justly suffered; they supposed him wronged, and therefore laid out their hearts for him. How much more should we weep for the great and glorious God, who unjustly suffers by all sinners in the world! They wept for an idol, for remembrance of a wicked wretch, when their tears did neither themselves nor the idol good; if we weep for God and his wrong, it will please him, profit us. David did so, Psal. cxix. 136, "Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, because they keep not thy law."

Obs. 5. Idolatry, which is a shameful thing, makes persons shameless. These persons discovered their nakedness to the idol, and offered themselves to commit filthiness with Tammuz. Who could have believed that the Jews, instructed in the law of Moses, would have fetched in such an idol, so beastly, from the Egyptians; and that Jewish women should so far forget the law of God, and the law of nature, as to prostitute themselves in so obscene a manner to so filthy an idol as this was? but idolatry besots, and God in justice gives up to a reprobate sense, Rom. i. 25, 26, 28.

Domnus aper tuus.

Idolatry is shameful; Hosea ix. 10, "They went to Baal-Peor, and separated themselves unto that shame." It was a shameful idol, and made them shameless; for it is judged they did also before this idol discover their nakedness.

Among papists, where idolatry is in countenance, modesty is in disgrace; priests and friars strive to exceed each other in impudence, and what elsewhere would not be tolerated, in Italy is in high honour; and what in other places a loose person would be ashamed to confess, that priests and friars there refrain not openly to practise.

Sands in his Panopæi Speculum, p. 19.

Ver. 15, 16. Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these. And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east; and they worshipped the sun toward the east.

In ver. 15 is a transition to the last part of the vision, lying in ver. 16. And this abomination, yet greater than the former of the image of jealousy, the mixed forms of beasts, and creeping things, than Tammuz, is described,

I. From the place in general, "The inner court." More particularly, "The door of the temple." And yet more specially, "Between the porch and the altar."

II. The persons with their number, "Five and twenty men."

III. Their posture, "With their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east."

IV. Their act, "They worshipped the sun."

This idolatry was in the temple itself, and acted by the chiefest persons. It is conceived these twenty-five were the king and his council; there were two tribes left, and twelve out of each, with the king, made up that number. It is thought these twenty-five are mentioned again in chap. xi, 1, where two princes are named, and therefore probable to be the king and his nobles, the chief and heads of the people. These stood "between the porch and the altar," which was near to the sanctum sanctorum, and where the priests used to weep and pray, especially in times of common calamities, Joel ii. 17.

"With their backs toward the temple of the Lord," &c. The temple was so built that the sanctum sanctorum was in the western part of it, the entrance into it in the eastern part, and when any service was done by the people or priests, in prayer or sacrifice, they did it with their faces westward towards the ark and holiest of holies, and their backs were eastward; which the Lord in wisdom ordered to be so, that he might prevent eastern and sun-worship, which was the practice of the gentiles; whereupon saith Job, chap. xxxi. 26, "If I beheld the sun when it shined," if I looked upon it to adore it as others did; it was the practice then.

Of it speaks Mercurius Trismegistus, In fine Asclepii. when the sun rose they minded the east, but when it set they would not look westward, lest seeing their God dying, in cultu ejus tepescerent, they should become remiss in his worship. And Vitruvius saith, their temples were so built, that they might pray looking to the sun rising. The learned observe, that the Sidonians, Grecians, Romans, Assyrians, Egyptians, and Persians, did all worship the sun, each giving a several name to this god of theirs. The Persians, especially, honoured and stood for this god, whom they called Mithra, that is, Lord or mighty; for in the year 612, when Heraclius the emperor sent to Cosroe king of the Persians for peace, his answer was, he would not lay down arms till he had brought him to worship the sun; but Heraclius prevailed in the wars, and burned his idol temples of the sun. From whomsoever the Jews learned this custom, God had forbid them expressly to worship the sun, moon, and stars, Deut. xvii. 3, and appointed them to worship with their faces westward; yet they turn their backs upon God, as if he were unworthy of any respect from them, and looking towards the east, adore a creature which God had made to serve them.

Obs. 1. It is wisdom not to give way to any sin, but to stop sin in the birth, crush it in the conception.

You see what abominations after abominations, greater and greater, come in here. Lesser sins make way for greater, superstition for idolatry, yea, the worst of idolatry, and other sins.

Obs. 2. That the nearer destruction, the worse they grow in church and state. All was out of order, great confusion amongst them: the land was filled with corruptions, the image of jealousy, chambers of imagery, houses for stews, were about the temple; Tammuz, a most abominable idol, set up, adored in it, women suffered to come there and do shameful things; the ancients offer incense to those who were no gods; the king and nobles come into the priests' court, turn their backs upon God; no priest had any zeal for God to reprove these things, but were deeply in themselves; the land filled with violence, their abominations greater and greater, and judgment at the door.

Obs. 3. That in corrupt times great persons are generally very profane. The twenty-five turn their backs upon God, slight him and his worship, disgrace, reproach the same. What greater indignity could they do to God, than to come into his temple, to the holy place, and there turn their backs upon him, and worship the sun in his presence: it is as if a woman should cast off her husband, and commit lewdness with another man before him.

When Jeremiah's roll was read, the king out and east it into the fire, which others consented unto, Jer. xxxvi. 23, 24. After, he and his agents cut in pieces the vessels of the house of God, shut up the doors of the temple, and would suffer the Lord to have no sacrifice, no incense, no priest; and when God distressed him for his wickedness, he sinned more and more, 2 Chron. xxvi. 22, 24. Belshazzar and his princes drank wine in the sacred bowls of the temple, and praised their idol gods, Dan. v. 2—3, 4. And not only in corrupt times are great ones profane, but even in reforming times; Neh. xiii. 17, the nobles of Judah profaned the sabbath, and increased wrath. Such profane acts God takes very ill, and will requite in their kind. "They have turned unto me the back, and not the face," Jer. xxxii. 33; and therefore "I will show them the back and not the face, in the day of their calamity," Jer. xviii. 17.

Obs. 4. That kings and princes are not to be patterns to us in point of religion and worship. If we will follow them, we may suddenly be led into idolatry. Here be twenty-five, the chief of the city and land, and they turn their backs upon the true God and his worship, and choose heathenish religion, and heathenish practices: the people were not bound to follow them. Great ones soonest go out of God's way, 2 Chron. xxiv. 19, 20, after Jehoiada's death, the princes came and bowed to Joash, gave ill counsel; and with them he hearkened, and they together leave the house of the Lord, his worship, and fell to false worship. Jeroboam, and all the kings and princes in Israel after him, went the wrong way, and never pleased or truly served God for hundreds of years together. We must not follow great ones in matters of religion, and say we will be of that religion the king or parliament are of. Great ones do greatly mistake in the things of God and religion. The princes of this world neither knew the wisdom of God, nor the Lord Christ, 1 Cor. ii. 7, 8; and to this day few of them do know the truth, "for not many wise, mighty, or noble are called," 1 Cor. i. 26. Therefore fetch your religion from Christ and the apostles, who gave out truths which came down from heaven, which embraced, will sanctify you, and fit you for heaven.

Obs. 5. That adoration towards the east was taken up from the heathens, the jews had it from them, and it was displeasing to God; and that practice crept in amongst christians. Tertullian saith, it was a known thing that the christians prayed with their faces toward the east; but the heathens stumbled at it, and said the christians' god was the sun. Some fathers held it an apostolical tradition, that christians should pray with their faces that way; but traditions of fathers are no warrant for worship, or postures in it: we have nothing from Christ or apostles leading us to do so, and from others we may not take up such a practice, though ancient, holy, and learned. Christ and the apostles were before them, more holy, more able than they, and in their writings and practices we find no such thing.

The papists, and some among us, do yet plead for eastern worship; and would have christians look that way, because paradise is that way, because Christ was crucified with his face westward, because he who is the light of the world ascended to heaven there, and shall come again there. These are weak grounds to draw us from that liberty the word gives us, to a superstitious, jewish, heathenish practice, (for deliberately and determinately to do it, in reference to paradise or Christ, is no better;) 1 Tim. ii. 8, we have liberty to pray any where, and any way, so it be without wrath and doubting.

As this facing the east sprung from them, so it is as likely that the building of temples east and west, that the people may sit with their faces eastward, and burying of the dead with their heads unto the west, that they may rise with their faces eastward, came from them: however, it savours strongly of superstition, if not of heathenism, to do so.

Ver. 17. Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit the abominations which they commit here? for they have filled the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger: and, lo, they put the branch to their nose.

This verse hath in it the sum of all the evils before spoken of, and an addition of somewhat else: an appeal to the prophet for to be judge in it: Hast thou seen the image of jealousy, &c.? Is it a light thing? Give thy sentence supra totam materiam, upon the whole matter, that all these abominations are done in and about the temple: and besides, they have oppressed every where, wronged all sorts, "filled the whole land with violence:" and as if that were nothing, to provoke, to wrong, men, they return to the temple, and provoke me, "they put the branch to their nose."

רצוה "The branch to their nose." The Hebrew word for a branch is rendered by some a sound, or song, as if they sung, and made a noise with their nose, in disgrace or contempt of God. Some render it a stink or ill savour, noting how unclean and loathsome idolaters are, that delight in impure sacrifices and corrupt worship, which are a stink in the nostrils of God and good men. We have it a "branch," pulled or cut from the tree, which is the proper sense of the word; it comes from that Hebrew root which signifies to cut, lop off: and so it is expressed, Numb. xiii. 24, the cluster or branch of grapes cut down.

For the better understanding of this expression, we must know that the heathens honoured their gods by dedicating certain trees unto them; and when they sacrificed, they adorned their altars and themselves with some boughs of those trees which were so dedicated unto them. To Jupiter the beech tree was sacred, to Minerva the olive, to Venus the myrtle tree, to Hercules the poplar, to Bacchus the ivy and vine, to Apollo the laurel.

Among the Thracians it was a law to wear garlands of ivy when they sacrificed. The Egyptians wore garlands of ivy and bays; and the Israelites here learned from them, had branches in their hands, which they took either from the altars or heads of the sacrifices or sacrificers: and after they had put them to the idol, or sprinkled them with the blood of these vile sacrifices, or sweetened them with some idolatrous perfume, they put them to their nostrils, and kissed them, in honour of the sun. It is conceived they were branches of the laurel which were dedicated to the sun; and that they carried these branches to their houses, and often they put them to their nose in memory and honour of the sun, by virtue of whose influence the laurel did grow and receive its sweet savour.

Some take it to be a proverbial speech, noting out they were authors of their own punishment and destruction: they sin, and put the branch to their nose, and this will be their destruction.

Obs. 1. The greatness or littleness of sin is to be measured, not by man's, but God's account of it. "Is it a light thing to the house of Judah?" They think it so, but it is otherwise. The interrogation sets out the greatness of it. Is it so? no, it is not light, but grievous. This expression sets out the weightiness of a thing: 1 Sam. xviii. 23, "Seemeth it to you a light thing to be a king's son in law?" no; it is a great matter for a poor man to be so advanced, whatever your thoughts are. And let men think sin a light matter, it is far otherwise, there is lead in it, and will weigh them down: 1 Kings xvi. 31, speaking of Ahab, the scripture saith, "And it came to pass, as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that he took to wife Jezebel." The Hebrew is, Was it a light thing for him to commit the sins of Jeroboam? Yes, he thought so, esteemed them light, and went to serve Baal; but they were notorious, weighty sins, kingdom and church-destroying sins. Men pare and lessen their sins, they make little account of them: Prov. xiv. 9, "Fools make a mock at sin," as an inconsiderable matter; and chap. x. 23, "It is as sport to a fool to do mischief;" it is no heavy thing to his conscience, but a light thing like a feather, with which he can sport and play. Job xv. 16, "Man drinketh iniquity like water," he delights himself with sin like a fish, that draws in the water, and spouts it out again in a sporting way; so doth man, to him sin is sweet, delightful, Job xx. 12, not burdensome. Matt. xxii. 5, when they refused Christ and his offers of grace, mercy, and salvation, when they sinned with a high hand, yet they made light of it, and went their ways. And in Isaiah, when they committed idolatry, fell to other gods, they looked upon it as a sporting business; Isa. lvii. 4, "Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide month, and draw out the tongue?" What men's thoughts are of their sins, you see; they weigh them in false balances, and make them light, but when they come to the balance of the sanctuary, they will be found heavy. Is it a light thing such abominations are in our land?

Obs. 2. To sin where God manifests his presence, and vouchsafes the means of grace and choice mercies, is a great aggravation of sin, and grievous provocation of divine majesty. Is it light that ye commit the abomination which ye commit "here," in the temple, the place of my presence, where I have given them mine ordinances, and do meet them for my worship; to set their idol of jealousy near that place, have their chambers of imagery, their Tammuz brought into the temple, and women weeping about that filthy idol, and men standing with their backs towards God, and worshipping the sun? This aggravated their sin, and provoked bitterly; here, here they do such things. Psal. cvi. 19, "They made a calf in Horeb." Was this more than if they had made it in Egypt, or some other place? Yes; Horeb was the same with mount Sinai; if you compare Deut. iv. 10, 11, with Exod. xix. 18, it is evident; and there God appeared, gave out the law, and made a covenant with them, Deut. v. 2; and it was called "the mount of God," 1 Kings xix. 8. Now here they made a calf, here they sinned, and this was a great aggravation of their sin; insomuch, that, Deut. ix. 8, Moses saith, "In Horeb ye provoked the Lord to wrath," even destroying wrath. So touching Gilgal, the Scripture speaks of Gilgal's wickedness, Hos. ix. 15, of sacrificing bullocks there, chap. xii. 11, and multiplying transgression there, Amos iv. 4. The Lord took their sins at Gilgal very heinously, and cause he had for it; at Gilgal were the twelve memorial stones of their passing over Jordan pitched, Josh. iv. 20; at Gilgal they were circumcised, and God rolled away the reproach of Egypt from them, Josh. v. 8, 9; there they had the passover, ver. 10; Gilgal being a place famous for these things, their sins at Gilgal did increase their reproach, and aggravate their villany. Where God hath manifested himself, and done remarkable things, sin there is double sin. Psal. cvi. 7, they "provoked him at the sea, even at the Red sea." Where God pitied them being in a great strait, where God showed his mighty power in dividing the seas, in leading the Israelites safely through, and in drowning the proud, cruel, bloody adversaries, yet there they provoked him, "at the sea, even the Red sea." So for Canaan, which was the holy land, "the land of uprightness," the land where God had shown and done great things for them, sin there hath an emphasis set upon it, Isa. xxvi. 10, there they deal unjustly. Ezek. xx. 28, "When I had brought them into the land, for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to them;" (four times he accents their sins;) "there" they offer their sacrifices, "there" they present the provocation of their offerings, "there" they made their sweet savour, "there" they poured out their drink-offerings. God hath given us in this land, in this city, many choice mercies, done wonderful things for us; shall it be said, Here they commit sin, where the gospel and means of grace are, where they have lately entered into covenant with me, where they have seen my hand stretched out to do many great things? if it be so, there will be an accent upon our sins.

Obs. 3. Violence is a spreading sin. "They have filled the land with violence," with wrong, injustice, oppression. The princes had violent hands, they oppressed and exacted of the people, Ezek. xlv. 8, 9, "The rich men, they are full of violence," Micah vi. 12, and wronged the poorer sort. Servants were infected with this sin, and "filled their masters' houses with violence and deceit," Zeph. i. 9. The priests, they violated the law, Zeph. iii. 4; Ezek. xxii. 26; they corrupted it with their glosses, forced interpretations, constructions such as God never put into it; they set by the law, and set up their own inventions, wills, traditions, by which the law was made void. Thus violence had filled the land, the city, the sanctuary, and ran through all sorts of men. If freedom from this sin had been any where, it is probable in Jerusalem some should have been found free; but, Zeph. iii. 1, "Woe to the oppressing city;" and, Jer. vi. 6, "She is wholly oppression in the midst of her." Not only oppressing, but oppression, she was thoroughly grown and perfect in that sin; and not only oppression, but wholly oppression, nothing remaining in her but oppression, and thus evident, visible; in the midst of her, princes, priests, rich, servants, poor, oppress, wrong, offer violence one to another: Jer. v. 1, "Run, see, seek, if there be any that executeth judgment;" all were for violence, none for justice.

Obs. 4. Injustice is abomination unto God, and the more it spreads, the greater abomination it is. The Lord calls them abominations, for they have filled the land with violence. Violence in the princes was abomination, violence in the priests was abomination, oppression in the rich was abomination, injustice in their judges was abomination, injury and wrong in their servants and officers was abomination, and all these amounted to abominations.

Injustice and violence are crying sins; Isa. v. 7, "The Lord looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry;" there were hundreds and thousands crying, because their orchards and vineyards were taken from them, their wages detained, and themselves and their houses ready to be swallowed up by the mouths of the violent. The word for oppression, "Behold oppression," in Hebrew, is a scab, a wound, לשמה רמה פסעה; a leprosy; when a body is free from these, it is beautiful, but when overrun with these, it is loathsome. Injustice was a scab, adherent to the Jews, and made them abominable; oppression was a wound, and made them incurable; violence a leprosy, and caused them to be separated from the sight of God.

Is our state free from this sin? may we not fear God looked for "judgment, but behold oppression," a scab, a wound, a leprosy? Is not truth oppressed? are not the righteous and innocent oppressed? and may not many of us take up that of Job, chap. xix. 7, "Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard?" Let oppressors of others, be it in their names, liberties, estates, consciences, know, their sin is abomination to the Lord, and that there is a cry in heaven against them: the oppressed cry, "Break in pieces the oppressor," Psal. lxxii. 4, and judge the fatherless and oppressed, that the man of the earth may no more oppress.

Obs. 5. State oppression and church corruption go together; in the temple were pollutions, and in the land violence. The princes and judges they wronged men, the priests and prophets they wronged God; Zeph. iii. 3, 4, there you find them linked together; princes and judges oppressed the state, removed the bounds, the prophets and priests polluted the sanctuary, and violated the law; they break both tables. When one is eminently violated, breaches are quickly made upon the other. If there be violence in a land, there will be corruptions, pollutions, abominations in the sanctuary; if there be superstition, idolatry in the church state, there will be oppression, injustice, and spoil in the civil state: when the temple is a den of thieves, the land will be a den of oppressors and murderers, Jer. vii. 9, 11.

Obs. 6. Men's intentions to please God oft prove provocations of God. They intended not to provoke God, but returned in their apprehensions to worship God in the temple, and to please him; not their purpose, but the event was the provocation. So in ver. 6, their abominations drove God far from the sanctuary. They did not purpose and intend to drive God away, but that was the event and issue of their actions, with which they thought they pleased God.

Jer. vii. 9, 10, "Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods whom ye know not; and come and stand before me in this house, and say, We are delivered?" They returned from their vile and sinful practices to God's house, and thought by their sacrifices and prayers to please the Lord, whereas in truth they provoked him greatly, as you may see in ver. 12, 14, 15, where he tells them he will destroy the temple as he did Shiloh, cast them out as he did their brethren, the whole seed of Ephraim, and forbids the prophet to lift up a cry or prayer for them, ver. 16. So in Isa. i. 13, 14, that which they did to please God was vain, abomination, iniquity, trouble, hateful, such as he could not away with. Nadab and Abihu thought not to provoke God with their strange fire, but did to their own ruin. Numb. iii. 4. John xvi. 2, They shall put you out of the synagogues, and think they do God good service when they kill you, saith Christ; but they provoke God against their own souls. Isa. vii. 12, Ahaz thought it would please God not to ask a sign, but it was otherwise. Matt. xxiii. 29-31, they thought they did well in building the tombs of the prophets, and garnishing them, but thereby they provoked God more against themselves.

Obs. 7. God sets a special mark upon those that do put the branch to their nose: "Lo, they put the branch to their nose." Such are,

(1.) Those who adorn idols and images. Isa. xxx. 22, they covered their images, and put ornaments upon them, but they were no better than a menstruous cloth; and Ezek. xvi. 16-18, they decked their high places with colours, jewels, and brodered garments. This provoked the Lord, and is branded with fornication, ver. 15, and abomination, ver. 22. Have not many among us gilded and adorned crosses, altars, crucifixes, &c.?

(2.) Those who find any content and delight in superstitious and idolatrous practices. Ezek. xvi. 18, 19, God tells them they had set his oil and incense before the image for a sweet savour; the Hebrew is, for a savour of rest; they were pleased, and rested in what they had done, thinking also that the idol was delighted therewith. Exod. xxxii. 6, they took pleasure in their new god, and danced about the golden calf. And such expressions as these you have, "Their heart went after their idols," Ezek. xx. 16; "Their eyes go a whoring after their idols," Ezek. vi. 9; "Inflamed with idols," Isa. lvii. 5; "Mad upon idols," Jer. l. 38; which do show the pleasure they had in these evils, and how God brands them for the same.

(3.) Those that acknowledge any blessings to be from saints and images. They here adored the sun as author of trees and fruits; and Jer. xlv. 17, 18, they burned "incense to the queen of heaven," and acknowledged their welfare and plenty to be from her. Papists at this day acknowledge the cure of many diseases to be from such and such saints.

(4.) Such as preserve relics in memorial of their images and gods. They touched the image with it, and put it to their noses in memorial of the sun. Deut. vii. 25, the silver and gold that was on the images they might not desire, or take unto them, lest they should be snared therein; no relics, though never so precious, were permitted them to take, they were abomination to God, and would be snares to them. Whence the rabbins observe, that the idol, and things which serve it, are offered to it, and made for it, are unlawful for any use. The papists abound with relics, and so with abominations.

(5.) Those who give divine honour to creatures. Psal. cvi. 19, "They worshipped the molten image," Jeroboam "sacrificed unto the calves that he had made," 1 Kings xii. 32, and said to the people,

"Behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt," ver. 28. Here was divine honour given to dumb idols; but he is branded for this frequently, "Jeroboam, that made Israel to sin;" and 1 Kings xiii. 34, it is said, "this thing became sin unto the house of Jeroboam, even to cut it off, and to destroy it from off the face of the earth."

Obs. 8. Idolatrous worship is stinking, and brings destruction to the authors. Ver. 10, "All the idols," (in the Hebrew is, all the dunghill images) and image-worship, are dunghill, stinking, loathsome things to God and man, and they brought destruction upon the whole seed of Ephraim, even the ten tribes. Psal. xvi. 4, "Their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another god." Jeroboam did so, 1 Kings xii.; and, chap. xiii, a prophet prophesieth against his altar and calvish gods, his hand was dried up; and, chap. xiv. 10, 11, most grievous things are threatened against him and his. Jer. vii. 18, 19, when they had sacrificed to the queen of heaven, "Do they provoke me to anger? saith the Lord: do they not provoke themselves to the confusion of their own faces?"

Ver. 18, Therefore will I also deal in fury: mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them.

Here is a sad epiphonema or conclusion; he had oft in the chapter called upon Ezekiel to see the doings, which being shown unto him, the Lord sounds in his ears what dreadful things he will do.

"Deal in fury," &c. The Scripture mentions God's anger, Psal. xxx. 5; his indignation, Psal. lxxix. 24; his wrath, Isa. liv. 8; and his fury, Jer. x. 25; and these exceed each the other. Anger is the displeasure of God against sin; indignation is anger more intense, therefore, Isa. xxx. 30, it is called "indignation of his anger;" wrath is yet higher and permanent, according to that in Nahum i. 2, "He reserveth wrath for his enemies;" and fury is highest, Job xx. 23, "The fury of his wrath." In Jer. xxi. 5, fury and great wrath go together, and when God is in his fury, he rests not till he is revenged; Jer. vii. 20, "My fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees, fruit, and ground, and burn unquenchably." Ezek. xvi. 41, 42, When Jerusalem should be destroyed, then God would make his fury to be at rest.

"Mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity." Of these words hath been spoken before.

Obs. 1. There is a time when God, who is patient, gracious, and slow to wrath, will deal in fury; he that delights in exercising mercy, hath a time for fury, and trading in it; he that is patient and long-suffering, hath times of being furious.

When is it that God will deal in fury?

(1.) When lesser judgments will not serve turn. If he threaten in anger, smite in his indignation and wrath, and there be no good use made of those strokes, then will the Lord appear in fury. Lev. xxvi. God threatens them with sundry inferior judgments, and if they do not work, but still walk contrary to God, ver. 28, then saith God, "I will walk contrary unto you also in fury;" if they grew worse, God would be more violent and furious.

(2.) When a reformation is offered and refused. Jer. li. 9, "We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed: forsake her, for her judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies." So much fury should be poured out upon Babylon, that heaven, air, and earth should wonder at it; Ezek. xxiv. 13, 14, "Because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee. I the Lord have spoken it," &c. When God tenders a reformation to a people, it is great love, rich mercy; and mercy refused, is mercy abused, and that turns into fury; and God's fury shall not only be poured out against such a people, but rest upon them, which is much more.

(3.) When men are furious against God, his servants, and ways, when they cannot endure his prophets, saints, and ordinances, then is a time for God's fury to break out. When the husbandmen in the parable would not endure Christ's servants, nor himself, but beat and stoned them, then fury came forth, and miserable destruction was the portion of those men, Matt. xxi. 35, 36, 38, 41. When righteous Lot, being abused, was got out of Sodom, then God sent fire and brimstone upon it, and poured out his fury like fire, as it is in Nahum i. 6; and, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16—18, they mocked the messengers of God, despised his words, misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose; and it rose very high, even to the height of fury, for he brought the king of Babylon in fury upon them, who slew their young men in the sanctuary, who had no compassion upon man or maiden, young or old; all men and things were given into his hand, all their glorious things were burned and laid waste.

(4.) When there is a general corruption in state and church, then the fury of the Lord will appear, then will he deal in fury, Gen. vi. 5, 6, 7, 13. This will appear more fully in the next observation.

Obs. 2. Oppressions in a state, superstition and idolatry in the church, do cause God to deal in fury. There was violence in the land, and the branch at their nose, and therefore God would deal in fury: Jer. xxi. 12, "O house of David, thus saith the Lord: Execute judgment in the morning, and deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor, lest my fury go out like fire, and burn that none can quench it." Where there is want of justice, there will be plenty of oppression; and where that is, the door is open for God's fury; it is kindled, and will break out against such a state, whatever it be. And for idolatry, see Ezek. xvi. 36, "Because thy filthiness was poured out, and thy nakedness discovered through thy whoredoms with thy lovers, and with all the idols of thy abominations;" ver. 38, "I will judge thee," saith God, "as women that break wedlock and shed blood are judged." And how is that? Lev. xx. 10; Gen. ix. 6, they were without mercy to be put to death; and so God would do: "I will give thee blood in fury and jealousy."

If these sins be amongst us, we have cause to tremble, for they will cause God to deal in fury, to cast upon us the fury of his wrath, as it is, Job xx. 23. They will cause fury to be upon our armies, Isa. xxxiv. 2; and Jer. xxi. 4—6, "Behold," saith the Lord, "I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege you without the walls, and I will assemble them into the midst of this city. And I myself will fight against you with an outstretched hand and with a strong arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath. And I will smite the inhabitants of this city, both man and beast; they shall die of a great pestilence." And those that die not, shall be mad, when they are made to drink of the cup of God's fury, Jer. xxv. 15, 16. God's fury is a trampling thing, Isa. lxiii. 3; a bloody thing, Ezek. xvi. 38; fiery and plentiful, he pours it out like fire, Lam. ii. 4. Therefore let us tremble, and prevent God's fury, which is so terrible; and do as is written, Jer. iv. 3, 4, "Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns. Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem: lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings."

Obs. 3. God's dealing in fury is dreadful, he will not spare, nor pity, nor be moved to mercy; and is not this dreadful? You may think it is never so with God, but the Scripture saith it here, and in other places; Ezek. xxiv. 13, 14, "Thou shalt not be purged, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee;" and whatever you commit, "I the Lord have spoken it: it shall come to pass, and I will do it: I will not go back, neither will I spare, neither will I repent: according to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee, saith the Lord God." Men are apt to think God is all mercy, but they will find it otherwise.

His eye that spared them in Egypt, that looked upon them and pitied them there, his eye will not spare, himself will not pity them in Zion. Their provocations were great; he that spared Ninevites will not spare Israelites.

When God deals in fury, there is no dealing with him then: he is a consuming fire, and nothing will prevail with him.

What if they cry, will not that prevail? Is not God a God hearing prayer, doth he not hear the cry of ravens? Jer. xi. 11, "Though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them." See Isa. i. 15; Micah iii. 8; Deut. i. 45.

What if Noah, Job, and Daniel should pray, would not God be entreated, pity, and spare them? see Ezek. xiv. 14, 18, 20. God forbade Jeremiah, chap. vii. 16, to pray for them; "Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee." His ear is deaf, his heart is hardened, when he is in fury, and deals in it: fury lies in severity, where there is no sparing; in implacability, where is no hearing.

Obs. 4. That wicked men in their straits will cry to God, and cry aloud. When Nebuchadnezzar came, besieged the city, when plague and famine increased, then they fell upon their knees and cried to God for help; as malefactors, when the judge is ready to give sentence, cry out, and importune him to spare their lives. Such prayers are the voice of the flesh, not of the spirit, forced, not free, faithless and unseasonable prayers, coming too late, and therefore unacceptable. Let men therefore not defer seeking of God till necessity puts them upon it.

CHAPTER IX.

Ver. 1. He cried also in mine ears with a loud voice, saying, Curse them that have charge over the city to draw near, even every man with his destroying weapon in his hand.

In the eighth chapter Ezekiel saw in a vision the sins of the city Jerusalem; here the vision proceeding, he sees the judgments of God to be executed upon them for those sins, and by whom.

The chapter contains,

I. A narration of judgment to be executed upon Jerusalem in the first seven verses.

II. The prophet's intercession for Israel, ver. 9. 8.

III. An answer thereunto, ver. 9. 10.

IV. A report of what was done, ver. 11.

In the narration you have,

1. A commission given to the prophet to cause military men to appear, ver. 1.

2. Their number and manner of appearing, ver. 2.

3. A mandate given,

(1.) To mark the mourners, ver. 4.

(2.) To slay the rest, ver. 5—7.

4. Mention of the glory of God departing, ver. 3. The first verse hath in it,

1. The author of this commission, "He."

2. The manner of giving it out, by way of cry, and that "with a loud voice."

3. The witness before whom it was done, and that was Ezekiel, "In mine ears."

4. The commission itself, "Cause them that have," &c.

Where we have,

(1.) The persons specified, and they are such as "have charge over the city."

(2.) What they are to do, "To draw near."

(3.) The manner, "With a destroying weapon in each hand."

"He cried." Not an angel, but the Lord, whose glory he had seen at the temple, who had shown him the several abominations of the people, and who had authority to call for executioners of his fury upon these notorious delinquents.

"He cried." Crying in man is intense or loud speaking, when it is expressed by a loud voice; but God crieth not as man. His crying is the efficacy of his Spirit, or force of his providence, strongly moving the creature to the execution of his will. Zech. vii. 7, the Lord cried by the prophets, his Spirit moved them to cry unto the people: and 2 Sam. xvi. 10, God said unto Shimei, "Curse David;" that is, Divine Providence moved him to do so. God cries to the ministers of justice, when he moves their wills to come and do execution upon a sinful people. Here God spake to the prophet, not providentially, but by the inward language of his Spirit, and visionally.

The reasons of his calling or crying aloud were,

1. To declare the weightiness of the thing he was now about; namely, to bring a final destruction upon church and state, according to that, chap. vii. 6, "An end is come;" and this was a business of high concernment, that that people which had been so beloved, so honoured, so delivered, so observed in the world, should now be utterly ruined. So when the seven thunders were to be, the angel, Rev. x. 3, "cried with a loud voice."

2. God's serious intentions to destroy them. He was impatient now of bearing any longer with them, he was burdened, wearied with their iniquities, therefore cried out of them, and called for destroyers; Isa. i. 24, "Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries."

3. To quicken and hasten the instruments he should use in that service. When great persons are intense in their voices and commands, it edges their spirits who are employed, and makes them quick, active; loud cries leave deep impressions.

4. In reference to the wicked's sins, and mourners' prayers. The sins of the one, and prayers of the other, cried aloud in God's ears, and now God cries too, and adds cry to cry: they cried for vengeance, and vengeance they shall have. Come, Ezekiel, send for such and such men, which may destroy the wicked, and deliver the mourners.

"In mine ears." That is, I hearing; the Lord spake aloud, and the prophet heard him. So the like phrase in Gen. iii. 8; xlv. 18, is to be understood. God honoured Ezekiel here with the knowledge of what he was about, and singled him out to be a witness of his proceedings.

"Cause them that have charge over the city to draw near." The Hebrew is, The visitations of the city have drawn near; or, Let the visitations of the city draw near. Here is the abstract put for the concrete, visitation for visitors, which is frequent in Scripture; as Col. i. 16, thrones are put for kings, dominions for lords, rulers, principalities, and powers for them that are in chief places. Isa. lx. 17, "I will also make thy officers peace;" the Hebrew is, thy visitation, in the abstract, and rendered in the concrete, officers, or visitors, and so here. Some read it, the men of visitation; others, the visitors of the city; our translation, those that have charge over the city, especially the military affairs.

Who these were is to be examined. Not the ancients of Israel, mentioned in the former chapter, who were to be destroyed, and not to destroy; but they were certain angels or archangels, to whom the Lord had committed the custody of Jerusalem; for angels have the care of kingdoms, provinces, and cities, and these God calls for, and employs, to fetch in the Chaldeans for destruction of the city, and inhabitants of it. Angels are defenders and destroyers of cities.

"Every man with his destroying weapon in his hand." A man, in the Hebrew, it is not every man; but the meaning is, that not any should appear without his weapon, every one that came should bring it in his hand.

"Destroying weapon." Hebrew, instrument of his destruction; that is, not with an instrument to destroy himself, but with an instrument to destroy others, a deadly instrument.

Obs. 1. The Lord will not always be silent, and bear with sinners, he will cry out against them; the longer he hath been silent, the louder he will cry at last. Here God held his peace long, or spake in secret to the prophet, showing him the sins of this city, how grievous they were, what abominations they had committed; and that being done, he cries out of them, calls for executioners to be avenged on them. Isa. xlii. 14, "I have long time holden my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself; now will I cry like a travailing woman; I will destroy and devour at once." A travailing woman feels pain, but keeps as long as she can from discovering the same; but when her throes and pangs come strongly upon her, she cries out of her pains, and calls for help. So God had borne with their sins, restrained his fury and vengeance; but being overcome with the greatness of their sins, wearied with their iniquities, he cries out, and calls for help of angels and men to avenge him of his adversaries. Micah vi. 9, "The Lord's voice crieth unto the city;" he called aloud unto them, his patience was expired, Spirit exasperated; his voice was now intended, as being in a strait, and necessitated to proceed to judgment. Amos ii. 13, "Behold, I am pressed under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves." A cart is long a loading, and when it is greatly loaded, oft it breaks, and all is laid in the dust: so God, being pressed, breaks silence, brings in dreadful and inevitable judgments; "Therefore the flight shall perish from the swift," &c.

Obs. 2. The Lord usually makes known his judgments before he executes them: "He cried also in mine ears."

Ezekiel shall know the Lord's intendments before he doth any thing against the city and people. Before notable judgments come upon men, God's method is to reveal them. God told Noah of the flood, Gen. vi. 13, 17; the captivity of the ten tribes was not hid from the prophets, 2 Kings xvii. 14—16; this Babylonish captivity was known to Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and others, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15—17. Christ told the apostles of the destruction of the temple, and miseries that should befall the city, before they fell out, Matt. xxiv. 1, 2; Luke xix. 41—44. Upon this ground Amos is bold, and saith, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he will reveal his secret unto his servants the prophets," chap. iii. 7. There is no necessity upon God for revealing his judgments, he doth execute many secretly, and openly, which were never heard of till felt; but God's ordinary way with his people was, to let them hear of his judgments before-hand; he made them known to the prophets and prophetic men. Joseph had the seven years' famine revealed to him, Gen. xli.; and God would not hide his purpose of ruining Sodom from Abraham; Gen. xviii. 17, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?" no, I will not; and Abraham is my friend, he shall know my thoughts. Jonah is acquainted with God's intentions touching Nineveh, that great city. And the judgments now upon us were not unforeseen, the servants of the Lord had notice of them many years since, and spake of these tempestuous days. This God doth to stop the mouth of iniquity, that wicked men may not object God came upon them without warning. This Lion roars before he devours the prey; the Lord of hosts sounds the trumpet before he comes to battle: he tells his prophets and ministers of justice, that they may give warning unto others, that they may prepare to meet the Lord, that they may tremble at his judgments, repent, reform, return to God, or else perish most justly; and that the godly, seeing his care herein, for ye might work out your salvation with fear and trembling, draw others out of their dangerous conditions, exercise their graces more fully, and intercede earnestly with God for averting, mitigating, removing, or sanctifying of his judgments. Abraham entreated for Sodom, and Jeremiah for the Jews, when they knew God's mind was to destroy them.

Obs. 3. No judgments, no afflictions, come upon any states or churches but at the Lord's call and appointment. Let the visitation of the city draw near; or, cause the visitors to come. God hath sovereign authority over all creatures, he is Lord of hosts, and when he gives out the word, then judgments step forth, and the executioners of them appear. 2 Kings viii. 1, there was a seven years' famine in the land, and how came this? Elisha tells the Shunammite woman, that the Lord had called for it, he commanded it to come forth of his treasury of judgments. When David had sinned in numbering the people, God sent him a message by Gad his seer, which was this: "Shall seven years of famine come unto thee in thy land? or wilt thou flee three months before thine enemies, while they pursue thee? or that there be three days' pestilence in thy land?" One of these David was to choose; and the pestilence he chooseth, which God sent amongst them, 2 Sam. xxiv. 12—15. Judgments are in God's hand, and let out at his pleasure; he calls for the sword, and gives it commission to go up and down; Ezek. xiv. 17, he saith, "Sword, go through the land;" Hos. xi. 6, "Abide on his cities:" he causeth his "sword to devour flesh," and his "arrows to be drunk with blood," Deut. xxxii. 42. Judgments come not till God call them, they go not but where he directs them, they hurt not any, or more than he appoints, nor cease till he commands. There is nothing casual, accidental in them, but they are by the determinate counsel and will of God.

Obs. 4. When the Lord is in his fury, he is not only intense upon, but hastening of judgments. "He cried with a loud voice," which sets out his intention; he would have executioners of his judgments draw near. Polan. renders the word, to make speed and hasten: Zeph. i. 14, "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly." The time was near, and all things in heaven and earth making haste to their destruction, yea great haste. God brings on judgments sooner than they are expected. Did not the Chaldeans come with speed and haste upon them? "his horses were swifter than eagles," Jer. iv. 13; than "leopards," Hab. i. 8. And are any creatures swifter for wing or foot than the eagle or leopard? yet the Chaldeans' judgment was swifter than they; Lam. iv. 19, "Our persecutors are swifter than the eagles of the heaven;" they made great haste. Sinners are secure, and think judgments slumber, when they are upon their march, upon the wing: Jer. xlviii. 16, Moab's affliction hasted fast, it came flying; and Isa. v. 26, God hissed for the Chaldeans, and they came with speed swiftly. God hasteneth judgment, and no marvel, he is provoked to it, as an army is provoked sometimes to fight, when there was no intention; or if intention, being stirred, falls to fight immediately. Isa. v. 19, wicked men say, "Let him make speed, and hasten his work, that we may see it; and let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come, that we may know it." They mocked the prophet that told them of judgment, captivity, and destruction. You say such things are decreed in heaven, and must take place; let us see them, let them come; Jerusalem is strong, well fortified, &c. As these provoke him by their sins, so the godly importune him by their prayers; Luke xviii. 8, "He will avenge them speedily."

Obs. 5. That angels have the care of cities, kingdoms, and communities committed to them. "Cause them that have charge over the city." That was the angels, say interpreters; and in the opening of the first chapter, I showed you, that angels were employed in the government of the world. Deut. xxxii. 8, "He set bounds according to the number of the children of Israel:" the Septuagint hath it, according to the number of the angels of God, as if they had the land divided first among them, and then the people were settled according to those divisions. That in Dan. x. 20, is more clear and full, where the angel tells Daniel, that he would fight with the prince of Persia, he would prevent his hindering their return to Jerusalem; and when he should go forth and leave the care of that country, the prince of Greece should come, namely, Alexander the Great, and overthrow that monarchy. Clemens saith, the charge of angels was divided by nations and cities; and Epiphanius, Heres. 51, Regna et gentes sub angelis positae sunt, Kingdoms and nations are placed under the angels.

Obs. 6. When God calls angels, or any creatures, at his command they come, and are willing to contribute any power or strength they have, to damnify and destroy God's enemies, Psal. lxxviii. 49; 2 Chron. xxxii. 21; 2 Sam. xxiv. 16. It was at God's command that the waters drowned the world, that fire and brimstone consumed Sodom, that the stars fought against Sisera, and that the earth opened her mouth and swallowed up Corah, Dathan, and Abiram.

Ver. 2. And, behold, six men came from the way of the higher gate, which lieth toward the north, and every man a slaughter weapon in his hand; and one man among them was clothed with linen, with a writer's inkhorn by his side: and they went in, and stood beside the brasen altar.

In this verse you have the effect of the former command, those who had the charge of the city being called, appear: and here is considerable,

- I. How they are called, "men."
- II. Their number, "six men."
- III. Whence they came, "from the way of the higher gate," &c.
- IV. The manner of their appearance, "every man with a slaughter weapon in his hand."
- V. Another man added, and described,
 1. From his place, "among them."
 2. From a double adjunct:
 - (1.) Of his clothing, he "was clothed with linen."
 - (2.) Of an inkhorn, he had "a writer's inkhorn by his side."
- VI. What they did, "they went in, and stood beside the brasen altar."

"Men." They were angels, but are called men, because they appeared in human shape, which was ordinary in ancient times: Gen. xviii. 2, 3, angels like three men appeared to Abraham; the angels that came to Lot were like men, Gen. xix. 5; and Gabriel, that came to Daniel, is called "the man Gabriel," Dan. ix. 21. They have not the true bodies of men, but are real bodies formed into the likeness of men's bodies, which are easily assumed and easily deposed; for the union between the angel assuming the body, and the body assumed, is not substantial, like the union between man's soul and body, nor hypostatical, like the union between Christ's human and divine nature, nor accidental, but it is assistential; the angel is in the body by an inward real presence, as the mover to that which is moved, with a particular regard to its direct use. As the body holds out something of the soul, so doth the body assumed hold out somewhat of an angel; and therefore when angels appeared, they feared, they knew them to be more than men.

"Six men." Six devils, saith Jerom; six angels, saith Theodoret, and most interpreters go that way.

Some think by these six were represented the principal leaders of the Chaldean army, mentioned Jer. xxxix. 3, Nergal-sharezer, Samgar-nebo, Sarsechim, Rab-saris, Nergal-sharezer, Rabmag; but here were seven or eight, as the original runs, and other princes beside.

Others interpret these six of the kingdoms that helped Nebuchadnezzar in this service, as the Edomites, Ammonites, Idumeans, Moabites, Midianites, and some of Palestine. Others, to whom the chief care of the war was committed. More probable it is, that six are named in reference to the three parts of Jerusalem, and the chief gates therein. 2 Kings xiv. 13, there you have the gate of Ephraim, and the corner gate, and these were in oppido Benjaminis, in the part of Benjamin; Neh. xii. 39, you have the old gate, and the fish gate, and those were in the city of David; Neh. iii. 14, the dung gate, and the sheep gate, and they were in oppido Juda, in the part of Judah: these were the chief gates, and led into the chief streets. To these it is likely do the six angels refer, intimating that a destroyer should come in at every chief gate of Jerusalem; these six angels should bring in the chief leaders of the Chaldean forces with their regiments at these gates. Or by these six you may understand the whole army of Nebuchadnezzar, a part being put for the whole.

Jer. xx. 2.

"Came from the way of the higher gate which leth toward the north." This gate was a temple gate, not a city gate; 2 Chron xxvii. 3, "Jotham built the high gate of the house of the Lord;" and this was called the new gate also, Jer. xxvi. 10, "The princes sat down in the entry of the new gate of the Lord's house." This gate looked northward toward Chaldea; and that way these six men came, pointing out whence their misery should come, and where it should begin; Jer. vi. 1, "Evil appeareth out of the north, and great destruction." On the north side Nebuchadnezzar made his entrance, and not only he, but Antiochus and Titus, as Josephus writes.

Pradus in loc.

"Every man a slaughter weapon in his hand." The Hebrew is, an instrument of contrition or dissipation. Prov. xxv. 18, יֵדוּ it is translated a maul, an instrument to beat out a man's brains. The Septuagint renders the word here an axe. It may be interpreted a sword, or any weapon that sufficeth to kill a man with.

Obs. 1. That there is power and efficacy in the calls and commands of God. When he said, "Cause them that have charge over the city to draw near," you see it here fulfilled, "Behold, six men came." Ezekiel called, told them the mind of God, but there was not power in him to bring these slaughter angels before the Lord; Divine Providence acted, the secret virtue of the Lord did it. There is power in the commands of God, and when that goeth along with his word it produceth any effects; his word and power brought the flood upon the world at first, and will bring the fire on it at last.

Obs. 2. When God is against a city, he sets angels against it also. Here were six angels that appeared at his call for the destruction of the city; those who before he had appointed to preserve it, now he calls forth to destroy it. Sin makes God our enemy, and when he is out with us, who can be friends to us? If the king frown, the nobles and courtiers will do it also. While God is our friend, angels are, and all other creatures: 1 Cor. iii. 21, Paul saith to the Corinthians, "All things are yours," your servants, your friends for your good: and why? "ye are Christ's," his friends, his servants; if they had been enemies to Christ, all things had been enemies to them. What the wise man saith of any man, Prov. xvi. 7, "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him," is true of any city; when they please God, he makes their enemies to be at peace with them. Babylon was ever an enemy to Zion, but never harmed Zion till Zion had offended or lost her God; and when cities have provoked God against them, he makes their friends their enemies, and their enemies enmity unto them. Have not we kindled divine wrath by our sins, caused him to deal in fury, to set angels and men against us; are they not abroad with slaughter weapons? Jerusalem improved not the sword of justice, the magistrates were neglective of punishing delinquents, of righting the wrongs of the oppressed; and therefore God put a sword into the hands of angels and Chaldeans to destroy both magistrate and subject. Let us take heed how we make God our enemy; by all means make him your friend; Job v. 23, stones and beasts will be at league, at peace with you: compare it with Deut. xxxii. 13; Isa. xi. 6—8.

Obs. 3. At what gate men drive God away, at the same gate they let judgment in; at what door men let in sin, at the same door they let in יָצָא Iniquity and judgment. The destroying angels came from the north to the north gate, there was the idol of jealousy, chap. viii. 3; by the brazen altar: this way came in idolatry, this way God was driven from them, and this way came the angels, came the Chaldeans, to be avenged on them; they sinned northward, and from thence came their judgment. At that gate was the great concourse of people, there they worshipped the image of jealousy, and that way came in the greatest evil they ever had. The prophets often mention the northern evil: Jer. i. 14, “Out of the north an evil shall break forth upon all the land.” Chap. iv. 6, “I will bring evil from the north, and a great destruction;” see chap. vi. 1. 22, 23. Chap. x. 22, “A great commotion out of the north, to make the cities of Judah desolate, and a den of dragons.” Judgment came to that gate they sinned at: sin lay behind the door, called for, and led in the enemy. Gen. iv. 7, God told Cain if he did not well, sin lay at the door, that is, punishment, judgment, lay at the door, and would quickly come in at that door sin had opened. Rom. v. 12, “By sin death entered;” sin opened a door, it brake open God’s command, and so let in death, and all judgments beneath death.

Ahaziah sends to Baal-zebub the god of Ekron about his recovery, being sick; this so offended God, that an answer was returned him, that therefore he should not come down from his bed, but should surely die, 2 Kings i. 4. Gideon’s ephod was a snare to him and his house, Judg. viii. 27.

Obs. 4. When God comes against a people, he will surround them with judgments. At all the chief gates there should be angels, Chaldean forces; so that if they would flee to the gates of any of the streets, to the gate of Ephraim, to the corner gate, the old gate, or fish gate, the dung gate, or common gate, or other gates whatsoever, they should find angels with destroying weapons in their hands; and see themselves so beset with judgments, that there should be no escaping: they might run from street to street, from gate to gate, and hope to get away; but, Jer. xi. 11, “I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape:” their hearts, heads, hands, heels, shall not avail them to an escape; if they fight or flee, if they entreat God or man, seek secretly to steal away, it is in vain, they shall not be able to escape.

Obs. 5. When God is upon acts of justice, and calls for angels or any creatures, at his command, they come, and willingly contribute what power they have to damnify and destroy his enemies: every one came here with a slaughter weapon in his hand. The creatures are ready to execute vengeance upon their fellow-creatures, when the glorious Creator, being offended, calls for it: Isa. xxxvii. 36, an angel, at God’s appointment, went forth and slew one hundred and eighty-five thousand; he had his slaughter weapon ready, and acted like an angel, slaying so many in one night. It is said of angels, Psal. ciii. 20, that they excel in strength, that they do the commandments of the Lord, hearkening unto the voice of his word; if he do once speak, they hear, yea, they put forth their great strength, and do that strongly they are sent about.

“One man among them was clothed with linen.” Who this one man should be, is questionable. Some make him to be an angel, and the grounds they go upon are these:

1. He is “clothed with linen,” in which kind of garment angels were wont to appear, Acts i. 10; Luke xxiv. 4; John xx. 12.

2. In the end of this chapter this man saith, “I have done as thou hast commanded me,” which respect an angel rather than Christ, who being equal with the Father, receives not commands from him; angels being his servants, and ministering spirits, are fittest to receive commands.

For the first of these arguments, it is true, that angels have appeared oft in white linen and shining garments, but not they alone. Rev. iv. 4, the twenty-four elders were clothed with white linen. And chap. vii. 9, a great multitude stood before the throne, and the Lamb, clothed in white robes. And Christ in his transfiguration had his raiment white as the light, Matt. xvii. 2. It is not sufficient therefore to say, this man was clothed with linen, a white garment, and therefore was an angel.

To the second, that commands are unsuitable to Christ; hear what Christ saith, John xiv. 31, “As the Father gave me commandment, even so I do.” Chap. xv. 10, “I have kept my Father’s commandments.” So chap. xii. 49; x. 18, he received commands from his Father, and kept them. This was no disparagement to Christ; as God, he was equal with his Father; as man, himself saith, “My Father is greater than I.” John xiv. 28.

Others by this one man understand the Lord Christ, the Angel of the covenant; and those contend that in the letter here is meant an angel, and makes that angel representative of Christ; so that the difference is not much: but I join with them that make this one man to be Christ, and that,

1. Because he is brought in as mediator here with an adjunct of oneness, as in 1 Tim. ii. 5, “One mediator,” &c.; the godly Jews had no other mediator.

2. Here are implied the three offices of Christ.

(1.) His kingly office, whereby he rules and commands all creatures; and that is couched up in those words, “among them,” or in the midst of them: as King and Commander, he appears in the midst of those angels which had the destroying weapons in their hands; he was their General, and showed himself in the midst of them. Josh. v. 13—15, he appeared to Joshua with a drawn sword, and told him he was Captain of the Lord’s host: whereupon Joshua fell down and worshipped, which had been sinful if it had been an angel, not the Lord General of men and angels.

(2.) His priestly office, implied in his linen clothing: the Hebrew signifies flax, especially white flax or silk, which was used in holy vestures. 1 Sam. ii. 18, Samuel ministered to the Lord girded with a linen ephod; that is, with an ephod of fine flax, or silk, which grew in Egypt, and was called shesh, Ezek. xxvii. 7; gossypium, by Pliny. Nat. Hist. l. 19. C. 1. Vestes inde sacerdotibus Ægypti gratissimæ. whereof he affirms were made garments for the Egyptian priests, who doubtless took it up from the Jewish priests, who were appointed by God to wear such garments, Exod. xxviii. 42, 43; Lev. vi. 10; xvi. 4; whereby was set out the innocency and purity which should be in the priests, who were to intercede with God for the people. In such a garment doth Christ appear, a sacerdotal garment, pointing out his holiness, innocency, and priestly office, whereby he intercedes for sinners.

(3.) His prophetic office, shadowed out by the inkhorn he had by his side. Prophets were to declare the mind of God by speaking and writing, to discover who were good, who bad, whose names were in the book of life, whose not; and so Christ here would make known the mind of God, and mark out those who were for deliverance, and those who were for destruction.

“A writer’s inkhorn.” The Septuagint reads it, a saphirine girdle about his loins, mistaking ספר for ספיר. Some have it, the tables of a writer, or table-book. Others term it a case for pens; we, an inkhorn, that which contains the ink, and hath the pen-case joined with it. Some taking it for a book, conceive Christ wrote in it the names of those who should be spared, or made known whose names were written already in this book. The Scripture mentions a book of life, Exod. xxxii. 32; Psal. lxxix. 28. But that Christ declared out of this book the names of the unwritten, is groundless. We are to take it for an inkhorn, which notes Christ giving instructions to these agents, his observing, recording of all things, and his distinguishing between the precious and the vile, and his readiness to seal and instruct those that are the Lord's. Or it notes a manifesting the decrees of God touching Jerusalem.

Quest. It was Christ sat upon the throne, who spake to Ezekiel, and how could this one man among the angels be Christ? This is the only difficulty against this interpretation, that the same person in the same vision should be represented diversely.

Ans. Christ having divers offices, which cannot be typified or shadowed out by any one thing, it pleaseth him to represent himself variously to us in the same vision; as in Rev. v. 1, there is one sits upon a throne, and this was Christ, (as appears, chap. i. 18; xxi. 6.) he had a book in his hand sealed, which none being able to open caused great weeping; and ver. 6, there is Christ represented as a Lamb, who, ver. 7, came and took the book out of the hand of him that sat upon the throne: here Christ is variously represented, he sat in the throne as God, and held the book in his hand, he took it as mediator, and opened it unto men. Christ is the priest, the sacrifice, and altar, but under a diverse consideration. And so in this vision, sometimes Christ is represented as God sitting in his throne; sometimes as a prophet, instructing Ezekiel; sometimes as mediator, interceding for the elect. It is not incongruous therefore to see the same person, having several offices, and conveying several benefits to his church, represented in a vision several ways at the same time.

"They went in, and stood beside the brazen altar." The Scripture speaks of a golden altar, 1 Kings vii. 48, 49, and this was before the oracle. There was also a brazen altar, 1 Kings viii. 64, which was for holocaust, as the other for incense, and stood in the midst of the court before the temple; but at this time it was removed, and the Damascene altar set in the place of it, where the idol of jealousy was honoured.

Now these men came not to this idolatrous altar, but went to the brazen altar which was near, though out of its place. There they stood to receive answers; they would not go to the other, where false worship was, lest they should seem to countenance it; but to the other deserted, despised altar, to which the sacrifices belonged, and where God gave them true answers.

There they stood; which phrase implies a readiness in whomsoever, to hear, receive, and execute the commands of those they stand before. If Levites stand before the Lord, it imports a promptness in them to minister unto the Lord, Dent. x. 8. If servants, 2 Kings v. 25, if great ones, 2 Kings viii. 9, stand before others, it argues a proneness in them to hearken to what shall be given out and imposed upon them: so here.

Obs. 1. Elect Jews under the law were saved by the mediatorial work of Christ incarnate, as we are under the gospel. Christ frequently appeared as man, intimating thereby his future incarnation, and that that nature must concur to the making up of his mediatorship: he did not mediate for them as God, for us as man; but he mediated then ut homo promissus, as man promised, now he mediates ut homo exhibitus, as man manifested. Isa. liii. 5, the prophet speaking of Christ, saith, "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." The prophet's faith, and in his, the faith of the Jewish church, looked upon Christ as already wounded, slain, and fetched healing virtue from his stripes: Christ's death was their life, his cross their crown.

Obs. 2. That the Lord Christ is the chief commander of all angelical and human forces. He was in the midst of these six military angels that were to bring in the Chaldean forces at the several gates of the city: he was their General, from him they had their commissions, and without a word from him they could not stir. All power in heaven and earth was given him, Matt. xxviii. 18. His prerogative it was, and is, to call forth angels, and send out armies: Rev. xix. 14, "The armies which were in heaven followed him," that is, Christ, he was their Leader; and his name is "King of kings, and Lord of lords," ver. 16. And certainly where Christ goes at the head of armies, there will be great slaughter.

Obs. 3. When judgments are abroad, and the godly are in danger, Christ mediates and intercedes for them. Now the Jewish church and state were at the door of destruction, and public calamities ready to involve all; Christ appears like a priest with linen clothes, to offer sacrifice on their behalf, and to mediate for them. When imminent dangers were at hand, or judgments upon the people, the priests were to appear, to stand between the Lord and them, making intercession for them, Numb. xvi. 47, 48. And so in Joel ii. 17, "Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and say, Spare thy people, O Lord." And here Christ being a merciful High Priest, shows himself, and interposeth for the saints, who were to meet with a terrible tempest. The like did Christ when he was in the flesh on earth: he saw what a storm was coming upon Jerusalem, what persecution upon the saints, and therefore, John xvii. he intercedes with his Father for apostles and believers, ver. 11, 20. When Stephen was questioned, and in jeopardy of his life, heaven was opened, and he saw Christ stand at the right hand of God: Christ pleaded his cause, propitiated for his sins, and encouraged him in his sufferings.

Obs. 4. Christ hath a special care of his in times of trouble; he appears with an inkhorn to write down what is said and done against them, to make known the mind of God to them, to seal and discriminate them from others, to give commissions to those he employs to cut off the enemies of his people. Rev. vii. 2, 3, there were four angels had power given them to hurt the earth and sea; but there was "another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God," viz. Christ, for so expositors understand it; and this Angel, the Lord Christ, "cried with a loud voice, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads." Christ had great care of his churches: for by earth, sea, trees, some of the learned understand the church in several places: by earth, the inland churches; by sea, the maritime; and by trees, the mountain and woodland churches; Christ would not have these hurt till all the godly in them were sealed. It is prophesied in Mal. iv. 1, 2, that when it is a fiery day of the Lord, the Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings to them that fear the Lord. Rev. ix. 4, when the locusts came out of the bottomless pit, and had power like scorpions given them to sting and do hurt, there was a command, "that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, nor any green thing, nor any tree," that is, no christian that had life in him, weak or strong; but only those who had not the seal of God in their foreheads, that is, those who had no life, no greenness in them, and they were subject to hurt others. Mark iv. 37—40, when the disciples were in a grievous storm, the waves beat so into the ship that they filled it, they were afraid, and suspected the care of Christ, and therefore said, "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" Yes, saith Christ, I have a special care of you, and presently you shall see it; "he rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And immediately the wind ceased, and there was a calm." And from rebuking the winds and seas, he falls to rebuke them for their fear and faithfulness: they perceived not yet that he cared for them as well sleeping as waking; though his body slept, yet his spirit was awake; his care for his servants is constant and intense. When he was to leave the world, how full of trouble were the hearts of his apostles, and how full of care and compassion was Christ towards them, laying down several grounds of comfort for them in the 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th chapters of John.

Obs. 5. Those who are upon great and public designs, should begin with God and consult with him. These seven here go in and stand by the altar, inquire of God what his pleasure is, whither he will send them, what he had to do for them, and whatever it was, that he would counsel and prosper them. So have the worthies of God done. Ezra, chap. viii. 21, when he was to come from Babylon about the great work of the temple, he sought God extraordinarily for direction, assistance, and protection; which he obtained of God, ver. 23. Jehoshaphat, when the Moabites, Ammonites, and others came out to war against him, he began with the Lord in prayer and fasting, and from him had encouragement and success, 2 Chron. 20. So Asa, he began with God, when Zerah had a thousand thousand in the field against him; he knew that the Lord was the Lord of hosts, and that these uncircumcised ones came against him; therefore looks up to him, and saith, "O Lord, thou art our God; let not man prevail against thee;" and hereupon the Lord smote the Ethiopians, 2 Chron. xiv. 11, 12. One reason why armies miscarry is, because they confide in their own strength and policy, and lean not wholly upon the Lord, seeking to him in the first place. Joshua miscarried in a great business in making peace with the Gibeonites, Josh. ix.; and the reason is given; "they asked not counsel at the mouth of the Lord," ver. 14. All businesses, for right managing and success of them, depend upon the Lord, it is he blesses or curses; therefore it is wisdom, it is necessary, to look up to him at the beginning, lest through neglect of Divine Majesty we lay the foundation of our enterprises in wrath. Christ being to choose apostles, which was a great work, he prayed all night before, Luke vi. 12, 13. And the angels that were to pour out the vials of wrath, are said to come out of the temple; they had been there before the Lord.

Obs. 6. Those who are employed by the Lord, must be careful that they countenance no corruptions in worship. Neither Christ nor the angels would come at the false altar, which Ahaz had caused to be set up; but they go to God's altar, the brazen altar; by this they stood, not the other. Symbolizing with idolatrous worship, persons, and things, God allows not: Deut. xii. 30, they must not inquire after the nations' gods; Lev. xviii. 3, they must not do after the doings of Egyptians or Canaanites. When God's people were in Babylon, (of their condition there the prophet speaks,) they must not touch any unclean thing, Isa. lii. 11; much less may they touch any in Zion: therefore Paul presseth that phrase, 2 Cor. vi. 17, upon the Corinthians, who were too forward to symbolize with corruptions, "Touch not the unclean thing;" marry not with unbelievers, be not at their feast eating that which is sacrificed to idols, go not to law before the judges, use none of their rites, countenance nothing of their worship; you will be defiled, offend your weak brethren: let all those things go, and, whatever you lose or suffer, I will be your Father, receive you, if you be cast off or out, and make good all your losses. God would not have his people touch or countenance any corruptions in worship. The primitive christians would not cast a little incense into the fire to countenance an idol. You know in Tertullian's days it was counted unlawful for christians to wear a garland, because it conformed them unto heathens; and what warrantableness hath been in our surplising, crossing, kneeling, cringing, altaring, observation of days, consecration of places? These have conformed us to papists, and brought an imputation upon us, that we have romanized, rather than evangelized. The Rhemists condemn the heathenish names of the week days, Sunday, Monday, &c. because it is a countenancing of heathen corruptions; it were well that we let fall all holy days, because the keeping of them is a countenancing of their corrupt observations of them. And Calvin saith, Fidelibus fas non est ullo symbolo ostendere sibi cum superstitionis esse consensum, It is not right for faithful persons to give any token of approbation of those who are superstitious. By our ceremonies and service we hardened the papists, begat hopes in them of our return to them, and grieved, if not stumbled and wounded, the godly and weak amongst us.

Obs. 7. In times of judgment, as God discountenances false worship, so he discovers and countenances his own way of worship. Christ and the six angels here came not at the altar and idol of jealousy which was now in credit, but to the brazen altar which they had set by; and now the false worship must down, the true and good way be countenanced. Ahab maintaining Baalish worship and prophets, God sent a famine, 1 Kings xviii. which brought them all low; and God now stirred up the spirit of Elijah to ruin the false prophets and worship, and raise up his own; therefore by sacrificing he discovers the false and true worship, the false and true God: and therefore after sacrificing, the people halted not any longer between two opinions, but their hearts were turned back to the Lord, and they cried, "The Lord, he is the God; the Lord, he is the God," ver. 39. In Josiah's days God's wrath was abroad, 2 Kings xxiii. 13; and then was the law found, and idolatry rooted out, chap. xxiii. 4.

When God visits for errors and corruptions in worship, then he opens a door for truth, which was shut up; and there is great reason for it, that he may clear and vindicate his proceedings. When truth and God's ways are discovered and countenanced, then sinners see they have been out, acknowledge the equity of God's judgments, if not repent of their follies.

The axe was at the root of the tree when the gospel came in; their corruptions of the law, false interpretations and traditions, were discovered, condemned, and the glorious truths of the gospel by degrees were let in. When Christ had the whip in his hand, and was purging the temple, he had the truth in his mouth: "My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves," Matt. xxi. 12, 13; John ii. 15, 16.

Ver. 3. And the glory of the God of Israel was gone up from the cherub, whereupon he was, to the threshold of the house. And he called to the man clothed with linen, which had the writer's inkhorn by his side.

Here our prophet had a sad sight, he sees the glory removed from its place, and going away, which presaged no good to Jerusalem.

The parts of the verse are these :

I. The subject of this glory, "the God of Israel."

II. The motion of this glory, or glorious God, he "was gone:" and in his going you have,

1. From whence he went, "from the cherub," &c.

2. Whither he went, "to the threshold of the house."

3. What he did, "he called."

4. To whom, "to the man clothed with linen," &c.

"The glory of the God of Israel." For the glorious God of Israel, some take it, per hypallagen. I have spoken of these words before, chap. viii. 4. We may hold to the words, and understand thereby some visible sign of the gracious presence of God. It is thought our prophet alludes to that in Exod. xxv. 22, upon the ark were two cherubims, between those the mercy-seat was, where God appeared, and from whence he gave out his mind to Moses and others; Num. vii. 89, Moses heard God speak from the mercy-seat. And that God now had left his place which he had dwelt and sat in so long: for those expressions you have, 2 Kings xix. 15; Psal. xcix. i. Now he was withdrawing his presence, and denying them assistance.

Others think by the glory of God here, to be meant that glory which the prophet had formerly seen, chap. i. 28; iii. 23; viii. 4. This visional glory, the sign of God's presence, went away, according to that, chap. x. 4, "The glory of the Lord went up from the cherub;" cherub being put for cherubims, which is usual in Scripture to put one number for another. We may safely take either of these senses; because this vision Ezekiel had of Christ was a sign of divine presence, as the mercy-seat was, the going away of it, or this glory, do both clearly evidence to us that God was departing: which is the scope of the Spirit here.

"Gone up from the cherub." Pradus denies that the Lord left the cherubims, and went without them to the threshold, but together with them; and Deodate seems to be of that opinion, in his notes upon the place: but the text itself leads us to think otherwise; for chap. x. 18, "The glory of the Lord departed from off the threshold of the house, and stood over the cherubims," which shows that the glorious Lord returned to the cherubims he had left.

"To the threshold of the house." The Septuagint has it, εἰς τὸ αἶθρον τοῦ οἴκου, in serenum, sub dō, they say the Lord went out of the temple into the open air; but it is said, the glory of the Lord went to the threshold, not over it, or beyond it; and it is conceived to be the threshold of the priests' court. The Lord went thither,

1. To show he was now going from the temple, where was such impure worship, and leaving his "glorious high throne," as it is called, Jer. xvii. 12. The Jews thought the Lord was confined to the temple, and the prophets to the holy land.

2. Because he was to pronounce sentence against this wicked, idolatrous, oppressing people, which he would not do in sancto sanctorum, or in the temple, which was the place of his gracious presence, and a type of Christ, and mercy by him. In the gates of the city they sat in judgment, Amos v. 15; and God here at the threshold gives sentence against them.

3. To treat with the men who stood at the brazen altar, and to give them commissions and instructions touching those who were to be spared and destroyed.

Obs. 1. The Lord's way of manifesting his gracious presence in his church, was by some notable sign or other. "The glory was gone up:" it was there before. When God was pleased with his people, he evidenced his presence by some special sign. Exod. xiii. 21, 22, when the church came out of Egypt, "the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light." They had guidance and protection from the Lord Christ, whose presence was evidenced by these visible signs, out of which the Lord also spake sometimes, Psal. xcix. 7. Afterward they had the tabernacle, ark, and mercy-seat, where God met them, and communed with them, Exod. xxv. 22. They had the Urim and Thummim, to inquire of God, and receive answers by, Numb. xxvii. 21; 1 Sam. xxviii. 6. In Solomon's days God manifested his gracious presence in the temple by a cloud, 1 Kings viii. 10. God answered Elijah by fire, and manifested with whom his presence was, 1 Kings xviii. 38. And so under the gospel, Christ the Lord manifested his presence with his church by visible signs: Acts ii. 3, cloven tongues like fire sat upon each of the apostles; and chap. iv. 31, the place was shaken where they were, and they were filled with the Holy Ghost. And Christ hath left his word and sacraments as signs of his presence in the christian church.

Obs. 2. The signs of God's presence are the glory of God. So the text calls them, "The glory of the God of Israel was gone up." All those visible signs before mentioned were the glory of the Lord; so the Spirit is pleased to call the sign of God's gracious presence. 1 Kings viii. 10, 11, the cloud that filled the temple is called "the glory of the Lord." Psal. xxxix. 9, "In his temple doth every one speak of his glory." The ordinances there have much of God's glory in them, and they are his glory.

Obs. 3. God's withdrawing the signs of his gracious presence from his church and people, is a forerunner of heavy judgments. Here the glory of the God of Israel went up from the cherub, and shortly after the men with their slaughter weapons are set on work to destroy. It is God's method to take away the special tokens of his presence and love from a people, and then to bring in sad judgments: people sin, and hereupon the glory removes, and judgments draw near. Exod. xxxii. the people made a calf; upon which God denies to go with them as he had done, chap. xxxiii. 3; now they should not have visible signs of his presence; and of them it is said, chap. xxxii. 35, "The Lord plagued the people, because they made the calf." &c. When God would not answer Saul by dreams, by Urim, or prophets, then his destruction was near at hand.

Among other signs of God's presence, there are these:

(1.) Efficacy of the word, that it works mightily in the hearts of people. The Lord was with the apostles, and how mightily did the word work! but when the word is inefficacious and powerless, it is evident the glory of the Lord is departing, and judgments dreadful enough at hand. The prophet prophesied to the people, but the word wrought not; Isa. vi. 9, 10, hearing they understand not, seeing they perceive not: their hearts were fat, their ears heavy, and their eyes shut: now the word was inefficacious to them. And how long shall this be? saith Isaiah; "Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate." Six times is this scripture quoted in the New Testament.

(2.) Unity and love of saints. Psal. cxxxiii. 1, where brethren dwelt together in unity, there the Lord commanded the blessing, ver. 3, and showed his gracious presence. Where love is, God dwells, 1 John iv. 16; but where bitterness and division increase, Satan hath much interest; hearts, heads, tongues, hands, are divided every where; Isa. ix. 21. Manasseh is against Ephraim, Ephraim against Manasseh, and both against Judah; Matt. xxiv. 12, love is grown cold. Instead of fervent love, are fervent contentions; instead of love without dissimulation, are crafty underminings; instead of covering infirmities, are rakings in one another's hearts.

When the breaches were stopped in the walls of Jerusalem, the enemies were very wroth, Neh. iv. 7. God hath promised to close breaches, Amos ix. 11; let us improve the promise, and importune him to fulfil it, for rich mercy depends upon it, Isa. xxx. 26. Unity is a human saviour of kingdoms and churches; division is Abaddon, Apollyon, a hellish destroyer; Matt. xii. 25, a kingdom divided cannot stand, God is departed from it.

Division hath turned religion into disputation, driven God from the heart to the head; and now men are polemical, rather than practical, in divinity.

(3.) Activity of men in place for God. Where God is present, there is courage, Josh. i. 9; 2 Chron. xiii. 12; but when he withdraws, men are without spirit, divine influences cease, a numbness seizeth upon them, and they act faintly, be it in church or state. Hos. vii. 11. God was departing from Ephraim, if not departed, and Ephraim was a silly dove without heart, void of counsel and courage, and so fit for prey and spoil; Ephraim was quickly spoiled after the Lord left them.

(4.) Safety, protection, Jer. i. 19; Psal. xlvi. 5. Isa. xxvii. 3, "Lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day." Where there is keeping, watching, there is presence. But is not our safety almost, if not altogether, gone? can we challenge safety of any thing, estates, liberties, lives, religion? have not our armies smarted, had blows and breaches? is not our land spoiled, and under grievous pressures? are we not for a prey, and none delivereth. Isa. xlii. 22.

Obs. 4. The Lord doth not willingly depart from his people when they have provoked him. He goes from the cherub to the threshold of the house, and there stands, as loth to go any further; he had rather stay with them, than depart from them, if there were any hope of amendment. Hos. xi. 8, "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? how shall I set thee as Zeboim? mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together." Ephraim had deeply corrupted herself; swearing, lying, killing, stealing, adultery, idolatry, oppression, were found in Ephraim; and yet God saith, "How shall I give," &c. And further, that God is unwilling to leave his people, is evident:

(1.) He desires they should prevent it, Isa. i. 2—4, 16, 18.

(2.) Doth upon easy terms offer favour; Jer. iii. 13, 14, "Only acknowledge thine iniquity, for I am married unto thee."

(3.) Useth strong arguments to persuade his people to turn to him; Ezek. xxxiii. 11, "As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked. Turn ye, turn ye," &c. See chap. xviii. 32.

(4.) He is troubled when it cometh to departing.

(5.) When the Lord goes from a people, it is not suddenly, but by degrees. He did not here in a moment leave the temple, but moved first to the threshold; afterwards it went up over the threshold, chap. x. 4; then higher, towards heaven, ver. 19; then to the midst of the city, and from thence to the mountain on the east side of the city, chap. xi. 23; and so went wholly from them: thus God step by step left them.

Ver. 4. And the Lord said unto him, Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof.

In this verse divine pleasure is made known to him who had the inhorn by his side, and it consists in a double command:

1. He is commanded to "go through the midst of the city," and find out who sighed and cried for the abominations therein.

2. He must "set a mark upon the foreheads" of them who sighed and cried.

"Set a mark." What this was is much disputed. Popish expositors say it was the letter tau, which prefigured the cross of Christ. Some Hebrews by that mark tau understand those who have perfect knowledge of the law; some, those who kept the law, tau standing for torah, signifying the law. Others understand believers in the Messiah, tau noting a cross. Jerom and some with him think the Hebrew ט was originally like the Greek τ, representing a cross; and that Ezra returning from the captivity, found out new characters, which are those we use; and Pradus saith, Arius Montanus had a silver shekel, in which the Hebrew letters were not unlike the Greek, and this shekel himself had seen; but it is not evident, saith Sanctius, that the monys or shekels which were before the captivity had any letters upon them, they were not known by any stamp, but by their weight; and it is not probable Ezra should reject the original characters of the sacred tongue, and devise new himself. Some that will have the mark tau meant here, make it a sign of life, as theta was of death. Judges marked those who were condemned with a theta, and those who were to be freed with tau. If conjectures might take place, thus tau is the basis of the Hebrew alphabet, and marking by Christ is the basis of all true comfort and sound profession. But to leave conjectures, and to feed you with truth, "Set a mark," refers no more to one letter than another, not to the Greek τ, or Latin t, because the Lord spoke not in those languages, but in the Hebrew; and he means not the letter τ there, but a sign in general, as the word ט not the letter τ signifies; for the original is sign, a sign; ט signum, from טיה signare. And so it is used in Job xxxi. 35, "Behold, my desire is, that the Almighty would answer me;" the Hebrew is ט Behold, my sign is, that the Almighty would answer me. So it is rendered in the margin; in this sense also the Septuagint renders it, give or put a sign; and so Symmachus and Aquila.

This sign was no corporal sign, as if the Lord had made some impression in their foreheads, whereby to distinguish them from others; for this was a vision, not to be taken really, but in a spiritual sense. The Lord Christ took special notice of these, and did distinguish them by special providence from those who were to perish in the destruction of the city; he did not go up and down from house to house, and set a mark in their foreheads, he applied his blood and merits, and sealed them by his Spirit; not that they were not washed in the blood of Christ before, but now there was a new and special evidence of it.

"Upon the foreheads." Not on their backs, breasts, arms, but on their foreheads. Some think the prophet alludes to a practice of marking servants in the forehead, who had their masters' names inscribed therein, whence they were called inscripti literati servi; and it is the use among us to brand some delinquents with a T in the shoulder, hand, or forehead; and, as before was said, judges marked those who were questioned, and to be freed, with tau. Here was nothing written upon their foreheads, but something is held out by these words unto us; (Christ having intimated their election, effectual calling, justification by his blood, intercession for them, providential care over them in the dreadful judgments coming upon them, doth by this phrase declare his public owning and caring for them. The forehead is an open place, exposed to view of all, and whatever is there, is visible: Rev. xiii. 16, the mark of the beast was in the hand and forehead; one was secret, more private, the other more open. Christ would so deal by these persons, and so deliver them, that it should openly appear he had distinguished them from others.

Upon their foreheads is specified, to let us see here was a personal, not a family deliverance intended.

Quest. Were all delivered who were marked?

Ans. It is believed that some godly ones suffered by the sword and famine, that some also were carried away captive. Jeremiah himself was not free from sufferings.

Quest. For what end were they then marked?

Ans. 1. To secure them of their eternal condition, that their sins were pardoned, and persons accepted.

2. To assure them that he was with them, and would work all things for their good, and increase of their glory.

3. To encourage their hearts against all opposition and hardship whatsoever.

"The men that sigh." The word notes sighing for grief of mind: grief is a heavy burden, and causes men to sigh as those that are burdened. Exod. ii. 23, "The children of Israel sighed by reason of bondage;" the heavy bondage they were under made them groan and sigh; and so these here had the burden of Jerusalem's abominations upon them, and that made them sigh. Prov. xxix. 2, "When the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn:" it is the same word; they meet with heavy pressures which make them sigh.

"That cry." This notes such sorrow as exceeds sighing, and must vent itself in a more full way, viz. with crying vehemently, as wounded men use to do when they breathe out their souls. Ezek. xxvi. 15, "The wounded cry when the slaughter is made;" and Jer. li. 52, "Through all the land the wounded shall groan;" or cry: it is the same word; so that the meaning is, they did sigh greatly, and cry out bitterly, for the abominations which were in Jerusalem.

Obs. 1. The Lord looks upon the world with a discriminating eye: some he looks upon to be marked, and some to be left unmarked. All are not equal in God's thoughts or eye: some from eternity he predestinated, some he passed over; and now in time some he eyes for salvation, some he sets by for perdition: his eye distinguisheth between the precious and the vile. Psal. xxxiv. 15, 16, "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and the face of the Lord is against them that do evil:" he beholds both, but with a different aspect; one sort he beholds to do good to, the other to cut off. Psal. xi. 4, "His eyelids try the children of men;" he looks fixedly upon them, and as they are, so he deals with them. Job xxxv. 7, it is said, "He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous:" they are the delight of his eyes, but the wicked are thorns, provocations to his eyes, Isa. iii. 8.

Obs. 2. When the Lord proceeds to judgment of cities, churches, people, kingdoms, he doth it ju-iciously, considerably. He doth not pour out wrath from heaven at all adventures, let it light where and upon whom it will; but he makes inquiry who are fit to be punished, and who are to be spared. Psal. ix. 7, "The Lord hath prepared his throne for judgment;" and then, ver. 8, "He shall judge the world in righteousness;" and, ver. 12, "He maketh inquisition for blood;" the oppressed he will relieve, the oppressors he will cut off. When judgments are abroad, especially wars, all things seem to move confusedly, and wicked men to do what they list; they will destroy all before them: but they cannot; the judgments are the Lord's, and he carries them on judiciously; there are eyes in the wheels, and a divine Spirit in them, and they do not move, they cannot move otherwise than the wise God will have them.

Obs. 3. In the worst times God hath some who are faithful, and serve him. Violence had filled the land, the idol of jealousy was set at the altar gate, chambers of imagery in the walls of the temple, the ancients of Israel worshipped the forms of creeping things and abominable beasts, the women wept for that shameful idol Tammuz, corruptions abounded in church and state; yet some faithful ones the Lord had, that were undefiled. The church of God did never totally fail, nor ever shall. When all flesh had corrupted its way, the wickedness of man was grown great; when the earth was filled with violence, Gen. vi. 5, 11, 12, yet then, even then was Noah untainted, "he was just and perfect in his generations, and walked with God," ver. 9. In Ahab's days, when Jezebel cut off the prophets of the Lord, and he vexed the righteous with his will-worship and abominable idolatries, and forced them to flee to Jerusalem; and things were so extremely ill, the righteous so wasted, that Elijah, a prophet, thought there was none left in Israel but himself; even then the Lord tells him there were seven thousand, which had not bowed their knees to Baal, nor kissed him, 1 Kings xix. 18; they have showed that false god no reverence, contracted no pollution by doing as the rest did. When Ahab, who is stigmatized for his wickedness, 2 Chron. xxviii. 22, when he reigned, cut in pieces the vessels of the temple, and shut up the doors of the temple, and made altars in every corner of Jerusalem, ver. 24; yet his own son Hezekiah was godly at that time, and hated the ways of his father. When Christ came, there was a Joseph and Mary, a Zacharias and Elisabeth, a Simeon and Anna, with some few others; and the times were exceeding bad then. In the depths of popery were pauperes Lugdunenses, of whom Reinerus a popish inquisitor writes, that they had a great show of godliness, because they lived justly before men, believed all things well concerning God and all the articles of faith, only they blasphemed and hated the church of Rome. God had his Huss, Jerom of Prague, and Luther, in times bad enough.

Obs. 4. The number of men to be saved in Jerusalem is few. Commission is given to the man with the inkhorn by his side, to go and search through Jerusalem, and where he found any mourning, sighing, to mark them; and surely this number was very few: he is not to mark streets, families, but particular persons, which notes the paucity of those that were truly godly, and to be saved. In Egypt the blood was upon the lintel and side-posts of the door, and so whole families there escaped; but here in Jerusalem the mark is not upon the door, but the forehead; many doors, whole families, were passed over, here and there one found and marked. Take a place or two to this purpose: Jer. v. 1, "Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it. Here God bids them search and see if they could find a man and bring forth, so that the city might be spared, but they could not find one. This satisfied not God, they might be careless in that work, overlook some man that did it; God therefore will search himself: Ezek. xxii. 30, "I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it; but I found none." Neither man nor God could find any. These expressions show that the number of the godly was very few: that those who were so durst not appear in public, because the times were so profane and perilous, but hid themselves and mourned in secret. Few is the number of true believers and true mourners; there were two prophets, Jeremiah and Uriah, the Rechabites, Baruch the scribe, Ebedmelech the Ethiopian, with some few beside. The thought of the scant number of the good ones made sad the heart of the prophet Micah, chap. vii. 1, "Woe is me! for I am as when they have gathered the summer fruits, as the grape-gleanings of the vintage: there is no cluster to eat."

Obs. 5. The Lord hath a special care of his saints when dreadful and destroying judgments are coming upon others. "Go, set a mark upon them that sigh," &c. provide that they be secured, distinguish them from all the rest, and let them have mercy in the common calamity. It appears,

(1.) From the person employed to do it, and that is the Lord Christ, who was the man with the inkhorn by his side. When God shall employ not a prophet, not an angel, but his own dear Son to do this work, to mark the godly, it is argument of tender care towards them.

(2.) He must "go through the midst of the city," and look into every place, make an exact search, and find them out wherever they were hid; God would not have him neglect any place, lest he should pass by any saint. Matt. ii. 8, Herod would have the wise men make diligent search for the young child; and God would have Christ here make diligent search for mourning saints; they are his treasure, and Christ would search for them as for hid treasure.

(3.) He must surely mark them. You shall sign them with a sign, that is, certainly sign them; the doubling of the word in the original notes God's intention and care to have it done: it might have sufficed to have said, You shall sign them; but he adds, with a sign, to put it out of doubt.

(4.) From the persons sealed:

[1.] Men. It is put indefinitely, not confined to noble, wise, rich, learned, but any condition of men that were godly; any poor man, any servant, any child, any little one, let their grace be never so mean, if they had any grace at all, they should have the seal as well as the best.

[2.] Mourners. When filled with sorrow for the sins of the land, with fears for the judgments which were coming upon the land, all in a confusion, every one at a loss, not knowing what to do, which way to turn themselves; liberties, ordinances, city, sanctuary, all comforts, all friends, being upon departure; now to be marked out for life eternal, now to have the conscience sprinkled with the blood of Christ, the Spirit to bear witness and seal up the soul, with assurance of God's love; this shows God hath a great care of his people in time of dangers.

Not only at this time, but in all times of judgments God hath been careful of his people. Lot's righteous soul was vexed at the unclean conversation of the Sodomites; and when fire and brimstone scorched, consumed Sodom, God sent his angels to find, hasten, and force Lot out of that wicked place, Gen. xix. The flood that drowned all the world, could not hurt Noah; God put him into the ark, shut him in, and kept him safe there, Gen. vii. When the destroying angel comes forth to destroy the first-born of Egypt, the Israelites' posts were sprinkled with blood, Exod. xii. 22, and no blood must be shed there; they were marked for deliverance. When Jericho was taken and destroyed, the scarlet thread in the window was a sign of deliverance to Rahab and her house, Josh. ii. 18; vi. 23. Rev. vii. 2—5, Christ the Angel of the east, who had the seal of the living God, viz. the Spirit, forbids the angels to hurt any, till the one hundred and forty-four thousand were sealed in their foreheads. When Paul was brought before Nero, and all left him in the jaws of that roaring lion, the Lord stood by him and strengthened him: the more careless others were of Paul, the more careful was God of him. A little before Jerusalem was taken by the Romans, a voice was heard, He Pellam; Mal. iii. 16, 17. the faithful no sooner escape thither, but the city was ruined, and all the foretold woes accomplished in it.

Obs. 6. It is the Lord Christ who is the marker of the saints. All power in heaven and earth is given to him; sealing and saving power, as well as rejecting and destroying power. He is said to have the seal of the living God, Rev. vii. and to take order for the sealing the servants of the Lord. Rev. iii. 12, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out; and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name." Christ makes him a pillar in the temple, that is great honour; but that is not all, Christ writes three names upon that man; the name of his God, of new Jerusalem, and his own name; he causeth him to know he is the son of God, a citizen of the heavenly city, and should have interest in the glory and dignity of Phil. ii. 9. Christ, which divines call the new Heb. ii. 7.

name given him after his passion and ascension: such marking have the saints and faithful servants of Christ. The Scripture tells us of another marker besides Christ, and it is the beast mentioned Rev. xiii. 16, 17, who causeth all to receive a mark in their right hand and forehead. Christ had sealed his, Rev. vii. to separate them from the world and danger; and the beast seals his, to separate them from Christ's sealed ones, and for the world, that they might buy and sell: this sealing was not for deliverance, but for destruction; Rev. xiv. 9, 10, "If any man receive the beast's mark in his hand or forehead, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, and be tormented with fire and brimstone." Here was a dangerous mark, whether it was the mass, sign of the cross, profession of popish worship, subjection to the pope as head of the church, obedience to his canons and decrees, observation of his fasts, days, rites; whether auricular confession, popish orders, or any vows or oaths to maintain the pope and his power, such as Otho took in the year 960.

Obs. 7. God and Christ are not ashamed of theirs in the worst times and greatest dangers; God will have them marked, and Christ doth mark them in the forehead. In Sodom God owned Lot; in Rome he stood by Paul, 2 Tim. iv. 17. When four destroying angels were come abroad, the Lord Christ seals twelve thousand of every tribe in their foreheads, Rev. vii. 3, 5—8. Christ owns his people

Rev. xvii. 4.
"His name shall be in their foreheads." The beast had marked and owned the seal that were here, and Christ owned it so by his: it was indication of nota.

here and hereafter; see John x. 3, 14, 27. He calls them his sheep, his friends, chap. xv. 15, his brethren: "I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; to my God, and your God," John xv. 17. When Christ was in heaven, he owned Stephen being amidst his enemies, Acts vii. 55, 56; and he promises, Matt. x. 32, to confess and own the man before his Father in heaven, who shall confess and own him here on earth. It is a great privilege to be owned by the Lord; Heb. xi. 16. "God is not ashamed to be called their God;" notwithstanding all the saints' sins and infirmities, God is not ashamed of them. When they were in Egypt, God owned them; Exod. iii. 6, 7, he tells Moses he was the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and that he had surely seen the affliction of his people.

Victoria, a holy virgin, under Dioclesian, being asked by the proconsul if she would go with her brother Fortunianus, a heathen; answered, No, because I am a christian, and they are my brethren which keep the commands of God.

Let not us be ashamed of God and his cause, but openly and truly profess him and his ways: we shall lose nothing by it; 1 Sam. ii. 30, "Them that honour me I will honour, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed." If we have shame with men and honour with God, vilified on earth and be accepted in heaven, we have no cause to be discouraged. It is likely the godly here were reproached, threatened, hardly used; but because they honoured God, God owned them; and who ever honoured God, and was not honoured by him? The three children would not obey Nebuchadnezzar's command, nor worship his image, Dan. iii. but honour the God of Israel, trust in him for help; rather die in his cause than dishonour him at all; and did not the Lord honour them with his presence, with safety and deliverance. When Peter and John were bold in the cause of Christ, and would preach the truth notwithstanding the command of rulers to the contrary; presently after God honoured them miraculously, shaking the house, and filling them all with the Holy Ghost, Acts iii. 18—20, 31. And if you ask how you shall honour God; it is answered, by purging yourselves from the corruptions of the times, 2 Tim. ii. 21, "If a man purge himself, he shall be a vessel unto honour," and by standing for the truths of the times.

Obs. 8. Another observation is, that the faithful are so far from complying with the wickedness of the times, that they sigh and cry for the abominations thereof.

(1.) They comply not. Wickedness is powerful, and hath its arguments of pleasure, profit, countenance, to draw good men to side with her; but they are things intractable. "How can I do this wickedness, and sin against God?" Gen. xxxix. 9. David would not sit with the wicked, he hated the congregation of evil-doers, Psal. xxvi. 5; and see what he resolved upon, Psal. ci. 4—8; he would rather cut them off than countenance them. Grace is as strong in the saints, as corruption is in the wicked. The vigour of faith, 1 John v. 4, the power of the Spirit, chap. iv. 4, and the efficacy of Christ's prayer, John xvii. 15, 20, do keep the servants of God from complying with the wicked. When all flesh had corrupted its ways, yet Noah was uncorrupt; Gen. vi. 9, "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations." Ahab could not get Micah to comply with the court, and suit with the humour of the times. The godly are like fish in salt waters, they grow not brackish, they lose not of their sweetness. Zacharias and Elisabeth, in the great corruptions at Christ's coming, in the great scarcity of good men, yet they walked in all the commandments of the Lord blameless, not in the commands of the high priests and pharisees. God hath spoken to the righteous with a strong hand, and instructed them that they should not walk in the ways of the wicked, Isa. viii. 11. Here the godly did not bow to the image of jealousy, join with the seventy elders in offering incense; they wept not for Tammuz, they put not the branch to their nose.

(2.) They sigh and cry for the abominations which are in their times, they bewail the sins of others: Psal. cxix. 53, "Horror hath taken hold upon me because of the wicked that forsake thy law." Ver. 158, "I beheld the transgressors, and was grieved; because they kept not thy word." Lot, 2 Pet. ii. 7, was vexed with the filthy conversation of the Sodomites; yea, vexed from day to day; what he saw and heard was a continual vexation unto him. The Lord Christ, when they honoured him with their garments cast in the way, when they acknowledged him King, and magnified him, Luke xix. 36, 38, even then he weeps over Jerusalem for her impenitency, others' sins, and the judgments of God coming upon her, ver. 41. The two witnesses, Rev. xi. 3, prophesy in sackcloth, which was the habit of mourners: Mordecai, Daniel, the Ninevites, and others, when they mourned, wore sackcloth; so did these witnesses bewailing the abominations and tyranny of antichrist, the desolations of the church, and delusions of the people. 2 Cor. xii. 21, "When I come again I fear my God will humble me among you, and that I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness and fornication and lasciviousness which they have committed."

This mourning is, [1.] hearty, real; they sigh, they groan; it is not a light matter, the abominations were weighty, and pressing upon their spirits. 2 Pet. ii. 7, the word there for vexed is, καταπορούμενον ὑπὸ τῆς τῶν ἀθεσμων ἐν ἀσελγείᾳ ἀναστροφῆς, and it is then to be rendered word for word, oppressed under the conversation of the ungodly in wantonness. The ungodly's wanton, wicked conversation is an oppressing evil unto the godly, and afflicts their hearts, as the Egyptians afflicted the Israelites: Acts vii. 24, Moses avenged the oppressed. Lot's soul was vexed, ver. 8, he tormented, racked his soul; a metaphor taken from engines they did torment with, his soul was troubled as a man upon the rack. Jer. iv. 19, "My bowels, my bowels! I am pained at my very heart:" what was the matter? there was "the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war."

[2.] As it was cordial, so it was constant and great grief; they sighed and cried, a little sufficed not, it continued. Jer. ix. 1, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night." The prophet wished himself turned into waters, into a fountain, that, weeping day and night, he might with a flood of tears carry down the floods of iniquity which he saw. So Ezra, chap. ix. 3, when he saw the holy seed mated with strangers, the princes and rulers to be chief in the trespasses, he rent his garments, plucked off the hair of his head and beard, and sat down astonished; his grief was such as made him astonished.

[3.] It is inward and outward; they sigh, they cry, there are expressions of their grief, it was not hidden, but evident; they declared how their souls were oppressed, how they were filled with grief, and could not forbear. Christ wept over Jerusalem. Micah, when he considered the sins of Samaria and Jerusalem, with the heavy judgments which were coming, chap. i. 8, saith, "I will wail and howl, I will go stripped and naked" (as if sorrow had bereft him of his wits); "I will make a wailing like the dragons, and mourning as the owls." Id. A Lapid and Sanctius, what they say of the dragons' and owls' mourning: great mourning with outward expressions are set out thereby; Job xxx. 29, "I am a brother to dragons, and a companion to owls" or ostriches.

[4.] Universal; not for some few or great abominations, but for all the abominations, church, state, city, family abominations; they laid all to heart, and left none unbewailed.

Inquire, I. Why do the godly sigh and cry?

1. God is dishonoured by the sins of others, as well as by our own, and the godly are grieved when God is dishonoured by any. Psal. cxix. 136, "Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, because they keep not thy law." David's afflictions drew not so many tears from him, as the sins of others; not his banishment by his son, as the breach of God's law by the wicked. Nothing went so to his heart as the dishonour of God, whose glory shining in his word and ordinances, is dearer to the godly than their lives. Elijah desired to die when he saw God so dishonoured by Ahab and Jezebel. The eye is for two things, for sight and tears: if we see God dishonoured, presently our eyes should be filled with tears.

2. If we mourn not for the sins of others, we draw them upon us, we make them ours. They mourned here for all their abominations, lest they should be found guilty of any: and I Cor. v. the Corinthians were defiled with the sin of the incestuous person, because they did not mourn and do their duty to affect his heart, or remove him from their body. Bradford prayed the Lord to forgive him his other men's sins.

3. It is argument we mourn for sin as sin when we mourn for it in others. Sin is the breach of the law any where, and if I grieve, sigh, cry for it in myself, and not in others, it is some selfish respect, not the nature of sin, which causeth that mourning. He who hates poison as poison, hates it every where, in whose hand soever it be; and he who mourns for sin as sin, would neither himself, nor have others, violate the law of God.

4. The sins of others are of a destroying nature, as well as our own: they may destroy armies, states, churches, counsels. Eccles. ix. 18, "One sinner destroyeth much good." One Achan, one murderer may undo a land: he defiles it, brings peril upon it. God appointed a special sacrifice to expiate murder, Deut. xxi. 1; and no satisfaction was to be taken for a murderer's life, Numb. xxxv. 31. Saul slays the Gibeonites unjustly, and the three years' famine is upon David and his people, 2 Sam. xxi. 1-3. The death of the Levite's concubine, and Benjamin's refusal to deliver up the delinquents to justice, caused a bloody war, and the death of above sixty-five thousand men.

5. It argues strength of grace to mourn for others' sins. Censuring and reproaching of others for their sins argues strength of corruption; and mourning for them argues strength of grace, a sound spiritual constitution: such a one was in Christ, he prayed for the hardness of others' hearts, Mark iii. 5.

6. They who mourn for abominations, do great service for the places where they live; they stand in the gap, they keep off God's judgments. When the people had sinned in making a calf, and God's judgments were breaking in upon them, did not Moses mourn, weep, pray before the Lord, and keep off the sad things that were hastening towards them? Psal. cvi. 23, "He said that he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them." The mourner's tears oft quench the fire of God's wrath, divert judgments; if not, but destruction comes, as here, yet the mourners have this testimony in their breast, that they drew not down the vengeance on the church or state.

7. They are blessed that mourn, Matt. v. 4. These here were marked, had testimonies of God's good will towards them. Jeremiah was a mourner, chap. ix. 1; and chap. xv. 11, saith God there, "I will cause the enemy to entreat thee well in the time of evil." Here was a blessing promised, and the faithful God could not but perform it. When the earth is watered by the heavens, it is blessed; but when the earth waters the heavens, when we put tears into the Lord's bottle, when we mourn and weep for the abominations of the earth, there is a greater blessing: Psal. xii. 5, "For the sighing of the needy, I will arise and set," &c. Isa. lvii. 18, "I will restore comforts unto him and to his mourners."

8. Others mourn for the sins of men that are not men: "Because of swearing the land mourneth," Jer. xxiii. 10. "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain," Rom. viii. 22.

Inquire, II. For what should we mourn?

1. For effusion of so much blood in the kingdom, and spoiling so many towns. When Ziklag was burned, it is said, David and those with him wept till they had no more power to weep, 1 Sam. xxx. 4. What would David do, if he were now alive and amongst us, to see countries and kingdoms consumed with civil wars? Isa. xxii. 4, 5, "Look away from me; I will weep bitterly, labour not to comfort me, because of the spoiling of the daughter of my people. For it is a day of trouble, and of treading down, and of perplexity by the Lord God of hosts in the valley of vision, breaking down the walls, and of crying to the mountains." Jer. xxxi. 15, "A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted, because they were not." Rachel was buried in Bethlehem, Gen. xxxv. 19, and Ramah was not far from it: she is put for the Bethlemitical women, who wept bitterly for their children who were slain, and carried that way into captivity. And should not England weep because thousands of her children are not; many precious ones are gone, the sword hath drunk their blood? If Martha and Mary wept for one Lazarus, the friend of Christ, why should not all our Marthas and Marys weep, when so many Lazaruses, so many friends of Christ, have been cut off? Isa. lvii. 1, "The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart."

2. That justice take no place, but rather injustice and oppression. Isa. lix. 11, "We roar all like bears, and mourn sore like doves: we look for judgment, but there is none;" and ver. 14, 15, "Justice standeth afar off, equity cannot enter; he that departeth from evil makes himself a prey: and the Lord saw it, and it displeased him that there was no judgment." The oppressed cry.

3. For the sinful, selfish policy which hath been in the great businesses of the kingdom which are to carry on reformation. They carried the ark, when their own shoulders should have carried it; their prudence in the things of God made way for Uzzah's sin and suffering, and hindered the progress of the work. There hath been too much of man seen in our undertakings. Oh the policy, falsehood, treachery, that hath been among us! What was it made Jeremiah weep and mourn so? chap. ix. 1, 2; it was because they were "adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men."

4. For the great and bitter divisions which are among us, not only among those who are wicked or indifferent, but even among those who are godly; they shoot their arrows one at another, even bitter words and bitter actions. Is it not sad when Christ's disciples and apostles fall out? Matt. xx. 24. "The ten were moved with indignation against the two brethren." It troubled Christ to see such variance between them, and had he not wisely and speedily taken up the matter, the issue might have been very ill. When brethren wrong one another, it will affect a Moses, Acts vii. 26. Is it not to be lamented when our fountains run salt water? when brethren speak evil one of another, and so speak evil of the law and gospel also? Gal. v. 15, it troubled Paul's spirit to see such biting and devouring of one another. Certainly if we should see two or three dogs biting of a man, it would much work upon us, and move us to rate and beat them off; and can we see men biting men, and not be affected with it? To see men destroyed with a spirit of bitterness, when they should be restored with a spirit of meekness, is mourning to some, however it be music to others.

5. That God's judgments have been so long upon us, and done us so little good. God hath given us much physic, and it doth not work; we may be a dying people, as those Jews were, Ezra x. 9; it is said there that all the people sat in the street of the house of God trembling, because some were carried away captive, and for the great rain, the great showers which beat down their fruit and corn. We have had many taken prisoners, carried away captive, used barbarously; we have had great rains of blood; and have we yet trembled? have we learned righteousness, and beheld the majesty of the Lord? Isa. xxvi. 9, 10. May it not be said, as it is Jer. v. 3, "Thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder than a rock?"

6. That so many thousands have perished in their sins, and multitudes are in a perishing way: Rom. ix. 2. "I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish myself separated from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh:" he feared they would perish eternally, and therefore mourned continually. Granetensis tells of a woman that was so affected with souls' miscarryings, that she besought God to stop up the passage into hell with her soul and body, that none might have entrance. Do not people perish for want of vision, and few lay it to heart?

7. That God's name suffers so much amongst us. God's name should be dear to us: the Scripture tells us it is glorious and fearful, Deut. xxviii. 58; great and terrible, Psal. xcix. 3; holy and revered, Psal. cxi. 9; honourable, Psal. lxxvi. 2: and that this name of God should suffer by sinful, wretched men is matter of sighing and crying. Some despise his name, Mal. i. 6, some profane his name, Lev. xxi. 6, some blaspheme his name, Isa. lii. 5, and most darken the glory of his name; and as it was to Joshua a great grief, bitter affliction, when his name suffered, Josh. vii. 9, so it should be to us.

Ver. 5—7. And to the others he said in mine hearing, Go ye after him through the city, and smite: let not your eye spare, neither have ye pity: slay utterly old and young, both maids, and little children, and women: but come not near any man upon whom is the mark; and begin at my sanctuary. Then they began at the ancient men which were before the house. And he said unto them, Defile the house, and fill the courts with the slain: go ye forth. And they went forth, and slew in the city.

The Lord Christ having marked some for mercy, in these verses is declared what was to be done with the rest.

1. Here is a command to execute them.

II. The execution itself.

In the command you have these particulars:

1. The party commanding; "he said."

2. The parties commanded; "the others."

3. The witness of what was commanded, and that is Ezekiel; "in mine hearing."

4. The things commanded, which are these:

(1.) To "go;" they must go after him who marked the mourners.

(2.) To "smite," ver. 5, to "slay," ver. 6, to "defile," to "fill the courts" of the sanctuary "with the slain," ver. 7.

III. A double prohibition.

1. Of mercy to the wicked; "Let not your eye spare, neither have ye pity," ver. 6.

2. Of meddling with the marked; "Come not near any upon whom the mark is," ver. 6.

IV. Whom they must smite, slay; "old, young, maids, children, women."

V. The place where they must begin, and that is the "sanctuary," ver. 6.

VI. Then the execution itself; "They went forth," &c.

I shall open the words wherein any thing seems difficult, and then give you the observation.

"The others." They were the six angels who had the slaughter weapons in their hands; they must now go and make use of them; they were not called for in vain.

"Let not your eye spare." This phrase is sometimes referred to things without life; as Gen. xlv. 20, "Regard not your stuff:" the Hebrew is, Let not your eye spare your stuff. It is Joseph's speech to his brethren, when he was inviting them to come to Egypt, and his meaning is this; When you shall look upon the furniture of my father's house, and see what goodly, rich, and useful stuff it is, you will be loth to leave it behind you, your eyes will be affected with it, you will say you cannot be without it, though you know not how to bring it; but let not your eyes spare it, look on it as a needless thing, regard it not, Egypt is before you, and there is enough to supply and suffice you.

Sometimes it is referred to things with life, as men and beasts, and notes thus much, that there should be no sign of mercy in their eyes, not a look, not a favourable aspect towards those they were to execute; their eyes must be terrible, and not spare from vengeance, they must show no pity; and the word in Scripture is so rendered; Deut. xiii. 8, "Thine eye shall not pity him, neither shalt thou spare;" that which is "pity" here is "spare" in my text, and that which is "spare" in my text, is "pity" here. And Deut. vii. 16, "Thine eye shall have no pity upon them:" the Hebrew is the same word; thou shalt not spare upon them, spare to execute vengeance upon them: so that they are used promiscuously, and one interprets the other; an eye not sparing, is to show no mercy, no pity. That in I Sam. xxiv. 10 clears it; when some bade David kill Saul when he cut off the skirt of his garment, saith he, "But mine eye spared thee," that is, had pity" on thee, and I killed thee not; if mine eye had not spared thee, I had killed thee without pity, without mercy. Jer. xxi. 7, "He shall not spare them, neither have pity, nor have mercy;" the two first words are in my text, and they are both interpreted by the last, not to spare. Not to pity is to have no mercy, whatever motives be thereunto.

"Slay utterly old and young." In the Hebrew it is, the old man, the young man, the maiden, and little child, all in the singular number, which is put for the plural.

Quest. Here a great question is movable, How it stands with the justice of God to give charge for the destruction of little children which were innocent?

Ans. The word נַפְלִיּוֹת for little children some take to be meant of such as could play in the streets, and were under twenty years. Gen. xlvii. 12, "Joseph nourished his father, and his brethren, and all his father's household, with bread, according to their families," לְפָנָיו הִנְיָהוּ according to the little ones; they were not sucking children, but such as could run up and down, that Joseph nourished: now if the little children be taken for such, they might be guilty of great sins, as the children that mocked the prophet, and so deserve death.

But take little children for such as have not committed actual sin, even babes new born, in the womb, of which sort many perished in the flood, and many in Sodom, such God may cut off without impeachment of his justice.

1. He hath an absolute dominion over his creatures; he is the potter, and we are the clay; if he make the vessel, he may break the vessel; shall he not do with his own as he please? He gives life to babes, and he may take it from them when and how he pleases.

2. They were defiled with original sin, and deserved death. "The wages of sin," be it original or actual, "is death," and it matters not whether a natural or a violent death: therefore he forbade Jeremiah to take a wife, to have sons and daughters in Jerusalem; and as for those sons and daughters which should be born there, they and their fathers and mothers should be consumed by the sword, and by famine, Jer. xvi. 2—4.

3. They are parts of their parents, part of their family, part of their substance, and God may punish the sinning parent in his child, as well as in his stock.

4. Had they lived, it is likely they would have trod in their fathers' steps, and sinned those great sins they did, like them in Jer. vii. 18, "Children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough." Neither doth God punish upon prevision of future sin, but takes them away from present and future pollution.

5. God might, notwithstanding this outward temporal judgment, have mercy on their souls. Questionless many children die more terrible deaths than by the sword, and yet perish not eternally.

"Come not near any man upon whom is the mark."

Quest. If this mark were not a visible mark, how should they know them, and spare them?

Ans. The Lord knew who were his, though men knew them not; and it is probable such is the rage of the wicked against the godly, that if they had a little distinguishing character from others, they would the rather have fallen upon them, and cut them off; but the Lord ordered the judgment so, and their spirits so, that they came not near them. The mark was inward in the foreheads of their consciences, and Providence watched and wrought for them without. God might dart a fear into them, disable them from doing the marked ones any hurt, divert them to other families and persons: and this manner of speech is more than if he had said, Do not kill them; they might do much hurt to them, yet not kill them; but when he saith, Come not near them, God doth make a fence about them, and compasseth them with this command and his favour in it, as with a shield against all evil and wrong.

This deliverance of the marked ones from the slaughter men, is a type of God's preserving his people in all great and general calamities, and especially of freeing his elect ones from hell and the fires thereof. The Chaldeans must not come near the marked ones to destroy them, and devils must not come near those Christ hath sprinkled with his blood, to ruin and destroy them; they are freed from the power of Satan and eternal death.

"Begin at my sanctuary." This was the holy place, the habitation of God, where his worship was, where he gave out gracious answers unto them, yet here they must begin.

Why here?

1. They trusted in the holiness of this place: Jer. vii. 4, 10, when they had sinned grievously, they thought that if they came and worshipped there, all was well, they were delivered, and cried out, "The temple of the Lord." God would begin with their confidence.

2. They had greatly polluted that holy place: there was the idol of jealousy; there was the form of every creeping thing and abominable beast portrayed upon the walls; there were men offering incense to those idols; there was the filthy idol Tammuz, and women weeping for it; there were men with their backs towards God, the ark, and worshipping the sun eastward; there they put the branch to their nose. Great abominations were gotten into the temple, they must therefore begin there.

3. The sins of the priests and prophets who belonged to the temple were exceeding great. They were messengers of God to the people, and mouths of the people to God, and above others should have been clean, holy, gracious, free from the sins of the times; they should have been exemplary unto others; but if you observe the Scripture a little, you shall find they were patterns of all impiety to the people: they were ignorant, blind, dumb, drunken, Isa. xxviii. 7; lvi. 10, 12; unclean, filthy, strengthening the hands of the wicked, Jer. xxiii. 14; covetous and cruel, Isa. lvi. 11; Micah iii. 5; conceited of their own abilities, Jer. viii. 8; flatterers, and dealt falsely with the people, Jer. vi. 13, 14; xxvii. 15; they perverted the word of the Lord, Jer. xxiii. 36; they rejected his word, Jer. viii. 9; they prophesied their own dreams, Jer. xxiii. 2, 7, and put it upon God, saying, "He saith," ver. 31; they ruled with rigour, Ezek. xxxiv. 4; they reproached, slandered, and complained of the true prophets, stirring up enemies against them, and seeking their liberties and lives, Jer. xxvi. 8, 9, 11; Amos vii. 10. This made Jeremiah conclude, Lam. iv. 13, that Jerusalem was destroyed chiefly "for the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests, that shed the blood of the just in the midst of her."

Obs. 1. When God is upon executing judgment, he first manifests, yea, vouchsafes mercy to his friends, before he lets out wrath upon his enemies. "Go ye after him:" one was sent to mark the mourners, before those with the slaughter weapons had commission to destroy the rest. His mercy acts before his justice, he separates the righteous before he destroys the wicked; he makes up his jewels before the day comes that burns like an oven, Mal. iii. 17; iv. 1: he prepares an ark for Noah, before he sends a flood upon the world. God sends an angel to fetch Lot out of Sodom, before he rains fire and brimstone upon them; and at the last great judgment, the sheep shall have mercy before the goats shall have judgment: "Come, ye blessed;" that joyful sound shall be heard first, and after, "Depart, ye cursed," Matt. xxv. 34, 41. Mercy is God's first-born, and visits the saints ere judgments break out.

Obs. 2. When the godly are secured, then judgment delays not. When the mourners are near marking, then the six men follow him presently that marks them, and they do their office. When Lot is out of Sodom, fire and brimstone come into Sodom; God could do nothing while he was there, Gen. xix. 22, but when he was gone, he consumed them with the vengeance of eternal fire. Judgments sometimes do linger, and what is the cause? some servants of God are not marked, secured, got into their chambers of safety; if they were, judgment would quickly be upon the backs of the wicked. Isa. xxvi. 20, 21, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity:" when once they were got into safe places, then would indignation come upon the wicked. When swallows and other birds fly from us, it is a sign of winter approaching; and when good men are removed out of places, are driven into corners, it is a sign of judgment upon that place.

Obs. 3. Sinners may so provoke God, that he will neither show them mercy himself, nor let others do it. No pity, no mercy should they have from God or man. Go through the city, from one street to another, from gate to gate, and smite, smite every one of them, slay utterly, do not wound or weaken, but slay to perdition; and though they fall upon their knees, beg hard for their lives, promise you great matters, yet spare them not, neither have pity, be not affected with ought they say, do, or suffer. God hardened them here against them; but might they not find some sparing and pitying from God, if none with man? Ezek. v. 11, "Mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have any pity," and he ratifies it with an oath there.

What were their sins which made the Lord deal thus severely with them?

(1.) Their defilement of the temple with such abominations as they had done provoked desperately, they despised God therein to his face: there he vouchsafed his presence, heard their prayers, accepted their sacrifices, bestowed choice mercies upon them, and yet to defile that with their abominations, this greatly provoked.

(2.) Their abuse of the true and faithful prophets: Jeremiah forbid to prophesy lest he die for it, Jer. xi. 21. They laid hands on him, and said he should die, Jer. xxvi. 8. And 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, "They mocked the messengers of God, despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people." These sins made it rise a great height, even such a height, that all pity and mercy were laid aside.

(3.) Their great unfruitfulness under means and mercies. They reproached and derided the word, Jer. xx. 8, 9, and those that believed and obeyed it, Isa. viii. 18. You know what pains God took with his vineyard, he gathered out the stones, planted it with the choicest vine, built a tower in it, made a wine-press, did all which could be done for it; and now he looked for grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes: this kindled God's wrath, and banished pity, mercy from his heart: I will take away the hedge, break down the wall, lay it waste, it shall have no digging, pruning, clouds, or rain, but it shall be trodden down, and eaten up; by whom? by Chaldeans; those briars and thorns should scratch and tear it in pieces. Man's unfruitfulness makes God mercifulless; Luke xiii. 7, when the Lord came to the fig-tree planted in his vineyard, and found no fruit on it, what saith he? "Cut it down: why cumbereth it the ground?"

(4.) Little-ness to one another. Micah iii. 2, 3, the princes and rulers did pluck off the skins and flish from the bones of the people; they brake their bones, and chopped them in pieces. In their skirts was found the blood of the souls of poor innocents, Jer. ii. 34; and Manasseh had filled Jerusalem with innocent blood, which made the Lord to say, Jer. xv. 5, "Who shall have pity upon thee, O Jerusalem?" neither God nor man.

Obs. 4. Nothing will privilege sinners in the day of God's wrath; when he gives out commission to destroy, there will be a general destruction: old, young, maids, children, and women, they must all suffer, all die. In their military oath this was one branch, Ne quis ledat faminas, pueros, senes, aegros, That no one should injure women, youths, the aged men, or the sick: even nature pleads strongly for such who are fearful and feeble, and not able to help themselves. Deut. xx. 14, when the Jews took a city, they were to spare the women and the little ones; and when they took Midian, they spared the maids and the little ones, Numb. xxxi. 9, 18. But here neither oath nor nature should take place, neither age, sex, or condition should advantage or secure them: not the hoary head of the aged, not the beauty of the virgins, not the tears of the mothers, nor the tenderness of the babes; but all must die. So 1 Sam. xv. 3. Samuel saith to Saul, "Go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass." Amalek sought the ruin of Israel, therefore God would have him utterly ruined: when judgments are general, sins are grievous.

Obs. 5. Open sins involve not only themselves, but those who are dearest to them, into open destruction. The ancients offered incense to idols, the women wept for Tammuz, others worshipped the sun; and these brought famine and sword not only upon themselves, but upon the young maids and little children which were free from those sins; the parents' sins ruined the children, and wrapped them up in an open and public calamity. Korah, Dathan, and Abiram rebel against Moses, and the earth swallowed up them, their houses, and all that belonged to them, Numb. xvi. 31, 32. The Sodomites' sins caused themselves and their little ones to be roasted in fire and brimstone. So princes, their sins bring down vengeance upon themselves, their posterity, and subjects. All sorts should therefore take heed of sinning against Divine Majesty, who is so dreadful in his judgments: if they will not pity themselves, yet they should pity those who are theirs, and dear to them.

Obs. 6. The lives and comforts of all God's marked ones are dear unto him. He gives order that they should not only not take away their lives, but also that they should not endanger their comforts: "Come not near any man upon whom is the mark;" do not fright them with your stern looks, bitter words, rough handling, keep your distance, they are very dear to me, and I am very tender of them. The marked ones are a people near to God, Psal. cxlviii. 14, and he will not suffer them to be wronged; Psal. cv. 14, 15, "He suffered no man to do them wrong; yea, he reproved kings for their sakes; saying, Touch not mine anointed." God's anointed ones are his marked ones, and they must not be touched, which is as much as, Come not near them. God doth not only keep the wicked from harming them, keep off judgments and blows from them, which is called sparing them, Mal. iii. 17, but he makes them up as his jewels: they lie scattered as common stones here and there, but God hath his days to make them up, to set them in ranks and orders, that they may shine more gloriously, and live more comfortably. Or thus, when a house is on fire, the owners will be sure then to look after their jewels, and to take and make them up, above all the rest: so God, when judgments are upon cities, towns, kingdoms, will have special care of his jewels and peculiar treasure; Luke xvii. 34, 35, "Two men shall be in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left."

Obs. 7. See the order of divine judgment here. Those who were ringleaders to others, and drew them to sin by their place, authority, counsel, example, they must first be slain; "Begin at my sanctuary:" there were the seventy ancients of the house of Israel, mentioned chap. viii. 14; there were the priests, who had the charge of the holy things, and should not have suffered such corruptions, pollutions, to have come near the temple; but both the princes and priests were foremost in iniquity; they should have preserved the worship of God pure, kept the people from idolatrous practices, into which they drew them, and made Isaiah say twice, that their leaders caused them to err, Isa. iii. 12; ix. 16: there was enforcing virtue in them, constraining the people to err, and run upon their destruction; and therefore now, seeing they were first and deepest in sinning, they should be first and deepest in punishment. The slaughter men, representing the Chaldeans, must begin there, while they were fresh, strong; they must bathe their swords in the bowels and blood of princes and priests. Many times it is so, that those who are great are first in wickedness, and are first smitten; Numb. xxv. 4, "Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun." They had been principal actors in whoredom and idolatry, led others to those sins, and their heads must off first. So Korah, Dathan and Abiram, Numb. xvi. they were prime rebels, made seditious work amongst the people; and went not they down first alive into the earth? and did not fire from heaven consume the two hundred and fifty princes that offered incense? It is too well known that men eminent in place are eminent in sin, be they in the state or in the church; and it is just they should be eminent in punishment.

Our prelates, who were sanctuary men, and pretended divine institution for their standing, declared by their fruits that they were not from above, but from beneath; an earthly generation, that hath been eminent in treasons, conspiracies, rebellions, seditious innovations, and corruptions of religion, as ever was; but God hath found them out, poured contempt upon them, plucked them up by the roots. Strafford and Canterbury were heads of wickedness in the church and state, and God hath lopped off their heads. Great ones make great breaches for others to perish in, and God begins with them to stop those breaches, and prevent open ruin. The devil carried Christ to the temple, and the pinnacle of it, and tempted him from thence to cast himself down, knowing that the sins of those who belong to the temple are most conspicuous, and beneficial to him and his kingdom.

Obs. 8. It is not the holiness of any place can mitigate or avert the wrath of God, when those who belong to it have defiled the place with their abominations. The temple was the holiest place in the world; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14, "All the chief of the priests, and the people, transgressed very much;" and what was their transgression? "They polluted the house of the Lord which he had hallowed;" not which men had hallowed, but "which he had hallowed in Jerusalem;" no where else had he hallowed any place, yet that holy place they polluted, and the Lord therefore bids the slaughter men begin there, and defile it. They had defiled it with sin, and now God would have it defiled with the coming of heathens into it, with blood, with dead corpses, &c.; which made Jeremiah to sigh and say, "The Lord hath east off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary, he hath given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces: they have made a noise in the house of the Lord, as in the day of a solemn feast," Lam. ii. 7. It was music to the enemy to slay them in the temple itself, to dash out their brains against the ark and altar; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17, "They slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age." As they regarded not sex or condition of men, so not the place, though holy. Holy places were wont to be refuges unto those that fled to them, even heathens would spare those who betook themselves to the temples of their gods when they took the city; but in this destruction of Jerusalem, those who fled to the temple found no favour from God or man: "Slay them utterly," said God, defile the temple with their blood; and they did it, and filled the temple with such sacrifices as it never had.

Obs. 9. Divine justice oft smites sinners in the place where they have sinned. They had defiled the temple with their abominations, with idolatry, false worship, hypocrisy, and vain confidence in it, and there God commands them to be put to death. God had manifested great love, bestowed great mercies, imparted much light to them, heard their prayers, accepted their sacrifices in the temple, and now seeing there they sinned against him, there he would have them punished. When Ahab had murdered Naboth, 1 Kings xxi. this message was sent unto him, "In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine," ver. 19: and it was made good, chap. xxii. 38; 2 Kings ix. 26.

Obs. 10. God's judgments are as extensive as sinners' sins. They must slay not only sanctuary sinners, but city sinners. They had sinned every where, the land was full of violence, and now the land, city, sanctuary, were full of bloody men and bloody judgments; and as they had filled all with sin, so they must fill all with slain ones. When sins are general, judgments are answerable: Isa. viii. 8, speaking of the king of Assyria, it is said, "He shall pass through Judah; he shall overflow and go over, he shall reach even to the neck: and the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land." This is spoken of Sennacherib, who, like a flood over all the land, came up to the neck, viz. Jerusalem; but Nebuchadnezzar came not only up to the neck, to Jerusalem, but into it, and overflowed the head, he drowned all in blood: where there was no mark, there was no mercy to be showed.

Obs. 11. God, after long forbearing, is intent upon, and speedy in his judgments. Observe the phrases in these verses which show it: "go ye through the city," "spare none," "slay utterly," "begin at my sanctuary," "defile the house," "fill the courts with the slain," "go ye forth." These expressions set out the bent and intensiveness of God's Spirit in this work; he would have his executioners hasten about it, and despatch all out of hand.

Obs. 12. God's instruments do readily obey his commands, of what nature soever they be. Here they are appointed to harsh and bloody services, to destroy utterly all sorts and conditions of men, women, children, without pity; and they went forth, and slew in the city. God commanded, and they presently obeyed; not the holiness of the place, the multitude of persons to be destroyed, or danger of mistaking the marked ones, did retard them.

Ver. 8. And it came to pass, while they were slaying them, and I was left, that I fell upon my face, and cried, and said, Ah Lord God! wilt thou destroy all the residue of Israel in thy pouring out of thy fury upon Jerusalem?

This verse is the second general head of the chapter, and contains the prophet's intercession for Israel. When he saw what bloody doings were in the temple and city by the slaughter angels, he is affected therewith, he cannot hold, but falls down, and cries out, "Ah Lord God!" &c.

In the verse you may consider,

I. The occasion of the prophet's interceding, or moving cause thereof, which is double;

1. The people's slaughter.

2. His own solitariness, "I was left."

II. The circumstances or adjuncts thereof; which are,

1. Falling upon his face.

2. Crying.

III. The intercession itself; where you have,

1. A pathetic invocation of God, "Ah Lord God!"

2. An efficacious deprecation of judgment, "Wilt thou destroy all the residue?" &c.

For opening of the words,

1. We must inquire how the prophet here saith, "I was left." There were many sealed and spared, which makes the difficulty. Some think the Septuagint passed by these words, and left them out, lest they should seem contrary to what went before. Theodoret adds μονος, I was left alone; but the Hebrew is, I was left. For understanding of this phrase, you may take notice, that it is usual in Scripture, when great destructions are, to say few or none are left: Judg. iv. 16, "All the host of Sisera fell upon the edge of the sword; and there was not a man left;" yet Sisera, if no others, was fled. So, in 1 Kings xix. 14, Elijah saith, they have "slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left," when there were seven thousand that bowed not their knees to Baal. If this satisfy not,

2. "I was left." That is, left with the sealed ones, all were destroyed besides; or,

3. Of those in the temple, or belonging to it, "I was left." Our prophet saw them all slain, and the slaughter men were gone out into the city, and there they were destroying; and as they had spared none in the temple, so he might fear there would be few spared in the city, and so safely say, "I am left."

That they in the temple were not spared appears thus; they were not sealed, and all such were to suffer. The destroyers' commission was, not to come near the marked ones, but to slay without pity all others; and, besides, the man that marked them was bid to go through the city and mark there, not to come at the temple at all, there were none to be marked, there they practised and justified abominations, they did not mourn for them. Those who had to do with the holy things were most unholy, and suffered in the temple; yet it is not safe to think, or say, that all the Levitical race were cut off at this time, and in this place; for Jer. lii. 24, "Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door," with others, were carried to the king of Babylon, and put to death in Babel.

"I fell upon my face." Falling upon the face in order to prayer, notes great sorrow and humiliation. Numb. xiv. 5, when the people would make a captain, and return to Egypt, "Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembly;" they were deeply affected with that evil. So Moses, when he heard what Korah and those of his faction said, "he fell upon his face," Numb. xvi. 4. And Joshua, when Israel fell through Achan's sin, he falls to the earth upon his face, and prays, chap. vii. 6. Sometimes they stood and prayed, 1 Kings viii. 22; sometimes sitting, Neh. i. 4; so Christ sitteth at the right hand of God, and makes intercession for us; sometimes kneeling, Dan. vi. 10; sometimes prostrate upon their faces, as here; and when it comes to this posture, it argues great grief and sorrow, as in Christ; Matt. xxvi. 38, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful;" and ver. 39, "He fell on his face, and prayed." So Ezekiel, being filled with sorrow that all sorts were now slaying, that no mercy must be showed, he falls upon his face and cries out,

"Ah Lord God!" The Hebrew, אָהָה is a token of grief, and used in such cases; as, they cried out for grief, Jer. i. 6; iv. 10; and is sometimes expressed by alas, Josh. vii. 7; Judg. vi. 22; Joel i. 15; sometimes by woe, as Ezek. xxx. 2, "Woe worth the day!" where it is וָהוּהָה.

"Lord God," אֱלֹהֵי יְהוָה. These be two chief names of the Most High, the one noting his dominion, the other his essence. The prophet had an eye to these, seeing God about to destroy, as if he should have said, Thou hast being of thyself, and hast given being to these; thou that art Sovereign over all, and canst call back the destroyers, "Ah Lord God!" do it.

It is Jehovih, not Jehovah; and some observe that it is used so when the servants of God were most intense and affected in prayer, as in Deut. iii. 24; ix. 26, and Gen. xv. 2, 8; in which places it is Jehovih; and both Abraham and Moses were exceeding earnest with God.

"Wilt thou destroy all the residue of Israel," &c. This deprecation is very argumentative, and hath many considerations to divert God from destroying them.

The first lieth in the word "thou;" Wilt thou who hast chosen Zion, and said it should be thy "rest for ever," Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14; wilt thou, who hast made a covenant with the people, and sweardest by thy holiness to David, that his seed should endure for ever as the sun and moon, Psal. lxxxix. 35—37; wilt thou, who promisedst Abraham that in his "seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed," wilt thou now disannul thy promises, break covenant, and show thyself forgetful of all, yea unfaithful?

2. In the word "destroy;" What! will nothing suffice but destruction? Thou saidst, "If they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes. Nevertheless my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from them, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail." Psal. lxxxix. 31—33; but if thou destroy, and that without pity, mercy, where is thy loving-kindness, where is thy faithfulness?

3. In the word "Israel," which was a moving word, and put God in mind how dear they had been unto him. Israel was his son, his "first-born," Exod. iv. 22; his chosen one, Isa. xlv. 1; his glory, Isa. xlv. 13. Israel he had "brought out of Egypt," and done great things for, Exod. xviii. 1, 8, 9. It is Israel who is so dear to thee, whom thou hast done so much for; and wilt thou destroy Israel? Israel here is put for Judah, by a synecdoche.

4. In the "residue of Israel." There are ten tribes gone already into captivity, yea, a great part of the other two tribes are now in Babylon, and wilt not thou have compassion on the little remnant that is remaining?

5. "All the residue." What! shall all of them be destroyed, and utterly? man, woman, child, they are all slain in the temple, most in the city? didst not thou bid me bind up a few hairs in my skirts, chap. v. 3; thereby typifying out that some should be saved? didst not thou tell me, chap. vi. 8, "Yet will I leave a remnant?" and what now, Lord, must "all the residue" be cut off, I be a lying prophet, and thou false in thy word? O do it not, do it not.

6. "In pouring out of thy fury." It notes emptying of himself, as clouds, vials, buckets, when all that is in them is poured out, and the argument runs thus; Lord, must all thy fury be poured out at once? where are thy bowels, thy mercies? thou sayest thou reservest "wrath for thine enemies," Nahum i. 2; wilt thou pour it all out upon thy people, and reserve none for heathens, for thine adversaries, for whom properly thy fury is? Isa. lix. 18. O reserve thy wrath for them, and pour it not out upon us!

7. "Upon Jerusalem." This is the place thou chocest, and where thou didst set thy name, 2 Kings xxiii. 27. This city was "The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth," Lam. ii. 15; "The city of God, the great King, and Lord of hosts," Psal. xlviii. 1, 2, 8; "The holy city," Isa. lii. 1. It had the holy temple, the holy ark, the holy sacrifices and ordinances, the holy priests and prophets, the holy law; here only was God known, and his name great. Lord, wilt thou pour out thy wrath upon Jerusalem? thou wilt then have no place left thee in the world to be worshipped in: what will become of thy name, thy glory, all thy holy things? thou wilt have no church, no people, no praise in the earth: nay, the adversary will mock and blaspheme; and what will the marked ones think and say, when Jerusalem is laid waste, the pledge of their hope? may they not say, We looked for light, but behold darkness; we expected a Messiah, but our hopes are cut off; we have our lives for a prey, and that is all.

Obs. 1. The godly do sympathize with the miseries of others. The prophet here is affected greatly with the judgments of God upon this people. When the prophets told them of God's judgments coming upon them, they thought hardly of the prophets, they could not hear them, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16; they conceived the prophets hated them, and meant them no good, but when the things they foretold came to pass, they pitied them and mourned for them. Ezekiel, through deep sense of their slaughter, falls down, and sheds tears as they shed blood; their bodies were wounded, and his heart was wounded; wounded for their sins, wounded for God's wrath and heavy judgments that were now upon them; Jer. ix. 1, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!" Jeremiah so sympathized with them, that he had a mind neither to eat, drink, or sleep, but only to weep night and day; tears should be his meat, drink, and sleep. Such a sympathizing man was Moses; Dent. ix. 12, 13, when the people had sinned in making them a calvish god, and God's wrath was coming out to their destruction, what did Moses? ver. 18, he "fell down before the Lord forty days and forty nights, and did neither eat bread, nor drink water, because the people had sinned, and provoked God to anger." Here was a man affected with their miseries; (I was afraid, saith he, of the anger and hot displeasure wherewith the Lord was wroth against you to destroy you;) forty days did Moses mourn for them, and humble himself: and this kind of mourning forty days in case of judgment, some think, riseth from God's raining upon the world forty days and forty nights. Answerable to which, Moses, Elijah, and Christ, fasted, mourned, and prayed; and so to Nineveh forty days were given them to prevent their destruction.

This duty of sympathizing with others in their misery was David's practice. Though they were wicked, and rewarded him evil, yet if they were in misery, Psal. xxxv. 13, he would share in it; when they were sick, his clothing was sackcloth, he humbled his soul with fasting. Wicked men laugh and are glad at the miseries of the godly, but the godly sigh and mourn at, and for, the miseries of the wicked; they remember the apostolical command, Rom. xii. 15, "Weep with them that weep," that will be some ease to them to see others sensible of their condition. This makes them like to Christ himself; Heb. iv. 15, he is "touched with our infirmities." Judgments are upon the kingdom; many of God's dear servants, as well as others, suffer hard things.

(1.) Take notice of their grievances, burdens, dangers.

(2.) Mind them.

(3.) Be tenderly affectioned towards them. And,

(4.) Help them what you can; and this is true sympathy.

Obs. 2. The servants of God, that draw near him in time of his judgments, are conscious to themselves of their own weakness, sinfulness, and unworthiness. Ezekiel falls down upon his face, as unworthy to look upon the great and glorious God, his own sins and infirmities made him hide his face, and the great wrath of God against his people made him tremble. When Abraham parleyed with the Lord, being about to destroy Sodom, he remembered that he was "dust and ashes," Gen. xviii. 27. God is terrible in judgment, and humility is the best posture an angry God can find any in; when we lie prostrate at his feet he will not destroy us.

Obs. 3. Those who are faithful messengers of God will deprecate judgments when they are coming upon the people: "Ah Lord God! wilt thou," &c. So did Moses, that was faithful in God's house, Exod. xxxii. 11—13, 32, where he uses strong arguments to press the Lord to forgive their sins, to divert his wrath, and to spare their lives, or else to blot him out of his book. Joshua and the elders of Israel lie upon their faces, put dust upon their heads, and pray earnestly to God not to deliver them into the hands of the Amorites, and to remember his great name, Josh. vii. 6, 7, 9. Samuel thought it a sin for him not to pray for the people when they were in danger of destruction: 1 Sam. xii. 19, 23, "God forbid that I should sin in ceasing to pray for you." He had done it, and would still do it, and, if possible, turn away the displeasure of the Most High. Jehoshaphat, when a great army was coming upon them, and ready to overrun all, he makes an effectual prayer, produceth strong arguments, which you may read, 2 Chron. xx. 6—12, from God's power in heaven and earth; from the experience they had of him in driving out enemies, and giving them the land; from the sanctuary built for honour of his name, and his promise to hear prayer there; from the spring of the enemies when they came out of Egypt, and their intentions now to cast them out of God's possession; and then concludes with a conquering argument of faith: "O our God, wilt thou not judge them? for we have not might against this great company that cometh against us; neither know we what to do; but our eyes are upon thee." He first overcame God by his mighty prayer, and then overcame the enemies. Jeremiah seeing a great famine upon the people, he sets upon God, chap. xiv. 7—9, "O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake. O the hope of Israel, the saviour thereof in time of trouble, why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night? Why shouldst thou be as a man astonished, as a mighty man that cannot save? yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name; leave us not:" do not according to our sins, but thy name; thou art the hope of Israel, and it hath been thy office, work, to save Israel; why shouldst thou be a stranger, as if thou hadst nothing to do, no right in us?

Obs. 4. God's judgments puzzle even prophets, they see not into the equity and depths of them. Now that all were slain in the temple, the city, and all in it ruining, the prophet is astonished, and knows not what to make of it: that wrath should be so fully poured upon Jerusalem, that God would leave himself no people, no place to be worshipped in, frustrate the hopes of his people touching the promised Seed, and make void all promises thereabout, and give up the holy land to profane, uncircumcised wretches; this puzzled him.

There is something ever in God's judgments which we cannot reach, and then, because they proceed cross to our wills, expectations, and desires, we are ready to think hardly of them, and boil in our spirits against Heaven; but we must remember God's ways are not ours; he is ever righteous in his judgments, though we see not the reason thereof. Psal. xxxvi. 6, "Thy judgments are a great deep." Some refer it to providence, thus, Men's sins are a deep sea of wickedness, yet God's providence is a greater deep, which orders them, sinners, and all things. Others take it literally; God's judgments in punishing sins is such a depth, that no human understanding can sound. Our prophet could not do it, neither the apostles, and therefore cries out, How unsearchable are his judgments!

When states, churches, or persons suffer hard things, let us not think them wronged; they suffer not more than they deserve, no, nor so much; Ezra ix. 13, "Thou hast punished us less than our iniquities."

Ver. 9, 10. Then said he unto me, The iniquity of the house of Israel and Judah is exceeding great, and the land is full of blood, and the city full of perverseness: for they say, The Lord hath forsaken the earth, and the Lord seeth not. And as for me also, mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity, but I will recompense their way upon their head.

The prophet having pressed the Lord with many strong arguments to spare Jerusalem, in these verses he hath an answer from God, and the reasons thereof.

The answer is negative, ver. 10, "Mine eye shall not spare, neither," &c.

The reasons of this answer are in the ninth verse, which are strong and weighty.

1. A general reason; "The iniquity of the house of Israel," &c.

11. Particular ones, which are three.

1. "The land is full of blood."

2. "The city is full of perverseness."

3. Atheism, a ground of all the former reasons; "For they say, The Lord hath forsaken the earth."

"The iniquity of the house of Israel." By "house of Israel," some understand those that had betaken themselves from the ten tribes to those of Judah, whereof was spoken, chap. iv. 4; but I conceive we may interpret it of the ten tribes, whose sins contributed much to the final destruction of all. Though they were gone into captivity, yet their sins stayed behind them, and had defiled the whole land.

"Is exceeding great." The Hebrews, when they would make a thing superlative, express it by gemination of the word, and so it is here, their iniquity is great; and the Vulgate hath it, nimis valde, it is come to the height, and scarcely admits of more degrees. A like phrase you have in Gen. xxvi. 13, he "grew until he became very great." So Matt. ii. 10, and 2 Cor. iv. 17, there is duplication of the word to set out the greatness of the thing.

"The land is full of blood." Hebrew is, bloods, bloody sins. Isa. i. 15, their "hands are full of blood;" and Manasseli filled Jerusalem with blood, 2 Kings xxi. 16. And not only kings did it, but the prophets and priests shed the blood of the just in the midst of Jerusalem; their preaching, prophesying, counsels, and discourses, tended that way, and therefore they are said to shed their blood: so Athaliah slew all the royal seed, 2 Kings xi. 1; Naboth is stoned to death for his vineyard, 1 Kings xxi. 13; and Hos. iv. 2, "Blood toucheth blood." There were continual and daily slaughters, so that blood streamed every where.

Blood notes also heinous sins, as oppression, cruelty; Hab. ii. 12, "Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood;" that is, by oppressing the hireling and labourer, by grinding the faces of the poor. In Zeph. iii. 1, Jerusalem is called "the oppressing city," her princes were "roaring lions," and her judges "evening wolves," ver. 3: see Micah iii. 2, 3; ii. 2. They did not "strengthen the hand of the poor and needy," Ezek. xvi. 49.

Bloody intentions against the prophets, and others who were godly; Ezek. xxii. 6, "Behold, the princes of Israel, every one were in thee to their power to shed blood." They hated the prophet Jeremiah, smote him, "put him in the stocks," Jer. xx. 2; "into the dungeon," chap. xxxvii. 16; they judged him worthy of death, chap. xxxvi. 11.

Soul-murder; Ezek. xxxiii. 8, "If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand." Here the destruction of souls is expressed by blood, as also in Ezek. iii. 18; and Hos. iv. 6, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."

"The city full of perverseness." The Hebrew word for perverseness is מָרָא and may be rendered, perverse, a perverse thing, the city is full of that which is perverse: it comes from מָרָא which signifies, to decline, withdraw, pervert. The Vulgate reads it, aversione, the city is full of turning from God.

This city, that was once called the faithful city, was now become a harlot. Jerusalem had left God, his worship, his laws, his ordinances, and taken in other gods, other laws, and other ways of worship. Not only Israel is branded for backsliding, Jer. iii. 6, 8, 11, but Judah was treacherous, ver. 7, 11, and her backslidings many, Jer. xiv. 7; and being once fallen from God, she loved to wander, ver. 10, after the gods and ways of other nations. They grew worse and worse, and were perverse in their judgment of things; Isa. v. 20, they called light darkness, and darkness light; they were perverse in their practice, walked "after their own thoughts," Isa. lxv. 2; they chose "their own ways, and their soul delighted in their abominations," Isa. lxvi. 3. Here was perverseness, to leave what God had chosen for them, which was their glory, and to choose that which was abominable, and delight in

Jer. ii. 36,
"Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way?"

it. And when God corrected them for such perverseness, they grew more perverse: Isa. i. 5, "Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more."

There is another exposition of the word. It is referred by some to law cases, and when saints were brought before them, they perverted judgment; Micah iii. 9, the heads of Jacob, and princes of Israel, abhorred judgment, and perverted all equity. So, in Amos v. 12, "They afflict the just, they take a bribe, and they turn aside the poor in the gate:" their cause could not be heard, or, if heard, it was to their grief and prejudice. Mal. iii. 5, "They turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts:" no, they were turned from God, and turned away all equity.

"The Lord hath forsaken the earth." This phrase you find not elsewhere than in our prophet, and only twice, chap. viii. 12, and here. It sets out the rank atheisticalness of those times, denying God's presence, counsel, blessing, and assistance; they thought God was gone out of the world, that there was no God in Israel, that God left men to think, speak, and do what they listed.

"The Lord seeth not." This is a higher degree of impiety, blasting divine omniscieny; before, his omnipresence suffered, now, his omni-vision: he is a blind God, say they, or sees not at such a distance; he is shut up in heaven, and takes no notice of our temple, city, or country affairs. Such an expression you have in Psal. x. 11, "He will never see:" they did wickedly, and boasted that God neither did, nor would, take any notice of it. In Psal. xciv. 7, they proceed higher in their profaneness: "The Lord shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it;" as if they had power to restrain God, and shut the eye of providence; Isa. xxix. 15, "Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?" Men entertain atheistical thoughts of God, that they may go on more securely and fully in sinful courses. They filled the temple with idolatry, the city with perverseness, the land with blood, and say, "The Lord seeth not." When atheism hath got possession of a people, that people runs riot into wickedness, fear of a Deity ceaseth, and the door is open to all profaneness. Atheism is worse than idolatry; this robs God of his worship, that of his attributes and being.

Obs. 1. The Lord's readiness to give account of his judiciary proceedings unto the prophet. "Then said he unto me." The prophet had questioned God about the destruction of Jerusalem; "Wilt thou destroy the residue," &c.: he brake in upon God, and interrupted him in his way he was in; but because it was in prayer, out of respect to his glory, and tenderness to the people, the Lord doth not reject him, but condescends and gives him an answer. And thus he doth,

(1.) To clear the equity of his proceedings, which lie in the dark, and are not apprehended by all, no, not by prophets. God will make it out that he is righteous and just in his judgments, whatever thoughts men have of them. When Abraham moved the question to God, Gen. xviii. 23, "Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked? shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" What if there be fifty, forty, thirty, twenty, ten righteous in it? Saith God, If there be but ten righteous I will not destroy it. It is true their cry is great, and their sin grievous, yet I am so just in my judgments, that while righteous Lot is in it I will not destroy it; but when he is gone, and none but filthy Sodomites left in Sodom, I will rain down fire and brimstone upon them.

(2.) To quiet the minds of his servants, which are troubled, yea perplexed, at the severity of God's judgments. When our prophet saw all slain in the temple, and the slaughter men gone forth, utterly to slay, without pity, old and young, maids, little children, and women, he was greatly distressed and perplexed in his spirit, and knew not what to think of such dreadful dealings; therefore the Lord tells him the ground of his proceeding.

Obs. 2. Sins of people may be such as God will not hear their prayers, or others for them. Many amongst them prayed, and the prophet prayed for them, but God had no ear to hear them.

(1.) For their own prayers: Jer. xi. 11, "I will bring evil upon them which they shall not be able to escape;" but they will cry to God when they are in affliction, and he is merciful. What follows then? "Though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them." But what if they cry aloud, will not God hearken then? Ezek. viii. 18, "Though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them." But what if they fast and pray, will not the Lord hear them then? Jer. xiv. 12, "When they fast, I will not hear their cry." But what if they spread their hands to heaven, and make many prayers? "Isa. i. 15, When ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear." But what if they weep before God? Deut. i. 45, "Ye returned and wept before the Lord; but the Lord would not hearken to your voice, nor give ear unto you."

(2.) For others': Ezek. xiv. 14, "Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it, they should deliver but their own souls." These were holy and choice men; Gen. vi. 9, "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations, and walked with God." Daniel was the wisest of men, Ezek. xxviii. 3; it was a proverb, As wise as Daniel; and he was innocent, Dan. vi. 22; "a man greatly beloved," Dan. ix. 23. Job was "a perfect and upright man, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil," Job i. 1. There lay no exception against these men, they were acquainted with God and his ways, they were great sufferers, and men of prayer. Noah had prevailed for his family; Daniel for the wise men of Babylon, when they should have died for not discovering Nebuchadnezzar's dream; and Job for his three friends.

Try two more, Moses and Samuel. They were heads of the people, holy men, full of bowels, mighty in prayer, interceded with God for the people, and prevailed: Exod. xxxii. 10, "Let me alone," saith God, "that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them, and I will make of thee a great nation." But Moses would not let God alone; ver. 11—13, he presseth him with strong arguments, and told God, if he would not forgive their sins, he should blot him out of his book, ver. 32. So Samuel, 1 Sam. vii. 9, when the Philistines came up against Israel, prays, and fetches thunder from heaven, and ruins a whole army of the enemies; and chap. xii. 17, 18, he prayed, and thunder and rain came in harvest, so that they were in danger of death, and sued to him to pray for them. Now, Jer. xv. 1, notwithstanding these two were such powerful praying men, yet saith God there, "Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people;" all their prayers could do no good.

What if Jeremiah, who lived in those times, and was acquainted with their condition, should pray for them, he was a praying and weeping man, Jer. ix. 1; yet see Jer. vii. 16; xi. 14; xiv. 11; and you shall hear God in those three places forbidding him to pray for them.

God will not hear,

[1.] Because people are incurable: they reject God; Jer. ii. 13, "They have forsaken me the fountain of living waters;" and ver. 31, "We are lords, we will come no more to thee." They reject his word; Jer. viii. 9, "Ye reject the word of the Lord, and what wisdom is in you?" and you may hear them doing it, Jer. xlv. 16, "As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee. But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth." And 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, their sins were such, as that there was no remedy but destruction.

[2.] God's heart is gone from such a people: Jer. xv. 1, "Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people;" they are turned from me, and I am turned from them, and it is not the prayers of men and angels can reconcile us. I am against them: Ezek. v. 8, "Behold, I, even I, am against thee;" I, that have heard so many prayers, been so oft for thee, I, that have done so great things, destroyed such mighty enemies of thine, I am against thee.

[3.] If God should hear prayer for them and spare them, it would encourage them to go on in their sinful ways; they would presume, grow more confident and corrupt, if possible: Jer. vii. 9, 10, "Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods, whom ye know not: and come and stand before me in this house, which is called by my name, and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations?" When they were smitten they grew worse; much more would they if spared.

[4.] The condition of the church requires it, that is in imminent danger of being ruined. When the weeds overtop the corn, briars and thorns are grown great, thick, high above the vine, the Lord must cut them down, else there will be no harvest, no vintage. When all flesh had corrupted its ways, the flood must come in, lest the corruption should infect Noah.

[5.] To vindicate his name, providence, honour. When God is silent in a wicked time, and spares sinners, they think him like themselves; Psal. i. 21, altogether such as they are; but, Ezek. vi. 14, "I will stretch out my hand upon them, and make the land desolate, yea, more desolate than the wilderness toward Diblath, in all their habitations: and they shall know that I am the Lord;" now, my name is not feared, my providence is denied, and my honour is laid in the dust; but they shall know what a God I am. So in Ezek. xxviii. 22, "Behold, I am against thee, O Zidon; and I will be glorified in the midst of thee: and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall have executed judgments in her."

Obs. 3. God's judgments, though great, yet do not exceed men's sins. That temple, city, land, and those in them, should be destroyed, was grievous, but their iniquity was exceeding great. If there be national judgments, there are national sins; "The land is full of blood, and the city full of perverseness." If judgment was in every place, sin was in every place; if there were fulness of wrath, fulness of sin preceded. Job's sufferings were great, and just punishments for his sins, as Zophar thought, and therefore prays, chap. xi. 5, 6, "Oh that God would speak, and open his lips against thee; and that he would show thee the secrets of wisdom, that they are double to that which is," &c. His meaning is this: Job, thou justifiest thyself, thou sayest thy doctrine is pure, and thyself clean in his eyes, and that thy sufferings are greater than thy sins; but thou art deceived. If God would be pleased to speak, and open the secrets of wisdom which are shut up from thee, thou shouldst see God just in his judgments, and merciful towards thee: for there is double to that which is, double wrath, double punishment due to thee; thou hast but a little inflicted upon thee, and there is a double portion yet behind due to thy sin; therefore do not complain of God, or justify thyself any more; for "know, that God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity deserveth." Though thou hast great affliction, yet he may justly afflict thee with more: thy doctrine is not pure, thy person is not clean; that thou thinkest is acceptable with God, that provokes him; and where thou expectest favour, there wrath is due. You shall find in sacred writ that God punishes less than men's sins deserve, but never above; "according to their sins" is the usual phrase. Psal. xxviii. 4, "Give them according to their deeds, and according to the wickedness of their endeavours; give them after the work of their hands; render to them their desert;" all these phrases evidence, that God in the punishment of sinners exceeds not the merit of them; if he come up to that, it is all.

The judgments now upon Germany, Ireland, England, do not exceed the sins of the places; the iniquities of them are exceeding great.

Obs. 4. God's patience is exceeding great, he bears long, till sins be excessive. The iniquity of the house of Israel and Judah is exceeding great; God might have prevented the greatness of it, cut them off many years before, but he let their sins grow great, to manifest the greatness of his patience. He is oftentimes in the Scripture said to be long-suffering. When he was provoked much by his people, and they deserved that his patience should end, and wrath begin, what saith the text, 2 Kings xiii. 23? he "would not destroy them, neither east them from his presence as yet;" yet there was more patience in God, yet it was long-suffering. So chap. viii. 19, Jehoram, king of Judah, walked in the ways of Ahab, and "did evil in the sight of the Lord; yet the Lord would not destroy Judah:" his compassion would not suffer him to grow into passion; rather than destroy them for their sins, he would yet bear the burden of their sins. So Jer. xxxiv. 4, "Yet hear the word of the Lord, O Zedekiah, king of Judah:" God's patience is not yet worn out, it will be very shortly; oh yet hear the word of the Lord, and ye shall not die by the sword! God bears long with sinners, but he will not always forbear; Psal. xxxvii. 10, "Yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be."

Obs. 5. That churches and states degenerating from God's ways, go on to a height of sinning. "Their iniquity is exceeding great, the land is full of blood, the city full of perverseness." When they fell to idolatry, they were idolatrous to purpose; they multiplied God's altars, sinned more than the nations round about them, Ezek. v. 7; they fetched in the gods of all nations to them, they had the image of jealousy, every form of creeping things and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel, Ezek. viii. 5, 10; they wept for Tammuz, and worshipped the sun: and when they began to shed blood, they made progress in bloody passages, till the whole land was filled with blood; and when they began to be perverse, the city was filled with perverseness of spirit, perverseness in opinions, perverting of judgment. It is not easy to make stay in the ways of sin, it is going downhill; wicked men, wicked states and churches, grow worse and worse: Ezek. xvi. 25, "Thou hast built thy high places at every head of the way, and hast made thy beauty to be abhorred, and hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by, and multiplied thy whoredoms."

Jerusalem abounded in idolatry, and was insatiable in wickedness. ver. 25, 29.

When it is ill in the church, it is not well with the state; if there be corruptions in the one, there will be confusion in the other. Idolatry, denial of providence and divine presence, was in the one; and shedding of blood, and perverting of justice, was in the other. When the first table is violated, the second table will not be preserved. If men make not conscience of sins against God, they will not make conscience of sins against men; if there be atheism in the church, there will be tyranny in the state; if idolatry in the sanctuary, there will be perverting of equity in the city.

Ver. 10. And as for me also, mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity, but I will recompense their way upon their head.

In this verse is presented to us,

I. God's severity, He will not spare, he will not pity.

II. The equity of his dealing, "I will recompense their way upon their head."

These words have been spoken of chap. v. 11; vii. 4. God's not sparing, not pitying, intimates a contrary disposition, severity, cruelty; Isa. xiii. 18, they should have no pity, they should not spare, but dash the young men to pieces, they should be cruel to all sorts. When God handled Job so sharply, chap. xvi. 13, what said he? "His archers compass me round about, he cleaveth my reins asunder, and doth not spare; he pourth out my gall upon the ground:" here was a contrary disposition to pity and sparing; and Job xxx. 21, he tells God that he is become cruel to him. And God professes, Jer. xxx. 14, that he had "wounded them with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one."

"Upon their heads," that is, upon themselves. The head is put for the whole man; 2 Kings ii. 3, "Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to day?" that is, from thee. Prov. x. 6, The blessing of the Lord is upon the head of the just; that is, upon the just. Psal. lxxvi. 12, "Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads;" that is, us. Head here may be mentioned, because they devised mischief therewith.

Obs. 1. The sins of God's own people fetch the greatest severity from him. "The iniquity of the house of Israel and Judah is exceeding great; and as for me, mine eye shall not spare," &c. No people under heaven were so dear to God as the Israelites; hence Israel is put for God's elect ones, both Jews and gentiles, Rom. xi. 26; Gal. vi. 16; and a Jew for a true worshipper of God, Rom. ii. 29. Yet when these sinned, God became more severe against them than others; Ezek. v. 8, 9, "Behold, I, even I, am against thee, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee. I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like." No such dreadful judgments ever befell any city as Jerusalem, no such wrath poured out upon any as upon the Jews. As they had more love and favour from God than others whilst they were faithful to him, so they had more wrath and fury from him when they forsook him: Amos iii. 2, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities;" they only were the family of his love, and they only were punished above others. They were made as evident a pattern of justice as ever they were of mercy, for God executed judgment among them in anger, in fury, and furious rebukes, Ezek. v. 15: yea, he set his jealousy against them, and dealt furiously with them; he delivered them up to those that dealt hatefully with them, Ezek. xxiii. 25, 29. There is one passage very observable in 2 Kings xxiii. when Josiah had done great things, caused the people to enter into a covenant with God, destroyed idolatry and sodomy out of the land, kept a solemn passover, such a one as had not been from the judges' time, not in four hundred years before, when he turned to the Lord with all his soul and might, and none like him rose up afterwards; would you not look now that God should be propitious to his people, and to Jerusalem? But hearken what is said in ver. 25, 27, "Notwithstanding the Lord turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled against Judah, because of all the provocations that Manasseh had provoked him withal. And the Lord said, I will remove Judah also out of my sight, as I have removed Israel, and will cast off this city Jerusalem which I have chosen." We have done something in way of reformation; kept fasts, taken a solemn covenant, &c; but may not the Lord, for the blood shed in queen Mary's days, and of later days, say, I will remove England or London out of my sight.

Obs. 2. God deals equally with sinners; he recompenseth their own ways upon their own heads, he sets their sins in order before them, lays the burden of them upon them, and causes them to eat the fruit of their own works, and what can be more equal? Obad. 15, "As thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee: thy reward shall return upon thine own head." Edom had afflicted and spoiled God's people, and the like should befall Edom; Ezek. xxxv. 15, "As thou didst rejoice at the inheritance of the house of Israel, because it was desolate, so will I do unto thee: thou shalt be desolate, O mount Seir, and all Idumea."

Ver. 11. And, behold, the man clothed with linen, which had the inkhorn by his side, reported the matter, saying, I have done as thou hast commanded me.

These words are the fourth and last part of the chapter, in which you have,

I. A reporter.

II. His report.

I. The reporter is Christ, who was sent to seal the mourners, and is here described by two adjuncts:

1. He is clothed with linen.

2. Hath an inkhorn by his side; of which hath been spoken in ver. 2.

II. The report is in these words, "I have done as thou hast commanded."

"Reported the matter." Hebrew, returned the word, or caused the word to return; that is, gave in an answer.

Quest. Why doth only Christ report what he had done, and not the other six who had commission also to slay those who were unmarked?

Ans. I. To let us understand that the Lord is more solicitous about the welfare of the godly than the ruin of the wicked. He had a tender care of his mourners and marked ones, he was desirous to hear of their safety, and acceptance of his love, and therefore Christ hastens to make report of what was done; they are all sealed, and so secured.

2. To revive the drooping spirit of Ezekiel, who was perplexed and greatly cast down at the bloody slaughter of his people. He was yet in the temple, and the report was made in his presence, that so he, hearing it was well with all the godly, mourning party, might be comforted. Had the other six come in and told how many thousands they had slain, this would have added affliction to him that was afflicted.

Obs. 1. That Christ is a faithful and forward executioner of God's will. God bade him go and seal those who mourned in Jerusalem, and presently he did it, comes and informs his Father of it, "I have done as thou hast commanded me;" both what was commanded, and as it was commanded: John xiv. 31, "As the Father gave me commandment, even so I do." He doth the will of his Father, and no otherwise than he would have it done; he minded what was to be done, and the manner of doing it. Here is a precious pattern of obedience for us. Doth Christ do the will of his Father, not his own; and shall we do our wills, and not the Lord's? It is argument then that we are neither of Christ, nor of God, but of ourselves. Most men, when God commands, they either neglect, or do it not speedily, or not in that manner they ought to do.

Obs. 2. Those that faithfully and conscientiously execute the commission given them of God, may boldly give up their accounts to God. The man here clothed with linen had done his duty, executed his commission to the full, and he could with cheerfulness and confidence come before the Lord, and say, "I have done as thou hast commanded me." When Christ was on earth, and had many commands from his Father, and great work to do, he did perform what was imposed, and so exactly, that he could at the end of the day, when his work was done, with confidence give up his account, give in his report, and say, "I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self." He did not his own will, but his Father's will, not his own works, but his Father's works. If we do the will and work of God, we shall be able to lift up our heads, and comfortably to make report of what we have done.

The unjust steward, when called to give account, could not do it with comfort or confidence. Those who abide in the doctrine and work of Christ, shall have confidence before Christ at his coming. You who are in place, look to your charge; can you say with him in the gospel, Luke xiv. 22, "Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded?"

Obs. 3. Christ delights in doing good to, and securing of, those his Father affects. Mourners here pleased God; he sends Christ to seal them and comfort them, and he quickly returns to satisfy the mind of his Father, and to show what delightful work that is unto him. Christ was as careful afterwards as now; John vi. 39, "This is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day."

CHAPTER X.

Ver. 1—3. Then I looked, and, behold, in the firmament that was above the head of the cherubims there appeared over them as it were a sapphire stone, as the appearance of the likeness of a throne. And he spoke unto the man clothed with linen, and said, Go in between the wheels, even under the cherub, and fill thine hand with coals of fire from between the cherubims, and scatter them over the city. And he went in in my sight. Now the cherubims stood on the right side of the house, when the man went in; and the cloud filled the inner court.

Our prophet had already seen many visions; and being by the Spirit in a vision, yet at Jerusalem, chap. viii. 3, he hath in this tenth chapter a vision much like that mentioned in the first chapter, yet with some difference, as will appear in the opening. Their sins being great, as you heard, chap. viii. and slaughter men being sent out utterly to destroy, here likewise the Lord manifests his purpose to go on in judgments; he would leave them and turn their city.

Three things chiefly are observable in this chapter.

I. The scattering of burning coals over the city Jerusalem, which some call the vision of coals, ver. 2, 3, 6, 7.

II. The Lord's change of his place, ver. 4, 18, 19.

III. A description of the cherubims, in ver. 5, 8, 9, 10, &c.

The scattering of the coals is specified in ver. 2, and prefigured the burning of Jerusalem; and this is set out to us,

1. From the author commanding, who is the Lord in the throne, ver. 1.

2. From the instrument acting, "the man clothed with linen," ver. 2.

3. From the command itself: where we have, (1.) The place whither he was to go, "in between," &c.

(2.) What to do:

[1.] "Fill his hand with coals of fire."

[2.] "Scatter them over the city."

4. The execution of the command, ver. 2, 6, 7, "he went;" and this is illustrated,

(1.) From the witness thereof, Ezekiel, "in my sight."

(2.) From the place where the cherubims stood, "on the right side of the house," ver. 3.

(3.) From the event, "the cloud filled the inner court," ver. 3.

(4.) From the manner of conveying of the fire, ver. 7, "A cherub put forth his hand, took fire, and put into the hands of him clothed with linen."

In ver. 1, the majesty and greatness of him who commands is set out,

1. By the firmament above.

2. By the cherubims underneath.

3. By a throne which was of sapphire.

In chap. i. 22, hath been spoken of the firmament, רָקִיעַ from רָקַע to extend, expand; expansum, because stretched out over the whole earth. The Greek is σφαιρόμα, because of its strength and firmness, not melted or changed by its motion. This firmament, the footstool of the Lord, was over the head of the cherubims.

"Cherubims." This word is not in the first vision, chap. i. There they are called the living creatures, here cherubims; which is evidence that they are the same, and may strengthen the interpretation given to be of the angels.

There is a difference between the words, chap. i. 22, where it is said, "the firmament upon the heads of the living creature," and the words here, which are, "the firmament that was above the head of the cherubims." There it is, living creature and head; here it is, cherubims and head; which may mind us of their oneness and consent in judgment and operations. If there be heads, it is but as one living creature acts from those heads; if there be cherubims, they have all but as one head.

Why are they called cherubims here, and not living creatures, as before?

I suppose the reason is this: 1. The former vision was at Chebar, in the open field by a river's side; this was in the temple, where the cherubims were,

1 Kings viii. 6, 7, and so that notion suited with them there.

2. In Babylon, a profane land, the prophet sees living creatures, he had a general and confused apprehension of them; but when he is in the temple, he hath a more clear and distinct knowledge of them. Hence you have this note, the Lord did more clearly make known himself and mysteries in the holy land than in other places; Psal. lxxvi. 1, "In Judah is God known" more fully and familiarly than elsewhere: a vision in Babylon is not so clear as a vision in Zion; Psal. xxix. 9, "In his temple doth every one speak of his glory."

"A sapphire stone." Jerom derives it from ספר pulcher, because these stones are fair and pleasant to the eyes. The sapphire notes,

1. Liberty. Exod. xxiv. 10, God appeared to them with a paved work of sapphire under his feet, when the Israelites were going from bondage to liberty.

2. Purity. Therefore it is brought in a foundation stone of the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 19.

3. Of chastity. Cant. v. 14, Christ's belly is overlaid with sapphires, and his spouse must be chaste.

4. Glory, greatness. Among the Egyptians the chief priests, being judges, wore a sapphire about their necks. These, and some other particulars, were spoken of in chap. i. 26.

"Throne." A throne is a seat of majesty, and belonging to kings and great governors, Jonah iii. 6; 2 Kings xi. 19; Neh. iii. 7; and therefore,

1. Are called kingly, Dan. v. 20; and put for kingdom, Prov. xx. 28; for government, Heb. i. 8.

2. Glorious, Isa. xxii. 23; and hence are put for angels, Col. i. 16; for heaven, Acts vii. 49; for great dignity, Job xxxvi. 7. Here it notes a seat of judgment, according to that in Psal. cxxii. 5, "There are set thrones of judgment." Here was a throne of judgment set, and that of sapphire, holding out the majesty, power, and greatness of him that sat in it, who was in a readiness to give out sentence against Jerusalem.

The firmament, cherubims, sapphire, throne, are mentioned, but not he that sat in it. That one was in it, is evident from the next verse, "He spake unto the man clothed," &c. that was he in the throne. In the first vision, one like the appearance of the Son of man was in the throne, and because no such appearance is here, it is conceived to be Jehovah.

Obs. 1. The Lord is King, and hath kingly power, he hath a throne: and Isa. lxvi. 1, "Heaven is my throne;" and, he "sitteth King for ever," Psal. cxxix. 10.

He hath a double throne:

(1.) A throne of justice; Psal. ix. 7, "He hath prepared his throne for judgment;" and his throne is terrible; Dan. vii. 9, 10, it is like a fiery flame, and sends out a fiery stream to scorch and consume delinquents. The law is called a fiery law, Deut. xxxiii. 2, and the breath of him who sits in this throne; it is fire, and kindles upon those who appear before it unquenchably.

(2.) A throne of mercy and grace, Heb. iv. 16. No sinners die before this throne, they may come boldly to it, and find, yea, obtain mercy and grace to help in time of need. Jerusalem was at the throne of justice, and coals of fire were giving out to burn her to ashes.

Obs. 2. His throne is the chiefest of thrones, it is in the firmament; Psal. xi. 4, "The Lord's throne is in heaven," it is above all thrones; he hath angels, men, and devils under his command; the cherubims' heads were under the firmament whereon his throne was, those immortal and glorious spirits.

He is "King of nations," Jer. x. 7; "of all the earth," Psal. xlvii. 2; "A great King above all gods," Psal. xc. 3. They have their expanses over their heads, of some rich stuff, which shows their subjection to some other; but it is otherwise with God, he is above the expanse; "He is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords," 1 Tim. vi. 15.

Obs. 3. The Lord, who hath so glorious a throne, is much more glorious himself; his throne is sapphire, very beautiful, like the colour of the heavens. If an earthly throne be a throne of glory, as Hannah styles it, 1 Sam. ii. 8, what is this visional throne? a more perfect pattern of the throne of his glory. Surely if such thrones be glorious, he who is in them exceeds in glory. The glory of heavenly things is far beyond the glory of terrene things, and the glory of God is infinitely beyond them both: he is not only glorious, and that in holiness, Exod. xv. 11; in name, Deut. xxviii. 58; Isa. xxxiii. 21; in majesty, Psal. cxlv. 12; but he is glory itself: and therefore, Acts vii. 2, is called "The God of glory;" Psal. xxiv. 7, "The King of glory;" Eph. i. 17, "The Father of glory." He that creates, begets, disposes of glory, must needs be glory itself, and not only glory, but "excellent glory," 2 Pet. i. 17.

Obs. 4. Note what stones God takes pleasure in; not any stones, but in precious ones, such as sapphires are; Exod. xxiv. 10, "Under his feet was a paved work of a sapphire stone." He walks among sapphires, sits in a sapphire throne. Stones which are beautiful, and of a heavenly colour, he affects, of such he makes his throne. Now the church in Scripture is called the throne of God, Jer. iii. 17; and Isa. liv. 11-13, speaking of the churches of the gospel, which are the thrones of God and Christ, he saith, "I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord."

You see what stones God would have in his temples, in his thrones; not ordinary, common, high-way stones. 1 Pet. ii. 5, "As lively stones, be ye built up a spiritual house." Here is a house, a spiritual one, to be made; and whereof? of lively stones; there must be not only life in them, but liveliness, dead and dull stones are not so fit for that service: stones they must be, that it may be a solid building; lively, that it may be a spiritual and useful building; and sapphire, that it may be a pure and glorious building.

Obs. 5. Holy and good men are not able to bear divine excellences in their own nature, not capable of immediateness to God. Here is a firmament, a sapphire stone, a throne, and these but in appearance; and then a voice heard, none seen. Had the Lord showed himself as he is, Ezekiel could not have endured it, the glory and majesty of God would have confounded him. If God should not regard man's weakness, and muffle up his excellences some way or other, we could have no communion or converse with God. Moses himself is not able to behold the glory of God.

Obs. 6. Angels and all creatures are in a readiness to do the will of God when he is upon judiciary designs. The cherubims were under the firmament near to the throne, and if the Lord did but speak the word, presently they were ready to execute his pleasure; Psal. ciii. 20, "They do his commandment, hearkening unto the voice of his word:" as soon as the sound comes to them, they do it; if he bid them go and stir up Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonian soldiers to come, they do it.

Obs. 7. The Lord is not forward to the execution of judgment. Here is the Lord sitting in judgment, but yet they were not destroyed. The prophet hath vision after vision; eats a roll full of lamentations, mourning, and woe; sits seven days at Tel-abib, then is carried into the plain, bound, dumb; must portray Jerusalem upon a tile, lay siege to it; lie upon his side three hundred and ninety days; then take a razor, shave his head, beard, burn, smite, scatter, bind up a third part of the hair; after, hath a type of a chain; then is led by the Spirit to see Jerusalem's sins; after this, sees the six slaughter-like men sent out to destroy; and here, the Lord is sitting in his throne, and giving out judgment still against Jerusalem, and all this time nothing is done.

Ver. 2. And he spake unto the man clothed with linen, and said, Go in between the wheels, even under the cherub, and fill thine hand with coals of fire from between the cherubims, and scatter them over the city. And he went in in my sight.

In this verse you have,

I. The speaker, "He;" that is, the Lord, Jehovah, who was in the throne; some make it Christ.

II. The party spoken to, "the man clothed with linen;" and who this was, you heard opened in chap. ix. ver. 2, namely, Christ, who in regard of his offices is the Servant of his Father: Isa. xlii. 1, "Behold my servant, whom I uphold." He had done service in marking the mourners, and now was to do it another way.

III. The thing spoken or commanded.

"Go in between the wheels, even under the cherub." The wheels have been largely opened in the first chapter: the world and the motions of it are set out thereby. There were four wheels, by each cherub one, as appears by ver. 9. Some take it thus: Conceive the form of a waggon in the midst, on each side two wheels, the cherubims riding in it, or carrying of it, two in the former part, two in the hinder, the ark in the midst of it, the foot-stool of Divine Majesty, and before this the altar where the fire was; and you may apprehend how the man was to go between the wheels, under the cherub, that is, under the cherubims, and so to reach up his hand to the altar, and take coals. This way it is easily comprehended; but if we come up close to the examination of the wheels, we shall find they were not at such a distance as here is made; but one in another, ver. 10, a wheel seemed to be in the midst of a wheel; and how the man clothed with linen went between them I cannot express; but that he did the text affirms, and notes Christ's interest in the wheels and angels.

"Fill thine hand with coals of fire from between the cherubims." The fire was between the cherubims, and the cherubims above, between the wheels, and the man must come between both to fill his hand with coals of fire.

There was fire you know in the temple on the altar, and it never went out: Lev. vi. 13, "The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar; it shall never go out." The Jews say of this fire, that it was the angels' ladder to go up to heaven by; Ezek. ix. 2, the six men, six angels stood by the brazen altar; and Judg. xiii. 20, the angel who appeared to Manoah and his wife, ascended in the flame of the altar. Whether it was a ladder for angels may be questioned; but certainly it was a ladder to carry up their incense and sacrifices unto God, whereby God was propitious unto them, and so was a reconciling fire. But this fire here is mentioned in opposition to such an effect, and was a destructive fire, like that which went out from the Lord, and destroyed Nadab and Abihu. It sets out God's wrath, which is frequently in Scripture expressed by fire.

"Fill thy hand." He must not take a coal or two, but his hand full: neither one hand, but both; for the word is in the dual number, and notes the hollow of the hands, the most capacious parts, those he must fill.

"And scatter them over the city." He must take his hands full of coals; and what then? not keep them in his hands, but scatter them; not upon a house or two, one street or two, but over the whole city. God's intention was to destroy the city by fire; and here it is represented to Ezekiel by coals, and those scattered over the city; the Hebrew is emphatical.

This part of the vision, with that in Ezek. ix. 4, 11, where Christ is brought in marking the mourners, and here scattering the coals of fire over Jerusalem, seems to represent the double coming of Christ:

I. That coming of his in mercy, when he took our nature upon him, and sought out that which was lost, healed the broken-hearted, preached deliverance to the captives, set them at liberty who were bruised, and refreshed those who were weary and heavy laden.

2. His coming in judgment, which will be in flames of fire, to take vengeance on them that know not God; then Christ will come with both his hands full of fire, and scatter those coals all the world over, and set it on fire, and sentence the reprobate to eternal fire.

Obs. 1. God looks upon and after the things of the world, the ways of men, whatever the thoughts of men are concerning him. In chap. ix. 9, they said, "The Lord hath forsaken the earth, the Lord seeth not;" but here you may see he saw the wheels, all the motions of things in the world, and especially at Jerusalem, where they thought themselves secure; the Lord saw into their hearts, knew their thoughts, and heard their atheistical speeches.

Obs. 2. Christ receives authority and commission from the Father for what he doth. He in the throne said to the man clothed, "Go." John v. 19, "The Son can do nothing of himself;" and ver. 22, "The Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son." He hath the keys of hell and death in his hand, Rev. i. 18, and they were put into his hand; Matt. xxviii. 18, "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth."

Obs. 3. The cherubims or angels have power over the wheels: they move not of themselves, they are under the cherubims, under their command, at their disposing. Angels have great interest in the affairs of the world; there are scarce any natural motions, but they have influence into them, winds, tempests, thunders, earthquakes, plagues, famines: so for other wheels, in kingdoms and churches, which have voluntary motions, as wars, tumults, divisions, changes, &c. these are not accidental, casual, but have superior agents.

Obs. 4. The Lord doth use the ministry of angels in the execution of his judgments, especially his fiery judgments. The fire was between the cherubims; God had given them charge of the fire, and they were to kindle a fire in Jerusalem. You heard in chap. ix. of the six angels that had their slaughter weapons, and were sent out of God to destroy utterly man, woman, maid, and child. They are ready to execute his judgments; they are flames of fire, Heb. i. 7, and it is suitable to them to be employed in fiery judgments.

The altar was near the oracle before the cherubims, 1 Kings vi. 22.

Obs. 5. The Lord Christ hath power over the angels and all inferior creatures. The cherubims are over the wheels, and Christ is over them and the wheels too; he goes in between the wheels, and takes fire that is between the cherubims. Let services of what nature soever be in the hands of the creatures, men or angels, Christ can step in and do what the Father hath appointed, overrule the motions of the highest and lowest wheels, of the noblest or meanest creatures.

Obs. 6. Christ hath variety of dispensations, he is a dispenser of judgment as well as mercy; he dispenseth the favours of the Father, and the wrath of the Father. In chap. ix. he marks the mourners, and here he scatters coals of fire. He represents several persons. Sometimes the same man hath sat in parliament, hath been a warrior in the field, a father in the family, and acted answerably. A steward provides for those in the family, and punisheth those who are delinquents in it. So Christ is sometimes upon the throne, doing acts of mercy, sometimes acts of justice; and sometimes he is off the throne, and acts as a servant.

Obs. 7. When the Lord is wroth with a people, and intends judgments, he turns those creatures who have been very comfortable and useful unto them, into a terror unto them. Fire, what a necessary, what a refreshing creature is it! and now fire must be taken to fire their city, to burn down all that through the help of fire was built. They had abused fire to maintain their gluttony, for fulness of bread was one of their sins; they burned incense to idols, and abused the altar fire, which had been the greatest refreshing to their souls; their sacrifices were by fire, and were consumed by fire, they had acceptance with God, atonement was made; and now even this fire kindled upon them.

Obs. 8. Terrible judgments are in the hand of Christ, and come out from him. "Fill thy hand with coals, and scatter them over the city." This is spoken after the manner of men, not that Christ took coals, but he hath that which is analogous unto coals, fiery virtue, creative power of any dreadful judgments. When Christ said to the man who had not on the wedding garment, Friend, how, &c.; take him, bind him hand and foot, cast him into utter darkness, this was dreadful. In chap. i. 27, and viii. 2, Christ appeared like a man of fire; and Rev. i. 14, 15, Christ's eyes and feet were like unto fire: in the two first places he was in a way of judgment against Jerusalem; in the last against the churches, and had fiery judgments in his hand. They are in his power to produce, to increase, to order, and moderate; he can make a judgment terrible and fiery, continue it as long as he pleases. He hath fire in his hand, and can scatter it when and where he pleases; he scattered it upon Jerusalem here, upon it afterward, when Titus besieged it. He scattered fire upon the Jews, which consumes and wastes them to this day; he scattered fire upon the seven churches, which dissolved them; and hath he not scattered coals of contention and war among us, which burn and consume us daily, and threaten the foundations of church and state? We may think it is this man and that man that throws the coals, but it is Christ doth it: Luke xii. 49, "I am come to send fire on the earth;" and Matt. x. 34—36, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law, and a man's foes shall be they of his own household." The coals are scattered, the fire is kindled, and who can put it out? It is Christ who hath power over fire; you must sue earnestly to him to quench the violence of that fire which burns amongst us.

Obs. 9. None can destroy or fire a city, unless God give command and commission for it. Go, take coals, and scatter them upon the city. The Chaldeans could never have burnt Jerusalem, if the Lord had not bid them. Hence saith the prophet, "Evil came down from the Lord unto the gate of Jerusalem," Micah i. 12. It is an evil that Jerusalem shall be burned; but this evil was determined in heaven, a commission for it came from thence, and it is the Lord sends the fire to the gates thereof. Till God give out the word, it cannot be done, how sinful soever cities be. Jerusalem was full of pride, gluttony, oppression, blood, atheism, idolatry, &c.; yet none could fire it, till God said, Scatter coals upon the city; and when he saith so, nothing can privilege a city from burning. Jerusalem was the city he had chosen, 2 Kings xxiii. 27; there was the temple, and all the chief worship, 1 Kings viii.; so famous was it for vision, that it was called "the valley of vision," Isa. xxii. 1; "the city of solemnities," Isa. xxxiii. 20; "the city of God," Psal. xlv. 4; and the inhabitants of this city were Abraham's seed, Matt. iii. 9; God's firstborn, Exod. iv. 22. In Rom. ix. 4, 5, you have eight privileges of theirs set down together; the adoption, the glory, the covenant, the law, the service, the promises, the fathers, and descent of Christ, were all theirs. Yet notwithstanding the city was such, and inhabitants so privileged, God would have Jerusalem burned; he destroys the people, and their chief glory with them. Let no cities stand upon their privileges after Jerusalem. Rome thinks she hath much to glory in; but, Rev. xviii. 8, "she shall be utterly burned with fire;" and kings who have served her, shall see and bewail the smoke of her burning, ver. 9. The coals may be now scattering in Italy, which may burn Rome; and it is sure, and so comfort to us, she shall be burned. Let us repent, else we may perish, Luke xiii. 3.

Obs. 10. Christ is obedient to the commands of his Father, even in execution of severe judgments. When the Lord bade him seal the mourners, he did it; and now he bade him take and scatter coals over the city, he went about it; he did not dispute, delay, but immediately did what his Father commanded. This should beget in us such a tractableness and conformity to Christ, that whatever our heavenly Father counsels or commands us, we should presently hearken thereunto, and yield obedience.

Obs. 11. God makes known to his prophets what he will do. All was said and done in Ezekiel's presence, he was privy to and witness of all. It is a great honour to be near, to see and hear the transactions of God and Christ. Such honour had our prophet, other prophets; and such honour have many of the saints.

Ver. 3. Now the cherubims stood on the right side of the house, when the man went in; and the cloud filled the inner court.

Before the accomplishment of what was commanded, some circumstantial things are promised, Christ being to go in between the wheels, and to take coals.

1. "The cherubims stood."

11. A "cloud filled the inner court."

1. "The cherubims stood." When Christ, "the man clothed with linen," came upon that great service of his Father, the angels stood either to receive commands from him, being supreme, and over them, or to adore him, being come into the temple; both which are testimonies of divine majesty.

“On the right side of the house.” Which side this was is doubtful; some make it the north side, and so to note the Babylonians coming from the northern parts to burn and destroy all; others make it the south side; but when they came in at the eastern gate or door, the south was on their left hand, and north on their right. We have a place of Scripture which will help us in this strait, 1 Kings vii. 39, “He put five bases on the right side of the house, and five on the left side of the house; and he set the sea on the right side of the house eastward, over against the south.” Hence it appears, that the north part was the right side; therefore they are out, that make the north part the left side, and say the cherubims stood not there, because that side was defiled with idols. The whole house was polluted wherever they stood, and on the right side they did stand; which might intimate the Lord of the temple was there, and if any side were more honourable than another, he ought to have it.

“The cloud filled the inner court.” God hath often appeared in a cloud; he went before the Israelites in a cloud, Exod. xiii. 21; he gave the law in a cloud, Exod. xix. 16; Deut. iv. 12; Christ was transfigured in a cloud, Matt. xvii.; and clouds have been symbols of divine presence; as Exod. xl. 34, “A cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle.” By this cloud God took possession of the tabernacle, manifested his good pleasure towards them, in his intention to dwell among them; so, Numb. ix. 15, and 1 Kings viii. 10, 12, by a cloud God manifested his gracious presence. That here was the presence of Christ is not doubted, but whether the gracious presence was questioned. Christ came to take fire, and scatter over the city; and the cloud here is rather a testimony of his displeasure and departure from the temple, than of his favour and purpose graciously to be with them. The Scripture signifies God’s angry presence by a cloud or smoke, for they in Scripture language are one; Ezek. viii. 11, “A thick cloud of incense went up.” Isa. vi. 4, when God manifested his presence, “the house was filled with smoke;” but this presence of God was to send out Isaiah a messenger of death unto them. Rev. xv. 8, “The temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled;” there was wrath going out from the temple. And now Christ appeared here, the inward court, the priest’s court, was filled with a cloud, intimating divine majesty, the Lord’s departure, and darkness following thereupon.

Obs. 1. Heavenly creatures attend upon Christ. The cherubims stood, and tendered their service, they acknowledge and adore his majesty, and expect his commands. No creatures are too great, too good, or glorious, to wait upon Christ in any ministrations of his; Heb. i. 6, angels, and all of them, wait upon and worship him, and are sent forth at his pleasure to minister to whom he pleases, ver. 4.

Obs. 2. The angels are desirous to know the things of God and Christ in the church. They stood; but where? in the house of God, in the temple. They are knowing creatures, but they know not all things, there be mysteries in the ways of Christ that they “desire to look into,” 1 Pet. i. 12; and Paul tells us there is wisdom made known by the church to “principalities and powers in heavenly places,” Eph. iii. 10.

Obs. 3. The Lord manifests his pleasure by signs and actions, as well as by speech. They “stood on the right side of the house;” that side was northward, toward Babylon, and this signified that thence should come their destruction; they had seated the image of jealousy there, which provoked God to jealousy, and he stirred up the Babylonians to come out of the north and lay them waste.

Obs. 4. Christ he is Lord of the temple. He went in, and then the cherubims stood, then the court was filled with a cloud, which notes a glorious majesty and royal presence; 2 Chron. v. 13, 14, “The house was filled with a cloud; so that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud; for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of God.” It is Christ who hath all to do in the temple; when he in the days of his flesh came into it, he thrust out all corrupters and corruptions; he walks in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks.

Obs. 5. When Christ is in the temple, doing the will of his Father, any part of his office, then doth his glory appear. Now he went into the temple about judiciary service, and it was filled with a cloud, which sets out the majesty and glory of Christ. When he preached in the temple or synagogues, his glory appeared; “Never man spake like this man;” all his ministrations were beautiful and glorious: John i. 14, “We beheld his glory;” his glory appeared in all his works.

Obs. 6. Divine glory is usually hidden up in cloudy darkness. When Christ came into the temple, here was a glorious majesty, but a cloud presently filled the court, covered up the glory. When God came into the temple in Solomon’s days, a cloud filled and covered all: so Numb. xvi. 42, a cloud covered the tabernacle, and the glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud.

Ver. 4. Then the glory of the Lord went up from the cherub, and stood over the threshold of the house; and the house was filled with the cloud, and the court was full of the brightness of the Lord’s glory.

This verse mentions the first removal of glory; where we have,

I. Whence the removal was, “from the cherub.”
II. Whither it was, to the threshold, “it stood over,” &c.

III. The events thereupon; and they are,
1. The filling of the “house with a cloud.”
2. The court “with glory.”

3. “The sound of the cherubims’ wings,” which is in the next verse.

God had his temple at Jerusalem, in the most holy place of it was the ark, and the cherubims covering it; between these God was said to dwell, or sit, because he gave out answers thence in difficult cases, and there he would be worshipped. The Jews grew proud of God’s presence; and because they did not glorify him as God, but set up idols, and provoked him many ways, therefore the Lord resolved to lead them, and ruin them; and that is the scope of the vision here.

“The glory of the Lord.” This was Christ, say expositors, who was in his glorious apparition, and now in the temple, but going out of it. He had once before done thus, gone off from the cherub to the threshold, chap. ix. 3, but was returned again, and here the second time doth it. He was now in a judiciary way, and would leave the temple, if they did not presently prevent it by repentance.

Christ standing thus upon the threshold, and being upon terms of departure, behind him was the cloud that filled the house, there was darkness; but before the Lord Christ was light and brightness, the court, which he stood looking into, was full of brightness of the Lord's glory: the glory was now gone out of the sanctuary into the court.

Observations suitable to this verse see upon Ezek. ix. 3, yet take here these following.

Obs. 1. When God is about to visit his church with some sharp judgments, he gives out some evident signs and tokens thereof. He was now bringing in a sad judgment upon the Jews, and their glory goes up from the cherub to the threshold, which showed God was about some great change. God testified by the ark which Noah made, that he was about some great judgment, and alteration of things in the state.

Obs. 2. That Christ, with the signs of his presence, is the glory of the temple. Where Christ is, there is glory. Hag. ii. 9, "The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former." How was that? When, as ver. 3, the glory of the latter temple in comparison of the former was as nothing, Christ should personally come into it, teach in it; this was more than all typical or visional glory, and external beauty, the other had. Where Christ is, there is glory, and where his ordinances are, there is glory.

Obs. 3. When Christ leaves the temple, nothing but darkness remains. When he was upon the threshold, there was a cloud behind him; when he goes out of the church, glory, light, truth go, but night and darkness come in. Isa. vi. 4, that which he calls here a "cloud," there he calls "smoke;" and when God leaves the church, then smoke, and little else, is to be found in it; smoke of ignorance, smoke of errors, smoke of divisions, smoky and false worship, and quickly after, smoky judgments. The churches of Asia, when Christ left walking among them, darkness overspread them, and smoky judgments consumed them.

Obs. 4. The way Christ goeth, is glory or glorious. He goeth out of the temple, and now before his face, as he stands upon the threshold in the court, is brightness of glory; his glory goeth with him, before him; he leaves darkness behind him, but hath brightness before him. His departure from his people is glorious, his ways and works of judgment are glorious.

Ver. 5. And the sound of the cherubims' wings was heard even to the outer court, as the voice of the Almighty God when he speaketh.

Here is the third event upon the Lord's coming to the threshold, and hastening to give judgment against this city. The angels do rejoice at it, and applaud the act of Christ, which the sound of their wings imports. Of this verse was spoken, chap. i. 24.

This sound of their wings is described two ways:

I. From the extent; "It was heard even to the outer court," which was a great distance.

II. From the resemblance of it to the Lord's voice, "as the voice of the Almighty God when he speaketh;" that is, like a mighty voice, even the voice of thunder.

Obs. The angels do applaud the righteous judgment of God and Christ against sinful cities, churches, states, or persons.

Here Christ was leaving the temple, the city, this people, and ready to scatter fire among them, and the angels made a joyful sound at it; the temple, the inward and outward court, rang of it. Their voice (which is meant by the sound of their wings) was a mighty voice like thunder; it is music to them that God hath the glory of his judgments as well as of his mercies, that obstinate sinners be destroyed as well as mourners be marked. The angel was glad when Babylon was fallen, and God's judgments executed upon her; Rev. xviii. 2. "He cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen."

Ver. 6, 7. And it came to pass, that when he had commanded the man clothed with linen, saying, Take fire from between the wheels, from between the cherubims; then he went in, and stood beside the wheels. And one cherub stretched forth his hand from between the cherubims unto the fire that was between the cherubims, and took thereof, and put it into the hands of him that was clothed with linen; who took it, and went out.

In ver. 6 is a repetition of what was said in ver. 2. There God spake to the man clothed with linen, here he "commanded the man," &c.; there it is, "Go in between the wheels, and fill thine hand with coals of fire from between the cherubims," and here it is, "Take fire from between the wheels, from between the cherubims." Then the obedience of the man clothed with linen is set down, "he went;" so here, "he went in;" only there is this addition, "and stood beside the wheels."

This repetition of the same matter argues not backwardness in Christ to do the commands of his Father, but sets out the earnest intention of God to have this fiery judgment accomplished; now he would not have it delayed, but hastened.

"Stood beside the wheels." I find not any interpreter to touch at all upon this, Christ's standing beside the wheels, and yet surely there was something in it. The Lord had bid him go in between the wheels, and take fire from between them, but Christ stood beside them; he did not neglect or cross any thing his Father commanded; he was between the wheels, when he stood beside them, or near them. This might be,

1. To acquaint the cherubims with the command the Father had given him. They were at some distance from him who sat in the throne, and from the man clothed in linen; it is said, "he went."

2. To try their spirits, how they affected this judgment.

3. To consider the mutability and uncertainty of all things.

Obs. 1. Christ, being in the form of man, is under the command of his Father, "he commanded the man clothed with linen." Hence he calls him his servant; Matt. xii. 18, "Behold my servant, whom I have chosen:" he was the most able, diligent, and faithful servant that ever God or man had, therefore the Lord saith of him, "My Beloved, in whom my soul is well pleased." God was not only contented with Christ, and what he did, but satisfied, well pleased; he being under his commands, performed them fully. John xii. 49, saith Christ of his Father, "He gave me a commandment, what I should say;" and chap. xiv. 31, "As the Father gave me commandment, even so I do;" and chap. xv. 10, "I have kept my Father's commandments." If Christ, when he appeared in the form of man, and when he was man, was under the commands of God, let not us think much to be under his commands.

Obs. 2. That judgments are in God's power, and at his disposal; he saith, "Go, take fire." It is the Lord that creates the fire, keeps, and gives it out, when, by whom, and where he pleaseth; he had fire in store, he bids the man clothed with linen take of it, and scatter it over the city. No judgments but are at the Lord's command. Jer. xxv. 29, "I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth."

It is at God's call, and only his call doth it; if he say the word, there shall be wars in all kingdoms. He brings diseases and plagues upon people when he will. Deut. xxviii. 22; he sends enemies to tread down his people like mire in the streets, Isa. x. 6; he stirs up the scourge when it comes, ver. 26; he throws down, Mal. i. 4; he pours out wrath like water, Hos. v. 10; he kindles fire to burn the green and dry tree, yea, such fire as none can quench, Ezek. xx. 47. All judgments, lesser or greater, are at his command, and therefore he takes it to himself; Isa. xlv. 7, "I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil. I the Lord do all these things." Let us fear, and not provoke, this God, who can command fire to burn cities at his pleasure.

Obs. 3. Christ proceeds in execution of his Father's will considerately. He stood by the wheels, informs the angels, tries their spirits, and observes the motions of all things, and sees what equity there is to take fire and throw upon the city.

Ver. 7. And one cherub stretched forth his hand from between the cherubims unto the fire that was between the cherubims, and took thereof, and put it into the hands of him that was clothed with linen: who took it, and went out.

This verse presents to us the way how the fire was conveyed to Christ. He being come to the side of the wheels, one of the cherubims stretcheth out his hand, takes fire, and puts it into the hand of Christ, the man clothed with linen.

Angels have no hands, they are spirits without human parts; visionally they had hands, they appeared so to the prophet.

The fire they took of we must a little inquire into. If we will refer it to material fire, it was that of the altar, of which I spake before, ver. 2; but we may understand by fire that active virtue and power which is in the angels; they are glorious creatures, likened to flames of fire, Heb. i. 7, and the taking fire here, and putting it into the hands of Christ, is their yielding up their strength, power, and activity to further the design, and do the will of Christ, in executing of the judgments intended. Fire hath light, heat, and activity in it; and the angels have much knowledge, zeal, and active virtue in them, all which they tender to Christ.

"Who took it, and went out." Here is no mention made what the man clothed with linen did with this fire, viz. their resignation of themselves, and their active virtue, to be at his disposal.

Some think that Christ presently executed the command of his Father, though it be not specified. In ver. 2, he was bid to scatter the coals over the city, and now it was needless to re-mention it.

Others are of judgment, to whom I consent, that Christ did not presently set fire to Jerusalem, or employ the angels to the destruction of it; and the reason given is this, and hath weight in it: our prophet was now in a vision at Jerusalem, and as he had had many things offered to his sight, so many things were yet offerring, and to be offered to his view; all which had been disturbed and prevented, if there had been present execution of the command; he could not have seen what follows here in the vision, nor that in the next chapter. Further, I conceive some time was allotted between the command and execution for repentance.

Obs. 1. Angels watch, and take opportunities to serve Christ. He comes unto them to take fire, and presently one of them takes the fire and puts it in his hand, being glad of such an opportunity to do him service. Angels are vigilant creatures, and wait for opportunities, and when they come they will not lose them. Psal. ciii. 20, they hearken to the voice of his word; they neither slumber nor sleep, but hearken constantly what the Lord will say, what opportunity there will be for action; so, in Ezek. i. 11, they are described with their wings stretched upward, manifesting their watchfulness and readiness for service. When Christ was born, a multitude of them appeared and celebrated his nativity, Luke ii. 13. When Christ was taken by Judas and his train, Peter drew his sword in his Master's defence; but what saith Christ? "Put up thy sword," it is not a time now to fight, but to suffer; "thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?" It is not a time now to pray for help, I must die, and Scripture must be fulfilled; but if I would, my Father would bid the angels to aid me, and they presently would come, whole legions of them, yea, all the angels in heaven. Let us learn of angels, watch opportunities, and take them. There are nicks of time wherein to do the work of Christ; Eccl. iii. 1, "To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven." It is wisdom to observe those seasons and times, Rom. xii. 11. Ἐπι κερύειν ὁ ἀνάλογισται.

Obs. 2. Angels do honour the Lord Christ exceedingly, to their utmost; they resign up themselves and all they have to the will and command of Christ; their wings, hands, feet, faces, their natures, their knowledge, zeal, active virtue, shall be all for Christ. One took fire and put into his hand. This is great honour to Christ, when any creature gives up what it is, what it hath, and what it can do, unto him fully. More cannot be required or expected by any superior and divine power, more cannot be performed by any creature; they are angelical who can resign up all into the hand of Christ: let us learn this duty. The scribe, Matt. viii. 19, said well, "Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest;" I will trace thy steps, learn thy doctrine, do thy will, be at thy disposal: and Isaiah, chap. vi. 8, "Here am I," send me, Lord; I give up myself unto thee; all the fire in me, all my knowledge, zeal, active virtue are at thy disposal. So Paul, Acts ix. 6, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" I have been against thee, I will now be for thee, I give up myself to thee wholly. If angels did it, whose nature Christ took not, for whom he died not, how much more should we do it, whose nature he took, for whom he did and suffered all!

Obs. 3. Things done seasonably are acceptable to Christ. The angel observed Christ coming for fire, to demand their service, and he takes fire and puts into Christ's hand, and Christ took it; which notes his acceptance: he neither reproved nor rejected the angel or his service, but was well pleased, the putting fire into his hand was seasonable, and so acceptable. There be seasons, which, if taken, sweeten actions, and open the door for their better entertainment: Prov. xxv. 11, "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver;" the Hebrew is, A word spoken upon its wheels: fit times and seasons are wheels to carry words with great advantage. And so for actions; when things are done in the due time, they are beautiful, acceptable. When God gives rain to a land in season, how acceptable is it! when a tree bears fruit in its season, it is grateful; so when angels or men do things seasonably, it is pleasing to the Lord Christ: there are fit times, which, if we miss, actions are unlovely, and miss of their aims. Psal. xxxii. 6, "For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found:" there are times, if we have the wisdom to discern them, when prayer will be seasonable, acceptable, effectual.

Ver. 8. And there appeared in the cherubims the form of a man's hand under their wings.

Our prophet having seen the cherub stretch out a hand, take fire, and put it into the hand of the man clothed with linen, here he describes what kind of hand it was, and where it was; for the kind, it was a man's hand, "there appeared the form of a man's hand;" for the place, it was "under their wings." I have spoken herof, chap. i. 8. There, is mention of "hands," here, of a "hand;" not that they had only one hand, but under every wing was a hand; they had wings, and under them he saw the form of a hand. Their wings set out not only their swiftness in motion, but also their divine instinct and secret guidance of God, which carries them as wings this or that way, to this or that action; and hand imports both vigour to act, and action; active virtue, and the activity itself.

Obs. 1. Angels are furnished with abilities, and are fitted for employments; they have hands and wings. Whatever the Lord calls them to do, they want not aught tending to the accomplishment thereof. If speed be required, they have wings to fly; if work be to be done, they have hands, and can do much in a little time.

Obs. 2. They do not things rashly, but advisedly, judiciously; they have the hands of a man. Men's hands are ordered by judgment in their operations, and so are angels'; they do all things wisely, understandingly; they observe the best seasons, and all circumstances which may add beauty and advantage to their actions; and therefore, ver. 12, it is said, "their hands were full of eyes," they see into all the intrinsics or extrinsics of any business.

Obs. 3. The works of God are done by hidden and secret means, by ways unthought of, by hands under wings. Here a cherub stretches out a hand from under a wing, takes fire, and puts into the hand of Christ.

God hath secret hands to do his work; sometimes angels' hands, sometimes the hand of providence, sometimes the hand of his Spirit. Angels are invisible agents, and we have unknown mercies from their hands. An angel rolled away the great stone from the sepulchre; and they remove many difficulties out of our way. It was the hand of an angel that brought the apostles out of prison, Acts v. 19; xii. 9. Angels encamp round about them that fear the Lord, Psal. xxxiv. 7. They are invisible guards, and do invisible things for us, their hands work when we feel them not; so the hand of Providence is doing when we slumber, and discern it not. Joseph is sold into Egypt, and it was not discerned by the sellers or the sold, what work God was about: the hand of Providence was secret, but wrought strongly for the raising of Joseph, and safety of Jacob, and many thousands besides. Mordecai will not bow to Haman: was the hand discerned here which was working Haman's ruin? I believe not. Haman goes on, plots the death of all the Jews, had almost accomplished his desire, but Providence acts in an unexpected way, and cuts off this bloody man. A secret hand of Heaven hath done the great things in all ages; invisible virtue hath done more than all visible instruments. In our counsels, armies, undertakings, had not God's hand of providence wrought, we had been ruined. Was it not a strange hand of providence that began the work in Scotland? If ought be done in the work of reformation amongst us, is it not the hand of God rather than the hand of man?

Isa. i. 25, "I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross." Matt. viii. 3, Jesus put forth his hand, and healed the leper. If our leprosy be healed, or healing, it is by the hand of Christ put forth: the safety of this nation is from a secret hand; we are held and hid in the hollow and shadow of an invisible hand. So the hand of the Spirit doth secret work in Zion. Christ, by the finger of God, Luke xi. 20, by the Spirit of God, Matt. xii. 28, cast out devils. It is this hand that mortifies and kills the lusts, Rom. viii. 13; it is this hand which quickens and brings life, John vi. 63; it is this hand works holiness in you, that comforts and supports you, that guides and seals you; it is this hand that brings you out of the ways of sin, error, death, into the ways of Christ, truth, and life; it is this hand which makes all ordinances effectual. 2 Cor. x. 4, "Our weapons are mighty, through God, to the pulling down of strong holds:" through God, that is, through the Spirit of God. Weapons must be in some hand or other: these were spiritual weapons, and in the hand of the Spirit, as well as in the apostle's hand, else had they not been able to pull down strong holds.

Obs. 4. When God's work is done, we should hide up our hands that do it. The cherub stretched out his hand, took fire, put it into Christ's hand; and what then? the hand is hid under the wing. Angels are not vain-glorious, they seek not themselves, but the honour of him they serve; they say not, This have I done, hath my hand wrought; they hold not forth their hand for mortals to admire or adore, but rejoice that the work is done, and hide up their hands. This is a good precedent for us, who are apt to be puffed up with what we do, and to expose not only the work, but the hand also too much to view. If actions be done, and others reap the good thereof, without selfish respects of ours, it is angelical. Paul was of this judgment, and practised answerably; 1 Cor. xv. 10, "I laboured more abundantly than they all: yet not I." See here how he hides up himself, and puts all upon God; "not I, but the grace of God which was with me." It was not Paul, but God's grace that did all the work. So Isa. xxvi. 12, "Thou hast wrought all our works in us;" we have done nothing, but thou hast done all.

Ver. 9—13. And when I looked, behold the four wheels by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub: and the appearance of the wheels was as the colour of a beryl stone. And as for their appearances, they four had one likeness, as if a wheel had been in the midst of a wheel. When they went, they went upon their four sides; they turned not as they went, but to the place whither the head looked they followed it; they turned not as they went. And their whole body, and their backs, and their hands, and their wings, and the wheels, were full of eyes round about, even the wheels that they four had. As for the wheels, it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel.

In these verses, and most of the rest to the end, is a description of the wheels and cherubims, which represent things earthly and heavenly, and both under the command and disposal of Divine Majesty. Take things below in states or churches, they pass not without the interposition of Providence, the hand of Heaven acts in them; take things above, they are not absolute, there is one in the throne overrules them.

For the wheels, which are the principal subject of these verses, and note out inferior things and causes unto us, they are,

I. Described,

II. Explained.

I. They are described,

1. From their number, "four wheels."

2. By their reference, dependence, or situation, they were "by the cherubims."

3. By a particular and special distribution of one to another; the four wheels were not all together by the four cherubims, but "one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub."

4. From their appearance or likeness, which "was as the colour of a beryl stone;" and those four are in the 9th verse.

5. From their likeness and coherence among themselves, "they four had one likeness." &c. ver. 9.

6. From their motion, ver. 11, "They went:" which is set out,

(1.) From the way they went to those parts, which was upon their sides; into those quarters of the world which were next them, "whither the head looked."

(2.) Their progress; they turned not back, but went on.

7. From their civeness: ver. 12. "Their whole body, backs, lands, wings, were full of eyes."

II. The explication of the wheels, and that is in ver. 13; it was cried, "O wheel!" O world!

I have spoken largely of the wheels in the first chapter, and therefore now shall say little of them; the most will be of those particulars wherein there is difference from what is there set down.

In chap. i. mention is made, first, of the living creatures, and then, of the wheels; here, the wheels are first set down, and after them the cherubims, or living creatures. Why there is a great inversion and change made in the vision, I find no reason given, neither do I conceive any satisfactory reason can be given, but the will of the Lord; it pleased him to represent the vision in that way to the prophet, and that may suffice us. Yet if we may conjecture, the wheels are set first here, for that changes and motions of second causes in the world are more obvious unto our eyes, we observe them first, and that virtue which acts them is more out of sight.

In chap. i. 15, there is one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures; here, in ver. 9, are four wheels by the cherubims, and the assignment of one wheel to one cherub, which makes this part of the vision more distinct and clear.

Wheels set out all the motions and changes of things here below; and the four wheels, all that are in the four parts of the world; and a wheel is a fit instance to resemble them by, as hath been shown: and whatever appears casual, accidental, confused, and contrary, comes under the notion of the wheel.

Obs. 1. That all things in this world have dependence upon higher causes. The wheels consist not of themselves, but are by the cherubims, they have reference unto and dependence upon them. The creatures are servants, not masters, or lords; and however things seem to be carried in the world confusedly, without any respect to any superior causes, yet the wheels are regulated, they are by the cherubims, they have influence into them, and order them.

Obs. 2. The Lord is methodical in disposing the things of the world. Each one of the angels hath his wheel; they were not all by one angel, or all four promiscuously by the four cherubims, but the wheels were methodically disposed of, to each angel one; and so they acted methodically, and looked to their wheels in their several quarters. God hath set a wheel by every one of us; something he hath committed to our care and government: let us look to our wheels.

The 10th verse you have in chap. i. 16, only a little alteration of the words. In the first place it is, "They four had one likeness, and their appearance was as it were a wheel in a wheel:" in this place it is, "As for their appearances, they four had one likeness, as if a wheel had been in the midst of a wheel." They were like in figure, in colour, and equal in quantity, as if one had been made by another.

Quest. But if the wheels prefigure the motions and changes of things in the world, as is affirmed, are the motions and events of things alike every where, in all quarters of the world?

Answe. We see that, otherwise, there be wars in one kingdom, and peace in another; riches in one city, and poverty in another; the gospel leaving one place, and going to another: yet are they alike in that they represent.

(1.) There are changes every where, good and bad: one generation goes, another comes.

(2.) There are great difficulties, perplexities in all mundane affairs; not only in one place, but in all places.

(3.) In that they all work, and further God's great designs in the world; they go on in one kingdom as well as another.

(4.) In that they are all ordered to produce that great end, God's glory; not any wheel but is productive of it.

"As if a wheel had been in the midst of a wheel." Some think there were in every wheel four semi-circles, or half-wheels, which appeared as a wheel in the midst of a wheel; but we find no warrant for that: the text speaks of a wheel in a wheel; it may be transverse, one crossing and cutting another; it may be comprehensive, as one orb in another.

Obs. 1. That the wheels in all places are alike, they are not the same, but they are alike. Such is man's nature, that it is not long contented with its condition, but thinks that all things move better elsewhere than at home; and hereupon many have made trial of foreign nations, remote parts of the world, and found the wheels there like the wheels in their own country, full of changes and intricacies: so they were in Ezekiel's days, so they will be in our days; so they were in Babylon, in Zion, so they are in England, and will be. We should learn to make the best of our condition; if the wheels be alike in changes and perplexities, then they are alike in furthering God's designs, and producing God's glory, and this they may do as strongly and speedily at home as they do abroad.

Obs. 2. Man is not able to judge of God's works and ways in his administration of the world. They are so intricate and perplexed, that Ezekiel knew not what to make of them; he saw as it were a wheel in the midst of a wheel, one wheel entangled in another. The acts of Providence at this day in churches and states are so various and dubious, that created abilities cannot comprehend God's intentions. It is said, Zech. xiv. 6. "In that day the light shall not be clear nor dark;" men shall be puzzled, not knowing what to judge. This day is come upon us; can you tell what to judge of the wheels and their motions amongst us? they are much entangled; we have cross motions from without, and from within. Is there any great or public business in the kingdom, but is perplexed, and the issue of it uncertain? our counsels are entangled, our military affairs at sea and land, our city and domestic businesses, are not without wheels in them.

Obs. 3. There is a coherence of the second causes and motions which are from them, they are knit and linked together. Our prophet saw a "wheel in the midst of a wheel," one change follows upon another, and there is a concatenation of causes and their operations. The cherubims were by the wheels, and wheels in the wheels. Satan, Chaldeans, Sabeans, the winds, and humours in Job's body, did all conspire to humble and afflict him; after these, his three friends tread in the same path, and add to his affliction. Night and day, winter and summer, have not a nearer coherence than the wheels. They so run among us, that we are necessitated to sit in council, and counsel begets actions, actions make alterations, alterations make strange impressions in men's spirits. It is easy to see the puzzling intricacies of the wheels, how crossly, perversely things move every where, but the coherence and harmonious part of them is not so quickly discerned; the lines in a globe, the ropes in a ship, cross one another, which every eye seeth, but their harmony and use is not so discernible. The bees, when they swarm without and work within, make a thousand cross motions, and yet there is sweet harmony in their commonwealth.

The 11th verse, which speaks of their motion, agrees in part with ver. 17, of the first chapter, where it is said, "when they went, they went upon their four sides," and so the words are here; "and they turned not when they went," here it is, "they turned not as they went;" and it is twice so; then here is an addition which is not there, "but to the place whither the head looked they followed it."

The meaning of the words is, that they went to those parts of the world which were upon their sides, and their motions in those ways were like and uniform, none went backward when others went forward.

"Whither the head looked." What is intended by the word "head" we must inquire. The Hebrew is ראש Some render it, the first, and so make the sense this, whither the first cherub went, thither went all the rest; but the text will not indulge this interpretation, for it is said, "they went upon their four sides;" that is, into the several ways their sides were towards, and so could not follow one another. Others understand by "head" the cherub designed to each wheel; as ver. 9, the four wheels were by the cherubims, "one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub," so that every wheel had his head, that is, his cherub; and whither that head looked, thither went that wheel. But we may ascend somewhat higher, and make the head, either he who sat in the throne and spake to the man clothed with linen, or the Spirit who guided the motions both in the living creatures and the wheels: chap. i. 12, 20, "Whither the spirit was to go, they went;" here the Spirit was הראש the head or first mover, and I conceive there is no danger in putting it higher than the cherubims.

Obs. 1. The motions of all inferior things are directed by a superior head which is over them; they move not when and whither they list, but as their head will have them, be the head the cherubims, the Spirit, or Jehovah. It is the head regulates and orders them, they cannot move of themselves, they go whither the head looks, whither the Spirit will have them go, and when the Lord commands. The body of man goes that way, and then, when the head will have it; and so it is with all wheels, all creatures, their motions are as the Lord will have them. If angels move the wheels, the Spirit and the Lord move the angels, and they cannot but make such motions and commotions in the world; if there be great winds, tempests, wars, bitter divisions, falsehood and treachery, plundering, burning, oppression, &c. the wheels move that way their head looks, and follow their head, a superior guide leads them; if they break some, raise others, if their motions are swift, dangerous, bloody, they are moved by one which is over them.

Obs. 2. That the wheels are constant in, and intent to, their motions appointed. They turn not as they go, they keep on their way; and it is twice mentioned, "they turned not as they went," they followed their head, "they turned not as they went." Which double mentioning of their not turning sets out their intentness upon their way and work, and that we should take special notice of it, because we think the wheels may move otherwise and other ways: but they cannot, the Lord sits in the chariot commanding the wheels, what way, and how to move; the Spirit is in them, and carries them on, the cherubims are by, and help forward the motions; so that the wheels must oppose the angels, and God himself, if they move otherwise than they do: they cannot stop their motions, much less turn their motions.

The 12th verse tells you of their eyesness, body, backs, hands, wings, wheels.

"Body." In the Hebrew it is, flesh. Vulg. corpus eorum. Some expound all said here of the wheels, both Jerom and others: by body or flesh they understand the bulk of the wheels; by backs, the rings about the wheels; so they are called, chap. i. 18, and the Hebrew word גבתי is, backs; by hand and wings they mean the spokes of the wheels, which extend themselves like hands and feathers from the navestock to the circumference. By the wheel some intend the globe or navestock in the midst, in which is the axletree; others, the whole chariot, and the only reason I find given is this, he had spoken immediately before of the wheels, and after in this verse is mention of them. And why the cherubims should be brought in here, seemeth not so reasonable; but it is not so harsh as to expound flesh, hands, and wings of the wheels; and we know that he had spoken not long before of the cherubims, ver. 9: and if head refer to the cherubims, as some make it, then they are spoken of in the 11th verse, immediately before this: and if because eyes were given to the wheels in chap. i. and not to the cherubims, therefore here they must be confined to the wheels; upon the same ground, their hands and wings, because they are given to the cherubims in chap. i. and not to the wheels, must here be confined to the cherubims. I do therefore fall in with them who refer body, backs, hands, wings unto the cherubims, which in these visions do more properly belong to the cherubims than to the wheels.

"Full of eyes round about." Here is a difference from that in chap. i. 18. It is said there the rings were full of eyes; here, that all, even wheels and cherubims, were full of eyes, and he that sat in the throne, even the Lord, he is full of eyes.

Obs. 1. That the motions of causes and creatures here below, are not casual or disorderly. The wheels and cherubims are full of eyes, they see and know their way, the work they have to do, the place they are to go unto: the eye of Providence is in every creature and every motion. Things appear to us very casual and disorderly; but there are eyes in the wheels, no motion of them is injudicious or out of course. If these eyes were blind, sleepy, vitiated, or shut, then there would be strange motions, just ground of complaint; but the eyes of Providence are ever open, they slumber not, they are not corrupted with any vicious humours, they see clearly and distinctly; and in whatever they are, as they are in all wheels, public or private, little or great, they make the motions judicious and orderly. When things fall out contrary, or beside our expectations, you say they are mischances; but you are mistaken: in sea or land affairs, in martial, magisterial, or ministerial, yea domestic affairs, whatever falls out is an act of Providence; surprising or sinking of ships, disappointment of counsels, defeating of armies, escape of prisoners, interception of letters, firing of towns, drownings, self-murderings, divisions of brethren, clandestine marriages, abortions, divorces, the eyes of Providence are in them all, and Heaven's intentions are accomplished in them.

Obs. 2. There is much glory and beauty in the works of Divine Providence. All the wheels and cherubims are full of eyes; the wheels have eyes round about, not in one place, but in every place: the cherubims, their bodies, backs, hands, and wings are full of eyes; and, Rev. iv. 8, they are full of eyes within, they are inwardly and outwardly glorious, beautiful. Man's eyes add not so much beauty and glory to his face, as these eyes do to the works of God in the world. The peacock's train, which is full of eyes, how beautiful and glorious is it! yet far short of the beauty and glory which is in God's government of the world. When the queen of Sheba saw so much wisdom in a man, so much glory and beauty in the order of his house, she admired, and had no spirit left in her, 1 Kings x. 4, 5. And could we see the wisdom which is in God, the glory and beauty which is in his ordering the wheels, we would be so far from complaining of any wheel's motion, that we would admire every wheel, the order and motion of it; but oh how blind are we, who hardly have an eye to see any of these eyes! David's eye was open and observant in the 104th Psalm, where he declares and delights himself in the wonderful providence of God ordering all things; and hear what he saith, ver. 31, "The glory of the Lord shall endure for ever:" he saw glory in them. There is glory in all the works of Providence, and such glory as abides for ever to all generations: there is glory now in them, as well as in David's days; there were changes, breaches, troubles then, as you may see, ver. 29, yet they hindered not, but rather added to the glory of providential works; and so do our changes, breaches, differences. When a man is on a high hill, there are many hedges, ditches, and separations of one piece of land from another: there are low shrubs and higher trees, here a hill and there a river; yet all contribute something to make a beautiful and glorious prospect to the eye: and so it is in the works of Providence. If we were lifted up by the Spirit, to view the wheels and their motions, we should find that all those things that seem grievous to us, our wars, divisions, taxes, burdens, and such like, do contribute much towards a glorious prospect.

Ver. 13. As for the wheels, it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel.

This verse is an expository verse, and gives light to the vision of the wheels, yet it hath need of exposition itself. In the words you have,

I. One crying, which is implied; "It was cried."

II. The cry itself; "O wheel."

III. Unto whom or what the cry was made; it was unto the wheels.

IV. In whose presence this cry was; in Ezekiel's, "in my hearing."

Who cried is not set down: some think one of the cherubims. That cherub which stretched out his hand, and reached the fire to the man clothed in linen, he cried, "O wheel," and commanded it to hasten to the destruction of Jerusalem. But that any cherubim should cry out so, unless he had command from above, is not probable, and the text affords us no encouragement so to conceive. Others therefore affirm it was the Lord, who sat in the throne, who commanded the man clothed in linen to take fire, he cried unto the wheel, and his cry was,

"O wheel." The Hebrew is, היכלי Hic orbis: this name doth the Lord give to the wheels, to instruct the prophet, and us by him, what he meant by the wheels, viz. the world and motions in it. The Vulgate renders the word volubiles, and so makes it an adjective, agreeing with the substantive, wheels, rotas istas, vocabit volubiles; this will hold in the Latin, but not in the Hebrew, for it is לואינים להם laophannim קראו ה' laophannim is plural, and Haggalgal is singular, a substantive, not an adjective, and is set down by way of distinction and demonstration; thus, As for these wheels, would you know what they are, it was cried in mine ears, Haggalgal, their name is, This world; 1 the Lord call them so. And here you may observe how the Spirit of God leaves the word ophannim, by which only he expressed the wheels in chap. i. and here also till now, and takes another word, Haggalgal. Ophannim is a more common and doubtful word, Haggalgal more distinct and certain: and so the prophet if it came to know what the vision of the wheels held out to him.

Why the Lord should cry out thus, "O wheel," is doubted: it was not the greatness, work, or use of it, which could beget admiration in God. It is thought somewhat is concealed which the Lord said: probably he gave out some command to the wheels, touching the motions and work of it; or rather it may be a complaint, O world! how unstable and changeable art thou!

"Unto them." He cried unto the wheels, "O wheel!" There were four wheels, ver. 9, and they went into those parts of the world which were upon their four sides, ver. 11; and these wheels represented the world, which is one, and therefore it is cried unto them, "O wheel!" O world!

"In my hearing." There was a voice, and such as came to Ezekiel's ears, and informed him in this difficult vision. He was an eye and ear-witness of it; his eye bred admiration in him, but his ear let in the information what it was.

Obs. 1. The Lord speaks to all creatures, and they are under his command, they hear his voice. We think angels and men only are capable of hearing God speak. There is not a creature God hath made, but hearkens to the voice of its Creator: he saith, "O wheel!" O world! and nothing in it acts or moves without him. If he speak, the wheels move what way he pleases: when there is thundering, lightning, earthquakes, storms, war, peace, famine, plenty, divisions, &c. God's voice hath been there. Psal. cxix. 91, the creatures are called God's servants: they hear and obey his voice as servants do their masters. Psal. cxlvii. 18, when there is ice and snow, "he sendeth out his word and melteth them:" they come not without his word, they melt not away without it; the creatures hear and obey. Mark iv. 37—41, when a great storm was at sea, and all in danger of their lives, Christ "rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still;" and those uncontrollable creatures heard his voice, "the wind ceased, and there was a great calm;" which made them relent, wonder, and say, "What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?"

Obs. 2. It is the Lord who hath his times to make known distinct things. In the 1st chapter the prophet had this vision, without any hint or light what was meant by it: here the Lord doth speak, and instruct the prophet something concerning the meaning thereof. He crieth in the ears of Ezekiel, "O wheel!" O world! and by this he came to understand part of God's mind in it. Samson had a time to unfold his riddle, Christ, his parables, and God, his difficult visions. Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar had dark, difficult dreams, and God by Joseph and Daniel interpreted them. Yea, Daniel had visions, and God sent Gabriel to him to make him to understand those visions. The Revelation hath many things beyond our reach, but God hath his times to expound the same unto us.

Ver. 14—17. And every one had four faces: the first face was the face of a cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle. And the cherubims were lifted up. This is the living creature that I saw by the river of Chebar. And when the cherubims went, the wheels went by them: and when the cherubims lifted up their wings to mount up from the earth, the same wheels also turned not from beside them. When they stood, these stood; and when they were lifted up, these lifted up themselves also: for the spirit of the living creature was in them.

In these verses, and those after the 18th, you have a description of the cherubims:

I. From their faces, ver. 14.

II. From their actions and motions, ver. 14, 15.

III. From the harmony between them and the wheels, ver. 16, 17.

Of these hath been spoken in the first chapter: what I find differing from the vision there, I shall most insist upon.

In ver. 14 it is said, "every one had four faces;" this is the same with that in chap. i. 6; and their faces agree with those, ver. 10, only one face is otherwise presented here than it is there; instead of the face of an ox, you have here the face of a cherub, which is set first in order, whereas the other was the third. This alteration hath occasioned diversity of opinions among interpreters. Some affirm, that anciently they pictured the cherubims with the face of an ox, and that there is no difference between their faces; but we find no proof of this, and it is as easily denied as affirmed. Others think the vision was so, that the prophet first saw an ox's face, which he knowing, calls the face of a cherub. Flavius Josephus affirms the face of a cherub to be the face of a bird, whose likeness God showed to Moses in mount Horeb, but was never seen of men. Some think, that further off this face appeared as the face of an ox, and nearer, as the face of a cherub. Some make this face of a cherub to be the face of a child, and the common form of picturing cherubims hath been like a young man or boy; therefore a rabbi saith, Cherub esse puerum elegantem, that a cherub is a beautiful boy, and many are of that judgment. Even Lavater makes the face of a cherub to be the face pueri alati, of a winged boy. Cherub sounds like reheb, a chariot, and the cherubims are called so, 1 Chron. xxviii. 18. And the angels are the Lord's chariots; Psal. lxxviii. 17, "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels;" Psal. xviii. 10, "He rode upon a cherub." But if we should grant that the face of a cherub is the face of a child, or young man, it would be the same with the face following, viz. the face of a man, whereas the vision holds out distinct faces. Some expositors render it the face of an ox, and their reason is this, כרוב by a metathesis of the letters is from רכב, which signifieth to ride, to be carried in a chariot; and so they will have the word cherub to note out agens currum: and it being proper to an ox or bullock to draw, they conceive here, by cherub, is meant an ox, by face of a cherub, the face of an ox. But I find no warrant given us to transpose letters in the words of sacred writ, and thereupon to make expositions. The text saith, it was the face of a cherub; and if the Spirit of God had meant the face of an ox, he could have as easily said here פני-עֶשֶׂר as פני כרוב I conceive therefore that here is some differing thing intended from the face of an ox. The former vision was in Babylon, near unto the river Chebar, this was in the temple; and that he might more fully understand the vision, that by the living creatures were meant the angels, here he seeth the face of a cherub, which had more glory and majesty in it than the other faces; and is therefore set first in order, as before man's face was set first, which was the principal: what manner of face it was is not expressed, only in general the face of a cherub; and doubtless some special thing is in it, not only the making known the living creatures he saw before to be angels, but to note they had a heavenly ministration, an ardent desire to do the will of God, and were restless till it were done.

One thing lieth in our way as an objection, and must be removed: it is this, ver. 15, 20, 22, it is said it was the living creature he saw before at Chebar, and that the likeness of their faces was the same; if this face of a cherub differs from the face of an ox, how is it the same living creature? how are the faces said to be like, or the same?

The Scripture calls that sometimes the same, which is near or like unto it, and tends to the same end; as 1 Cor. x. 3, 4, "The fathers did all eat the same spiritual meat, and drink the same spiritual drink." Manna was their meat, and water out of the rock was their drink; these differ from the bread and wine in the supper of the Lord; yet because they tended to the same end, and had some likeness, he calls them the same. So here, there was much likeness, and they tended to the same end which the former faces and living creatures did, and therefore he saith it was the living creature he saw before, and the faces the same; three differed not at all from those he saw before, only one, which made it not another creature, nor the faces other faces.

There are divers questions movable about this face of a cherub, as, why it is put off, and the face of the ox left out? whether the prophet had in this vision only the appearance of the face of a cherub, or of an ox also? why not some other face left out, rather than that of the ox? which are curious and needless. I shall pass them by; only one question I shall answer:

Quest. Why are they called cherubims rather than men, lions, eagles, seeing they had one face of a man, one of a lion, and one of an eagle, as well as of a cherub?

Answe. 1. Every one had four faces, and the face of a cherub was the chief, something divine and more excellent appeared in it than in the others, and denominations are a praestantiori.

2. It was God's Spirit directed our prophet to call them cherubims, whatever their faces were, ver. 20.

The 15th verse hath the cherubims' action, and the prophet's declaration of his judgment touching the cherub.

Their action is in these words, "were lifted up." The English is passive; but ויריבו is interpreted by Montanus and others actively, exaltaverunt se, they lift up themselves. If the English words be taken

As it is in the 16th verse, in this sense, "they were lifted up," namely, by their wings, it is in effect thus much, they lifted up themselves by their wings, and seeing their Lord going away, they would follow and attend him.

"This is the living creature." The singular number here is put for the plural, creature for creatures. These are the living creatures which I saw at, &c. This sets out the certainty of the vision: had not the prophet seen it again, he might have doubted whether such strange things had been real or not; but now seeing all again, he was assured of the reality of them, and therefore, ver. 20, he saith, "This is the living creature that I saw by the river of Chebar and I knew that they were the cherubims."

Obs. 1. To see and hear the same things again, is not damage, but advantage to the servants of God. Ezekiel seeth the same vision he saw before, the same wheels and same cherubims, and cometh thereby to more distinct knowledge of them, to fuller certainties of particulars. All things are not seen or understood at first, therefore a second sight and second hearing of the same thing may be needful. Man is apt to doubt, ready to mistake things, backward to practise; and therefore God gives in truths and visions double oft-times, that so he may help our weakness, prevent mistakes, provoke us to practise. You have the same truths oft in the Psalms, in the prophets, in the gospels, which serve to strengthen and comfort. Paul tells the Philippians, chap. iii. 1, that to write the same things, as it was not grievous to him, so it was safe for them. It is likely they affected variety and novelty, slighting wholesome and ordinary truths, a common disease of all times; when they had manna, they loathed it, they would have had change, and something new; but Paul intimates there was danger in that novellous humour, and therefore saith it was safer for the Philippians to hear the same things again and again, to hear them preached, to have them written. And Peter tells those he wrote to, that he would not be negligent to put them always in remembrance of those things they knew, 2 Pet. i. 12.

The 16th verse hath been spoken of, chap. i. 19—21; where the going, lifting up, and standing of the creatures and wheels, was handled. Here is a little difference from what is there, and that in two things:

The first is of the cherubims. There it is said, "when they were lifted up from the earth:" here it is, "the cherubims lifted up their wings to mount up from the earth," and so by their wings were lifted up.

The second difference is concerning the wheels. In chap. i. it is said, "they were lifted up over against them;" here it is, "the same wheels also turned not from beside them." It is the same thing in diverse phrases; when the cherubims were lifted up, the wheels that were against their sides were also lifted up, and turned not any way, but went along beside them, which way soever they went. The cherubims had their free motions, and did the will of God readily, and the wheels followed their dictate, and went no other way than they would have them.

Inferior causes are acted and led by the superior; when the cherubims went, the wheels went; when they were lifted up, these attended them. No creature moves here below without a guide.

The 17th verse, which you have in a manner word for word, chap. i. 21, shows there is a dependence and convenience of causes, one upon and with another; the motions and stations of inferior things, of all the wheels, depend upon the higher, viz. the angels; when they stand or move, so do these.

"The spirit of the living creature," Hebrew, the spirit of life, "was in them."

Obs. 1. The Spirit of God is in all creatures, and acts in and by them; it doth not only support all by divine virtue, but is present in all, sets all wheels a running, stops all at its pleasure, orders and moderates all their motions and operations. The Spirit of life was in the wheels, and in the cherubims. There is no public or private agent, rational or irrational creatures, used in the motions of the world, but the Spirit is in them all. The Spirit was at the creation of all, Gen. i. 2; Job xxvi. 13; and the Spirit is in the operations of all, 1 Cor. xii. 11. Whatever gifts men have, it is the Spirit works them, and works in and by them: and so in the other creatures, whatever virtues, qualities, instincts, dispositions, operations they have, the Spirit of life wrought them in them, and works by them. This may quiet our spirits; whatever is done in the world by the creatures, however the wheels move, they move not of themselves, but the Spirit which is in them moves them.

Obs. 2. The stands and motions of cherubims and wheels are neither disorderly nor unseasonable; they stop, they stir at the dictates of the Spirit of life which is in them, and that Spirit is a Spirit of wisdom, appointing nothing to be done disorderly or unseasonably. When great stops are made in public or more private businesses, when they seem to us to go backward, cross, to be untimely, it is the Spirit of life that is in and acteth by the second causes; and who may with safety blame the Spirit of God for stopping or turning the wheels. The times of the Spirit in all providential things are most seasonable, and act most orderly.

Obs. 3. We should not terminate our thoughts upon second causes, but look up to the supreme overruling Cause. Here the prophet is led up to the Spirit; he doth not look at the cherubims' and wheels' standing or moving only, but his eye is higher, it is upon the Spirit of life that was in them. We are apt to look at that instrument or cause which is next us, in present view, and there to terminate. This is a great evil, to eye the creature, and forget God: it is his Spirit that acts in the wheels, and if we take not notice of it, how can we be thankful when the creature is instrumentive of good to us, how patient when it is instrumentive of hurt to us? If the creature smite and damnify you, it is the Spirit of life in that creature which set it on work; and if it profit and please you, it was the same Spirit moved it to do so. Many are so blind that they see nothing of the Spirit in any wheel or in any motion.

Ver. 18, 19. Then the glory of the Lord departed from off the threshold of the house, and stood over the cherubims. And the cherubims lifted up their wings, and mounted up from the earth in my sight: when they went out, the wheels also were beside them, and every one stood at the door of the east gate of the Lord's house; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

These verses contain a further removal of the glory. In chap. ix. 3, there was one removal, from the cherub to the threshold. A second is in this chapter, ver. 4, where it is said, the glory went up, and stood over the threshold. A third in this verse; where we have,

1. From whence it departed, "from the threshold of the house."

11. Whither it went, it "stood over the cherubims." The Jews thought themselves safe; while the temple stood, God dwelt there, and would preserve it and the city from all evils, and all enemies; what could other nations do to them, being without God?

and what should they fear, seeing they had God shut up in their temple, and were persuaded that he would never leave them? This foolish conceit undid them, for they observed not the Lord to worship him purely, and only according to his will and rules given them; but defiled the temple with all abominations, and constrained the Lord to leave them; therefore saith the prophet, "Then the glory of the Lord departed from off the threshold." When he saw their vain confidence, notwithstanding all their pollutions, that they took no warning by his prophets, observed not his judiciary threatenings and proceedings, repented not of their evil ways, continued still the same, having told them of his departure from them, he begun it.

I have spoken before oft concerning the glory of the Lord, chap. viii. 4; ix. 3; and in the 4th verse of this 10th chapter; and therefore now shall not need to enlarge. Sanctius thinks that the glory had not left the cherubims, but only was hid from the eyes of the prophet by the cloud, and that he makes the departure of the glory from the cherub; but this is clouding of the text, which saith, "The glory of the Lord went up from the cherub, and stood over the threshold;" the cherubims were not at the threshold, but at the right side of the house, ver. 3; and here in this 18th verse, "The glory departed from off the threshold of the house, and stood over the cherubims."

In Isa. vi. 2, it is said, the seraphims there stood above the throne; and here, the glory and throne were over the cherubims. Some make these distinct visions, the one being of seraphims, the other of cherubims; they having six wings, these four, and then they being above, and the cherubims under, here is no opposition. Others think it the same vision; and then here is a difficulty, the seraphims are above, the cherubims under the throne of glory.

כסא ה' The words in Isaiah, "above it," by the Septuagint are turned κισσος αὐθρόν, in circuitu ejus, they compassed the throne about. Rabbi Musc. Kimehi hath it, near him, before his face: they were not above their Lord and Master, but seemed to stand above to the prophet's eye, who represents them as they appeared to him. Some render the Hebrew word juata, by or nigh; as Exod. xvi. 3, "When we sat by the flesh-pots," not above, or upon them; so Psal. xxiv. 2, "He hath founded the earth upon the seas;" it is a hard speech, nigh the seas is better; and Psal. cxxxvii. 1, "By the rivers of Babylon we sat down;" the Hebrew word is the same, juata, not supra, they sat, not upon, but by, them; so here, the seraphims were not above, but by, about the throne.

The glory departed from the threshold of the house, the threshold of the priests' court, to the door of the east gate, where the cherubims stood. The east gate was the gate of the court where the people met, the outward gate at which they came in, and prayed with their faces westward.

Obs. 1. How unwilling the Lord is to depart, and leave that people he hath dwelt amongst, and been engaged unto! He had taken in this people to be his, and now, though they had provoked him bitterly by their idolatry in his worship, and by oppression in the state, and he had great cause to have left them utterly at once, yet see how he goes away in a gradual manner, step by step; this was the third or fourth step he had taken. He was before removed to the side of the temple, and then from within the temple to the threshold, and now he steps to the east gate; expecting that upon every step they should have been afflicted, and used means to have kept the Lord from departing from them. He looked that they should have repented of their evil ways, purged their temple from false gods and worship, have executed justice, and showed mercy to the afflicted, and walked in his ways; and then he would not have left them.

Obs. 2. There is no visible church but may fall, and cease to be. Here was the only visible church in the world, and the glory departed from it, and quickly it became no church. The seven churches of Asia were famous visible churches, and is not their glory long since departed from them? No visible church but may cease its being; all the churches in Judea are dead and buried in obscurity; meetings of God's people may cease, ordinances, ministers, and administrations may all be taken away, and so the visibility of the church. I do not say visible saints shall all fail, but visible churches may; the glory may depart from them, the signs of his presence and grace may leave them. God is not tied to any place, to any people; but if they corrupt his worship, he may withdraw: he did depart from Jerusalem, from the temple, and they were unchurched.

Obs. 3. When the Lord goes from a people, then the protection and benefits they have by the angels go away. When the glory departed, then the cherubims mounted up from the earth; they would not stay to comfort, guide, protect that people which had driven away their Lord and Master; seeing he left them, they would leave them also. One evil followed another. When the sun is in apogæo, gone from us, we have short days and long nights, little light but much darkness; and when God departs, you have much night, and little day left, your comforts fade suddenly, and miseries come upon you swiftly. When God and his angels go from a church, the dragon and his angels get in; when men's inventions prevail, they are subject to all woes and miseries; Hos. ix. 12, "Woe to them when I depart from them." Let us take heed we cause not the glory to depart from us; then the angels that are present at our solemn and public meetings will leave us, they will not pitch their tents about us any longer; Jer. vi. 7, 8, "As a fountain casteth out her waters, so she casteth out her wickedness: violence and spoil is heard in her; before me continually is grief and wounds. Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee, lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited." Let us be instructed to cease from wickedness, violence, spoil, else God will depart from us, angels leave us, and both be against us.

Obs. 4. God would have men take notice of his departure. The cherubims stood at the door of the east gate, and there the glory stood over them; that gate was so seated in mount Zion, that they might see the entrance by it from most parts of the city, and here the glory now stood; it was come forth from the temple, and now exposed to public view, that they might inquire what was the matter, use all means to recover the glory which was going.

Ver. 20—22. This is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river of Chebar; and I knew that they were the cherubims. Every one had four faces apiece, and every one four wings; and the likeness of the hands of a man was under their wings. And the likeness of their faces was the same faces which I saw by the river of Chebar, their appearances and themselves: they went every one straight forward.

For the 20th verse, you have heard of it in the 15th. He called them living creatures in the 1st chapter, not knowing them so fully at first view as afterwards. Now beholding them in the temple, he had there more distinct and clear knowledge of them, he knew what they were, viz. cherubims, glorious creatures, of great wisdom, strength, and agility, subservient unto the Lord, and therefore are said to be "under the God of Israel." He hath cherubims and seraphims at his command; be creatures what they will, they are under God,

"The God of Israel." Because he appeared to Jacob, changed his name to Israel, whence his posterity were called Israelites, and God having made a covenant with him and his seed, Gen. xxviii. and xxxvii. hence he was called the God of Israel.

Some have thought here were not four living creatures, but one, which in divers respects represented those four. By face they understand not the countenance, but any figure, form, aspect, or habit of the body, and thus they make it out: the creature had the face of a man, in regard of his mouth, hands, thighs, and straight body; he had the face of a lion, in respect of his neck, shoulders, and breast; of an eagle, in respect of his wings; and of an ox, in respect of his cloven hoofs; but why the word face should be so interpreted, there is no reason: besides, ver. 9, it is said, by each cherub there was a wheel, noting they were several creatures, not one; and in this 20th verse, the prophet saith, he knew they were the cherubims, not one cherub; and, ver. 7, he distinguished that cherub from the rest, which took fire and put into the hands of Christ; and in ver. 21 it is said, every one had four faces and four wings, therefore this could not be one living creature. It is called the living creature, per calligen numeri, the singular number is put for the plural.

"Every one had four faces apiece." The Hebrew is, four, four faces to one, which repetition expresses the force of the cardinal number among the Hebrews; when that number is repeated, it stands for the ordinal or distributive, which they want. It notes thus much, there were four faces to each of them.

Ver. 22. Of this verse was spoken in the 1st chapter, and thither I refer the reader.

CHAPTER XI.

Ver. 1—3. Moreover the spirit lifted me up, and brought me unto the east gate of the Lord's house, which looketh eastward: and behold at the door of the gate five and twenty men; among whom I saw Jaazaniah the son of Azur, and Pelatiah the son of Benaiah, princes of the people. Then said he unto me, Son of man, these are the men that devise mischief, and give wicked counsel in this city: which say, It is not near; let us build houses: this city is the caldron, and we be the flesh.

EZEKIEL, as you have heard, was in a vision at Jerusalem, chap. viii. 3; the 9th and 10th chapters were parts of that vision, and so also is this chapter. In it you have two parts:

1. A further addition to the vision our prophet had, to the 24th verse.

II. The conclusion of the vision, from the beginning of the 24th verse to the end.

In the first part you have these things:

1. A manifestation unto Ezekiel of those who gave ill counsel, and seduced the people, in the three first verses.

2. Denunciation of judgment against those evil counsellors and seducers, from the 3rd verse to the 13th, wherein the death of one of the chief of them is laid down.

3. The prophet's complaint, ver. 13.

4. The Lord's answer to his complaint, ver. 14, 15.

5. Comfort for the captives, from ver. 15 to 22.

6. The departure of the glory out of the city, ver. 22, 23.

In the verses read we have the manifestation of the ill counsellors and seducers to our prophet, where these several particulars fall into consideration:

I. The efficient cause showing the prophet these ill counsellors, "the spirit."

II. The place where he saw them, at "the east gate," &c.

III. The number of these men, "five and twenty."

IV. The names of two of them, described also from their parents, "Jaazaniah," &c. and "Pelatiah," &c.

V. Their dignity, "princes of the people:" and all these in the 1st verse.

VI. The complaint made against them, which is set down,

1. In general, ver. 2.

2. Specially, ver. 3.

"The spirit lifted me up." It pleased the Spirit of God to take Ezekiel and carry him to Jerusalem, and there to remove him from place to place; he did nothing of his own head, but as the Spirit ordered him. The Spirit moved the wheels, the living creatures, and our prophet also; it was not an angel nor his own spirit moved him, but the Spirit of God.

"And brought me unto the east gate of the Lord's house, which looketh eastward." The Hebrew is קריית פולגס renders it ad ortum solis; Piscator, orientalem ventum versus; towards the sun-rising, saith one, towards the east wind, saith the other. Sanctius thinks this gate was in the inner court, and therefore it is called "the gate of the Lord's house" to which the prophet was brought; not as being out of the temple, but removed from another place thither. But our prophet was in the inner court before, chap. viii. 16, and we find not that he was removed from that place till now. It is not evident therefore that this east gate should be in the inner court; and other gates were called the gates of the Lord's house; chap. viii. 14, the north gate was called "the gate of the Lord's house;" that is therefore no argument to prove it to be in the inner court. Others therefore more judiciously conceive, that our prophet having seen the slaughter of all in the temple by the six men, chap. ix. and heard the sentence of burning the city, by scattering of coals, chap. x. and that in the inner court; he was now removed out of the temple to the east gate of the outward court, whither the glory was gone, chap. x. 19. This gate was famous, and very obvious to view eastward, north-east, and south-east; here stood the glory of the Lord now, here were the cherubims under the glory, here were the wheels under the cherubims, and hither was the prophet brought; there he seeing God going away, might shortly declare the mind of God against the Jews at Jerusalem.

"Behold at the door of the gate five and twenty men." Here is the number of them. In chap. viii. 16, were twenty-five men mentioned, and the query is, whether these be the same. Some affirm they were the same, but I incline to think otherwise;

1. Because our prophet had seen them formerly; and why should he see them again?

2. They were in the temple, worshipping the sun with their faces toward the east, and these were out of the temple at the east gate: and if it be said they might return from their idolatrous sun-worship within to this eastern gate where the prophet now saw them, we must remember that the prophet saw those in the sanctuary slain; chap. ix. 6, the destroying angels were to begin at the sanctuary, and they began at the ancient men which were before the house; and though they were but visionally slain, yet that was sufficient to keep them from being presented to the prophet's view the second time.

The ground for their opinion is this: it is conceived by some of the learned, that the prophet had the vision of this 11th chapter before the 9th and 10th; and therefore they read the first verse thus, The spirit had lifted me up, and had brought me; but this is not sufficient to persuade us to be of that judgment; for,

(1.) In the vision is set out to the prophet the order of God's departure from them. Chap. viii. 4, "The glory of the God of Israel was there;" chap. ix. 3, it went "to the threshold of the house;" chap. x. 4, it went up "over the threshold;" then, ver. 19, it departed to "the east gate;" after this it went to the midst of the city, and from thence to the mountain out of the city, chap. xi. 23. So that the gradual departure of the glory doth evince that this chapter was not before the 9th and 10th, but following, as in order it lies.

(2.) The conclusion of the vision confutes that opinion; for, ver. 24, 25, it is said that the vision went up from him, that he was carried into Chaldea, and that he spake to the captives what he had seen. If this chapter were to succeed the 8th, and precede the 9th and 10th, he had been excluded from a great part of the vision, and in Chaldea before those parts had been given in to him.

These twenty-five men were principal men; and Pradus informs us from the Jewish writings, that Jerusalem had twenty-four divisions or wards, which were governed by twenty-four choice men, who are in the verse called "princes of the people:" they, with the governor of the city, who is thought to be a prince of the house of Judah, and for the king, considered of the city and state affairs; and these twenty-five were at the east gate. The magistrates and governors were wont to sit in the gates, and hear causes, and consult of their weighty affairs; Jer. xxvi. 10, "When the princes of Judah heard these things, then they came up from the king's house unto the house of the Lord, and sat down in the entry of the new gate of the Lord's house;" and there they heard the accusation of Jeremiah.

Others think they were principal men chosen out of the two remaining tribes, twelve out of each, and a president amongst them, who was ruler of the city.

"Jaazaniah." This Jaazaniah differs from him in chap. viii. 11, who was the son of Shaphan, and this was the son of Azur; whether it was that Azur mentioned Jer. xxviii. 1, is not known; that Azur was a prophet, and if a true one, a helper, as his name signifies.

"Pelatiah the son of Benaiah." The French hath it, Pheltias fils de Benaias: the Tigurine reads it, Pelatiahn the son of Benaiahn, most near the Hebrew. This Benaiah might be him mentioned in 2 Chron. xxxi. 13, who was one of the overseers for the things dedicated to the house of the Lord; and so, according to his name, was a builder of the Lord's. It is like our prophet knew not any of the rest, and therefore mentions these only; and this last he names, because presently he was made an example of the just judgment of God, ver. 13.

"Princes of the people." That is, chief rulers: Numb. vii. 2, "The princes of Israel, heads of the house of their fathers, who were the princes of the tribes, and were over them that were numbered."

And this was a great honour, to be a prince of the people: when God will honour a man in this life, he is said to "set him with princes, even with the princes of his people," Psal. exxiii. 8.

Ver. 2. "These are the men that devise mischief." Here begins the complaint against these men; in the first part of it they devise mischief; and secondly, they give ill counsel.

"Devise mischief." The Hebrew word עָוָה is not simply to think, but excogitare, to set the head and heart on work to find out something; it carries the intention of the mind with it. Jer. xviii. 18, "Come, let us devise devices against Jeremiah." It is the same Hebrew word; and they would set themselves wholly, fully to devise devices, they would be solicitous in it, and to find out some way to mischief Jeremiah. So the word is used, Ezek. xxxviii. 10, "Thou shalt think an evil thought:" the other translation hath it, evil thoughts: it is spoken of Gog, who should have many evil thoughts against the people of God, and be set upon devising evil. It notes intention and solicitousness; 1 Cor. vii. 32, μεροπῶν, careth for; the Vulgate hath it, solicitus est, and Cyprian, cogitat, to think of a thing with care, and with intention: this is the word here.

"Mischief." Junius hath it, vanity; the Septuagint hath it, μάταια, vain things; the Vulgate, iniquity; and so the French, qui present iniquité: so the Tigurine, qui cogitant iniquitatem; Castalio, qui nefas cogitant. The Hebrew is רָע which includes all these, and is well rendered "mischief," which is such evil as tends to the ruin and destruction of a state or church: such was the device of Haman against the Jews.

"And give wicked counsel." They do not only devise mischief, but give it out being devised; the Hebrew runs thus, and counselling ill counsel.

Ver. 3. "Which say, It is not near; let us build houses." These words are variously rendered and interpreted. Some expound them thus, many are carried into captivity, the wrath of God is overcast, not near, let us therefore build houses. The Vulgate is, Nonne dudum edificatæ sunt domus? Were not houses built long since? and their meaning is this; Why are you troubled about the ruin of the city, as if it should suddenly be, as Jeremiah that false prophet hath said? the city is so far from being ruined, that you see long since it hath been increased, the old houses stand, new have been added, and Jeremiah is proved a liar; therefore fear not, no such evil shall come upon us; Nebuchadnezzar destroyed not the houses heretofore, and can he do it now? But this Vulgate translation suits not with the text.

The Tigurine translation is, Non est in propinquo contritio, edificemus igitur domus: and so Vatablus, only igitur he leaves out; Contrition, destruction is not near, let us therefore build houses: this interpretation we condemn not. Montanus goeth that way, and adds contritio in the margin; Nonne noviter edificatæ sunt domus? Are not houses lately or newly built?

The Septuagint has it ὅτι πρόφατος ἀκούσαντες τὰς αἰτιάσεις.

The Hebrew is, לֹא בְקִרְבֹּן בְּנֵי אֲדָמָה it is not near to build houses; here is an infinitive put for an imperative, to build, for let us build, or let houses be built.

"It is not near." What is not near? the desolation threatened, that they said was not near. Jeremiah had told them of the Lord's wrath, and that a sore captivity was at hand; and because God had forbade him to marry and beget children, because they should be destroyed, as you have it, Jer. xvi. 2—4, "Thou shalt not take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons or daughters in this place. For thus saith the Lord concerning the sons and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land; They shall die of grievous deaths; they shall not be lamented; neither shall they be buried; but they shall be as dung upon the face of the earth: and they shall be consumed by the sword, and by famine; and their carcases shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth." These sad tidings had Jeremiah made known as being given not only for the captives, but others; and hereupon he wrote to the captives in Babylon, that they should build houses, plant gardens, take wives to themselves, and sons, that they might increase, and not diminish, as they were like to do at Jerusalem, Jer. xxix. 5, 6. Because of these things the people were full of fears, refused to build and plant: hereupon these princes of the people counselled things contrary to God and the prophet, and said, "It is not near;" what Jeremiah threatens, or any other prophet, those things they speak of are far off; according to that in Ezek. xii. 22, "The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth;" and ver. 27, "He prophesieth of the times that are afar off;" therefore fall a building, plant, multiply, and increase, there is no such danger as you dream of.

Some carry it thus, houses are not to be built in nearness to the city; and so make it military counsel, as if these princes would not have any suburbs, or neighbouring villages, which might advantage the enemy, if he should come and take them, and so shut up the city: therefore they conceive these words import thus much, houses are not to be built near; that is, they are to be pulled down, and the rubbish removed.

"This city is the caldron, and we be the flesh." These words have their difficulty in them. If you take the last sense of the former words, then you may understand these thus: We are threatened to be boiled in the siege of this city by the Chaldeans, as flesh is boiled in a caldron; but we will take a course to prevent that; we will pull down all the houses without the walls of the city, and near hand, so that the enemy shall not come near us, and then we shall see what truth is in it, that this city is the caldron, and we the flesh. Had they such an opportunity to sit down in the houses, they would besiege us straitly, press us with famine, be as a fire to this city, and consume us to nothing.

Others think these words spoken scoffingly against Jeremiah, who, chap. i. 13, had said, "I see a seething pot;" it is the same word which is here כִּיבֵר and here it is הַכִּיבֵר the caldron, the seething pot. Jeremiah had prophesied that the enemy should come from the north, and besiege them in the city; that they should be as flesh in a caldron, boiled with the Chaldean fire till they were consumed: this they mock at; "This city is the caldron, and we be the flesh," saith that false and lying prophet; for you see we are as before, we need not fear Chaldeans.

A caldron, 1. Is made of strong materials, as brass, or the like. 2. It will endure the fire many years before it be consumed. 3. It contains the flesh put into it, and that is not to be taken out till it be thoroughly boiled. Hence upon these grounds they scoffed at Jeremiah: If the city be the caldron, it is a strong city, and hath brazen walls, it will endure the fire. Let the Chaldeans come as thou sayest, if we be a caldron, their fire will not melt us; and though they do boil us, yet we shall not be taken out of this caldron to be eaten before we are thoroughly boiled, till old age and death itself take us out of it. Thus did these princes profane that prophesy, and bred security in the hearts of the people, and fed them with hopes of liberty and long life. Or thus you may take it, If this city be the caldron, and we the flesh, we will rather be boiled in it, than be destroyed by the sword; we will rather die in the fire, be boiled to death, than fall into the hands of our enemies; we will rather die here, than yield ourselves into their hands, be slain out of the city, or be carried into Babylon; but we fear no such thing. Thus these princes eluded the prophetic threats, hardened the people in their ill ways, and ripened them for destruction.

Obs. 1. Our prophet was acted in these visions by the Spirit; sometimes it entered into him, sometimes it fell upon him, and sometimes it lifted him up; chap. ii. 2; iii. 24, "The spirit entered into me;" chap. i. 3; viii. 1, "The hand of the Lord" (that is, the Spirit) "came upon me, fell upon me;" and chap. iii. 12, "The spirit took me up;" and here, "The spirit lifted me up." The Spirit had much to do with our prophet, and so with all the prophets: they were acted by the Spirit in all their visions and prophecies, they were lifted up above themselves, and out of themselves, when they were to have cognizance of divine things.

Obs. 2. The Spirit is God, it knows men and their ways, it discovered them unto the prophet. Here the Spirit took notice of these men, what devices they had in their heads, what counsel they gave, and acquainted the prophet with them; so before in chap. viii. the Spirit showed him the image of jealousy, the seventy men that were offering incense to the idols, the women that wept for Tammuz, the twenty-five men that worshipped the sun, and put the branch to their nose. As it is said of the sun, Psal. xix. 6, "there is nothing hid from the heat thereof;" so much more of the Spirit, there is nothing hid from his knowledge: 1 Cor. ii. 10, "The Spirit searcheth all things;" all in heaven, and all in earth, all things in the closets, in the heart: Psal. cxxxix. 7, "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit." David could not hide himself from the sight and presence of God's Spirit, neither can we. Let us look well therefore unto our ways, the Spirit may make them known to the prophets and servants of God.

Obs. 3. That men chief in dignity and place are for the most part corrupt. Here were the twenty-five who bare the sway in the city, and had great power, all confederate in wickedness. Isa. i. 10, he calls their rulers "rulers of Sodom," because of their extreme wickedness; and he excepts none, they were generally such. So Neh. xiii. 11, "I contended with the rulers, and said, Why is the house of God forsaken?" they kept away the portions of the Levites, and therefore they left the house of God: so ver. 17, the nobles of Judah they profaned the sabbath day, and brought wrath upon Israel. 2 Chron. xxiv. 17, 18, the princes of Judah were all idolatrous, and led Joash into idolatrous practices, but they were quickly after all slain for it, ver. 23. John vii. 48, "Have any of the rulers believed on him?" they were so wicked, even all of them, that they could make their boast, "Have any of them believed on him?" No, no, they are not for Christ and his ways. Jer. v. 5, "I will get me unto the great men, and will speak unto them; for they have known the way of the Lord, and the judgment of their God: but these have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds." The prophet thought the great ones, who had great obligations upon them to honour God, who knew what pertained to worship and justice, that they would hearken to him; but they cast off all respect, subjection, and obedience to the law of God; they followed their own wills, lusts, humours; they regarded neither equity nor honesty; they were far worse than the poorer sort, whom the prophet had tried also. Luke mentions but one judge, and he was an unjust one. Are not too many of the great ones among us corrupt, loose, and enemies to Christ and his kingdom?

Obs. 4. It is matter of mourning when those who are set over others to be punishers of the wicked, countenancers of the godly, examples of piety and virtue, and should seek the good of the public, prove clean otherwise, and are actors and patrons of wickedness. The Spirit here is affected with it, and affects the prophet: Son of man, these are the men that do so: these pervert, obstruct justice, these encourage evil-doers, these sadden the hearts of the godly, these hinder good designs; these are the men that seek themselves, that cry, Give, give, and love to have it so; these are the men that pretend the good of the state and people, but are the ruin of both. This was matter of grief to heaven and earth. Isa. i. 10, when the prophet had termed them "rulers of Sodom," he complains, ver. 23, saying, "Thy princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves: every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards; they judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them:" they sought themselves, not the good of particulars, or the public, and this troubled the prophet; and not only him, but the Lord also; for it follows in the next verse, "Therefore saith the Lord, the Lord of hosts, the mighty One of Israel, Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies." God had been wearied and grieved with them a long time, and though they were many, and mighty, yet he was the Lord of hosts, &c. This argument did affect God much, and he was oft upon it: Isa. iii. 12, "As for my people, children are their oppressors, and women rule over them. O my people, they which lead thee cause thee to err, and destroy the way of thy paths;" they destroyed justice and religion.

Obs. 5. There will never be wanting in any place men to devise mischief. In Jerusalem there were men whose hearts, heads, and tongues were at work. In chap. viii. he tells you of the seventy ancients, and of the twenty-five, who had all devised and were practising mischief. In Shushan was not wanting a Haman to devise mischief against the Jews, Esth. viii. 3. Pharaoh and his courtiers devised mischief against the Jews, Exod. i. There were those who devised to take away David's life, Psal. xxxi. 13. "They imagined a mischievous device," Psal. xxi. 11. No city, no kingdom was ever free from men of deceitful, wicked, and mischievous devices, and no time ever abounded more with such men, and such devices, than our times; and if I should say, no place more than this kingdom, I should not much fail. Who can reckon up the mischievous devices which have been against the estates, laws, liberties, religion, and consciences of the people of this kingdom? Ship-money was a cunning device to dry up their estates; prerogative was cried up to bring the laws and liberties of the subject down; innovations and new canons were prelatial devices to rid you of your religion and consciences, to make way for popery. What wicked devices have been against the parliament, against this city, against this kingdom! whatever hath been devised for the good of all, hath met with anti-cross devices. There are those who devise as strongly and speedily to ruin us, as any do to relieve us. The device against Ireland was a bloody and mischievous device, and bloody devices are in men's heads against us; but here is the comfort, Job v. 12, "God disappointeth the devices of the crafty, so that their hands cannot perform their enterprise." They devise to undo all, but they cannot. Micah ii. 1, "Woe to them that devise iniquity." God hath threatened, and though they cannot accomplish their devices, yet he will accomplish his threats. Prov. xii. 2, "A man of wicked devices will be condemn'd." Many of wicked devices have been amongst us, and hath not the Lord condemned them?

Dan. vi 7, all the presidents of the kingdom, governors, counsellors, captains, devised a plot against Daniel.

Obs. 6. Men in place being evil, they make others evil; they do not only devise mischief, but communicate mischief, they give and obtrude ill counsel upon others. These that were in place, especially Jaazaniah and Pelatiah the princes, they gave out ill counsel to the people. They and such men do the greatest hurt; their power, honour, estates, examples, are prevalent with the people, and when they counsel corruptly, their counsel takes and infects a multitude quickly. Jeroboam tells the people it was too much for them to go up to Jerusalem, that was a long journey, would be very chargeable, and might prove dangerous; therefore he had taken a better course for them, he had made calves, set them up for gods at Dan and Bethel, and now they should need to go no further for to worship: this counsel took. Balak being advised by Balaam, counsels the Midianitish women to entice the Israelites to folly, which took; and they drew them both to whoredom and idolatry, Numb. xxv. 1, 2, with chap. xxxi. 16. Ill counsel from great ones doth great mischief: Nah. i. 11, "There is one come out of thee, that imagineth evil against the Lord, a wicked counsellor;" it is spoken of Nineveh concerning Sennacherib. We have many come out of us that are wicked counsellors, and prevail with the people to do what they counsel. Did not prelates, judges, nobles, princes, lately give ill counsels, and were not the people too forward to hearken? All counsels that seem good are not always safe; men should therefore examine others' counsels, whether they be such as agree with the word of God, are really for the good of church or state, before they approve or entertain them.

Take heed what counsels you take from great ones that are corrupt; this hath endangered cities, churches, whole kingdoms. Take counsel of the great God, who dasheth all wicked counsels, and establisheth his own; Psal. xxxiii. 10, 11, he brings the counsels of men to nought, but the counsel of God endures for ever.

Obs. 7. That great ones are greatly secure, they put the evil day far from them; "It is not near." They are lavish to entertain thoughts that may disquiet their hearts, or shake their foundations. Honours, pleasures, secular affairs take them up so, that they fear not changes, they consider not the evil day, they are as quiet as men that are in covenant one with another. Isa. xxviii. 14, 15, those who ruled the people, they said, "We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us." The great ones were covenanters, such as ruled the city: but with whom did they covenant? with death and hell, and now feared not any threatenings of them by the prophets. Although the prophets threatened death and hell to them, it was as nothing, they feared not. Some think they, being idolatrous, sacrificed to Pluto, fatum Atropos, those gods they conceived had power over death and hell, and so had them their friends, and lived without fear. Amos vi. 3, he tells you of some that "put far away the evil day;" but who were they? men of place and power; they were such as caused the seat of violence to come near, that lay upon beds of ivory, that stretched themselves upon their couches, and did eat the lambs out of the flocks, and calves out of the midst of the stall; they were dancers, drinkers, and such as anointed themselves with the chiefest ointments. These are men "settled on their lees," as Zephaniah speaks, chap. i. 12; they were like wine in vessels, not emptied from vessel to vessel, but settled in their sinful security. And not only great ones are secure, but, Zech. i. 11, the angel told the man among the myrtle trees, that all the earth sat still and was at rest. Security is an epidemical disease.

Obs. 8. See the impiety and profaneness of these men:

(1.) They oppose God, and give contrary counsel to what he had given by Jeremiah, that they should not build houses in that place, but in Babylon, Jer. xxxix. 5, 6, and that because of the great judgment which was coming upon them; but they say, "It is not near; let us build houses;" there is no danger; or if the enemy should come, we had need build and strengthen ourselves: thus they counsel contrary to the prophet, and to God.

(2.) Their profaneness; they scoff at the word of God: "This city is the caldron, and we be the flesh," Jeremiah had told them that God would bring the Chaldeans upon them, and boil them in that city like flesh in a caldron. This they scoff at, strengthening their malice and profaneness from abuse of the word of God. There is such corruption in the heart of man, that it turns the best things of all into bitterness.

Isa. xxviii. 14, 15, "Hear the word of the Lord, ye scornful men." They mocked and scoffed at what was prophesied; whatever the prophet threatened they derided it; therefore, ver. 22, "Be not mockers, lest your hands be made strong," lest you have double fetters, double judgments. 2 Chron.

xxxvi. 16, "They mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words," all his threatenings; and Peter, 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4, tells us, "there shall come scoffers, walking after their own lusts, saying, Where is the promise of his coming." Those under the law scoffed at the threatenings; these under the times of the gospel scoff at the promises, those of Christ's coming, of the resurrection, last judgment, the end of all, and life eternal: such as these walk after their own lusts, "they bring a city into a snare," Prov. xxix.

8. The Septuagint translates the word ⲛⲓⲛ "scornful," Psal. i. 1, λαμπρῶς, pestex, because such men are pestilential men, the very plagues of church and state, contempters of God and men. Jude said it long since, that there should be mockers in the last time, and we have found it true; there are as profane, bitter scoffers amongst us, as ever were; even the truths of God are scorned and scoffed at.

Obs. 9. No devices, counsels, attempts of men can null or frustrate the purposes of God. They devise mischief, give ill counsel, scoff at the truths of God, put the people upon contrary designs; yet all this would not do, desolation was near, the Chaldeans came, they were besieged in that city, boiled in it as flesh in a caldron, and God's counsels, truths, threats took place, notwithstanding all their counsels and endeavours to the contrary. Balaam was hired by Balak to cross God's design, in cursing of his people; he attempted to do it, but God overpowered him, he could not do or speak ought to their prejudice, Numb. xxiii. 3, 8; therefore he professed, ver. 23, "Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel: according to this time it shall be said of Jacob and of Israel, What hath God wrought?" Man would have wrought mischief, but could not; what hath God wrought? he hath wrought, and none could hinder; therefore, Isa. xiv. 27, it is said, "The Lord of hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it? not Balak or Balaam, not Jaazaniah or Pelatiah, not the twenty-five rulers in Jerusalem; his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back? It is not in the power of princes, no not the prince of darkness, to let his work, to alter his counsels: what God hath determined, shall so come to pass as he hath determined; ver. 24, "Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so it shall stand;" and all his pleasure shall be done, Isa. xlvi. 10: so that "there is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord," Prov. xxi. 30.

Ver. 4—12. Therefore prophesy against them, prophesy, O son of man. And the Spirit of the Lord fell upon me, and said unto me, Speak; Thus saith the Lord; Thus have ye said, O house of Israel: for I know the things that come into your mind, every one of them. Ye have multiplied your slain in this city, and ye have filled the streets thereof with the slain. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Your slain whom ye have laid in the midst of it, they are the flesh, and this city is the caldron: but I will bring you forth out of the midst of it. Ye have feared the sword; and I will bring a sword upon you, saith the Lord God. And I will bring you out of the midst thereof; and deliver you into the hands of strangers, and will execute judgments among you. Ye shall fall by the sword; I will judge you in the border of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord. This city shall not be your caldron, neither shall ye be the flesh in the midst thereof; but I will judge you in the border of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord: for ye have not walked in my statutes, neither executed my judgments, but have done after the manners of the heathen that are round about you.

In these verses is contained the denunciation of judgments against these devisers of mischief and wicked counsellors. The parts are these:

I. A command, "Prophesy against them," ver. 4.

II. A discovery of their thoughts and counsels, ver. 5.

III. Demonstration of their wickedness, ver. 6; those who hearkened not to their counsels, they slew.

IV. The death of these counsellors, and the place where it should be; not in Jerusalem, but "in the border of Israel," ver. 8—11.

V. The end of God in it, ver. 11, 12.

VI. The ground of God's proceeding thus with them, ver. 12, "For ye have not walked," &c.

Ver. 4. "Therefore prophesy against them," &c. The word prophesy is twice mentioned, to set out the intention of God, which was set against them, the certainty of the thing, and to prevent delay in the prophet; he must go and tell them of heavy and sad things. God was greatly displeased with them, and therefore will have the prophet without any delay to make known his pleasure against them; he must speak freely and boldly, and foretell them of their destruction.

Obs. 1. That profane scoffing at the truths and threats of God provokes him greatly. They had scoffed at Jeremiah's words, "This city is the cal-

This made Jeremiah say, "I am in vexation daily, every one mocketh me," and, "The word of the Lord was made a reproach unto me, and a derision daily," Jer. xxxvii. 4.

dron, and we be the flesh," and made constructions of them to please themselves; therefore saith God, "Prophecy against them." His Spirit was stirred, and he stirs up the prophet to declare his wrath against such scoffers. God's threats and judgments should make men tremble; Job xli. 10, "Who is able to stand before me?" At his presence the mountains melt. Isa. lxiv. 3; when he threatened, the great city Nineveh repented, Jonah iii.; and devils tremble, Jam. ii. 19. Mountains, Ninevites, devils, melt, repent, tremble, and yet Israelites scoff at the threats and judgments of God; but the Lord will not endure it, the prophet must declare dreadful things against them.

Men that have scoffed at the truths and ways of God, have been lashed with the judgments of God.

Fox in Acts and Monuments. John Apowell scoffing at one for praying, was presently surprised with fear, and the next day found mad, crying out night and day, "Oh the devil, the devil!" Another hearing a godly minister preaching from that text, Prov. x. 7, "The memory of the just is blessed: but the name of the wicked shall rot," scoffed at the minister, and said, he made a rotten sermon: presently after hurting his tongue with a little wood which he held at his mouth, his tongue swelled, rotted, and he died of it.

Obs. 2. That servants of God having divine warrant, are forthwith to do their office, although they be messengers of sad tidings. "Prophecy, prophecy against them." He hath command from God, and he must not stick now, and say, They are great men, the chief of the city, such as sought Jeremiah's death, and if I shall prophesy against them, they will use means to crush me; God, by doubling the word, takes him off from all such reasonings, from all delays, and expected immediate performance of his commands. Let men fret at the messages of God's servants; they must respect God, and not man, they must give out what the Lord hath given in. If men be great, God is greater; we must be faithful to him, whoever suffers by it.

Ver. 5. "And the Spirit of the Lord fell upon me." The Hebrew word נפל notes the falling of a thing from a high place, cum vi et impetu, with force and violence; and so here the Spirit coming from above, offered not violence to the prophet, but came upon him with might and power, and provoked him to prophesy.

"Thus have ye said." Whether the Spirit or prophet repeated their words, is not evident, they are not expressed; where the sense is evident from former expressions, the Scripture is frequently silent, and repeats not the words. 2 Kings v. 4, "Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel." So 2 Sam. xvii. 15, "Thus and thus did Ahithophel counsel," saith Hushai, "and thus and thus have I counselled;" the sense was known by what was before, and therefore the words are not repeated: the Scripture shuns the multiplying of words needlessly.

"O house of Israel." That is, the house of Judah, the whole being put for a part; and this is frequent.

"I know the things that come into your mind."

The Hebrew is, מַעֲלֵית, which notes those things that rise up out of men's hearts, as weeds out of the earth, or leaves upon trees; עֵינָהּ is a leaf; quia sursum crescit, whatever goes out and up from the heart or spirit of a man, that is understood by mauloth, Matt. xv. 19, ill thoughts go out from the heart, go up to the tongue, to the eyes. Luke xxiv. 38, Why do evil thoughts or reasonings arise in your hearts?

Obs. 1. Whom the Lord sends about his work, he enables to do it. Go, prophesy, prophesy; and presently the Spirit fell upon him, whereby he was furnished with prophetic matter, and enabled to deliver it. When God sent Moses, he furnished him for the great work he appointed him to: Moses pleaded his ineloquence and slowness of speech; but God said, Exod. iv. 12, "Go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee," &c.

Obs. 2. To new acts of prophecy, new access of the Spirit is requisite. He had received the Spirit before divers times, chap. i. 3; ii. 2; iii. 14, 22, 24; viii. 1; and here again, before he prophesies, the Spirit falls upon him; which shows that to spiritual work antecedent receptions of the Spirit suffice not, there must be new influxes of the Spirit for new acts of prophecy. If the Spirit therefore did not reveal new things unto the prophets, they could not prophesy; for prophecy is no habit which men might stir up, and use at their pleasure. Prophets know not secret and future things, but as the Spirit reveals them. Elisha knew not the death of the Shunammite's son, 2 Kings iv. 27, "The Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me;" and Nathan knew not the mind of God about building the temple, 2 Sam. vii. 3. There must be new acts of the Spirit revealing unto the prophets when they give out prophetic things; but Numb. xi. 26, "The Spirit rested upon Eldad and Medad, and they prophesied in the camp." Some think they continued constantly prophesying, and ceased not, but that is an opinion only. The Spirit resting upon them, argues not that they did always prophesy, or had a habit of prophesying, but that they were numbered amongst the prophets, and at what times it pleased the Spirit, had new revelations, which they declared; suitable to that in Isa. l. 4, "He wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned;" the prophet could not speak a word in season if God had not wakened him, and spake to him every morning.

Obs. 3. Supernatural things commanded are not in vain. God bid Ezekiel prophesy: he was not able to do it; the Philistines might more easily have interpreted Samson's riddle: Job might as well have answered God's great questions, in chap. xxxviii.—xli. as our prophet have prophesied; but God commanded, and he caused the Spirit to fall upon him. As the Lord calls upon us to repent, to believe, these are supernatural works, and men may as soon remove mountains, pluck the sun out of heaven, as do these; but God that commands them, gives power and grace to do them, Phil. i. 29; 2 Tim. ii. 25.

Obs. 4. The prophets had warrant to deal particularly, even with the greatest sinners. "Speak; Thus have ye said;" how? thus, "It is not near; let us build houses; this city is the caldron, and we be the flesh." The prophet may go and tell them what they have said, though they were the chiefest men of the city. When great ones sin, they must be told of their sins in a special manner. David defiles his body with adultery, and the land with blood; Nathan comes to him, and tells him a parable that was so general as David took it not home to himself; thereupon the prophet deals roundly with him, and tells him, "Thou art the man," 2 Sam. xii. 7; and ver. 9, "Thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword of Ammon, and taken his wife; now therefore the sword shall never depart from thy house." So Elijah spake home to Ahab, and told him that it was he and his father's house that troubled Israel, because they had forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and followed Baalim, 1 Kings xviii. 18. Isaiah flattered not great nor small when he said, chap. i. 10, "Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom and people of Gomorrah;" and Jeremiah must "say unto the king and to the queen, Humble yourselves, sit down: for your principalities shall come down, even the crown of your glory," Jer. xiii. 18. John told Herod it was not lawful for him to have his brother's wife, Mark vi. 18; Luke iii. 19; it is said he was ἐλεγχόμενος ἐπ' αὐτοῦ, he showed him the greatness, fullness, and danger of his sin, and laboured to convince him by strong arguments; so Paul dealt with Peter, and John with Diotrophes. And there is great reason that ministers should tell men of their sins; Ezek. iii. 18. "If thou speakest not to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand."

Obs. 5. That whatever risings, thoughts, workings, are in men's spirits, the Lord knows them, and that exactly. "I know the things that come into your mind, every one." There is nothing in man hid from God; a thought is a small thing, yet thoughts escape not the eye of God. Jer. xvii. 9, 10, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?" not a man's self, not Satan, not angels; who then? "I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins." Man may know it conjecturally, Prov. xx. 5, he may by his art pump out much; man may know it by revelation, 1 Sam. ix. 19, so Samuel the seer could tell Saul all that was in his heart: but to know what is in the heart of man, immediately, exactly, and certainly, can none but God; he only is καρδιωγῶσα, therefore the apostles prayed to him under that notion, Acts i. 24, "Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen." There is no juggling with God, his eye beholds all; and if there could be doubt of any thing with him, he searcheth the heart, he tries the reins: this is spoken to our capacity, God needs no searching, no trying; for, Psal. cxxxix. 2, "Thou understandest my thought afar off;" not that God is at a distance from us, or our thoughts; but he understands them while they are far off from us, from our knowledge, while they are potential, as gardeners know what weeds such ground will bring forth, when nothing appears. Deut. xxxi. 21, "I know their imagination which they go about, even now, before I have brought them into the land which I swear:" God knew their thoughts before they came into Canaan, what they would be there. And how can it be, but that God should know all our thoughts, seeing he made the heart, and it is in his hand, Prov. xxi. 1; seeing "we live, move, and have our being" in God, Acts xvii. 28; seeing he is through us all, and in us all, Eph. iv. 6. Look well to your hearts, thoughts, risings, whatever comes into your mind; let no secret sins, corruptions, lodge there; think not to conceal any thing from the eye of God. Psal. xc. 8, "Thou hast set our iniquities before thee;" and not only them, but "our secret sins in the light of thy countenance;" thou lookest upon them fully, seest, knowest them exactly; therefore remember that. Eccl. xii. 13, 14, "Fear God, and keep his commandments:" and why? "for God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." There is no shuffling with God, men in great place, or of great parts, cannot elude or evade him.

Ver. 6. "Ye have multiplied your slain in this city," &c. Before they had been profane, now their injustice appears. Some think the men were not actually slain, but oppressed and cruelly dealt with; violence and oppression being counted, in the Scripture sense, murder: but it is not probable that our prophet would use such expressions, as, to multiply the slain, and fill the streets with slain, if none were slain. Chap. vii. 23, "The land is full of bloody crimes;" and chap. ix. 9, "The land is full of blood;" and chap. xxii. 2, it is called the "bloody city;" so in chap. xxiv. 6, 9; and the Hebrew is, the city of bloods. These great men who gave the ill counsel, it is likely that they crushed those who opposed them, and dealt with them as seditious, as rebellious, as enemies to the city and state. Jeremiah, you know, they sought his life, petitioned to the king that he might be put to death, Jer. xxxviii. 4; and it is probable, that many which would not conform to their idolatrous practices, were cut off.

Obs. When the Lord is about to proceed in judgment against evil doers, he declares the cause of his proceeding in such a way. When God intended to destroy the world, he made known the cause thereof, Gen. vi. 5, 6, 11, 12; when he was about to fire Sodom, he discovered to Abraham the ground of it, Gen. xviii. 20.

Ver. 7. "Your slain whom ye have laid in the midst of it, they are the flesh, and this city is the caldron." Here the Lord shows them who are the flesh in the caldron; not in that sense they took it; for they thought themselves should be the flesh, live till old age in the city: but the Lord tells them here that those they had slain unjustly, whose carcases lay in the streets, and consumed away, they were the flesh boiled in the caldron. Manasseh had been bloody, and Zedekiah was bloody, and the slain were the flesh, and so the city was a caldron to them, but not to the others.

"I will bring you forth out of the midst of it." God tells them they shall neither live nor die in it, he would order things so, that they should be carried out of Jerusalem; and for certainty of it, the words are repeated in the beginning of the 9th verse.

Obs. Judgments of God cannot be waved by men's wit or power. They jeered, and made a construction of flesh and caldron suitable to their own minds, and conceited they should die in the city in peace; but the Lord tells them no, he would bring them forth out of the midst of it.

Ver. 8. "Ye have feared the sword; and I will bring a sword upon you," &c. Jeremiah had counselled them to yield themselves, chap. xxxviii. 17: the king and the rest through fear would not hearken. They feared the sword, and therefore sent to Egypt for help, Jer. ii. 18. They feared the sword, but not the Babylonish captivity: the Lord brought both upon them.

Obs. 1. Where guilt is, there is fear. They were deeply guilty of impiety and injustice; they had sinned against God by their idolatry, against their brethren by their bloodiness, against the king of Babylon by breaking oath and covenant with him, Ezek. xvii. 15; and now whatever they said, "It is not near," yet they were full of fear; God saw what timorous spirits they had. If the horror of their wicked acts did not seize upon them, yet fear of wrath and judgment possessed them. Psal. xiv. 5, speaking of workers of iniquity, he saith, "There were they in great fear;" Hebrew is, they feared a fear: but where was it, in their consciences? when the light of nature did convince them of their wickedness, there where the conviction was they feared greatly. Prov. xxviii. 1, "The wicked flee when no man pursueth:" they fear, and so fear, that they flee to secure themselves from imaginary dangers. Lev. xxvi. 36, "The sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them." And Job xv. 21, Eliphaz, speaking of the wicked, saith, "A dreadful sound is in his ears;" the Hebrew is, a sound of fears: such was in Richard the third, whose hand was ever upon his dagger. "The wicked are like the troubled sea," Isa. lvii. 20.

Obs. 2. That which sinners fear, the Lord brings upon them. Saul feared the devolution of the kingdom to another, and it fell to David. The Jews feared lest the "Romans should come, and take away their place and nation," John xi. 48, and they did do it. Prov. x. 24, "The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him;" it is coming towards him every day, and will be upon him ere he die.

After the flood the people feared scattering, and therefore said, "Let us build a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven," Gen. xi. 4; and ver. 8, "The Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth." Men that fear evils usually take surer courses to prevent them, which justly brings the thing feared upon them. Richard the third feared the kingdom would not be firm to him, his nephews he murders for security, and this kindled a fire in the kingdom, which quickly consumed him. The prelates feared their standing; to establish themselves, they remove from jus regium to jus divinum; they frame a new oath, with an &c. in it, to swear all men to put to their shoulders for support of their tottering kingdom; but it is fallen, it is fallen.

Ver. 9. "I will bring you out of the midst thereof." Of these words before in the 7th verse.

"And deliver you into the hands of strangers." Not of the neighbour nations; for had they come against them, because of commerce, consultation, language, and some references to them, the nobles and great ones might have found favour: therefore God would put them into the hands of strangers that understood not their language, that had no inducements to show favour to them, that regarded neither great nor small. They had destroyed their friends, now strangers should destroy them.

"And will execute judgments among you." Of these words I spoke, chap. v. 8.

Obs. The Lord can use any instruments to accomplish his judgments: strangers, heathens, profane ones, it matters not what the instruments are, if the holy God use them; his use of them is holy, and he orders all their thoughts, counsels, operations, to accomplish his own ends.

Ver. 10. "I will judge you in the border of Israel." The same words are in the 11th verse. Where this was must be inquired. It is generally thought to be at Riblah, and the scripture is for it, 2 Kings xxv. 6. Some have thought it to be in Babylon, but without warrant: 2 Kings xxxiii. 33. Riblah was in the land of Hamath, which lay on the north part of Canaan on the east side: and Bonfrerius observes in his Onomasticon of cities and places, that Jerom thinks it to be Antiochia, Adrichomius, some city of Syria or Judea, in the tribe of Naphtali, and this the scripture gives countenance unto, Numb. xxxiv. 11, 12. Others think it to be a province in Syria, afterwards called Epiphania, from Antiochus Epiphanes. This Riblah or Epiphania was at the border of Israel, where Nebuchadnezzar was, whither Zedekiah was brought, and there God judged him and the rest. 2 Kings xxv. 6, "They took the king, and brought him up to the king of Babylon to Riblah: and they gave judgment upon him;" Hebrew is, spake judgment; they expostulated with him and the rest about their treachery, in breaking the oath, and revolting from the king of Babylon. And their judgment was executed: Zedekiah sees his sons slain, his eyes are put out, all the nobles are put to death, Jer. xxxix. 5-7; lii. 10.

Obs. God punisheth sinners in places and by persons they think not of. These men thought they should die in Jerusalem, never fall into the hands of strangers; but God carried them to Riblah, to the borders of the land, delivered them into the hands of strangers, from whom they found no pity, no mercy. It is some comfort to men to die in their own country among their friends, that will take care of their dead corpse, see the same interred honourably after death. Hence was it that Æneas counted them happy who died before the walls of Troy, when he was floating upon the seas, and in danger of death among the waves. Something is in it that the prophet saith, Jer. xxii. 10, "Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him; but weep sore for him that goeth away: for he shall return no more, nor see his native country." They must not weep for the dead, but must weep, and that sorely, for those who lost their country: the Jews would rather die than lose their land, and be taken from Jerusalem. Ver. 25, it is laid as a great judgment upon Jeconiah and his mother, to be carried to another land, where they should die.

Ver. 12. "And ye shall know that I am the Lord," &c. In this verse is the end and ground of God's judgments. You have the first words of the verse oft before, especially in chap. vi. 7, 10, 13, 14; and those words, "Ye have not walked in my statutes, neither executed my judgments," you had opened, chap. v. 6. One thing in this verse must be spoke unto: it is said, chap. v. 7, "Neither have done according to the judgments" of the nations that are round about you: and here it is, "but have done after the manners of the heathen that are round about you." The difficulty is not great: in the 5th chapter they were not so righteous and just as the heathens were, and here, they followed the manners of the heathen: what corrupt manners they had, those the Jews took up, their manners of worship and of life.

Obs. 1. The scope and end of God's judgments is to convince the wicked that he is the Lord. "Ye shall know that I am the Lord." You have cast me off, taken in other gods, worshipped the sun, and forms of creeping things; but I will bring heavy judgments upon you, carry you out of this city to the borders of Israel, slay you with the sword. And when you are in the hands of your enemies, you shall know experimentally that I am the Lord, that all other gods were false and idol gods, that they were not able to save you in time of trouble, that you have done exceeding ill to provoke me, who am Jehovah, the true and only God, who have all power in my hands, and will now make good my threats upon their heads and carcases: your consciences shall tell you, whether you be willing or unwilling, that I am righteous in my proceedings, and that themselves die justly by my strokes.

Obs. 2. God therefore punisheth, because men do wickedly. "I will judge you in the border of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord; for ye have not walked in my statutes, neither executed my judgments," &c. God hath a special eye to his own statutes and judgments: when they are kept and performed, he prospers, but when they are violated, he judgeth, he destroys. God's statutes and judgments come from infinite wisdom and holiness, they are good, equal, profitable; and for the sons of men, that depend upon God every moment for their lives and beings, to neglect the Lord's statutes, to transgress them, and do after their own wills, humours, fancies, or others', this is unspeakable wrong to God, and he hath, doth, and will visit for such wrongs. If men would not be broken with his judgments, let them not break his statutes; if they would secure their lives, let them walk in his laws.

Obs. 3. The Lord's own people are prone to take up the manners and customs of other nations. "Ye have done after the manners of the heathen;" and not one heathenish nation only, but of all round about you. They observed their manners of life, and manners of worship, liked, fetched them in, and practised the same: 2 Chron. xiii. 9, they made them "priests after the manner of the nations of other lands:" Psal. cvi. 35, they "mingled among the heathen, and learned their works" and ways: 2 Kings xvi. 3, Ahaz caused "his son to pass through the fire, according to the abominations of the heathen:" they would have a king to judge them, like all the nations, 1 Sam. viii. 5, 20.

Ezek. xx. 32, "We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries." Such conformity had they with the heathen, that Moab and Seir could say, Ezek. xxv. 8, "Behold, the house of Judah is like unto all the heathen."

Obs. 4. When God's people take up the manners of heathens, and nations hateful to God, it provokes him greatly, and aggravates the evil much.

In this case, (1.) They reject God's statutes and ways, they laid them by and walked not in them; yet, Deut. iv. 8, no nation under heaven had statutes and judgments so righteous as they. 2 Kings xvii. 15, "They rejected his statutes," and his commandments, "and his testimonies; they followed vanity, and went after the heathen that were round about them." It was as if men should lay aside the Bible, and take the Turkish Alcoran, or popish mass-book.

(2.) There was a prohibition, that they should not do after the ways of the heathens: Deut. xii. 30, "Take heed thou be not snared by following them, and that thou inquire not after their gods, saying, How did these nations serve their gods? even so will I do;"

Jer. x. 2, "Learn not the way of the heathen." ver. 31, "Thou shalt not do so." &c.; and 2 Kings xvii. 15, the Lord had charged them that they should not do like the heathen.

(3.) God punished the heathens for those practices they took up; see Lev. xviii. 24—26, 28; Dent. xii. 29, 30; he cast them out before their eyes, 2 Kings xvi. 3.

Ver. 13. And it came to pass, when I prophesied, that Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died. Then fell I down upon my face, and cried with a loud voice, and said, Ah Lord God! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?

This verse presents unto us,

I. The death of "Pelatiah."

II. The time of it, "when I prophesied."

III. The consequences of this judgment upon Pelatiah; which are,

1. The prophet's falling upon his face.

2. His exclamation; he "cried with a loud," &c.

3. What he cried out, "Ah Lord God!" &c.

Some doubts he wrapt up in this verse, and must be cleared. Our prophet was, in body, amongst the captives in Babylon; in spirit, he was in the temple, at the east gate of the Lord's house, ver. 1.

Quest. 1. How Ezekiel saith here, "When I prophesied, Pelatiah died?" whenas he had yet prophesied nothing, he was now in a vision; and ver. 24, 25, after this he was returned "by the spirit into Chaldea," and then he spake all the things the Lord had showed him.

Ans. 1. Some think that by prophesying here is not meant actual prophesying, as if our prophet did prophesy, and give out what the Lord said, but the hearing of prophecy; and that place is brought to justify it, 1 Cor. xi. 5, "Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth;" that is, say they, which heareth prophecy; and so they will have our prophet only to hear prophetical truths which the Lord gave out, and that Pelatiah should die. But this sense of the words seems harsh, and the text saith, he prophesied, he did not hear prophecy, hear Pelatiah should die; why, at the hearing of these things, should he fall down upon his face, and cry out as he did?

2. The Lord had great indignation against these men that gave ill counsel, and bids Ezekiel prophesy, ver. 4, and doubles the command, "Prophesy, prophesy against them;" and then the Spirit fell upon him, ver. 5, and bade him speak, "Thus saith the Lord," &c.; therefore it might well be that he prophesied (while he was in the vision) visionally, and so had a vision sight of Pelatiah's death. And then after, when he came to them in the captivity, he spake to the captivity all the things that the Lord had showed him, and there the real death of Pelatiah was.

3. The prophet wrote this story after he had prophesied in Babylon, and so might insert these words here, being upon the story of these twenty-five men; for it is usual in Scripture to set that before which was done after.

Quest. 2. But then a second doubt arises; if Ezekiel were in Babylon, and prophesied there, how could this prophecy reach the men that were at Jerusalem; to them it belonged, and the prophet's voice could not extend to their ears?

Ans. 1. Be it granted that the prophet was at a distance from them at Jerusalem, yet the virtue of the prophecy, though not the words, might, and did, extend to Jerusalem. When Ezekiel fell really to prophesy against these men, then Pelatiah died. When Isaiah prophesied against Babylon, Moab, Damascus, Ethiopia, and Egypt, Isa. xiii. xv. xvii. —xx. he was at a great distance from them, yet the prophecies were fulfilled upon them.

2. There was intercourse between those at Jerusalem and those in Babylon; Jer. xxix. 1, 3, Zedekiah sent Elasah and Gemariah to Babylon, and Jeremiah sent letters to them, to acquaint them with his prophecy concerning them, and by those men, or others, might Ezekiel's prophecy be made known to them at Jerusalem.

Quest. 3. How knew Ezekiel that Pelatiah died at that time when he prophesied?

Ans. 1. This he might know by comparing the tidings of his death by messengers brought unto him, and certifying the time, day, and hour thereof, comparing the same with the time of his prophesying; for Pelatiah being a prince of the people, great notice would be taken of his death, and the hour of it fly abroad swiftly, and that to Babylon. Ezek. xxxiii. 21, when the city was besieged, one got away, and brought tidings thereof to Ezekiel; much more easily might they do it before.

2. The spirit of prophecy might certify our prophet hereof, that when he did prophesy, Pelatiah should die at that time. Elijah could tell Ahaziah that he should never come off the bed he lay sick upon, 2 Kings i. 4; and Abijah could tell Jeroboam's wife, that when her feet entered into the city, the child should die, 1 Kings xiv. 12; and, ver. 17, "when she came to the threshold of the door, the child died."

Quest. 4. How comes it to pass that these twenty-five men, not being of the number of marked ones, chap. ix. escaped the sword of the six slaughtermen, when they slew all unmarked ones in the sanctuary, and in the city?

Ans. They were visionally slain; not really, till the siege and taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, when also the other twenty-four perished, being carried thence to the borders of Israel. And whereas some think Pelatiah here died only visionally, they detract much from the words of the prophet, who saith, he died. You know he prophesied against them all, the twenty-five, and they were all cut off afterward; and if Pelatiah's death were visional, why saw he not visionally the death of all the rest.

The truth is, Pelatiah was made an example, to show the reality and efficacy of this prophecy; for when the captives understood that the thing was so at Jerusalem as Ezekiel prophesied in Babylon, that Pelatiah, a prince, was struck dead by the hand of the Lord, they began to change their thoughts of them at Jerusalem, that they had done wisely to stay it out there, and that themselves were improvident in coming into Babylon; but now they saw God was going on with his judgments against them, and that safety was on their own side.

Of falling upon the face, and crying out, "Ah Lord God!" see chap. ix. 8, where those expressions have been opened.

"Wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?"

Quest. 5. What moved the prophet to use these words? Here was only the death of one man, and that a wicked man; had he seen thousands cut off, smitten dead by the hand of God, he might have feared all the remnant of Israel: he knew there were many marked ones, commission given to spare them, and therefore why doth he conceive the Lord would make a full end of the remnant of Israel?

Ans. 1. Some think Pelatiah, being the chief of the princes, and bearing great sway (for Zedekiah stood in awe of them, Jer. xxxviii. 5) among the people, that our prophet speaks in their person, rather than his own, and thus it is carried: Pelatiah hath been our counsellor, hath great interest in us, we confide more in him than others, and now thou hast cut him off who was our support: "Ah Lord! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?" That the prophet should speak in their person, I see nothing to induce it; it is not like so wicked a people would make so gracious a use of this judgment, but rather encourage themselves in Jaazaniah and the rest.

2. I conceive the words refer only to the prophet, who seeing this stroke of God upon Pelatiah, cried out so,

(1.) From his love to that people in general; they were Israelites, and love is full of fears.

(2.) He remembered, chap. ix. 5, 6, the commission given to the slaughtering angels, to be without pity, to slay old and young, maids, women, children: and now seeing the judgment begun upon Pelatiah, he knew not but that it might proceed to the destruction of all, and he therefore saith, "Ah Lord God," &c. He had received in this vision much matter for prophecy, which was not yet given out, and hereupon seeing Pelatiah smitten, he cried out so.

Quest. 6. Should not Ezekiel have rejoiced in the death of Pelatiah? Psal. lvi. 10, "The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance." Did not he neglect a duty, and so offend, seeing he wept and mourned?

Ans. 1. We are to rejoice at the ruin of the wicked. Exod. xv. when Pharaoh and his host were drowned in the Red sea, and Egypt howling for their loss, then Moses and the Israelites sang unto the Lord; when Sisera was slain, Baruch and Deborah sang to the Lord, Judg. v.; and Solomon layeth it down for a maxim, Prov. xi. 10, "When the wicked perish, there is shouting" and great joy. The saints may rejoice at the deaths of wicked ones, be they natural or violent;

1. As it sets out the glory of his justice. He hath threatened sinners in his word, and when he executes his threats upon them, gives them according to the nature of their sin, then his justice is glorious.

2. As way hereby is made for the spreading of truth, enlargement of the gospel and kingdom of Christ.

3. As their death tends to the clearing of the godly. David was suspected, yea, accused, by Nabal, to be some runaway, 1 Sam. xxv. 10. God smites Nabal with death, ver. 38; when David heard it, he blesseth God for it, that he had pleaded the cause of his reproach from the hand of Nabal, and returned his wickedness upon his head, ver. 39.

4. As by their death the godly gain liberty. So when Haman was hanged, and his ten sons and other enemies of the Jews put to death, they feasted and rejoiced, Esth. ix. 19; they were freed from their vexations, oppressions, cruelties, plots.

5. As there is a stop made to wickedness. Prov. xxi. 11, "When the scorner is punished, the simple is made wise;" sin ceaseth in the scorner, being cut off, and others cease their wickedness, and grow wise by their stroke. Now Pelatiah's ill counsel, example, power, and whatever he had to promote iniquity with, ceased. So then we may rejoice upon those grounds, but not out of any private respect or revengeful apprehension.

But there is also matter of grief and mourning. God delights not in the death of a sinner, neither should any godly man; as, therefore, Pelatiah was a wicked man, died in his sins, was suddenly cut off, ran a hazard of his eternal condition, so it was matter of mourning. Our prophet, therefore, might rejoice upon the grounds first mentioned, and mourn upon these last named; but, as I hinted in the former question, he looked beyond this one man to the state of Israel.

Obs. 1. How dreadful God's judgments are upon evil counsellors, and scoffers though never so great! Pelatiah, a prince of the people, gave ill counsel in the city, scoffed at the prophecy of Jeremiah, "This city is the caldron, and we be the flesh," and here God smites him. The dreadfulness of the judgment is seen in four things.

(1.) In that he smites his life; not his estate, not his liberty, not his near friends, not any limb, but his life: he smote him in that which was dearest of all, his life; with that which was most feared of all, death, the king of fears.

(2.) It was sudden. When judgments are sudden, they note severity: Deut. vii. 4, when God's wrath is kindled, and kindled very hot against idolatry, he expresses the heat and severity of it this way, he will "destroy thee suddenly;" and Prov. vi. 14, 15, a wicked man "deviseth mischief continually; he soweth discord. Therefore shall his calamity come suddenly; suddenly shall he be broken without remedy." Sudden judgments are unthought of, such, men are unprepared for; and therefore, Isa. xxix. 5, God tells Jerusalem that her judgments should be "at an instant suddenly," yea, as sudden as thunder and lightning, ver. 6: and, chap. xxx. 12, 13, because they despised the word of God, he tells them their judgment should be as a "swelling out in a high wall, whose breaking cometh suddenly at an instant." When judgments are gradual, they are admonitory, and there is hope; but when they are so sudden, all hope is cut off, and remedy prevented.

(3.) Immediate from God's hand; it was the immediate hand of God upon him. Whatever is immediate from God, mercy or judgment, hath the more comfort or terror in it. In hell is immediate wrath from God, and therefore it is more dreadful; so when fire and brimstone came upon Sodom and Gomorrah, this made it so terrible, that it was immediately from the Lord, Gen. xix. 24. When judgments come immediately from God, they come with a greater weight of wrath upon them than others.

(4.) It is exemplary; a great man, a prince of the people. Great men have great sins, and great judgments: some men are not only hanged, or beheaded, but they are also quartered, their heads and quarters are set up on the gates of cities, and made spectacles to all that pass by; so here Pelatiah is made a spectacle of divine vengeance.

Solomon told us long since, that "judgments are prepared for scorners, and stripes for the back of fools," Prov. xix. 29; the word for stripes imports such blows as shiver and break a thing. Ahithophel caused Absalom to go in to his father's concubines, he gave him ill counsel against David, 1 Sam. xvi. xvii. and you know what a sad and dreadful judgment befell him. The captains with their fifties scoffed at Elijah, when they said, 2 Kings i. 9, "Thou man of God;" thou sayest thou art a man of God, and the foolish people think so of thee, but we know thou art a deceiver, and the king hath sent for thee: come down, or we will fetch thee down: but before they could fetch him down, he fetches down fire from heaven which consumed these scoffers to ashes. The children that mocked the prophet, 2 Kings ii. 24. forty-two of them were torn in pieces by two she-bears. Lucian, falling off from christianity, grew a scoffer, and said that he received no other benefit from christianity, than that since before he was called Lucius, now he was called Lucianus; but Suidas tells us he was eaten up of dogs. Julian would take away the christians' wealth, and say that he took this that they might receive a hundredfold, according to the doctrine of their Saviour; but the Lord struck him from heaven, and he died blaspheming. The story of Nightingale is known, which Mr. Fox relates, how abusing that scripture, He that saith he hath no sin is a liar, and the truth is not in him, he fell out of the pulpit and brake his neck. Another making mouths at a godly minister preaching, had his mouth drawn greatly awry, and so died. One present in this congregation was an eye witness of a woman scoffing at another for purity, and walking boldly, who had her tongue struck immediately with the palsy, and died thereof within two days. Take heed of jeering and scoffing; the penitent thief was admitted into paradise, when the scoffing one was sent to hell.

Obs. 2. Princely and high conditions are quickly laid in the dust. Pelatiah, a prince of the people, in great honour, all things about him as heart could wish, likely to have continued long here, is brought in a dead corpse. There is no certainty in any condition; how suddenly was Herod eaten of worms, Acts xii. 23; Nebuchadnezzar driven from his palace, Dan. v. 21; and Pharaoh drowned in the bottom of the sea! Exod. xiv. 28.

1 Thess. v. 3, "When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction," &c. And Christ said, Ye know not what hour the Lord will come, watch; so we know not what hour death will come, therefore let us watch. The papists call upon St. Christopher to keep them from sudden death; let us call upon Christ to prepare us for, and preserve us in death.

Obs. 3. God sometimes meets with wicked men when his ordinances are dispensing. "When I prophesied, then Pelatiah died;" it was at the time of prophesying. When the word is preached, other ordinances administered, then doth God smite sinners, sometimes present at the ordinance, and sometimes absent, as Pelatiah was. Ezek. xxxvii. 7, "As I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together." This was done as he prophesied; there was great virtue and efficacy in his words: so here, when he prophesied, a noise was heard, "and behold, a shaking;" Pelatiah shakes, and shakes to pieces; the power of Ezekiel's prophecy in Babylon slays Pelatiah at Jerusalem. There is a converting power in the word, which converts when men are present; but there is a wounding and confounding power in it also, when men are absent or present. When the apostles preached, sometimes the Holy Ghost fell upon men, Acts x. 44. and sometimes heavy judgments. Elinas the sorcerer is smitten blind, Ananias and Sapphira are struck dead, if not in the time of the ordinance, yet immediately thereupon. Jeroboam thrusts out his hand to take hold of the prophet who prophesied against the altar at Bethel, and his hand was "dried up," 1 Kings xiii. 4. When Paul was preaching, Eutychus sleeps, falls down, and is "taken up dead," Acts xx. 9; at that time he fell down when the ordinance was dispensing. And certainly, when the servants of God do preach and prophesy against sinners present or absent, sometimes God smites them: Hos. vi. 5, "I have hewed them by the prophets;" the word was an axe in their mouths, and every time they prophesied judgment, they hewed the state, and particular persons; 1 Kings xix. 17, they that escape the sword of Hazael and Jehu, shall Elisha slay; how? by his prophesying and preaching. This God doth to put honour upon his word, that so men may fear, respect his ordinances, and take heed how they hear.

Obs. 4. Not only judgments themselves are to be observed, but the circumstances of them also. "When I prophesied, then Pelatiah died;" he notes the time in a special manner. Circumstances of time, place, and person, do add much weight to the judgments of God, and truth of a story: here you have all; the time when Ezekiel prophesied; the place, the door of the eastern gate of the temple at Jerusalem, ver. 1; the name, "Pelatiah;" these add strength to the judgments and prophecy. Circumstances commend mercies and aggravate judgments; to be smitten when the prophet was prophesying against him, sets out the judgment with life and terror. Circumstances help to screw the thing into the heart, and to fasten it upon the memory. The time of things is much mentioned in the word, be it of sins, Jer. xi. 15, "When thou doest evil, then thou rejoicest;" or of mercies, when Manasseh was brought back to Jerusalem, "then Manasseh knew that the Lord he was God," 2 Chron. xxxiii. 13; or of judgments, Judg. v. 8, "They chose new gods; then was war in the gates;" Numb. xi. 33, "While the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the people, and the Lord smote the people with a very great plague;" so Dan. iv. 13, "While the word was in the king's mouth" the voice was heard, "The kingdom is departed from thee;" and Dan. ii. 5, while Belsazzar tasted wine in the bowls of the temple, in the same hour came forth fingers that wrote letters of death upon the wall; and of Uzziah it is said, then he "was wroth," and while he was so, "the leprosy even rose up in his forehead," 2 Chron. xxvi. 19. The prophets observed the times of God's giving out the threatenings, and the times of execution.

Obs. 5. Holy and good men fear when the judgments of God fall heavily and suddenly upon wicked men. Psal. lxxi. 6, when God's hand should fall upon Doeg, saith David, "The righteous shall see and fear;" what shall they see to make them fear? the glory and power of God in executing justice, in cutting off delinquents: Psal. ix. 16, "The Lord is known by the judgments which he executeth," known to be most powerful, glorious, dreadful; he is present in them, and the godly have eyes to see much of him. When angels appeared, Gideon, a man of valour, and others, feared; much more when God appears in thunder and lightning, in sudden and grievous judgments, there is cause of fear. When Uzzah was smitten with a sudden stroke, David was afraid of the Lord, 2 Sam. vi. 9; this might occasion that in Psal. exix. 120, "My flesh trembleth for fear of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments." God's judgments are now abroad, and not only wicked men, but good also, are cut down suddenly. Let us fear, and not only that, but do as the prophet and other holy men did at such a time; Isa. xxvi. 8, 9, let us wait for God, let the desire of our souls be to his name, let us desire him in the night, seek him early with our spirits, for now is the time that the inhabitants of the world should learn righteousness.

Obs. 6. Sudden or great judgments do put the saints and servants of God upon humble, earnest, and argumentative prayer. Humble, "Then fell I down upon my face;" earnest, "and cried with a loud voice;" argumentative, "Ah Lord God! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?" Judgments looked upon by the saints are of an humbling nature, prompt them with arguments to wrestle with God, and that earnestly, Josh. vii. 5—9.

Obs. 7. When God begins judgments with some who are wicked among them, the godly look upon it as an inlet to public misery: "Wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?" Joshua, when the men fell before Ai, and Israel fled, looked not only at the loss of those men who fell, but at the hazard of all; chap. vii. 7, "Hast thou brought this people over Jordan, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us? So when God's wrath brake in a little upon the people in Moses's days, he feared lest the sea of God's wrath should come in at once upon them; therefore he stood in the briers, Psal. cvi. 23, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them. When a cloud riseth, droppeth a little, they fear a great storm, a deluge, and therefore look at the public; they know what God hath said, "When I begin, I will also make an end."

Ver. 14, 15. Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem hath said, Get you far from the Lord: unto us is this land given in possession.

These words are an answer to the prophet's deprecation of judgment. He had pleaded with God to spare the residue of Israel; the Lord tells him that the inhabitants of Jerusalem looked upon them as none of the Lord's people, upon the land, city, temple, ordinances, as theirs only; they thought the captives had nothing to do with God, but were an abject people like the Babylonians and heathens, cut off from God, the holy land, and holy things. Now, saith God, see whom thou hast interceded for! Are these fit to be spared? wilt thou have those that hate thee and the rest of the captives to lie at peace in Jerusalem? The Lord sets them out before the prophet, what kind of persons they were, and leaves it upon his thoughts to consider of them, and gives not in the complete answer till after, in ver. 21.

Or thus: the prophet feared lest God would now destroy all, and so his church perish altogether; but God here intimates to him that the residue of Israel lay not in the twenty-five mentioned before, nor in them that were in Jerusalem, but rather in those who were gone into captivity, "thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred," &c. He calls his thoughts to them, and would rather have him look at them, as the seed of the church, the persons to whom the promises belonged, of whom should come the Messiah, than the others.

"Thy brethren." The word "brethren" hath divers acceptations in Scripture:

1. It notes the common nature of man, as in Gen. xxix. 4, saith Jacob, "Whence are ye, my brethren."

2. Those who are born of the same parents, one or both, Gen. xxxvii. 11, 23; Matt. xx. 24.

3. Such as are of kindred by consanguinity or affinity; so Christ's kinsmen were called his brethren, 1 Cor. ix. 5.

4. Those who agree together, and are partners in any business, as Simeon and Levi were brethren in iniquity, in murdering the Shechemites, Gen. xlix. 5.

5. Those who are godly true believers, that do the will of God, Matt. xii. 49; Heb. ii. 11; 1 Tim. iv. 6; 1 Thess. v. 27.

6. Them that are of the same calling, Numb. xviii. 2; Ezra vi. 20; 2 Cor. viii. 23.

Lastly, Those who are of the same country and nation; Rom. ix. 3, Paul could wish himself accursed for his brethren, who were Israelites of the Jewish nation. In what sense to take "brethren" is doubtful, because the verse speaks afterwards of the men of his kindred, and all the house of Israel, so that hereby two acceptations of the word seem to be excluded, and the first, second, and fourth are not intended. We may take brethren here for those of the same calling, such as were priests and prophets, and the Levites; but because these were few, we may take in also the kindred of the prophet, for the words are not, thy brethren, and the men of thy kindred, as making a difference between these; but thus are the words, "thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred."

"Men of thy kindred." Hebrew is, the men of thy redemption. The law of redemption was, that if a man were waxen poor, and had sold his house, land, or any person, some kinsman was to redeem it, as you may see, Lev. xxv. 25, and usually the nearest kinsman was to do it: he that was near to him, it lay upon him who was nearest of blood, to redeem house, land, or persons, and also to revenge the blood of persons if slain, Numb. xxxv. 12; and therefore is rendered by some, the men of thy avengements. Both these do set out near kinsmen, and therefore it is likely here are meant some special kindred of the prophet's.

"All the house of Israel." All that were in Babylon, carried away with Jeconiah; it is spoken synecdochically, Israel for Judah.

"Are they." These words are not in the original; but here are many nominative cases absolute, without any verb to refer to, or depend upon; "Thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly:" this is usual in the holy writ; Psal. xi. 4, "The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in heaven:" so Eph. iii. 1, "For this cause I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you gentiles." It is so in many places, which may be to make us heed the more what we read.

"Unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get ye far from the Lord," &c. In this part of the verse is laid down the unjust proceedings of the men at Jerusalem against those in Babylon; and it appears in these things:

1. They judge them not the Lord's people, and so deny them communion with God and his worship, and therefore say, "Get you far from the Lord."

11. They arrogate God's temple, and the worship of it, to themselves, which is implied.

111. They challenge the land and all in it to be theirs: "Unto us is this land given in possession."

IV. They spake those words with disdain and scorn against the captives; they said, "Get you far from the Lord;" ye are none of our brethren, none of the church, ye are of Babylon, we are of Zion; ye were a foolish and timorous company, void of counsel and spirit in leaving your own country, this city, and temple.

"Get you far from the Lord." They deemed God was no where but in the temple; and, chap. viii. 6, their abominations had caused God to go far from his sanctuary. It is probable that from this phrase the heathens took up that passage of theirs, Procul este profani.

Ye profane, be afar off. The Jews at Jerusalem thought the Jews in Babylon to be cut off from their body, they had unworthily left them, and were not now worthy to have any interest in their God or land.

Obs. 1. God deals gently with his servants, notwithstanding their infirmities. Ezekiel showed some weakness in saying, "Wilt thou make a full end of the residue of Israel?" when God in his hearing had appointed the mourners to be marked, and had answered him this question before, chap. ix. : yet God bears with his weakness, and speaks to him in a loving manner, and saith, "Son of man;" and he upbraids him not for any forgetfulness of what was done, for any jealousy he had of God's failing in making good his promise. He saith not, What troublest thou me any more? thou hast had an answer, be gone, be silent! No, the Lord knows our weakness; Psal. ciii. 13, 14, "As a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him: for he knoweth our frame;" because we have weaknesses, therefore doth God pity; he doth not punish, but pity the weakness of his people. Deut. i. 31, "In the wilderness, the Lord thy God did bear thee, as a man doth bear his son, in all the way that ye went:" sometimes the father carries the child in his arms, sets it upon his knee, and dandles it; the crying, peevishness, half-services, cost, trouble in its education, he bears with all; and so whatever is burdensome in God's children, he suffers it. Acts xiii. 18, he suffered their manners, as a nurse beareth her child in her womb, in her arms, feedeth it with her breasts, so God suffered them; Isa. lxiii. 9, "He bare them, and carried them all the days of old," and doth so still. The Lord Christ bears our infirmities, and puts up many a hard thing from us; Peter's denial, Paul and Barnabas's contention, Thomas's unbelief; and not only the infirmities of one or two, but of all saints; Heb. iv. 15, he is touched, and touched to the quick, with the feeling of our infirmities.

Obs. 2. Those have the name and show of a church who are rigid, cruel, against those who are the true church. They of Jerusalem say to the others, "Get you far from the Lord;" they were in captivity, suffered hard and sore things there, yet these add afflictions to their affliction; they tell them they are none of God's people, have nothing to do with his worship, and so cut them off from all hope. Isa. x. 6, they were "a hypocritical nation," and they persecute, excommunicate those who were faithful and obedient to the will of God; for those Jews who were in Babylon, at the command of God, and the counsel of Jeremiah, yielded themselves to Nebuchadnezzar, and were carried away; hereupon they at Jerusalem reject them, and thrust them from God and his worship. False worshippers ever hate the true. The Samaritans, and those who worshipped the calves, hated the Jews that differed in their worship from them. 1 Thess. ii. 14—16, "Ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews; who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; forbidding us to speak to the gentiles." Thus the papists and others deal with us; because they have the name of church, and some corrupt ordinances, can plead succession of their priests from Peter, therefore they reproach us, who are justly gone from them, with the terms of heretics, schismatics, synagogue of Satan, the malignant church; that we have torn Christ's coat, rent ourselves from his body; that we have shaken the church, and troubled the whole world; thus with their virulent tongues do they asperse us. Thus Ishmael dealt with Isaac, Gal. iv. 29. Long ago, the worse persecuted the better; thus is it now.

Obs. 3. Men of rigid and bitter spirits are puffed up and conceited of their ways and privileges. See it here: they separate the other far from God, bid them get them far off, which amounts to this, You have nothing to do with God or his ways; God is not with you, he is with us, his ordinances are for us; you are false, erroneous, but we are orthodox, sound, and the possession and privileges of the temple are ours: they justified and preferred themselves above, and before, those who were in Babylon, and boasted closely of their own worth and advantages; their malice blinded them, and made them boast foolishly. Paul had a persecuting spirit at first, and how conceited was he of his own ways! Acts xxvi. 9—11, "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth;" and therefore he complained of the saints, got power from authority to punish them, to imprison them, to put them to death; therefore he compelled them to blaspheme, and persecuted them to strange cities, and fulfilled that which Christ had said, John xvi. 2, "They shall put you out of the synagogues; yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service." They, the scribes and Pharisees, they would not suffer the christians to meet in their synagogues, and their teachers to preach unto them, but stirred up those who had power in their hand to persecute and put them to death. The scribes and Pharisees were opinionated of their own ways, and could not endure others better than themselves. Luke xviii. 11, 12, saith the Pharisee, "I am not as other men are," true, for he was more conceited of his own righteousness, and further from mercy, than the publican.

Obs. 4. Men in false and corrupt ways are glad they are rid of those who are conscientious, bound up by divine truths, and obedient to the will of God. Ezekiel, Daniel, and others, knew that if they had staid in Jerusalem, and not yielded themselves to Nebuchadnezzar, they had died for it; they were acquainted with Jeremiah's prophecy and counsel, which doubtless he had delivered in Jehoiachin's days, as well as in Zedekiah's, chap. xxi. 9; xxxviii. 2; that if they yielded themselves to the king of Babylon, they should live, which they durst not disobey; and therefore it is said, 2 Kings xxiv. 12, that "Jehoiachin the king of Judah went out to the king of Babylon;" which act of his Josephus magnifies, saying, he was so good and just, that he would not see the city to perish for his sake; that the city and citizens might be the safer, he hearkened to Jeremiah's counsel. Now these men that were left at Jerusalem were glad they were gone, even Ezekiel and his brethren, that were of his judgment, and differed from them; and Jeremiah they were weary of, and those who thought as he thought, Jer. xxviii. 4; so that men in false ways are desirous and glad to be rid of those who conform not to themselves. Isa. lxxi. 5, "Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified;" those who were the godly opposed the false ways of the rest, and laboured to reduce them to the truth, therefore they hated them, and cast them out, as they pretended, for the Lord's name's sake; they said they had the true way and worship, that the others were erroneous, factious, proud, censorious, troublers of church and state, and therefore in reference to God's name they cast them out, excommunicated them; the word is, עזבתם אתכם, elongantes vos, Get ye far off out of our coasts and quarters, get ye into Babylon, or to the ten tribes; we may not, we cannot, we will not bear you. And how did they rejoice in it! Let God be glorified; it is no fault of ours, thank yourselves; you are so tenacious of your opinions, so differing from us, and so burdensome to us, that we shall do God and the church good service to cast you out: God shall have glory, and we shall have ease, we shall go on quietly in our way. So the Jews and Pharisees cast out the blind man, when once he came to see more than themselves, John ix. 34; and made an order to cast any man out that should confess Christ, and so differ from them in judgment or practice, ver. 22. This is the nature of falsehood; whereas truth is so far from drawing men from God, that it invites them to come to God. Truth and true godliness is full of love, which beareth, hopeth, and endureth all things, 1 Cor. xiii. 7; and therefore the servants of God are described, 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25, to be gentle unto all men, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose μήσους, if at any time God, &c. They will not drive men from God, from truth, but bear and forbear, that, if it be possible, they may draw men to the truth. How was Ezekiel affected with their condition, how did he intercede for them!

Obs. 5. The Lord considers and takes notice of the words and ways of those which have ill will to his people, though far off from them. There were some faithful ones in Babylon, and they at Jerusalem spake hardly of them, dealt unkindly with them; they said, Get ye far off from the Lord, ye are neither our brethren, nor the Lord's children; ye have no right to this land, nor interest in us. This the Lord laid to heart, and took notice of, and acquaints the prophet with it. There is nothing thought, said, or done in the world against any of the Lord's, but he hath cognizance of it, and, as seems good to him, discovers the same; any bitter passages towards his he observes. Obad. 11, God tells Edom there of her dealing with his people; When strangers carried away my people captive, thou stoodest on the other side, and wast as one of the enemies; but thou shouldst not have looked on, rejoiced, and spoken proudly in the day of their distress, thou shouldst not have laid hands on their substance, nor have cut off those that escaped: ver. 15, "As thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee: thy reward shall return upon thine own head." They spoke proudly, and did cruelly against their brethren, but God observed it, and rewarded it. Psal. l. 20, "Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother; thou slanderest thine own mother's son: but I will reprove thee:" so in Jer. xlvi. 30, "I know his wrath, saith the Lord; but it shall not be so; his lies shall not so effect it:" Moab was proud and wrathful against the people of God, threatened them, plotted against them, and thought by lies and crafty carriages of things to ruin them; the Lord regarded it, and said, "His lies shall not so effect it." The word for lies is כָּרִי and rendered bars in the margin: lies were their refuge, their strength, the bars they trusted to, and leaned on; but lies should not effect it, God would break those bars, and frustrate their lies. Zeph. ii. 8, 9, "I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border. Therefore as I live, saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles, and salt pits, and a perpetual desolation." Let men speak and plot against the servants of God, in due time Christ will come, with ten thousand of his saints, to convince men of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him and his.

Obs. 6. Men deeply guilty are deeply secure. They were idolatrous in the highest degree; so oppressive, that they filled the land with bloody crimes and cries; they were profane, and scoffed at the prophets and their prophecies; they had seen a sudden hand of God upon Pelatiah, and yet they were secure, and promised safety to themselves; The land is ours, it is given us in possession, we shall quietly enjoy it: we fear no captivity, loss of country, temple, or city. Their king was under disgrace, he had violated the oath, perjured himself; and shortly after mothers did eat their children, and men in scarlet embraced the dunghill; all was laid waste, and yet they feared not. Sometimes when their consciences were awakened, and guilt stirred, they did fear, but generally they were secure, and dreamed of liberty and long life. The Egyptians feared not till the waters came upon them and drowned them. God plucked away the ten tribes for their sins, and sent them into captivity; yet, Jer. iii. 8, "treacherous Judah feared not," but went on in her ways of wickedness; and when the sword was at the door, they looked still for peace, Jer. viii. 15, 16. Some creatures sleep most in winter, and many are drowsy against rainy weather; wicked men are sleepy when storms are coming.

Obs. 7. Those who go out from the brethren upon just grounds, and meet with unjust censures for it, God will justify and vindicate. These captives in Babylon went forth from Jerusalem, which only was the place of God's worship, where only he had a people, and that upon Jeremiah's counsel and exhortation, they went forth to save the city and their lives. For this they are censured deeply of the inhabitants of Jerusalem; but the Lord pleads for them, and saith to the prophet, Thy brethren, thy brethren are the men spoken against. This pathetic repetition of the word "brethren," notes God's indignation against their censure they gave of them; and his calling of them the prophet's brethren, argues his clearing of the prophet and them in what they had done. And the next verse clears it further; they did nothing but what God would have done, and therefore owns as his own act, "I have cast them far off among the heathen," &c. If God's people do withdraw from others upon good grounds, whatever men object against them, yet they shall have approbation in heaven, and in their own hearts. These were justified for going out of Zion into Babylon; surely, then, God will not condemn men for coming out of Babylon into Zion. When we left Rome and Romish trash, we had good warrant for it; and so Luther, who took the first step thence; for indulgences troubled Luther, and when he preached against them, the Romish priests did with great pride disdain his preaching. He heard the way of truth blasphemed, saw men were forced to new articles of faith, and himself was compelled to submit to satanical doctrine; these were just causes to induce Luther to leave the Romish Babylon. And therefore he was unjustly excommunicated by Pope Leo, in whose bull this is made the cause, because he denied the church to have power to create new articles of faith. But the Lord hath justified his separation from them, and ours since him. Their idolatrous mass, their corrupt doctrines, denying of the cup to the people, &c. are just grounds for us and others to leave them;

We have not left the word of God, the apostles of Christ, or churches they instituted; but we are gone from the contagion of by popes. Aldrich.

for if Rome be a church, it is not only subject to errors as other churches are, but more subject to erring than any other church christian, and the most schismatical of all christian churches, and the only church against which there is a prophecy in the gospel of falling from the faith; which three last things that learned man Morton shows: and he hath a section (it is the seventh of his fifteenth chapter) to show what may be judged necessary causes of separation from any particular churches; as obstinacy of error in teachers, affected ignorance, obduration of people, idolatry in God's worship, tyranny and persecution against the true and sincere professors. To which I conceive this may further be added, That if a church be so defiled that the members of it cannot partake of the ordinances without sin, having used all means for redress, they may justly depart, so it be in a peaceable manner, and God will justify them.

Obs. 8. Where much may be pretended for truth of churchship, there may be no church. Some make notes of the true church:

(1.) Succession. Those at Jerusalem in Ezekiel's days, priests and people, succeeded Aaron, Eli, and other priests and Levites, that were faithful; but at this time, they were, both priests and people, become fearfully idolatrous. Frustra allegatur successio personarum ubi non est successio formae. In vain is succession of persons alleged where there is not a succession of resemblance.

(2.) Carnal seed. They were of kin to Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and other godly ones in Babylon, they were Abraham's, David's seed; yet this made them not a true church; therefore Jeremiah calls Judah a harlot, chap. iii. 8.

(3.) Multitudes. Here were a greater multitude at Jerusalem than in Babylon; but what were they? a multitude of idolaters, oppressors, scoffers, persecutors; and such materials are fitter to make a tower of Babel, than a temple in Zion.

(4.) They dwell at Jerusalem, in Judea, the holy city, the holy land, but they had defiled both with their abominations, and neither of those added any holiness to them. Men at Jerusalem, and of Jerusalem, were worse than those in Babylon. It is not Jerusalem, or the local bounds of Judea, can make these the true church.

(5.) Prosperity, outward pomp, greatness, glory. These men at Jerusalem had what the world and creatures could afford them, plenty, honour, liberty; and they in Babylon were poor captives, despised, vilified, scorned ones; the glory of the church is internal, not external; and that glory had the mourners in Jerusalem.

(6.) The temple, and worship of it, had these men at Jerusalem. The captives had no temple, no sacrifices, no prosperity, no holy land or city, no multitudes, no succession, yet they were the church of God, and not those; for God is wroth with them of Jerusalem for thinking themselves the church, whenas they were none, and unchurching the other, whenas they were the true church, and are called by God "the house of Israel." And it further appears that those of Jerusalem were not the true church, because they were destined to destruction, and as sore judgments as ever people were, chap. v. 9, 10, and six slaughtermen designed to slay them utterly, chap. ix. The truth of churchship is to be fetched from other things. It is cetus fidelium, a congregation of faithful men, saith our Article; such as profess Christ and his gospel, and practise answerably; such as are orderly united, and observe divine order in the things of God: Ephes. iv. 12, the apostles and other officers in the church were given προσκатаρτιστον των αγιων, for the joining together of the saints, and putting them as members of the body in their right places: see Col. ii. 5, 6.

Obs. 9. It is God's mind and will, that those who are strong, highly favoured of God, should look at those beneath them as brethren. There were many in Babylon, questionless, who were mean in knowledge, low in abilities, weak in faith, tainted with some errors and corruptions of Jerusalem, if not of Babylon; yet saith God, "Thy brethren, thy brethren." Where there is any thing of God or Christ, though many and great infirmities accompany and cloud the same, we should look upon them as brethren. When Christ saw a little moral good in the young man, he looked upon him, and loved him, Mark x. 21; and shall we see any spiritual good in any, and not love them and use them as brethren? Look only at the good and graces which are in one another, and not at the weaknesses; you can eye a little gold in much earth, and why not a little grace? Gal. vi. 2, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

We must answer for stumbling at the infirmities of the godly, and also for neglect of their graces; if their corruptions do alienate, their graces should allure. It is more honourable and christian, to love them for bearing Christ's image, than for being of our judgment.

Ver. 16. Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come.

At this verse begins comfort for the captives. They were cast out, rejected, and insulted over by their brethren, filled with sad thoughts of their condition; but here heaven opens, and light breaks out in sweet promises; and they are these:

- I. A promise of mercy to them in Babylon, ver. 16.
- II. Of returning thence, from Babylon to Zion, ver. 17.
- III. Of purifying them from their pollutions in the land of Canaan, ver. 18.
- IV. Of regeneration or conversion, ver. 19, 20.
- V. A threat to those whose hearts should cleave to their detestable things, which is comfortable to the godly.

For the 16th verse, the sum is this: They at Jerusalem look upon you in Babylon as a forlorn and forsaken people, without God and his worship; they exclude you from all fellowship and communio with them, yea from the land of Canaan, and condemn your act of leaving them as illegitimate; but go, Ezekiel, and tell them that it was my doing to remove and scatter you, and that howsoever they

The word may be truly preached to those who are no church, and the seals administered to those who are a false church, as at this time circumcision and the passover. Ordinances are lost and maintenance of the church rather than marks of it.

There can be no true succession without true doctrine. Stapleton.

The Saracens are from Hagar and Abraham, though for honour they choose to be called from Sarah; yet these are not the true church.

look upon this act of mine, as a certain token of my vengeance upon you, and tending to your utter destruction, yet let them know that they are mistaken, and that I am a Father of mercies, and will be a sanctuary unto you in Babylon, and have deserted them at Jerusalem, that the glory is departed thence and come to you. Go, declare this for their terror, and the comfort of you captives.

The words in the verse are most of them plain and easy, only those must be opened, "I will be a little sanctuary;" for there is some difficulty about them, being variously interpreted. Sanctuary, מקדש the word whence mikdas comes, is sometimes used in Scripture for cleansing and sanctifying, as 2 Sam. xi. 4, "She was purified from her uncleanness," והיא טהרה מקדשה hence some render the word here in sanctificationem; thus, I will be to you for a little sanctification: I will purge and cleanse them, this captivity shall be ignis expurgatorius unto them, seventy years they shall be in the fire, and after that they shall come forth, as a refiner's vessel well purified from its dross, be restored to their land, have a new temple, and pure worship. So the Vulgate hath it, in sanctificationem medicam; Jerom also takes it in this sense. In Babylon I will sanctify them, divorce them from their idols, turn them from their idolatry, that they may worship me purely; and it is observed, they never fell to idolatry more, after their return from the Babylonish captivity.

In this sense it affords us this note, The Lord doth sanctify and purge his people by sharp and long afflictions. They had greatly defiled themselves with the sins of the nations, and especially with idolatry, and now he threw them into the furnace of affliction, to melt and separate the dross and tin from them. Some conceive that in Isa. i. 25, refers to this Babylonish captivity, "I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin." Sennacherib's coming did only scare them; Nebuchadnezzar's carrying them away and keeping them for many years in Babylon was the means, through God's blessing, to sanctify them. God's hottest and fiery trials are to purge, Dan. xi. 35; God purges the iniquity of Jacob by affliction, Isa. xxvii. 9; and it is all the fruit he gives in it, to take away his sin, not to take away his limbs, or life, but his sin. When the seraphim touch Isaiah's lips with a burning coal, it was terrible to him; but then he said, "Thy iniquity is taken away, thy sin is purged." Others take the word as here it is rendered, "sanctuary;" and so it is frequently used in the Scripture, as Jer. xvii. 12; Lam. ii. 7; Ezek. ix. 6. The Septuagint reads it, ἱερούαι αὐτοῖς εἰς ἁγίασμα, in sanctuarium, so Kerker, not in sanctificationem; and Suidas interprets ἁγίασμα, templum; and so Vatablus renders it, mikdas, and Montanus, sanctuarium; so Junius, Piscator, and Polanins. Castalio hath it thus, Ero eis fontem, I will be to them a temple, a sanctuary; and this sense fits the condition of the captives: for,

1. The inhabitants of Jerusalem reproached them for going into Babylon, and looked on them as having nothing to do with the temple, God, or his worship, "Get you far from the Lord;" against this evil God comforts them, and saith, "I will be a sanctuary unto you," whatever your brethren think or say.

2. The captives wept to think of their condition. Psal. cxxxvii. 1, "By the rivers of Babylon there we sat down; yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion." When they called to mind what a glorious temple they had, what solemn assemblies there, what precious ordinances, and comforts they found therein, and now saw themselves destitute of all, they wept. For their consolation, saith God, "I will be a sanctuary unto you;" and whatever benefit you found by the saints at Jerusalem, you shall find in me.

(1.) The sanctuary was a place of refuge and defence, quasi sancta tueri, a place to defend holy things, for such things were laid up in sanctuaries. The Greeks call it ασυλον, from αλφα, a particle privative, and σπλῶω, to spoil, rob, take away; for a sanctuary was deemed a privileged place, from whence no thing, or person, might be taken away without sacrilege. Upon this ground Joab fled to the tabernacle of the Lord, 1 Kings ii. 28, and took hold of the horns of the altar. Moses had his cities of refuge; and in reference to these, many princes appointed sanctuaries to be privileged places, that those who fled to them might be secure. And this land heretofore abounded with such places; churches, churchyards, and other places were privileged, so that if felons or traitors did flee to them, they were sheltered for forty days, in which time they were to confess their fault, and to submit to banishment, taking an oath of abjuration; and during these forty days no man might take them thence, without danger of excommunication, or irregularity: in this time any might feed them; after the forty days, if their wives fed them, or gave them any sustenance, it was felony. This law was made by king Edward the Confessor, grounded upon the law of Moses, and reverence he bare to holy places. God would be a sanctuary to him in this sense; Isa. viii. 13, 14, "Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; let him be your fear, and your dread. And he shall be for a sanctuary," that is, for a defence unto you. Jer. xlii. 11, "Be not afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid; be not afraid of him, saith the Lord: for I am with you to save you, and to deliver you from his hand;" here God was a sanctuary unto them. The three children, when the fiery furnace was heated so hot, and cast into it, found God a sanctuary unto them.

(2.) In it they had God's special presence. Hence Zion, where the temple stood, was called the habitation and rest of God, Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14. Hence God's goings and ways are said to be in the sanctuary, Psal. lxxvii. 13; lxxviii. 24; and David professeth he had seen God in the sanctuary, Psal. lxxiii. 2. God would be a sanctuary to them in this sense, they should have his special presence; he had left the temple at Jerusalem, the glory was gone, and now he was with them in Babylon. Ezekiel had the heavens opened to him by the river Chebar, saw visions of God, God did manifest himself in a special manner to him, and to Daniel even in Babylon. God had no church elsewhere, and now he was with his people there, and calls them his flock four times in one verse, Ezek. xxxiv. 8, and twelve times his flock in the whole chapter.

(3.) Acceptance in the temple and sanctuary. Their persons and prayers were accepted there: hence was it that they frequented the temple so much for prayer, Acts iii. 1; Luke xviii. 10; and that David intimates, Psal. xx. 3, that the offerings and sacrifices in the temple were accepted; "He heard my voice out of his temple," Psal. xviii. 6. So Jer. vi. 20, when they had corrupted the worship of God, he tells them there, burnt-offerings were not acceptable, nor their sacrifices sweet; before they were; and the prophecy is, Isa. lx. 7, that they shall come with acceptance to God's altar: where his altar was settled, there was the acceptance. This they had likewise in Babylon: when Daniel made his prayer to God for himself and his people, chap. ix. Gabriel comes and tells him, he was greatly beloved of God, a man of desires. So when Mordecai and Esther fasted, their persons and prayers were regarded, accepted in Babylon.

(4.) Encouragement and help. Psal. xx. 2, help came from the sanctuary, and strength from Zion: "Strength and beauty are in his sanctuary," Psal. xxvi. 6: there they had counsel to direct them, ordinances to sanctify them, and promises to comfort them. These they should not want in Babylon. God would be to them such a sanctuary as should afford them help; therefore he stirred up the spirit of Jeremiah to write to the captives, and to counsel them what to do: Jer. xxix. 5—7, "Build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them; take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there, and not diminished. And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace." And God gave them prophets in Babylon, Ezekiel, and Daniel, by whom he counselled them from time to time; some ordinances they had: what they wanted, God made up himself, being a special sanctuary unto them. He also made Babylon an ordinance to cleanse them: and for promises they had many, divers in this chapter and others, as xxxiv. xxxvi.: which is full of sweet, gracious, and comforting promises.

Though they had no material temple to worship God in, yet God would sanctify them, and give them grace to worship him with an inward fear.

"A little sanctuary." קטן Some take this word adverbially, and render it paulisper: so Polanus, Junius, and Castalio: God would be a sanctuary to them a little time: and so to point out the shortness of the time they should be in Babylon, and thereby to comfort them against their captivity: seventy years was not long, and all that time they should have God a sanctuary.

Others take the word adjectively, sanctuarium parvum, or modicum; so Montanus, Piscator, the Vulgate, and the French. Why this expression is laid down, "a little sanctuary," we must inquire.

1. In opposition to that they had at Jerusalem. That was very beautiful, rich, and glorious, set in ivory, Ezek. vii. 20, eyed of all, resorted unto by all the Jews, and famous throughout the earth; God would be a temple to them, but not such a material, conspicuous temple. You think upon that great glorious temple, are troubled for it; I will be a little temple to you.

2. Little, in regard of the paucity that were there: You are but a few, and a little temple will suffice you; Vatablus hath it, templum paucorum, and Calvin, sanctuarium paucitatis. Many fell to the ways of the heathens: being mingled with them, they learned their ways, and served their gods; few were godly.

3. In regard of the hidden virtue, power, and goodness conveyed unto them, which Babylonish eyes saw not. They thought their God had wholly forsaken them, did nothing for them: but he was an invisible, spiritual, wonderful, and strange sanctuary unto them, all which was little to that they had in their own land, there they had mercy more openly and more plentifully.

"Will I be." עני Et fui, I have been a little sanctuary, and will be. Psal. lxi. 11, "I became a proverb unto them;" the word is Fuachi, I have been; it is future, yet rendered in the preter tense: and so much it showeth here, that God had been, and would be, a sanctuary to his people in Babylon.

Obs. 1. The harsh dealing of wicked and corrupt men with the godly, occasions God to give out comfortable truths and promises unto them. They at Jerusalem, that were very evil, said, "Get you far from the Lord: unto us is this land given in possession.

Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord," &c. Because they spake so bitter, therefore God speaks so comfortably: because they rejected them, denied them to have to do with God, or the land, therefore God receives them, tells them he will be a sanctuary unto them. When others beat the child, the parents' bowels yearn, especially if unjustly, and show the more kindness. When Rabshakeh railed against Hezekiah, God's people, and blasphemed, from thence did the Lord take occasion to signify by Isaiah, to Hezekiah and the rest, things very comfortable: 2 Kings xix. 6, "Thus saith the Lord, Be not afraid of the words which thou hast heard, with which the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me. Behold, I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land." God took a rise from the enemies' blasphemies, and rough proceedings against his people, to give in promises of mercy to his, and of destruction to them. When the enemy had dealt barbarously with Rachel, slain and captived her children, and she refused to be comforted, because they were not, hereupon the Lord steps in, and saith, "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy:" because they have destroyed thy children, therefore will I give thee children, because they are scattered abroad, therefore they shall return. When the Pharisees had cast out the blind man, Jesus sought him out, found him, and told him who he was, John ix. 35; and Isa. lxvi. 5, when their brethren that hated them cast them out, then was the gracious promise given in; "He shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed." Ill manners occasion good laws, and rough dealings have drawn forth sweet promises.

Obs. 2. Afflictions, be they of what nature soever, are the acts of God. They were deprived of their country, all their comforts there, they were in a sad captivity, mingled along the heathen; but who did this? was it their own act? the Babylonians or any others? No, the Lord takes it upon himself; I have cast them afar off, I have scattered them: it was his counsel, power, and providence did it, whoever were the instruments. The Scripture denies afflictions to be from beneath, they spring not out of the dust, the root of them is not in the earth, Job v. 6, but in heaven; it therefore attributes all of them to God; Micah i. 12, "Evil came down from the Lord unto the gate of Jerusalem." It is evil indefinitely, whatever evil came nigh that city, it came from the Lord, he created it, he sent it: and not only what was without the city, but all in the city; Amos iii. 6, "Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it? It is an interrogation, and vehemently affirms that all is the work of God. Men take not notice of the hand of God in affliction, and therefore the Lord is oft brought in and presented as the true and only author of them. The instruments are eyed by us, and we are vexed at them, and greatly perplex ourselves, that creatures of the same rank and condition we are in should harm us and afflict us; but did we see the Lord in all, it would quiet and still our spirits; whatever the agents were, God would have us to take notice of this: Isa. xlv. 6, 7, "That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none beside me. I am the Lord, and there is none else. I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things;" man doth none of them.

Obs. 3. God is mindful of his threats, and faithful in performing of them. He had long before, in the days of Moses, told them, that if they sinned against him, they should be plucked off the land they possessed, and be scattered among the heathen, Deut. xxviii. 63, 64; Lev. xxvi. 33; and see it here performed, "I have cast them out, I have scattered them among the countries." God is not forgetful of what he hath threatened against sinners, he hath his times to fulfil his threats, though some thousand years after. There is a prophetic threat in Hag. ii. 22, which it is probable that the Lord is now thinking of, and fulfilling; "I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother." Some interpret this place of Zerubbabel literally, and some shaking of heaven and earth was then, some great changes were made; but the most interpret it of Zerubbabel mystical, of Christ and his kingdom; so Deodate takes it. God, for the advance of his church under the gospel, will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, all power and greatness that is against the kingdom of his Son; and how shall it be done? by wars, mostly by civil wars, "Every one by the sword of his brother." God, in his wise providence, shall stir up kingdoms and kings one against another, and they shall break themselves and each other in pieces, that his truth and faithfulness may be seen.

Obs. 4. Afflictions are not always arguments of divine hatred. God had cast them afar off, and scattered them among the countries; this the inhabitants of Jerusalem took to be an argument of God's hatred, that he had forsaken them, that now they were none of his people: they conceived such great judgments upon them could not stand with God's love; but the Lord's thoughts differ from man's; he looked upon them as his people, as the true church, as dearer to him than they at Jerusalem, as those he would be a sanctuary unto. If great afflictions were arguments of the Lord's hatred and wrath, then Noah, Job, and Daniel were hated of God, they had exceeding great affliction. Noah saw a world drowned; Job had all plucked from him, his friends and wife against him, yea God also in appearance; Daniel was a captive, cast into the lions' den; yet how dear were these to the Lord! Noah, God accepted his sacrifice, Gen. viii. 21; blessed him, chap. ix. 1; made a covenant with him, ver. 8, 9. So Job, how doth God justify him; chap. xlii. 7, "Ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath:" Job was God's servant, spoke what was right of God; Job must pray for his three friends, him God will accept; God gave Job twice as much as he had before. And Daniel was a man greatly beloved, Dan. ix. 23. Christ was a man of sorrows, yet the man in whom God's soul delighted, Isa. xlii. 1. Afflictions are arguments of love; Prov. iii. 12, "Whom the Lord loveth he correcteth, even as a father the son in whom he delighteth." God loves not affliction, but he loves his children, and his bowels cause him to correct: it were cruelty, not love, in a father, that would suffer his child to die for want of a little physic: if physic will do a child good, a loving parent will be at any cost that way. Take heed how you censure those that suffer; afflictions are not always wounds of an enemy, but arguments of love, especially when they break the stubbornness and pride of our hearts, purge out our pollutions, cause us to seek the face of God, quicken our endeavours after more holiness, cause us to mind the things of eternity more, make the word and Christ more sweet and precious to the soul, really and seriously.

Obs. 5. Whatever others think or say of God's people, whithersoever they are driven, whatsoever they lose or suffer, God will be a little sanctuary unto them. These men were hardly thought of, yea rejected and condemned of those at Jerusalem, carried captive into Babylon, they had lost all country comforts, city privileges, temple-ordinances, estates, and liberties; they had hard bondage. When they were yet now in this case, God was a sanctuary unto them, he preserved them, vouchsafed them his presence, accepted their persons and prayers, gave them counsel, sanctified and comforted them; he was a special sanctuary unto them, and instead of all ordinances. Take "sanctuary" for the land of Canaan, as some think it is taken, Exod. xv. 17, God would be a land of Canaan to them; or take it for sanctification, as some do here and in Psal. cxiv. 2, God would be their sanctification; or take it for heaven, as it is Psal. cii. 19, God would be a heaven unto them. However the Jews in Babylon appeared in the world, either to them in Zion or Babylon, they were glorious in the eye of God, and he calls them his glory, and would be a sanctuary unto them. This should afford comfort unto those who are deprived of ordinances, estates, liberties, friends, countries, and suffer very hard and sharp things; if they be godly, God will be a sanctuary unto them. Our brethren that were driven out into other parts of the world, hath not God been a sanctuary unto them? and hath he not always been a sanctuary unto us, and a stone of stumbling unto others, and for a rock of offence? If God hath been a sanctuary to defend us, to afford us his presence, to accept of our persons and prayers, to send us help, counsel, comfort, deliverance, let us sanctify this God himself in our heart, make him our dread and fear, and he will still be a sanctuary unto us: Psal. cxxxix. 2, "Lift up your hands in the sanctuary, and bless the Lord."

Obs. 6. There is no place can hinder God from taking care of, and showing kindness unto, his people. They were in Babylon, a profane, polluted land, they were scattered up and down in the countries thereof, and yet God was a sanctuary unto them, and said he would be so in the countries where they should come. When they were in Egypt, God was a sanctuary to them there, and now in Babylon. Acts x. 34, 35, "God is no respecter of persons" or places; "but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." God's people fear him, and work righteousness: wherever they are cast, if into strange nations, as these Jews; if into the dungeon, as Jeremiah; into the bottom of the sea, as Jonah; if into the fiery furnace, as the three children; lions' den, as Daniel, God is a sanctuary to them. Let a man be godly, and he shall have not only protection, but praise of God, Rom. ii. 29.

Ver. 17. Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God; I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel.

They at Jerusalem had vindicated the land to themselves, "To us is this land given," and so cut off the captives from hope of having any part in that land. This was questionless a great affliction to their spirits, and therefore the Lord bids the prophet tell them that, as he would be a sanctuary to them in Babylon, so he would gather them out of Babylon, bring them back to Canaan, and give them that land in possession, which the others unjustly challenged to themselves. In the former verse he spake to them at Jerusalem, in this he speaks to the captives.

"I will even gather you." Castalio, convocabo; the Septuagint, ἐπιστρέψω αὐτοὺς ἐκ τῶν ἐθνῶν, I will receive, or undertake, to bring them out of the nations; the Hebrew word יקבצתי congregabo vos, from קבץ which is properly spoken, de redispersa, to gather that which is dispersed, men or other things; and these being dispersed among the nations, God saith he will congregate them. The Jews' prayer was in the time of their dispersion, Congrega nos de populis quo dispersisti nos, We are now no body, we have no face of a state or church, gather us into a body, make us a commonwealth, a church again. This is the thing God hath promised them.

"Assemble you out of," &c. The Hebrew is אספתי I will add you out of those countries; and here it is spoken of those who were scattered; which I observe, because Buxtorf, showing the difference between kabats and asaph, saith, asaph is, de re non dispersa; and so doth Leigh out of him, in his Critica Sacra: but both kabats, and asaph here, refer to the Jews, who were scattered amongst the Babylonians; and the Vulgate renders it, adunabo, I will unite you and make you one body.

"I will give you the land of Israel." "The land of Israel" is not oft mentioned save in this prophecy, only nine times before it, and not after it at all, in the Old Testament, and but twice in the New, Matt. ii. 20, 21. In Ezekiel it is mentioned twenty times; in wrath, when it refers to those who were yet in it; in mercy, when it refers to those who were captives, or enemies insulting at the ruin of it, as you may see, Ezek. xii. 19; xxxvi. 6; xxv. 3, 6.

Why it is said, "the land of Israel," rather than the land of Judah, whenas it was called the land of Judah before it was called the land of Israel, (for we read in Moses's days it was called the land of Judah, Deut. xxxiv. 2, and the land of Israel first in Samuel's days, 1 Sam. xiii. 19,) is inquirable. The land of Judah is a restrictive term, and includes only what belonged to the tribe of Judah, of which you may read, Josh. xv. 1—4. But the land of Israel is a comprehensive term, containing all the tribes which came out of the loins of Israel; so that hereby he gives them to understand, that they should not enjoy a piece of the holy land again, but the whole, all that the twelve tribes had.

The land of Israel was a choice land, "A land that flowed with milk and honey," Deut. xxvi. 15; "a land of corn and wine, bread and vineyards," Isa. xxxvi. 17; a land of brooks, fountains, springs, vines, fig trees, pomegranates, oil, and honey, a land of plenty, wherein they should want nothing, Deut. viii. 7—9; a land given of God, Deut. iv. 1; the desire and glory of all lands, Ezek. xx. 6, because it was the land of Immanuel, Isa. viii. 8; God's holy habitation, Exod. xv. 13; the type of heaven, and therefore called the land of the living, Psal. xxvii. 13. This land of Israel God puts them in mind of, the loss of which, as it begat deep sighing in their souls, so the hope of repossessing it revived them not a little. God had given them this land once before; through their sin they had lost it, but now God would give it them again, and doubly engage them by a second deed of gift. This people were now captives, and their sins had oft captivated them, after they had kings. Of their first captivity you may read, 2 Kings xv. 29, which was by Tiglath-pileser: a second by Shalmaneser, 2 Kings xvii. 6; a third by Sennacherib, 2 Kings xviii. 13: a fourth by the captains of the host of the king of Assyria, who carried Manasseh into Babylon, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14; a fifth by Pharaoh-nechoh, 2 Kings xxiii. 33, 34; a sixth and seventh, by Nelmehadnezzar, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 5, 6; 2 Kings xxiv. 10—12; 2 Kings xxv. 7. Thus was this people oft brought low, carried into other lands from that "good land" of Israel, as it is called, Deut. iv. 21. And you shall hardly find that any of the preceding captivities had a promise of returning them again before this; but here God graciously tells them, he would gather them out of the countries and bring them back to Jerusalem.

Quest. 1. By whom did the Lord gather them, bring them to this land again?

Ans. By three men especially, whose names are very observable, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Zerubbabel. Ezra signifieth a helper, and he was a special helper of them, under God, out of Babylon, Ezra vii. 6. Nehemiah is, The consolation of the Lord, and he brought divine consolation unto them, Nehem. ii. 18: and was as a god amongst them in conveying and comforting them many ways, as you may observe in the book which bears his name. Zerubbabel is, as Jerom will have it, נְרִיָּה Iste princeps in Babylone; and he that could bring this people out of such a country and condition they were in, had need to be a mighty prince, and so was he; therefore Zech. iv. 7, no mountainous strength of devils or wicked men could stand before him: others interpret it, one repugnant to confusion; and so he was, he led the people orderly out of that confused place and condition they were in, even unto the holy land, and divine order they had formerly enjoyed there; and thus Ventilator babel, The fanner of confusion, or זרע כבבל Fluvius Babylonis, he brake down the bank of captivity, and made way for the stream to flow from Babylon to Zion.

Quest. 2. The promise here being made to the captives in Babylon that were brought thither with Jeconiah, whether had they any benefit of it that were now at Jerusalem, and afterwards carried captive with Zedekiah into Babylon?

Ans. Some think none of the captives with Zedekiah returned, or had any benefit of this promise; and the reason I find given is, because few returned; but there may more be said for it.

1. The promise was not made to them at Jerusalem, but to the captives in Babylon at that time.

2. We find many excepted from entering into the land of Israel after the captivity. Ezek. xiii. 9, the false prophets are excluded the land of Israel; and Ezek. xx. 38, "The rebels," God saith, "shall not enter into the land of Israel;" and who were the rebels, but those who refused to go with Jeconiah, who stayed at Jerusalem, and sinned greatly against God, and therefore are oft called the "rebellious house," the "rebellious nation," chap. ii. God saith, he would plead with them as he did with their fathers in the wilderness when they came out of Egypt, and there they died, only two of them entered into Canaan.

3. That chapter in Jeremiah of the good and bad figs, speaks to this business: it is the 24th of Jeremiah; where the good figs are interpreted of Jeconiah and his captives: God saith, he will acknowledge them, set his eyes upon them for good, bring them again to the land, and plant them in it, &c. ver. 5—7. The evil figs are interpreted of Zedekiah and his captives, and them God will deliver into all the kingdoms of the earth for hurt, to be a reproach, a proverb, a taunt, and a curse in all places.

Others conceive, that some of Zedekiah's captives returned to the land of Israel, and the grounds given are these:

(1.) In the 9th chapter some were marked that were godly, and these being preserved and carried away, it is not probable they should be shut out from interest in that gracious promise, "I will gather you, and give you the land of Israel:" whoever were denied the land, not the godly.

(2.) Cyrus's decree was not restrictive, but any Jew might return; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 23, "Who is there among you of all the Lord's people? The Lord his God be with him, and let him go up:" Cyrus gave liberty to any or all to go.

(3.) I shall add one thing, and it is that in Jer. xxxi. 8, "A great company shall return thither;" above forty thousand, as you may read, Neh. vii. 66, 67. And it is probable that some of them were of those that Nebuchadnezzar brought with Zedekiah into Babylon.

Quest. 3. Whether the gathering and deliverance of the church out of Babylon be typical, and a resemblance of the spiritual gathering and deliverance of the church in time of the gospel; whether they refer to Christ or not?

Ans. Those great deliverances out of Egypt and Babylon had something in them representative of the church's deliverance by Christ. Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar point out Satan, that held the gentiles, and antichrist, that held the christians in bondage, till Christ, as Moses and Zerubbabel, did deliver them. Their coming out of Egypt refers to the time of Christ and the gospel, if you compare Hos. xi. 1, with Matt. ii. 15. And for the Babylonish deliverance referring to Christ, consider Ezek. xxxiv. 12—14, where the Lord speaks of gathering and bringing his people from the countries where they have been scattered, to the mountains of Israel: and then in ver. 23, 24, "I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and be their shepherd. I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them." This one Shepherd, this David, this Prince, was Christ, as is generally agreed upon by interpreters; and John x. 11, Christ tells them he is "the good Shepherd," namely, that one and only Shepherd spoken of in Ezekiel. That of Rachel weeping for her children, when they went into captivity, Jer. xxxi. 15, referred to the time of the gospel, and had its fulfilling then, Matt. ii. 17, 18, and why their coming out should not also have reference to deliverances under the gospel by Christ.

I see not. Some interpret those words Maldon. Tollet. of Isa. lxi. 1, 2, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives;" &c. to be meant literally of the Babylonish captivity; and you know how the Lord Christ, Luke iv. 21, saith, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."

Obs. 1. The Lord's eye is upon his people, he takes notice of them wherever they are: let them be in Babylon, in the several countries thereof, he observes them. Fathers, when their children are scattered here and there, cannot take any notice of them, they are out of their sight: it is not so with God; let his children be among heathens, as now the Jews were, among lions, as Daniel was, among waters and fishes, as Jonah was; let them be where or in what condition soever, he sees them, observes, considers them: Prov. xv. 3, "The eyes of the Lord are in every place;" not of some one country, as Judea, Egypt, Babylon, but in every place of the world; 2 Chron. xvi. 9, "His eyes run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him:" God's eyeing of his people is not a bare intuition, but in order to their assistance, to do them good, to put out strength from them.

Obs. 2. In low and miserable conditions, God sends in hope and help. They were now stripped naked of all their comforts, amidst barbarians, in a servile, sinking condition, saw no likelihood of bettering their condition, being under the hand of a potent and severe adversary; yet now hope and help comes in; I will gather you, you that are captives, desolate, more low and miserable than ever you were, even you will I gather: thus God lets in comfort to them in their comfortable estate; and it is God's way to do so. When the Israelites cried in Egypt by reason of their bondage; when they were sorely afflicted, saith the text, God heard them, remembered them, looked upon them, and had respect unto them, Exod. ii. 24, 25; and in the next chapter, he appears to Moses, tells him he had seen their affliction, knew their sorrows, and was come to deliver them, ver. 7, 8. When people are outwardly or inwardly low, it is God's method frequently, if not constantly, to afford relief: Psal. cxvi. 6, "I was brought low, and he helped me:" he was low in Saul's days, low in Absalom's, but the Lord helped him. When power is gone from a people, and none to be found, in public or private, to help a people, then are they in an afflicted, miserable condition; yet then God affords help, Deut. xxxii. 36. So Neh. ix. 27, "In the time of their trouble, when they cried unto thee, thou heardest them from heaven; and according to thy manifold mercies thou gavest them saviours." When the Jews were brought low by Haman, and at the borders of death all of them, God appeared in Esther, Ahasuerus, turned the storm upon Haman himself, and helped the Jews in that strait.

Obs. 3. Things which are hard and seem impossible to flesh and blood, are easy unto God. How difficult was it to the judgment of those captives to conceive a return! they were far from Jerusalem, the journey long and dangerous; they at Jerusalem had rejected them; they were under a mighty tyrant, the terror of nations; they were scattered in several places, employed to servile work, for the profit, pleasure of the Chaldeans, as digging in their mines, ploughing of their fields, dressing of their vines; if they should stir to get away, the king had command of a hundred and twenty-seven provinces, and could presently raise forces to fetch them back, or cut them off, &c. These and such like thoughts made it seem difficult, if not impossible to them, that they should ever return again to Jerusalem; but the Lord would gather them; it was an easy act to him, no more than a shepherd gathering of his flock into the fold: he whistles or sends out his dog, and presently they all run into his fold; so when God spake the word, moved the heart of Cyrus, he made a proclamation for the Jews to go up to Jerusalem, and presently it was done. In Ezek. xxxvii. 11, you may read the Jews' apprehensions of their condition; they say, "Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; we are cut off for our parts." They thought themselves like dead and dry bones that lie in the bowels or on the face of the earth, without hope of life, or ever returning into their own land; but by the parable of the dry bones, which at a word of prophecy were enlivened, raised, and made a great army, God showed what he could easily do, in things seeming to man impossible; and he applies it to them, ver. 12, "Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel:" they conceived it as impossible for them to repossess their country, as for a dead man to live; but it was easy with God. There is nothing too hard for God; he could bring a great nation out of Sarah's dead womb, Gen. xviii. 14; and Jer. xxxii. 27, God tells them that he is "the Lord, the God of all flesh;" and then asks them this question, "Is there any thing too hard for me?" Did I not bring you out of Egypt, led you through the Red sea, through the wilderness, set you in the pleasant land, and can I not bring you back into it, though scattered up and down in Babylon? Ver. 37, "Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger; and will bring them again to this place, and cause them to dwell safely." Luke xviii. 27, "Things impossible with men are possible with God."

Obs. 4. Lands and countries are the Lord's, to dispose of to whom he pleases. "I will give you the land of Israel." "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein," Psal. xxiv. 1; and he disposes of the kingdoms thereof, Psal. cxv. 16, "The earth hath he given to the children of men;" there is not a son of man which hath any spot of earth, or kingdom in the world, but the Lord gave it him. He rules in the kingdoms of men; he takes them away, and gives them to whom he will, Dan. iv. 31, 32. He is God of all the kingdoms of the earth, Isa. xxxvii. 16; and Cyrus acknowledged that God had given them all to him, Ezra i. 2; being the Lord's, he may justly dispose of them as seems good to himself. This land of Israel was possessed by Canaan, the son of Ham, and called the land of Canaan; but his posterity, for their wickedness, were cast out of it, Lev. xviii. 25; and then God gave it to the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, whose name was changed to Israel, and thence his posterity were called Israelites, and so this the land of Israel; but they, through their idolatry and oppression, forfeited this land, and now God had given it into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, after they had possessed it eight hundred and fifty years. Sin thrusts people out of their country, and robs them of their rights and privileges; and had not God given them this land again, they had had little or no right to it. God gave it to Abraham when the Canaanites had it, and he gives it to the Israelites when the Chaldeans had it.

Obs. 5. The afflictions of the church, though great and grievous, yet have their period. Now Israel was in Babylon, their country, city, temple, ordinances, public worship, were gone; they were amidst idolaters, profane, blasphemous persons, in a polluted place, which was very sad; yet this condition should have an end, God would gather them out from Babylon, into the holy and pleasant land, where they should enjoy choice mercies again. "God will not always chide, neither keep his anger for ever," Psal. ciii. 9. Here, at the beginning of their captivity, God's heart was relenting, and he laid in this gracious promise, to refresh them. Man, when he is offended, is not only angry, but bears grudges in his heart, seeks revenge, and the ruin of them who have wronged him, as Haman, Mordecai and the Jews; but it is not so with God, he may be angry for seventy years, but that is not always, for ever. Isa. liv. 7, 8, it was but a moment, a small moment, and the wrath was but a little, as he calls it there; because God was a sanctuary unto them all the time, and made them gracious promises at the beginning. So then you may answer the question made, Jer. iii. 5, "Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end?" No; God is gracious, and will not always be wrath.

Ver. 18. And they shall come thither, and they shall take away all the detestable things thereof and all the abominations thereof from thence.

God doth not only promise them that they shall return to their own land, but also tells them what they shall do there, "take away the detestable things and abominations thereof."

"Detestable things." The Septuagint renders it, and so the word for abomination, βεβήματα. Vulgate, omnes offensiones: Calvin, omnia idola; and idols are detestable things, as I showed when I opened chap. v. 11. One thing I shall add, and that is, שקצים here rendered "detestable" by our translators, is the same word in Dan. ix. 27; xii. 11, where it is translated "abominations;" and Matt. xxiv. 15, βέβηλα τῆς ἱερουσόλας, which some interpret of the Roman soldiers, profaning the temple with blood and brutish actions; others of antichrist, sitting in the temple, and worshipped as God; and others of idols, brought in and set up there.

"Abominations." Flagitia; Castalio. This word was largely opened in chap. v. 9. Notorious sins of all kinds are called in the Scripture sense, abominations, things to be abhorred: so Rom. ii. 22, ὁ βεβήσομενος τὰ εἰδωλα, "Thou that abhorrest idols." Idols and idolatries are abominable, 1 Pet. iv. 3.

Obs. 1. What the Lord promises, that shall be performed. He had said in the former verse, "I will give them the land of Israel," and here he saith, "They shall come thither:" what obstructions soever may be in the way, what power soever opposes, yet the Lord having promised it, he would make it good. God is gracious in promising, faithful in keeping promise, and powerful in performing his promises. You may see it made good, Ezra i. 1, 3; God stirred up the spirit of Cyrus to make a proclamation for the Jews to go to their own land, and then he stirred up the spirits of the people to go, ver. 5; their spirits were down, they were heartless and hopeless, many of them, but God raised their spirits, to go up to Jerusalem; the word is העיר העגילת, suscitavit, they were asleep, and God deals with them as we with sleepy men; they had their objections, but God took them all away, and raised their spirits above all difficulties, and caused them to hasten to their country, and the work he had for them. God hath promised a new Jerusalem, that he will dwell with men, and be their God, wipe away all tears from their eyes, that there shall be no more death, sorrow, crying, pain, Rev. xxi. 2—4; that the nations of those who are saved shall walk in the light of that city; that kings shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it; that only those which are written in the Lamb's book shall enter: this will be a glorious time, God hath promised it, he is faithful and able to perform it.

Obs. 2. When judgments and mercies are sanctified to a people, they will produce answerable effects. They had sore judgments in Babylon, for seventy years; and when they were brought out of that furnace into this pleasant land, which was a great deliverance, when they were come thither, what should they do? "Take away the detestable things, the abominations thereof." The fruit of that affliction, and the deliverance out of it, evidenced that their judgments and mercies were sanctified.

(1.) They repented of their idolatry and sinful practices, which had laid the land waste; which is supposed in the words. They would never have taken away the detestable things, had not their hearts been broken for them.

(2.) They reform when they come into the land, they "take away the detestable things;" they are bitter against their master-sin, and serve it as it served them. Their detestable things had taken them away out of the land, Jer. xlv. 22, and they fall upon the detestable things presently, and take them away, and what else they apprehended offended God; not only idols did they take away, but reformed also the marriage of strange wives, Ezra x. in point of usury, Neh. v. and profaning of the sabbath, Neh. xii.

(3.) They show themselves sincere in it; they spare none, but take away all detestable things, all abominations, Josh. xxiv. 14. It is sincerity to put away false gods, and especially all of them.

(4.) They endeavour to worship God purely, without any corruptions or mixtures of their own. They put away all detestable things, all abominations, they laboured to have only what was divine, and so what was pleasing to God. They would not come to God with any impurities, but in pure worship. As Jacob, Gen. xxxv. 2—4, when he was to go up to Bethel, he took all their strange gods, their earrings, and what might be occasion of sinning that way, and buried them under the oak out of sight, and cleansed himself and family, and would serve God, not with any mongrel but with pure worship; so was it here. When it is thus, it is an argument that judgments and deliverances are sanctified, that mercies are well bestowed, and well enjoyed. When corrections and mercies stir us up to repent, reform, to deal sincerely with God, and to worship him purely, it is evident they came from God's love, and are sanctified unto us.

Ver. 19. And I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh.

In the former verses you heard opened sundry sweet promises of God, made to his people; he would be a sanctuary to them in Babylon, bring them thence to Zion, purify them from the pollutions in their own land, all which were gracious; but here he exceeds all given in before: those promises concerned their outward conditions chiefly, but these their inward and spiritual estate only. Some make this verse to contain the covenant of grace which God made with his people Israel, whom he had chosen above any people in the world, but they forsook him, fell to idolatry, and were now justly made captive for their sin, suffered much among their enemies; and here God enters into a gracious covenant with them, and promises great things unto them. In the words consider.

1. The party promising; "I, I, I."
2. The things promised; (1.) "One heart." (2.) "A new spirit." (3.) Taking away the "stony heart." (4.) "Heart of flesh."
3. The persons to whom; "them."
4. The manner of conveying these, and it is expressed by giving, putting, taking.

"One heart." The Septuagint is ἑτεραν καρδιαν, another heart; they mistaking the Hebrew ל for ר take the word אשר for אשר and so fell into that error, which is not great; for one heart was another heart than that they had. The Hebrew is אשר לב one heart.

"Heart." By it here we may understand,
1. The judgment or understanding; so it is taken, Eph. iv. 18; heart and understanding are the same there.

2. For the will and affections; so Prov. xxiii. 26; Matt. xxii. 37.

3. For the conscience; so it is taken, I John iii. 20. "One," is taken in the word,

1. For likeness: I Sam. vi. 4, "One plague was on you all;" that is, a like plague.

2. For sameness: 2 Cor. xi. 2, "I have espoused you to one husband;" Heb. x. 14, "By one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." One is put for the same in both places.

3. For that which is united and makes one: Gen. xi. 6, "Behold, the people is one;" they were united together as one man, in the building of Babel. We may understand all here, that God would unite them together as one man, give them likeness and sameness of heart.

Some think, by one heart is meant the mutual consent to hasten to Jerusalem to build the temple. As they were one people, of one language and spirit, in building Babel; so these should be one people, of one mind and language, in rebuilding Jerusalem. But if it should be confined to this sense, it were no spiritual mercy, and here God is promising spiritual mercies. This sense may be included, but there is something beyond it. We will inquire what heart was antecedently in this people, which will give us light for the better understanding of this oneness of heart.

(1.) They had a backsliding, apostatizing heart in them. I Kings xviii. 37, Elijah prays that their hearts may be turned back again. Jer. v. 23, "This people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart." Ezek. ii. 3, they are called "a rebellious nation;" and Ezek vi. 9, God saith he was "broken with their whorish heart," which departed from him. They went out from God to idols, and to false ways of worship; they walked after the imaginations of their hearts, after other gods, to serve and worship them, Jer. xiii. 10.

(2.) They had a slippery, unfaithful heart. Psal. lxxviii. 8, their "spirit was not stedfast with God," they were off and on, no certainty in them, but full of changes. Hence they are said to gad much about to change their way, Jer. ii. 36; and in Isa. xxiv. 5, to change the ordinances; and in Ezek. v. 6, to change God's "judgments into wickedness, more than the nations."

(3.) They had a deceitful, hypocritical heart. Isa. xlv. 20, "A deceived heart hath turned him aside;" and chap. x. 6, God calls them "an hypocritical nation:" they pretended love and obedience to God; but, Jer. iii. 10, Judah served God "feignedly," in falsehood, is the Hebrew; their hearts were deceitful, false.

(4.) They had a divided, froward, bitter heart. Hos. x. 2, "Their heart is divided;" God had a piece of it, and the world a piece, Ezek. xxxiii. 31, and their idols a piece, Ezek. xiv. 3. And it was contentious and froward; Isa. lvii. 17, "He went on frowardly in the way of his heart." They had divided hearts, divided tongues, and divided ways; Manasseh was against Ephraim, Ephraim against Manasseh, and both against Judah.

Now this one heart here mentioned, is opposite to all these.

[1.] God would give them "one heart," and that is, a heart which should be for himself, and not for idols; a heart which should not withdraw or turn back to any false ways, but cleave to himself only. After they came out of Babylon, they never could endure idols more, God had separated their hearts from them; and therefore upon their return, God promised they should take away all detestable things, ver. 18.

[2.] A heart faithful and stedfast, that should hold fast the things of God, and not be given to change. Hence, Jer. xxxii. 39, God saith, "I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever:" their heart shall be settled, fixed in my way, and never look out and wander after other ways.

[3.] An honest, sincere heart, free from hypocrisy, guile, and lying. Zech. viii. 3, "Jerusalem shall be called a city of truth:" the inside and outside should be the same; intentions, words, and actions should be correspondent.

[4.] A united, loving, peaceable heart. As they shall have one God, be firm to his way, and sincere in that way; so they shall have sweet communion together; strife, bitterness, division, shall not be found amongst them; Isa. lx. 18, "Violence shall no more be heard in the land." There should be much unity, much love, and mutual agreement between them; they should have but "one heart;" that is, one which is indivisum a se, and divisum ab omni alio; such a heart they should have, a heart undivided in itself, and divided from all things heterogeneous, and of a dividing nature: as God, he is one simply, absolutely, undivided in himself, and mostly divided from every thing differing from himself; Gal. iii. 20, "God is one," and one is opposed to many; so that they shall have "one heart," not many hearts.

This oneness of heart may be considered,

1. As respecting themselves: and so,

(1.) As it includes the judgment and affections; they shall not dissent and cross one the other, but when truth is in the understanding, the affections shall close with it. Ofttimes there is much truth in the heads of men, but no love to truth in their hearts: 2 Thess. ii. 10, "They received not the love of the truth;" the truth was revealed, made love to their souls, appeared very lovely and beautiful, but they had no love to it. John iii. 19, "Light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light;" their affections closed with their own lusts and errors; but it should be otherwise here, they should have a heart towards truth, not divided from truth.

(2.) As it comprehends the will and conscience; they shall not be one against another. Sometimes conscience dictates and tells men they must do or not do such things; and their wills carry them a wrong way: Rom. i. 32, their hearts told them that they who did such things as are there mentioned, were worthy of death, yet their wills carried them to do those things, and to delight in them. So in ver. 18, they who held the truth in unrighteousness, their consciences told them it was truth, and to be obeyed, but their wills were against obeying that truth; so that here was not one heart in them. Here the promise is, will and conscience shall be one.

(3.) As it looks at the intention and practice. Many men have one heart within, and another without, fair pretences, but foul intentions; their actions and hearts laid together, would confute one another; Herod pretends to worship Christ, but intends to murder him: but these should have "one heart" within and without; the same they should be, inwardly and outwardly, as Nathanael; no guile was in his spirit, in his lips, in his actions, but the same heart was in all: Col. iii. 23, "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily."

2. As respecting God. They should look at God as the only and adequate object of their heart, they should be content with him alone; they should not ask counsel, confide in, fetch comfort from, or worship any other; he only had made covenant with that people, and they should own him only for their God. Moses told them long before, that the Lord their God was one Lord, Deut. vi. 4; and Samuel told them they must serve him only, 1 Sam. vii. 3; and this could not be, unless their heart was one. David, who was a one-hearted man, said, Psal. lxxii. 5, "My soul, wait thou only upon God."

One heart in regard of his worship; that should be pure, unmixed, and one. Zech. xiv. 9, "In that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one:" by name, interpreters understand wor-ship, and that shall be one, and answerable shall be their hearts, Jer. xxxii. 39.

3. In respect of others.

(1.) Their judgment shall be one; they shall agree together in fundamentals, and substantial points of faith, though there be differences in circumstances, inferences, consequences, and points of inferior alloy; Phil. iv. 2, they should τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν, think the same thing, "be of the same mind."

(2.) Their affections towards one another. Acts iv. 32, "The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul;" by these words, "one heart and one soul," Beza understands, summa tum in doctrina tum in voluntatibus consensus, an agreement in sentiment as well as a union in will; and he tells us, that in the old copy he had, there were these words more added, καὶ οὐκ ἦν ἐν αὐτοῖς διακρίσις οὐδέμια, there was no difference or controversy amongst them, they were united in judgment and affections, they had common faith, and common affections; they believed the gospel, and loved Christ's truth, and one another dearly.

(3.) In their converse and practice together, they should be one-hearted. Acts ii. 46, "They continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart;" ἁφελόρητι καρτίας ἀφελως, Budæus interprets of men, sine litore, their hearts were without envy, or other evils; they were single. In this sense, chiefly, I conceive this one-heartedness is to be taken, the union and harmony of their judgments, affections, and practices in spiritual things.

Quest. 1. When was this performed?

Answe. Some think at their return from Babylon they were one-hearted, and united in their judgments, affections, and practices; and some phrases in Scripture import it: Ezra i. 5, "Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit God had raised, to go up to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem;" they had the same mind and affection to that good work, to build the house of the Lord: and chap. ii. 1, they came "every one unto his city." Chap. iii. 11, "All the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the Lord, because the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid:" and chap. vi. 16, "The children of Israel, the priests, and the Levites, and the rest of the children of the captivity, kept the dedication of the house of God with joy." These and such like passages give occasion to think that there was a fulfilling of this truth at that time. Others conclude it made good in the apostles' days, when the believers were so united as you read of, Acts ii. 42, 44, 46; chap. iv. 32, the believers, yea, the multitude of them, "were of one heart and one soul." Some are of judgment that it is not yet accomplished, because there were great divisions and contentions among the churches in the apostles' times; and therefore refer it to the calling of the Jews, when the two prophetic mystical sticks, mentioned Ezek. xxxvii. 19—23, are united and made one nation, and have David their king ruling over them; then shall there be this one-heartedness amongst them. If we should put it upon the times wherein those great and glorious things spoken of, Isa. lx. shall be given into the church, we shall not much mistake: there God saith, "I will make thine officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness. Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory; thy people also shall be all righteous:" which time I suppose may fall in with the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. in which should be no leanness, death, sorrow, crying, or pain; all things in it should be new, having the glory of God, ver. 4, 5.

Quest. 2. Whether this union, this one-heartedness be attainable in this life? Some judge it impossible that there should be one-heartedness in judgment, affections, and practice, because of the difference of constitutions, natural abilities, corruptions, and temptations of men, and unequal dispensations of grace; and therefore refer it to our condition after this life.

Answe. We must distinguish this one-heartedness. It is either incomplete, and inchoative, which is to be had in this life, or complete and consummative, which is a piece of our happiness in heaven: the angels and saints above enjoy the same perfectly; we who are here beneath, have it only in part. Though there be differences in the lesser things of religion, yet we agree in the weighty things thereof, and are one-hearted in them; and were there no possibility of being so, and being more and more so, the Lord would not here have promised it, nor the apostle exhorted to it, 1 Pet. iii. 8, "Be ye all of one mind," πάντες ὁμόφρονες, idem sentientes et consentientes: ὁμόφρονες, are they, qui tā ὁμοία φρονούσι, which think the same things; yea, ὁμοφρόνησαι, comprehends, as Gerard observes upon the place, consensionem in fidei veritate et vitæ sanctitate, a harmony in faith and holiness. Paul, 1 Cor. i. 10, ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες, and to "be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment;" let there be no deficiency, no redundancy, but a sweet coherency, as in the members of the body. So Phil. ii. 2, "That ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind;" he would not only have them, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν, but τὸ ἐν φρονεῖν, not only ὁμόφρονες, but σὺμφρονες. In sundry other places the apostle exhorts unto it; 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Rom. xii. 16; xv. 5. And the text saith, Acts iv. 32, that the believers "were of one heart and one soul;" they were so united, that the heathens were affected with their union, and said ordinarily of the christians, Vide ut se diligant, ut alter pro altero mori sunt parati. See how they love each other, so much so that they are ready to die for each other. There were many bodies, not many souls nor many hearts amongst them.

There have been great differences and contentions amongst the worthies of God, Paul, with Peter and Barnabas; Basil, with Eusebius; Chrysostom, with Epiphanius; and Jerom, with Rufinus: but their differences have been rather in judgment than affection; and differences there may be without breach of friendship. Paul differed in judgment from the Jews, and other men, yet he became all things to all, he was wonderful loving to all. Or if the difference came to their wills and affections; yet it provoked to love rather than abated love, παροξυσμός, pro salute animarum, Heb. x. 24. Neither did they differ in the great things of religion; and had they, yet there might have been harmony in their affections and practice. The Thomists and Scotists, the Dominicans and Jesuits, have their controversies and differences; so the churches of Spain and Italy have a great controversy with those of France, about the infallible judgment in matters of faith: the Italians and Spaniards affirm the pope is that judge; the French deny it, and look upon him as liable to error with other men; and subject to schism, heresy, and deposition by a general council; and yet they hold together, in brotherly love and communion.

Obs. 1. Men's hearts of themselves are divided, multiplied, not one. Physically, men have but one heart; morally, they have many, according to the number of their lusts in the number of their hearts; men have proud hearts, froward hearts, unclean hearts, covetous hearts, malicious hearts, bloody hearts, &c. Pliny saith, the partridges of Paphlagonia have double hearts; L. 11. 37.

and men have double and treble hearts. Psal. xii. 2, "With a double heart do they speak;" the Hebrew is, with a heart and a heart; they had diversity of hearts. When the heart is separated from God, it falls upon the creatures, and multiplies according to the objects it affects; so that no man in his natural condition, taken in a moral consideration, can have one heart, but many hearts; his heart is divided, and as he hath no agreement with God, so none with man, or himself.

Obs. 2. Oneness of heart is a great blessing, it is the fruit of the covenant of grace. It is the first blessing here mentioned; it is joined with other great blessings. I will show you the good of it in some particulars.

(1.) One-heartedness in christians rejoiceth the Spirit of Christ, which is a Spirit of love, peace, union, and is grieved with what is opposite to them. Therefore, Eph. iv. 30, 31, saith the apostle, "Grieve not the holy Spirit of God." And how should that be prevented? "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice." Where these are, there are divisions, and the Spirit is grieved; where these are not, there is one-heartedness, and that rejoiceth the Spirit. Spiritus res delicata, the mind is tender; where tender hearts are, little breaches offend them: Isa. lxiii. 10, "They rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit."

(2.) It greatly sweetens and contents the heart of man, when the will, affections, judgment, and conscience, are friendly and united the right way. It is heaven in the soul: Rom. xiv. 17, "The kingdom of God is righteousness, peace, and joy;" and Luke xvii. 21, "The kingdom of God is within you. When the heart is divided, then appear storms and troubles in the soul. When christians are at variance, divided, and not united in their judgments, affections, and practice, they have not that heavenly sweetness in them which otherwise they would have: James iii. 16, "Where envying and strife is, there is confusion," unquietness, unheavenliness.

(3.) It makes the communion one with another delightful and acceptable: Psal. cxxxiii. 1, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Where there is union of hearts, there is sweet communion; when the union is strongest, the communion is sweetest, as in the sacred Trinity. Acts iv. 32, the believers "were of one heart and of one soul;" and chap. ii. 42, "They continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayer." Communion of those who are one-hearted, is a box of precious and sweet ointment, without flies.

(4.) It prevents all the evil which comes by divisions and contentions, which are great and many. I will name some few.

[1.] Much time is lost, where contentions are, in janglings, brawlings, and bitter expressions; we have woful experience of it in these days, both in men's preaching, printing, reading, conversing, and disputings. Time is precious, and the apostle bids us redeem the time, Eph. v. 16. Where one-heartedness is, there is prevention of this great loss; Acts ii. 46, 47, the christians there continued "daily with one accord in the temple, praising God."

[2.] Where divisions are, there is seeking the disgrace and damage, if not the ruin, of one another; there is plotting and practising to root out each other. Scribes, Pharisees, high priests, did not only disgrace Christ, and damage him several ways, but were restless till they had his blood. Gal. v. 15, where strife is, there is biting and devouring one another; but one-heartedness prevents all these things, it never disgraceth, damnifieth, or destroyeth any; 1 Cor. xiii. it is full of love, and is kind, not envying, it doth not unseemly, it thinketh no evil, but beareth all things.

[3.] They weaken much, and hinder the doing of much good; therefore it is the policy of Satan and his instruments, to make divisions in kingdoms, armies, councils, cities, families, that so the good intended may not be accomplished. When hearts and heads are divided, hands are weakened, and the good can never be done in a contentious way, which may be done in a peaceable and loving way. When men are divided, their councils, their motions, are oft destructive one to another. When a great river is divided into many channels, her waters cannot carry such great vessels as before, nor be so serviceable. Where union is, there is strength; this made Antisthenes say, Fraterni inter se concordiam quorvis muro firmitus esse munimentum, That unity among brethren is a defence more firm than any wall. Agesilaus being asked why Lacedemon had no walls, answered, pointing at the citizens who were unanimous and one-hearted, Hi sunt Spartæ moenia, These are the walls of Sparta; intimating, that the agreement of citizens is the greatest strength to a city. And Plutarch tells of old Scylurus who had eighty sons, and he on his death-bed gave them a bundle of arrows, and bade them break them, &c.; If you agree you will be invincible, and do great things; if not, you will be weak and do nothing. Therefore Solomon, Eccl. iv. 9, saith, "Two are better than one," there is more strength; and twenty are better than two, when they agree. Gen. xi. 6, "The people is one; and nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do;" being united, they were so strong to carry on that great work of building Babel, that none could hinder them but God himself.

[4.] Divisions grieve the weak, and harden the wicked, as you may observe, Rom. xiv.; but where one-heartedness is, there is no grieving of the one, nor hardening of the other; that were a strange spirit, which should be offended at union, peace, and love of brethren. Psal. cxxxiii. 2, the unity of brethren "is like precious ointment," which is pleasing to the weak, and softening to the hard heart; hence, Prov. xxv. 15, "A soft tongue breaketh the bone."

(5.) One-heartedness invites others unto that way where it is found. It is a pleasant and comely thing to see brethren dwell in unity; men are affected with it, there is much beauty and mirth in the harmony of hearts. The sweet peace and union which were amongst the christians in the primitive times, allured many to them: love unites and draws strongly. An Indian passing by the house of a christian, where they were brawling and contending, said, Habbomach dwells there, that was Satan, and would not turn in; but where love, union, and peace is, there God dwells; 1 John iv. 16, "God is love," and dwells where love is. And that society which hath God in it hath the strongest argument to draw others to it: Zech. viii. 23, "Ten shall take hold of the skirt of a Jew, saying, We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you."

(6.) It improves grace, and makes christians thrive much; whereas jars, divisions, vain disputes, and wranglings, prejudice the lustre and growth of grace, if not the life. It is observed by some, that the power of godliness is greatly abated in many places, and among many christians, in these divided times we live in; these waters of Marah have imbittered their spirits, and quenched the graces of the Spirit; so that the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the doctrine which is according to godliness, are not so minded as formerly. In winter the trees put not forth, neither do the fruits of the earth grow in stormy weather; in times of war things are greatly defaced: but when winter is gone, sun shines, then do all things flourish; and in days of peace things prosper. Where one-heartedness is, this unity we speak of, there doth grace thrive among christians. Where envyings, grudges, jealousies, strifes, oppositions, and rising of spirits are among christians, they are as northern and eastern winds to the corn and fruits, they cause them to dwindle away, or to prove little and lank. 1 Cor. viii. 1, if love edifieth, and builds up christians, divisions pull down: when men are divided they seldom speak the truth in love, and then it doth little good; when it is spoken in love, then christians grow, and grow up into Christ in all things, Eph. iv. 15.
